-Information compiled from the New York Times Online, and CNN.com.

Interested in global issues? Write for Collegian World News!

FREE EVENT

Ready for law school?

Attend a mock first-year law class with a leading law school expert.

Wednesday, Oct 18th 6:30pm
Student Union Ballroom
UMass

Presenter: Noted author & legal expert, Dr. Paul M. Lisnek, JD, PhD

To register today, call 1-800-KAP-TEST or visit us online at www.kaptest.com/events.

sponsored by:
Alumni Association
KAPLAN
barbri BAR/BRI

ARE YOU CHEAP?
On November 1, The Daily Collegian will have its first ever COLLEGIAN SAVINGS GUIDE. It will be packed with Savings on everything your heart desires. So don't forget to grab The Daily Collegian that day...

UNPLANNED PREGNANCY?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
LOCAL CALL: 584-0441
A FULL CIRCLE adoption
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help.
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families.
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten Years Adoption Experience
39 Main Street Northampton, MA 01060 adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com

Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

An educated guess
on how not to dress

The University of Massachusetts is an institution that trumpets diversity. The school has long taken pride in its acceptance of people from different ethnic and cultural backgrounds, all the while embracing differences as opposed to preaching conformity.

That said, there are certain characteristics being displayed by students on this campus that are absolutely unacceptable. Playing football with a live animal is unacceptable. Vandalizing dormitories with hate graffiti is unacceptable.

Dressing like an idiot is unacceptable.

Sure, there is something to be said for individuality and uniqueness when it comes to fashion. That guy in your Biology class with the obnoxiously loud shirt may be drawing sneers, but everyone in the room has probably checked him out. The same goes for the girl with the pink hair sitting by herself in the Hatch.

But there are a few fashion trends at UMass that are, although seemingly popular, nothing but bad judgment. If you stop and think about them, you'll see that what you think looks suave may actually have people thinking you should be placed on some kind of secret government list for future eradication.

1.) Giant pants and wallet chains – A classic example of failure to realize this is last year's fashion, kids (using the term "fashion" very loosely, with no pun intended). If it took you this long to catch up, too bad: the renegade skater look has passed you by. Unless, of course, you happen to be an actual renegade skater.

2.) Pajamas – If you live on campus and can make it to class five minutes after waking up, bravo. But please, take an extra five and put on some clothes. You might think it's sexy, but in actuality you are announcing to the world that you are lazy (and that you don't have the common courtesy to shower before school, either).

3.) Visors – These were a bad idea when they were popular in the seventies, and they're a bad idea now. What's wrong, you can't afford to buy an entire hat? And to those of you who like to rock your visor backward, do you realize that you look like you're wearing a headband a la the Karate Kid? Wax on, wax off.

4.) Wind pants with boots – Either you're Paul Pierce or you're Paul Bunyon: make up your mind. This is akin to wearing black shoes with khakis or sneakers with a skirt. You may think footwear is a subtlety, but it can spell the difference between Don Juan and moron.

5.) Capri pants on guys – We're all very proud of you for being comfortable with your sexuality. What are you going to do next, start wearing m/tons and heels? There is a point where unique becomes freak and you are way past that with this one.

6.) Rolling down the tops of your pants – This is comparable to the spandex craze of the early nineties. If you've got it, flaunt it, but if you've got a whole hunch of it, you're better off keeping it to yourself.

Now that winter is fast approaching, people will start bundling up and many of these faux pas will be buried under scarves and coats. But it's still important for us all to learn the difference between individuality and abnormality when it comes to fashion.

A Dictator's son on the run

BRIAN LOHNES

We've all heard of Slobodan (don't call me Steve) Milosevic. He's the ex-tyrant who oppressed millions, killed God knows how many people and sang backup for Michael Bolton for a few shows. The fine people of his country sent the Serbian criminal packing in an election, but Slobo said the ballots were "lost." So, Serbians decided to do nothing. By "nothing" I mean they shut the whole country down. A massive general strike, a refusal to shower and huge demonstrations finally gave Slobodan a clue that he should get the hell out.

As with any evil leader uprooted from power, certain people are left holding the bag when the dust settles. In Slobodan's case it was his own son, Marko (Markie for short) Milosevic is Slobodan's boy and he is a first class bastard. Besides being named Marko, the guy rode his father's coattails, or on second thought maybe just his tail, for most of his life. Now Marko, who was once a playboy, can't even get into China.

Marko Polo had an amusement park named Bambiland, he had a perfume shop named Scandal and he had a bakery. Oh yeah, he also had control over the black market in Serbia and made untold millions selling everything from gasoline to smokes. During the protesting phase of the general strike, people surprisingly destroyed anything that had ever been linked to Marko, or his father. The perfume shop, see ya, the bakery, hasta la pasta, the amusement park, well they left that alone, but can you blame them?

After pops got the boot on October 5, Marko packed up his wife and child and hopped on the first plane headed for Beijing. Apparently, his reasoning was based on the premise that the Chinese liked his dad. The other thing he had going for him was that his mom, Mira, who is a complete crazy in her own right, was a vocal supporter of the Chinese idea that the United States is leading a conspiracy to obliterate the idea of Marxism from the face of the Earth. The Chinese weren't exactly as receptive as he would have liked them to be, in fact they told him to get himself and his funny name out of their already overpopulated and not-too-friendly country.

So what's a deposed leader's son supposed to do? He headed to the sunny skies and economic boom of Russia. Actually, he was ordered to go there, so he didn't have much choice, and the Russians aren't too pleased that he is now living la vida loca there. Things could be worse for Marko - if he still lived in Serbia. Well, if he still lived there I wouldn't be writing this because he'd be just about six feet under.

All is not wine and roses in Russia for Marko, though. Beside the fact that Russia is generally a stinky place to live, Marko is now literally a mark for a whole bunch of angry mobsters that want to give him something. Namely, two bullets to the back of the head.

Poor Marko is all alone now, he has no secret police, no thugs and no perfume shop to make him smell like fresh morning dew. It's not like he didn't bring this on himself, though. Here are a few highlights from Marko's past.

He destroyed more than 20 sports cars on the streets of Belgrade. He received exactly zero dollars and zero cents in fines and no court appearances or jail time.

He owned a nightclub named Madona (I sure hope this guy doesn't come up with these names himself...Madona, Bambiland...jeez). There was a man in the club who gave Marko a sideways look, so when the unlucky fellow went into the men's room, Marko pistol-whipped him. Well, it seems that the man was actually legally blind and was squinting in the dark room.

About five months ago, Markie was out with his band of merry men and spotted three college students. Apparently these kids belong to a political group that was against his father. Imagine George W. Bush sending thugs out to beat up Nader supporters – that's what was happening. So Marko sends five guys to slap these kids around. They ripped out one of the kid's eyes. Then the police came and arrested.... the victims.

Markie Milosevic is in quite a fix these days. He can't even get into China, his bakery or his perfume shop, and any power he once had is all gone. Thankfully the people spared Bambiland. It isn't very often in life that we get a good chance to see people like Marko get what's coming to them... ain't it sweet?

Hopefully the people of Serbia will be able to rebuild their country from the years of neglect and tyrannical leadership of Marko's daddy. The people are pretty excited to be rid of the clan Milosevic. In fact, they were damn near delighted to be destroying his shops. On the wall of one of the shops a looter left the message, "Go complain to daddy." It's too bad that I could not find Marko's current address because if I could I would gladly send it off to all my friends that are bosses in the Russian Mafia. So what will become of Marko? I don't think he will be opening any amusement parks in Russia - they have enough fun watching their country fall apart on a daily basis. I don't think he will be able to control the black market there because the Mafia has a pretty good lock on that. So I guess he will have to go back into the perfume business. After all, the all guy does bring new meaning to the phrase "eau de toilette."

Information from The Boston Globe was used in this column.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

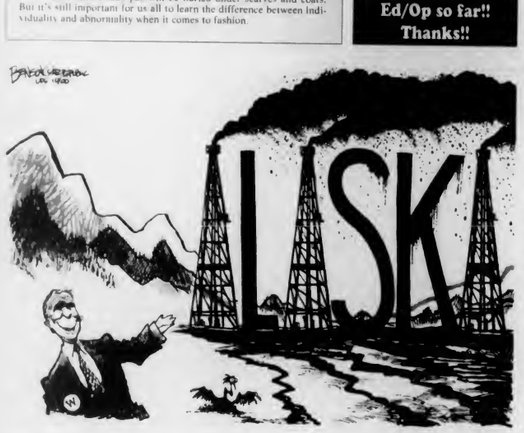
We at the Collegian would like to thank the people who have contributed to Ed/Op so far!! Thanks!!

Making you a leader



LINDSAY ELDER

As much as I love being in ROTC, many times I worry that people see me not as a typical teenager, but more as a "tough," unfeminine kind of girl.

The Minuteman Battalion in particular is about 40 percent female, which is above the national average. Women were not permitted in the program until 1974, but since then the excellence that the program offers has been available and going strong for both genders. My friend Scott Polivy once said "The first time I saw you in your uniform, I gained instantaneous respect for you." I was glad to hear that as his response to my asking him what he thought about ROTC.

"It's because of the high level of discipline and honor that are a part of it. I don't know as much about it, my ideas of it would be something like a baby boot camp; doing army exercises. I don't see anything negative about it; I've always supported the army. So many people are so quick to open their mouths against the army and the government. Yet they're also the same people that have absolutely no first hand experience. Find someone who's served, than I'll listen to his or her opinion. I don't see the critics stepping in front of any bullets anytime soon."

Although Scott Polivy sees the Army ROTC program as a positive thing, his perspective of it being merely the beginning of the army is one shared by many. For those who do plan on joining the military, the program can be even more beneficial. You will enter the service as a commissioned officer, a lieutenant. Scholarships are available throughout your college education as well as monthly compensation for other fees.

However, being in the program does not mean you are in or have to join the army. Captain Patrick Maloney, a UMass ROTC Instructor, said to me "Many people have the misconception that cadets go right into the army, that we're just a program to serve as recruiters. That is not the way it works." He went on to say, "if you want to join, that's great, we'll help in anyway we can. Until then enjoy what it offers and what you want to gain from it."

You can be a part of what ROTC has to offer without having to join the military. Many of the cadets that join the program feel this way. You may not want a career in the military, but enjoy the values standing behind it and what we do as being a part of it. A lot of people do it for those reasons, but also have military involvement in their families. Five years ago, being in ROTC was the furthest thing from what I saw in my future, as I had the same misconceptions as most. My interest in the program is inspired by my involvement in high school in JROTC. It was great, different, a new way of learning outside of the classroom and JROTC generated some of my happiest high school memories.

I love being in the Army ROTC program. When I wear my uniform, I feel like a better person. I see myself as a representative of not only my generation, but of all those whom have worn this uniform before me, those great men and women who fought to make and keep our nation free to become what it is today. I have had so many personal accomplishments even in just the short time I have been with the program.

However, probably my greatest goal is to diminish the stereotypes and misconceptions of the ROTC program. In reality, I cannot even do one push-up correctly, but that is not a limitation as to how far I can excel in ROTC. It is not about how many miles you can run, or who has the best aim with an M16. It is about becoming a better person, stronger in will and endurance. It is about becoming a better American, developing a greater respect for your country. And, in knowing you can depend on yourself and with that confidence others depend on you, you accomplish the most important fundamental of ROTC: you become a leader. There is nothing like the confidence you have when someone is leading you that really knows what he or she is doing. Someone that communicates all aspects well, and initiates plans and maneuvers with so much pride, accuracy, charisma and with a caring attitude that you feel you can conquer any enemy, rise and overcome any challenge. The mission behind Army ROTC is to make you that leader.

Lindsay Elder is a UMass student. This is part two of a two-part series.

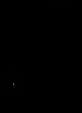
There are no excuses



LAURA SICILIANO

The first election that most of us can vote in looms on the horizon, yet our campus is virtually silent except for the Nader followers who have formed a strong Green Party contingent. Where are the Gore fans? Is anyone on this campus in support of Bush? The bottom line is that the major party candidates of this campaign are failing to excite college students. However, not being excited or interested in the campaign is a pathetic and sad excuse for not voting.

You have heard it before. People have died for the freedom to vote. Citizens of dictatorships would give their left arm for the right to vote. Kids in Tiananmen Square gave their lives for the freedoms that we exercise, without appreciation, every day. Hearing these things still does not push many college students or many Americans to vote, however. Of all the issues that may arise in this campaign, the most serious in my opinion is the fact that most of our campus community probably is not registered to vote and will not make it to the ballot box in November.

My grandfather served in World War II, as many of yours did, and suffered more than any of us could imagine, and saw more horrific things than any Hollywood movie could recreate. As corny as it sounds, it is true; they did it because it was their duty, it was their country, and they were fighting to preserve our freedoms. Yet, the only freedoms some of us want to exercise are the freedoms to smoke cigarettes and drink alcohol. Practically no students on this campus take the time to exercise their freedom of speech, our most important freedom of all. Classes stare silently at professors, and the Collegian has to advertise for writers. People should be banging at the door for the opportunity to express their opinions. I get to say whatever I want in this column – why don't more people want this opportunity? I guess expressing yourself just is not enough fun.

Students will complain about the expense of school, the alcohol laws, taxes, but come November 7, many of us will do nothing about it. A major issue of this campaign is Social Security and this issue will affect us enormously in another 40-50 years. If Social Security fails, some us will be starving, literally, when we retire. Decisions that the next President and Congress make regarding Social Security will have monumental effects on our lives. Despite this, many of us know nothing about the candidates, let alone their stands on Social Security, taxes, or foreign policy. How sad.

Every vote counts. If every college student in America voted, the election could be strongly influenced. Every time one college student does not vote, someone else's vote is counting more. In the 1996 election, 75 percent of eligible voters in Massachusetts were registered. Only 50 percent of registered voters turned out on Election Day. The true needs and beliefs of Massachusetts were not represented in that election; however, you can only be represented if you vote. Voting Is too important to miss out on. You have no right to complain about the status of our nation or about a decision made by an elected official if you do not make the small effort to vote. Come November 7, I will not be at the voting booth. That is because I am voting by absentee ballot; even if you are not going to be around your home state you have a way to vote. The University even sent us an email with information about how to register to vote, there is no excuse. Let your voice be heard.

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

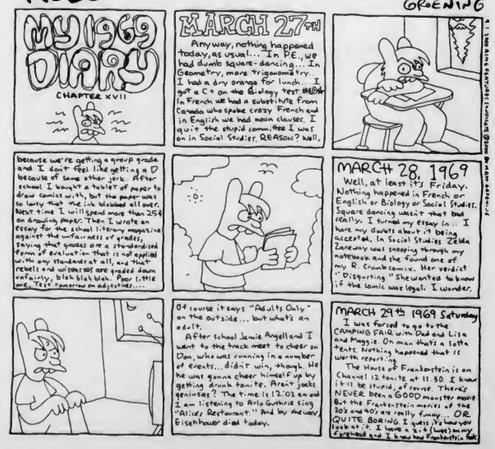
LIFE IN HELL



©2000 BY MATT GROENING
MY 1969 DIARY
CHAPTER XVII
MARCH 27th
Anyway, nothing happened today, as usual... In PE, we had dumb square-dancing... In Geometry, more Trigonometry. I had a dry orange for lunch... I got a C+ on the Biology test. In French we had a short-lived French Canada who spoke crazy French and in English we had noun clauser. I spent the whole period writing "I will go in Social Studies, REASON? well, because we're getting a group grade, and I don't feel like getting a D because of some other jerks. After school I bought a tablet of paper to draw comics with, but the paper was so lousy that the ink bleeded all over. Next time I will spend more than 25¢ on drawing paper. Then I wrote an essay for the school literary magazine against the unfairness of grades, saying that grades are a standardized form of evaluation that is not applied with any standards at all, and that results and judgments are graded down unfairly, blah blah blah. Poor little me. Test tomorrow on adjectives...
MARCH 28, 1969
Well, at least it's Friday. Nothing happened in French or English or Biology or Social Studies. In Social Studies Zelda Zaremy was passing things on my notebook and she found one of my R. Crumb cards. Her verdict: "Disgusting." She wanted to know if she comic was legal. I wonder.
Of course it says "Adults Only" on the outside... but what's an adult?
After school Janie Angelland I went to the track meet to cheer on Dan, who was running in a number of events... didn't win, though. He he went gonna cheer himself up by getting drunk tonite. Aren't jocks revolting? The time is 12:03 am and I am listening to Arlo Guthrie sing "Alice's Restaurant." And by the way Eisenhower died today.
MARCH 29th 1969 Saturday
I was forced to go to the CAMPING FAIR with Dad and Lisa and Maggie. Oh man, that's a lotta shit. Nothing happened that is worth reporting.
The movie of Frankenstein is on Channel 12 tonite at 11:30. I know it'll be stupid, of course. There's NEVER been a GOOD monster movie. But the Frankenstein movies of the 30's and 40's are really funny... OR QUITE BORING. I guess it's how you look at it. I have a 6:15 (!!!) wake-up call and I have Frankenstein. Fuck.

Rice reads from first novel

By Gregory Ng
Collegian Correspondent

Christopher Rice, the son of novelist Anne Rice, swept through Boston on the 21st day of a vigorous book tour, signing and reading an excerpt from his first novel, A Density of Souls (www.densityofsouls.com). The 22-year old author is promoting his New York Times Best Seller throughout the nation's bookstores and through online chat rooms.

Rice arrived in Boston on a cold Tuesday morning after a delayed flight from San Francisco. The book signing took place that night at Newtonville Books in a Boston suburb where the stores close promptly around dinner time. Rice read what he called one of his favorite scenes from chapter nine, a part of the book where, as he puts it, "the sissy gets the jock." His mixed audience of older and teenage generations filled to capacity a small upstairs reading room composed of folding chairs and limited standing room. Matt Woodward, one of about 60 people who attended, said the event, "adds a whole new dimension to the book."

Following the book reading, Rice answered questions from the audience and signed books. The questions asked pertained to the book and Rice's motivations towards writing it. Rice humored the audience with straightforward and funny answers, even teasing himself when he spoke in random tangents.

The first, and perhaps most intriguing question, asked Rice how much of the book was autobiographical. The book is based on a group of four wealthy high school students, each having some sort of secret among them, who grew up together and later became enemies. Readers follow the painful and vulnerable life of the main character, Stephen, who is gay. "The book is not a memoir or biography but there are some things in it that are very real portrayals of stuff that did go on in my high school," said Rice in an earlier interview. When reflecting on the characters, Rice said, "every character is a piece of me. I never look at it in terms of whether or not I'm relating to a character. Characters are not like children to me, they're not like something I've created and sent off, I'm in them."

Fans of the book mention its inspiring effect and credit their satisfaction to Rice's writing style and themes of the book. Kara Twomey, an audience member, said that she could identify with two of the main characters. "I could really identify with the different characters – Stephen, growing up and not being accepted for who you are, and Meredith, someone who stays the same. The situations felt surreal," said Twomey. While on a tour stop in Washington, D.C., Rice encountered a reader who left him awestruck. "I thought he was going to ask a question, but really he just raised his hand to say that he worked at an outreach center for gay youth and that most of the young men that he worked with had read the book and were profoundly affected by it, [but they] could not come to the reading for fear of outing themselves, they were still in the closet. I was sort of speechless," said Rice.

His advice to teens questioning their sexual identity is twofold. "Don't come out before you're ready. I know the political urge is to be as open and honest as possible, that's a virtue, but you need to be the first one to know, you need to be sure, and then you need to have enough confidence to come out to your family, in particular your parents, from a position of strength rather than weakness or anger," said Rice. He mentioned the importance of talking to a counselor or friend before coming out to one's parents and facing their initial negative response. "I don't care how ideal your family situation is, you need to be prepared for the fact that depending on what generation your parents are from that they're going to have a fixed image in their head of what the gay lifestyle is and suddenly they're going to see you saying not only 'I'm going to end up with somebody of the same sex,' but they're going to see you living this life that they envision. A parent's initial response to everything with their children is to prevent them from going through as much pain as possible, and so you are saying to them that I'm going to be leading a tougher life than I would be had I been straight, said Rice.

Rice emphasized the necessity to avoid altering one's life to fit stereotypes in that "there's that tendency to narrow your lifestyle, your choices, and your social options because you are afraid that they'll be narrowed for you when people find out you're gay. I've found that I didn't lose any of my straight friends at all. More often than not, what I see happen, someone comes out very early or young, and I'm saying eighteen is young, they will abandon previous habits. Where I need to lead my new life that I'm gay, so that means [going to the] bar every weekend, new gay friends'...and old friends get lost," said Rice. He further cautioned that the gay bar scene and dance clubs aren't what they're cracked up to be. He recalls their initial dazzle, but from his personal experience, he says, "the gay party scene will promise you everything and deliver nothing. Initially it can provide a sense of belonging and community, and I think you need to take steps to expand that community outside of a bar."

Rice is as intriguing as his talents portray. His favorite ice cream flavor is one that he creates himself, mixing Haagen Dass chocolate ice cream with Jif peanut butter. Rice left college behind, as he couldn't find a program focused primarily on screen-writing. He first attended Brown, where he felt there were no practical film courses beyond film study. Rice transferred to the screen-writing program at New York University's Tisch School of the Arts, only to find its program off-target. "I just basically freaked out. I thought the program was too focused and there weren't enough general education opportunities. Basically the program was full of kids who were learning how to write but not what to write, and I had already been in school for a year so I was sort of suddenly thrown into school with some freshmen who were not only new to being away from home, but new to New York, and they had this excitement that I just didn't have. I lived off campus and had a roommate who was an actress, and I just never got into it," said Rice. At the end of his book tour, Rice will return home where he will start a second novel, similar in theme to the first with older characters in a college setting. "I'm not going to address high school, I think I've said all I need to say about that for the time being," said Rice.

Corpus Christi comes to campus

Named one of the best plays of 1998 by Time Magazine, Terrence McNally's Corpus Christi is a modern morality play based on the story of Jesus Christ. The play portrays Christ, called Joshua in the play, and his disciples as gay men. The author of this controversial piece has stated that it is meant not to offend, but to remind people everywhere that "Jesus Christ belongs to all of us because He is all of us..."

Hole In the Wall Theater of New Britain, Connecticut will perform the play. It will be presented by the Stonewall Center in conjunction with the LBGT (lesbian, bisexual, gay, and transgender) Graduate Student Organization in Bowker Auditorium, for one night only on Saturday, October 21 at 8:00 pm. Tickets are five dollars for UMass students with ID, and $10 for general public. Reservations are strongly recommended, and may be made by calling the Fine Arts Center Box Office at (413) 545-2511 or (800) 998-UMass.

Audiences should be aware that the play contains nudity, profanity, and adult situations, which may be offensive to some audiences. The play is not recommended for children.

-Lynne Babineau

Favorable ruling for trans student

By Jeanie Gorlovsky
Collegian Staff

A Massachusetts Superior Court in Brockton ruled yesterday that a middle school cannot prohibit a transgender student from expressing her gender identity even if that expression does not conform with the sex ascribed to her at birth. In a case brought by Gay & Lesbian Advocates & Defenders ("GLAD") on behalf of a 15-year old student who was born male but has a female gender identity (known in court records only as Pat Doe), the court ruled that disciplining a biologically male student for wearing girls' clothing would violate her First Amendment right of free expression and constitute sex discrimination.

According to GLAD Staff Attorney Jennifer Levi who argued the case, "As the first reported decision addressing the rights of a transgender student to express her gender identity in school, it is tremendously important. We know that a large number of transgender students face serious hostility from teachers and administrators who lack a basic understanding about gender identity. This case confirms that a school may not exert its authority over a student simply to enforce stereotyped ideas of how boys and girls should look. Nor can a school's discomfort with the fact that a biologically male student has a female gender identity, justify enforcing a dress code in a discriminatory way."

The case was brought against the Brockton School Department when the school prohibited Pat from attending wearing what the principal considered to be girls' clothing. This exclusion from school followed nearly two years of disciplinary action against Pat for wearing girls' clothing, starting from the time she began to identify as transgender. The term transgender is used to describe people whose gender identity, meaning a person's internal, deeply felt sense of being either male or female, is not consistent with their anatomical sex at birth.

Despite acknowledging that girls who wore the same clothes Pat did were not prevented from attending or otherwise disciplined, the school tried to justify its exclusion of Pat based on other students' discomfort. The court rejected this argument, holding that prohibiting Pat from wearing girls' clothing was akin to "the stilling of plaintiff's selfhood merely because it causes some members of the community discomfort." The court affirmed that transgender students need the same support and protection for their safety that other students need. It further recognized that "exposing children to diversity at an early age serves the important social goals of increasing their ability to tolerate differences" and teaches "respect for everyone's unique personal experience."

Founded in 1978, Gay & Lesbian Advocates & Defenders (GLAD) is New England's leading legal rights organization for lesbians, gay men, bisexuals and people with HIV. GLAD's mission is to achieve full equality and justice for all individuals in these groups, primarily through impact litigation and education.

I am "ME"

I grew up in a small fishing village in Alaska and I now attend the University of Massachusetts as a sophomore with all of you. Yet that does not matter; I could have just as well been from your neighborhood, your high school, or your dorm floor. There has been a turn of events in my life that I feel it is crucial to bring to your attention. I want you to have a person behind the vacant decisions and passing comments you make regarding a certain group.

I had the life growing up that parents' dream of for their child. I was class president for all four years of high school. I graduated in 1999 as the valedictorian of my class. I was the chief judge for a juvenile crime program. I am an Eagle Scout. I was the student representative to a school board committee. I was chosen as outstanding 4-H member of the year twice, winning awards and accolades for my riding and my horse. I was accepted into every school I applied to including Duke, University of Virginia and early acceptance into the number one veterinary school in the nation. I was chosen as one of 100 scholarship winners out of 13,000 applicants in a national scholarship honoring community service, academics, and leadership. I have dined next to Former First Lady Barbara Bush. As we dined and talked, it was the crowning achievement of my high school career.

I hated my life. I hated who I was. Everyone loved what I presented myself as, except me. I had a secret that I could not release and for so long I could not even let myself accept it. I am gay. If anyone ever tells you "gays choose their lifestyle," I tell you that this is not true. I played the piano in church every Sunday and I prayed every night for God to change me. He did not. I sat down three distinct times to try and kill myself. Gladly, I did not go through with it. I still had hope that I would be able to change and lie my way through the "American Dream."

RYAN DERRY

I got tired of fighting myself. I gave up. On that hot and muggy summer day 13 months ago as I stepped off the plane 3,000 miles away from home, I knew no one. As I began to let others into my life and get to know me, an interesting thing happened – I started to meet someone I liked, me! After eighteen years I finally accepted him and everything he was. I have accepted that I cannot, at this time, tell my parents who I am because I do not think they would respond favorably. I have given up searching for other people's acceptance. I have started to live for myself.

I have accepted that I can never legally be "married," as of right now – I have HOPE! I have accepted that I can never be a scout leader in the Boy Scouts of America. Hell, they would probably take away my Eagle award if they could. I knew I was gay when I earned it, so do I not deserve it? I have accepted that I cannot donate blood to the Red Cross. I have accepted that a vast population of this society would hold me up as an ideal citizen and then hate me as soon as discovering one small fact of my life. My government doesn't protect me. It throws me out of the military when I stand up and am honest. I could have lied and been unhappy. Are you going to tell me that at the age of nineteen that I have to accept a certain fate? I think not! I am strong. I am powerful. People listen to me and respect me; I've proved that. I plan to scream until I am heard.

Next time that you hear a comment or make a statement that impacts homosexuals I hope that you save this essay and pull it out. Remember I am someone that used to pray to be anything but gay –but I am gay. I am proud now, I am no longer angry, I am happy! I want to live now. I have that Inherent right, correct? I just get to live a little less than everyone else I guess.

Remember me. I am your best friend from grade school. Your roommate. Your biology lab partner. Your brother. Your sister. The Boy Scout at your door selling popcorn. The cute dimpled Girl Scout with curly brown hair selling your favorite flavor of cookies. The teen that delivers your paper. The youngster that spends their afternoons with your elderly grandparent in the nursing home. I am the trouble-maker. The prep. The school jock. I AM the All-American boy next door. And, I AM gay.

Ryan Derry is a UMass student.

Stonewall lectures successful

By Jeanie Gorlovsky
Collegian Staff

Two exciting lectures took place over the past few weeks as part of the Stonewall Center's LBGT Studies Lecture Fall Series 2000.

The first lecture was on October 5 by Kevin Moss, the Chair of the Russian Department at Middlebury College and the editor of a book called Out of the Blue: Russia's Hidden Gay Literature. He gave a lecture entitled "Who's Renting These Boys?: Pornography, Prostitution and the Straight Male Gaze in Eastern Europe." The second lecture was on October 12. The presenter was Selena Wahng, a Ph.D. candidate in performance studies at the Tisch School of the Arts and a managing editor for GLQ: A Journal of Gay and Lesbian Studies. Wang's lecture was called "Annabel Chong: Transmasculine Porn, Penetration, and Capitalism."

In his lecture, Moss spoke about the films of Wiktor Grodecki, a Polish filmmaker who makes Hustler documentaries about male prostitutes ("rent boys") in the Czech Republic. Grodecki has made three movies, Not Angels, But Angels (1994), Body Without Soul (1996), and Mandragora (1997). The films purport to be documentaries, but in actuality Grodecki uses them to moralize about his anti-gay stance. For example, although the film Not Angels, But Angels says that the prostitute boys enjoy sex with men, at the end Grodecki makes it seem that gay men exploit them. Moss says that the boys are "passive victims even though they are allowed to tell their own stories" in the film. Grodecki uses religious imagery, such as stone angel statues, to make the boys seem like angels and the men who rent them seem like unholy and evil beings.

In another movie, Body Without Soul, Grodecki ends on a note that privileges the heterosexual family as norm. The movie is about Rosek, a porn maker who also works in a morgue as his day job. Grodecki parallels Rosek to a butcher. Grodecki has said that the movie is "about everyday evil - the emptiness of everyday evil." The rent boys talk about death on camera. In the movie, Grodecki portrays the men who rent the boys as "casual tourists" – imperialist foreigners from such Western countries as Germany and the United States. This plays into the common Czech fear that homosexuality comes into the country from the West.

Moss explained that Grodecki's last documentary so far, Mandra Gora, is more a feature film based on a true story than an actual, factual documentary. Grodecki is using his imagination here to portray one boy's experience at being "corrupted" to being gay and prostituting himself when he comes from a small town to a big city. The boy's clients are portrayed as rich, bald, ugly, Western men. Moss explained that Grodecki made this and his other films for a straight audience to decry Western men's exploitation of young boys. In fact, many gay people have objected to the way this movie portrays gay men. One audience member at the lecture said, "If I were a male homosexual, I'd be very insulted by this movie."

The following week after Moss, Selena Wahng gave her audience an enlightening look at transmasculine porn. She explained that she did not have enough time to speak about Annabel Chong in the lecture, as her time was very limited, so she mostly spoke about Christopher Lee, a transgendered director of transmasculine porn movies. Lee is a hiracial Asian-American FTM (female-to-male) transgendered person. He lives in San Francisco, where he started an annual transgendered film festival.

Wahng explained that Lee uses many regular actors in his movies, including Angel, a Latino FTM. She showed the lecture audience several graphic transgendered pornographic scenes in which Angel starred. In fact, one audience member was prompted to ask Wahng if she actually enjoys showing porn under an academic guise, which she readily acknowledged. In addition to showing the clips from Lee's movies, Wahng also read from her notes to explain various transgendered themes in the movies. For example, she talked about Lee's use of "punk" culture and "gothic" culture in the movie.

Later in the day, Wahng presented her own small film festival at 7 pm in SOM 120. She called it "FTM's, Fags, Porn and Dickplay." A Transmasculine Film and Video Program." The films that Wahng showed explained the world of independent transgendered filmmaking to her audience. Wahng again used clips from documentaries and pornographic movies, as well as lecturing from her own notes, to educate others about trangendered filmmaking.

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED

The Gay Men's Domestic Violence Project is enhancing its services in Western Mass and is now seeking volunteers to work as peer advocates, outreach/ education and to provide "safe homes." Peer advocates assist clients by listening, providing information and referrals and assisting with their transition out of an abusive relationship. Outreach/Education volunteers help out with setting up at events, handing out literature, stuffing envelopes, and marching in pride and various administrative tasks. Safe Home volunteers provide shelter for up to two weeks (maximum) for clients who are leaving their relationship and need a temporary place to stay. Thorough training and follow-up support is provided. The next volunteer training will be held in mid-November in Northampton. GMDVP has hired Mark Carmien of Northampton to coordinate its efforts in Western Massachusetts. For more information on becoming a volunteer, call 617-354-6056 (Northampton number pending). If you feel you have been the victim of domestic abuse and would like to talk with someone about it, call our hotline at 800-832-1901. You can also visit GMDVP's web site at www.gmdvp.org.

GLBT Events Calendar

Tuesday, October 17
Pride Alliance, the UMass undergraduate GLBT-and-allies group, meets at 7 pm in the Campus Center. All are welcome.

Thursday, October 19
Bethany Moore, a Ph.D. candidate in Modern Germanic Studies at UMass, presents a lecture entitled "Homosexuality in East German Cinema: Real and Imagined" as part of the Stonewall Center's LGBT Studies Lecture Series. The lecture will take place in Campus Center room 903 at 12:30 pm.

Bethany Moore presents Coming Out, an East German film focusing on GLBT lives in East Germany and how they are portrayed in East German film, in SOM room 254 from 7-9 pm.

Friday, October 20
There will be a brown-bag lunch with Donna Red Wing, the director of the OutGiving Project, from 12-1 pm in Campus Center room 165-79. The OutGiving Project provides skills-building trainings to communities and training to LGBT donors throughout the US.

Saturday, October 21
The Stonewall Center and the LBGT Graduate Student Organization present the award-winning play, Corpus Christi, at 8 pm in Bowker Auditorium in Stockbridge Hall at UMass. Ticket prices are $5 for students and $10 for non-students. Tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office.

Tuesday, October 24
Pride Alliance, the UMass undergraduate GLBT-and-allies group, meets at 7 pm in the Campus Center. All are welcome.

Thursday, October 26
Siobhan Somerville, author of Queering the Color Line, will present a lecture entitled "The Queer Career of Jim Crow: Race, Sexuality, and Early Cinema" as part of the Stonewall Center's LGBT Studies Lecture Series. The lecture will take place in Campus Center room 903 at 12:30 pm.

Arts Editor •
Ryan Benharris
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Nevermore releases perfect album: sharp, mature metal

NEVERMORE
Dead Heart in a Dead World
Century Media

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

It is a conceit of many metal bands to consider themselves "art." They toss in a harmony solo, some female vocals, maybe call their latest release a "concept album" and expect everyone to lall all over themselves to proclaim such-and-such band Picasso with double-bass drums. The music can be excellent (In Flames, Dark Tranquility, Dream Theater), wretched (Blind Guardian, Iced Earth), or in the middle (Fates' Warning, Engine) – but never have I heard a single album that I would accept as deserving of the label "art" Until now.

Dead Heart in a Dead World is Nevermore's finest hour. This album fits together as a perfect whole, with absolutely no wasted song, lyric, note or effect – nothing contained here is superfluous. If you were to remove any song from this album (even the one they didn't write – "The Sound Of Silence," a Simon and Garfunkel song) it would be like erasing the eyebrows off the Mona Lisa – she'd still be cool and everything, but it just wouldn't be the same.

Up until now, the band had been putting out solid progmetal albums with a fairly large following in the scene and a successful series of tours. Dreaming Neon Black, their previous album, made a pretty big splash in 1999 (the title track being my all-time favorite love song), but was still missing – something. They didn't have focus – it was still the "here's a song, here's another song" format; they went heavy and soft with little excuse, singer Warrel Dane seemingly the prisoner of his own fabulous voice, needing to show it off without thought for whether or not it fit.

This is not the case for Dead Heart in a Dead World.

From the beginning thrash of "Narcosynthesis" to the final crash of drums on the title track to close out the album, Nevermore have crafted the perfect modern metal album. I can't even describe the beauty of songs like "Insignificant" and "Believe In Nothing," the rage of "We Disintegrate," the horrible weeping of "The Heart Collector," the finality of "The River Dragon Has Come." Every song, every spectacular musical part (Jeff Loomis, the guitarist, should be given a medal for his efforts on this album), every tortured lyric builds towards a final vision of overwhelming sadness, loneliness and inevitable ending.

That a band can be so heavy and brutal while at the same time so sensitive and withdrawn is an achievement that should not ever be overestimated. Having lost a member (former guitarist Tim Calvert) and decided not to replace him, the band let Loomis carry the burden of doing lead and rhythm himself. Nevermore seems more unified, and tighter than ever. Everyone plays his role – showboating, the bane of every metal band who ever had a solohappy guitarist or drummer who wanted to impress his girlfriend. Drummer Van Williams hits complex beats that seem to defy physics, matched at every step by bassist Jim Sheppard. Loomis is, as has been said already but never overestimated, a bona fide guitar god, and if he does nothing else after Dead Heart in a Dead World, he will deserved to be remembered as such. And then there's Warrel Dane.

Danc has always been frustrating. He has one of the greatest voices in the history of metal. He writes spectacular lyrics. He just has never been able to contain himself, to not use all of his range on each song, to only use the part of his talent that would suit the current composition. Dead Heart in a Dead World marks his transition to a fully matured vocalist, and one of the best of our age. He literally can do everything, but this time he has thankfully chosen not to. This band has always, at least in the eyes of fans, revolved around him. He is now worthy of that respect.

What more can I say about this album? It is absolutely perfect, but don't listen to it while drinking or severely depressed (or both) because you'll probably kill yourself. It is haunting, melodic, bonecrushing, and a landmark for metal in a new millennium. When it is released on the 17th of this month, you will do yourself a favor by investing the paltry few dollars for musical perfection.

Dead Heart in a Dead World, by the rock band Nevermore, is art.

Oszajca a waste of time

JOHN OSZAJCA
From Here to There
Uni/Interscope

By Jake Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

The first piece of advice when breaking into showbiz: use a name people can pronounce just by looking at it. It's logical that the public can easily remember monikers that are simple, even catchy. While John Oszajca's last name is fun to say (pronounced oh SHOCK-ah), neither his name nor his debut album From There to Here will most likely be remembered by anyone.

I first heard of Oszajca from a soda commercial shown before a recent movie, in which he performed a snippet of his catchy single "Back In 1999." The 30 seconds I heard of it immediately caught my fancy; it was guitar-laden, with a bouncy pop-gospel sound to it, sung by a scratchy-voiced crooner reminiscent of Cake's John McCrea.

I scoured music stores throughout my hometown to track down a copy of Oszajca's album. In fact, I wrote to the soda company that his video was promoting to see if it had any information on where I could secure a copy of his album. Despite my tremendous, somewhat overboard efforts, I eventually had to give up on the idea of John Oszajca.

When I came to UMass, however, I stumbled across a copy of the album I had so desperately sought out a few months before. Sure enough, "Back In 1999" was the first track on the disc, but it didn't have the same appeal as it did back in 1999 when I first heard it. As far as the rest of the songs found within, I was extremely disappointed, only finding one or two others that I could stomach.

Among the catchier tunes, of which there are few, is "Where's Bob Dylan When You Need Him?" The nonsensical lyrics are all over the place, and after listening to the song for the umpteenth time I still failed to see what it has to do with Bob Dylan. The album's title is found in this song, offering evidence of the absolute mish-mash of Oszajca's lyrics: "Spent my last dollar on a beer/ I lost my job sometime last year/ I lost my wife who calls me dear/ That's how I got from there to here." The memorable melody, however, manages to resuscitate the song from cardiac arrest and provides promise for the tunes yet to come.

For the next 18 minutes of the album, you're attacked by four songs that keep you waiting for the hook that never comes. "Bisexual Chick" is an attempt at reggae and rap that ends up instead as just plain old crap. When Oszjaca screams in the song over the agony of liking a bisexual woman, you want to scream with him, but not because of your desire to empathize with him.

I have reason to believe that "Valley of the Dolls," a calypso/country ballad was only put on the CD because there was a need for filler. As it is, there are only 11 tracks, a low number for most new CD's nowadays. Maybe I'm naive and I don't understand today's music scene, but I draw a total blank at comprehending the reasoning behind the inclusion of this song on a pop-rock album.

Redemption finally arrives in the form of the comical, "I Hate You (My Friend)," perhaps the only song that is both strong in melody and lyrics. Quite simply, it is the ideal song everyone wishes they had when they can't find the right words to tell off a friend. It's a shame the song is so short, since it's the album's best (but that's still not saying much).

The songs from there continue to slowly go downhill, so much so that you'll eagerly anticipate the end of the album. My advice to you is to get on Napster and download the three songs I've given some praise to, but don't waste your patience or your hard-earned cash on the CD.

On the cover of the CD is a sticker where a fellow critic calls the album "daring." I will wholeheartedly agree that it is a brave endeavor for this young artist, but it gets lost somewhere along the way. Most likely, no one will ever hear from John Oszajca again, there will be no "Back In 1999 – 2000 Remix," and you definitely won't see him up for any Grammies. I bet that soda company feels pretty silly now.

Sell your little sister on the black market.
OR
Get paid for the stuff you know.
InfoRocket.com
Answer questions. Earn cash.
★ ENTER TO WIN A TRIP TO CANCUN FOR SPRING BREAK. ★
REGISTER TO ENTER AT www.inforocket.com/amherst
SWEEPSTAKES ENDS JANUARY 31, 2001. SUBJECT TO COMPLETE OFFICIAL RULES

Interview with "Sex" author

By Nina Brantley & Matt Rodbard
Badger Herald (U. Wisconsin)

(U-WIRE)MADISON, Wis. – An article recently published in the Houston Observer described locations for Candace Bushnell's "Four Blondes" book tour, saying she would be traveling to places "like Cincinnati and Madison, as far away from London or New York as you can get without traveling in a space ship." Friday afternoon, Bushnell landed at the University of Wisconsin Bookstore with the seasoned "cultural anthropologist" dressed as only her "Sex and the City" counterpart, Carrie Bradshaw, could have: navy blue button-down shirt tied around her waist, lilac-colored flowing crushed-velvet pants covering her black stiletto boots with heels as insignificant as steel pins indicating they could only be Jimmy Choo's. Clutching a blood red ostrich skin petit Prada bowling bag and a camel coat trimmed in the same burgundy, Bushnell arrived to an audience of fans dressed in their casual "Sex and the City" best. Afterward Bushnell joined The Badger Herald at State Street Brats for a purely Wisconsin tradition of brats and beer where she discussed her latest novel, the upper echelon of New York, media and Carrie Bradshaw.

Badger Herald: Have you ever thought about basing a story away from New York?

Candace Bushnell: No matter where the setting would be, the characters will remain the same. I was thinking about writing a book about four fifty-year-old women who live in a house in Maine. One of the characters would be the former head of a movie studio who was kicked out because she was old. Another would be a woman who had always married billionaires but nobody wanted to marry her anymore. A third would be a feminist writer who's career was going downhill and had a recent book published entitled "What about Me?" And the fourth, an aging movie star who is introduced on a plane snorting cocaine under a blanket. These are the same types of characters I have used in the past.

BH: Did you base your main characters from "Four Blondes" on publishing types in New York City?

CB: No, but the two characters in the second story are in publishing: Winnie is a journalist and James wrote a story that won the ASME award, but nothing's really happened with his career since. The conflict is that Winnie feels James hasn't been working hard enough and she subsequently controls him. This is a pretty good-on story about some of the types you'll meet in publishing.

BH: There's also that young twentysomething girl who lives in the apartment that smells like garbage and wears really tight, low cut clothes

Turn to SEX, page 7

■ sex

continued from page 6

around the office. Explain your basis?

CB: Yeah, the thing that's interesting about that story is that it's about these two different flipped generations. You have James and Winnie who are established journalists. Part of this story is how Winnie resents this girl in her twenties. There is some reality to this. I remember at one of the magazines there were these big sex-scandals and all the guys just went crazy for all the young girls who were wearing really low-cut sweaters and really short skirts. The girl in the story is pretty aggressive. Which is pretty typical to somebody who comes to New York ... the very fact that they got themselves to New York means that they're going to be more aggressive to begin with, because it's hard to get to New York. So there is a narrative from Winnie's point of view where she sees that she's getting older and she's not that girl she used to be.

BH: It was stated somewhere that "Four Blondes" was partially based on the infamous Miller sisters. Is there any truth to this?

CB: That's quite hilarious. There's this one society writer who read the book and decided that the "S" sisters in the one story were the Miller sisters – these girls don't say anything. I mean one of them says something about, "I have child-bearing hips." They're totally peripheral characters: their hair color isn't even described. Anyway, it's not the Miller sisters, but for some reason some people have this idea stuck in their heads. And then I read something like: "The book 'Four Blondes' is about the adventures of the Miller sisters before they got married and they were the first three blondes in the story." It's so false. But that's what happens all the time, somebody makes a false assumption, they get away with it and then the next thing you know it's grown into this bigger thing. I actually I sat next to Diane von Furstenburg at my book party and she said to me [thick foreign accent], "I know you're not writing about my daughter-in-law. [Alexandra Miller von Furstenburg]" and I'm like, "Of course I'm not writing about your daughter-in-law." I don't know them, thank you very much. It's a little bit difficult to write about people who you don't know. So there's no truth to that.

BH: How autobiographical is the fourth chapter?

CB: That was a little bit autobiographical. I do have an English boyfriend, and he does wear Prada pants. OK? I stole the Prada pants from him. [He called at one point during the interview from New York to see how things were.

I did go to England to write an article for newspaper called The Daily Mail, which later wrote a horrible piece about me. They wanted me to do a story that was "Sex and the City" in London. I had heard about these women who couldn't find husbands in New York so they went to London and all found husbands who were like, Lord so-and-so, Lord Tittlywinks, so this all came out in chapter four. I really didn't want to put that story in but my publicist made me. It's the most "Sex and the City" story.

BH: If you were still writing the character Carrie, where would she be now?

CB: I wouldn't write that character now because I think that, for me, "Sex and the City" ends when Carrie and Mr. Big break up. Because emotionally, Mr. Big is the last relationship that this woman is going to have where she still has this innocent, wide-eyed idea about men.

BH: After having your first novel turned into a television series, do you have any distrust of the "industry"?

CB: I don't have any distrust of the film industry, but I think that people need to understand that the way that the film and television industry works is very different from the way book publishing does. When somebody authors a book, it's the only place you've ever going to see one person's true artistic vision. This happens because movies and television cost so much and there are many voices in the production. That's why independent films have flourished. In a big Hollywood movie or in a TV series, you have many people who are very concerned with making all the characters likeable and in making sure that the audience isn't turned off by edginess. That's why sometimes I'm criticized for this book because the characters aren't likeable and I say to them 'you've been watching too many movies.'

BH: You're working on a television pilot now. are you hesitant about writing it?

CB: No, I know what it's about. So I'm happy to do it and I don't mind working under those circumstances but that's the reason why I will always write books. Because that's the one place where you can be free and don't have somebody saying, "But you know what, if she does this people aren't going to like her?" Or this great question, the great Hollywood question, "What's her arc?" They always say, "What is the character's arc?" And you want to say, "I don't know, what's your arc?" You know, who knows what their arc is? But that's a typical Hollywood term.

BH: Will this effect the way you approach your treatment?

CB: I've already had a lot of meetings in Hollywood. The pilot is going to be very different from the book. Basically I will have to smooth out all the dark parts. But it is still a good story. It's a different story but still very good.

BH: You're also working on a screenplay for the third story in the book - how is that working out?

CB: I've had a lot of meetings with the studio and the story will be very different. Basically just take out all the dark stuff, but it's still a great story, just a different story and the character's a little different. We'll have to smooth down all the rough edges; the characters are younger, and the movie script will be about a girl who her whole life wanted to grow up to be a princess. Like all of us (sarcastically) ... but she really does want to be a princess.

BH: Do you mind making all the changes?

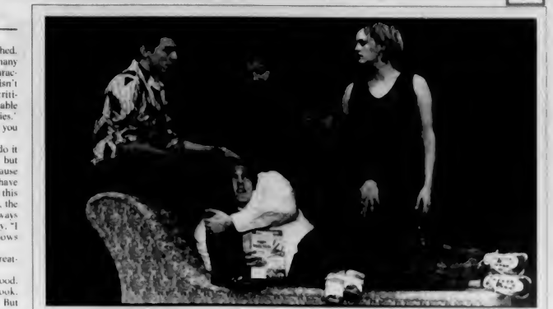
CB: One of the things you have to learn how do is choose which battles you want to fight. It's not good to be a prima donna because that doesn't get you anywhere. You have to give and take and always know where you are so that if you are required to make a change, it wouldn't be too much of a threat. So no, I don't mind making the changes. The second story with the Diekes, I want to make that into a separate independent film and with that I will not make any changes. That one already has the whole plot. The movie star character is a great character. James Dieke is a great character. I wouldn't mind changing the third chapter though.

BH: What do you think about "Page Six" and all the gossip columns written about you?

CB: Oh yeah, well I'm definitely in there all the time, it's like if I'm not in "Page Six" for a month, I'm doing something wrong! But I'm actually friends with some of the people who work for "Page Six." I've known Richard Johnson and his wife for years. But none of this prevents them from writing bad stuff about you, but that's life in New York and it's part of the fabric of the city. gossip columnists and "Page Six" and knowing what other people are doing.

BH: There was an article that you wrote in Harper's Bazaar that discussed the notion of being semi-famous. Do you consider yourself to still be semi-famous or have you evolved to more?

CB: You have to understand, [the editors at Harper's] came to me and asked me to write a first person piece, so I came to the conclusion that writing about semi-famous would allow me both to write a lot of material and be funny. Not-famous isn't funny, famous isn't funny, semi-famous is funny. There is a lot of room there for funny lines.



Coming Theatre

The cast of Smith College Theatre's production of "The Food Chain". The play will run in Theatre 14, Smith College, October 21, 25 and 28. Call (413) 585-ARTS for more information.

Bagby pens atrocious Gen-X book

By Matt LaPlante
OSU Daily Barometer (Oregon State U.)

(U-WIRE) CORVALLIS, Ore. – It takes exactly one sentence for Meredith Bagby to drop the first of hundreds of pop-culture references designed to – but in no way actually able to – make Generation X accept her as one of its pretentious own.

But the Harvard graduate and author of "We've Got Issues" tries too hard. The only thing worse than snobbers is insincere snobbers, and Bagby's second book is nothing but.

That's sad, because the CNN commentator did have a good idea: a "Get Real, No B.S., Guilt Free Guide to What Really Matters" for a group of people who have tuned out and turned off politics. But in trying to get in the good graces of her intended audience, Bagby delves a little too heavily in the "guilt-free" aspect and never really gets around to mentioning "what matters."

The result is 320 pages of presumptuous, self-indulgent whining, mixed with enough Starbucks and IKEA references to start an anarchist revolt.

Instead of actually explaining the issues that this nation – as Bagby claims it as her goal – she spends most of her time explaining how Gen-X cannot possibly be to blame for each issue. Social Security's not our fault. Capital punishment not our fault. Abortion: not our fault.

In the end, "We've Got Issues" is not a guide to understanding what ails this nation, but how to not take responsibility for it.

For instance: a poor voting turn out by Gen-X is (you guessed it) not our fault. Bagby makes a very weak argument that Gen-Xers involve themselves in politics in other ways – volunteering, for example.

She writes, "According to some reports, we have higher rates of volunteerism than any other generation before us."

For the record, the generation Bagby is referring to was born from 1965 to 1976. It apparently never occurred to her that those born earlier than that were often too busy being drafted, fighting and dying in wars to spend their afternoons at the Humane Society.

More cheesy and awkward than even Bagby's ostentatious references to Nintendo and "Married With Children" are the Polaroids that pop up every few pages within her text. Under each picture of a delightfully stupid-looking Gen-Xer, paired with a quote.

Scott Martin says, "Sometimes I agree with the Republicans. Sometimes I agree with the Democrats. It's hard to fight with one group and call the other one evil."

Profound as an eggplant.

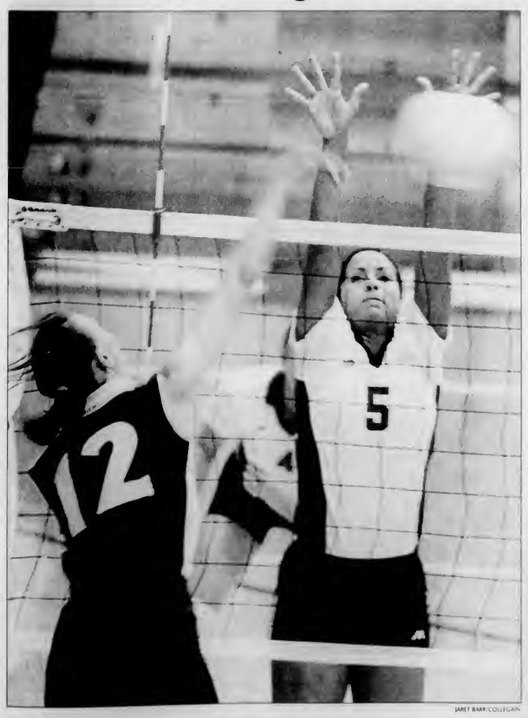
Which is more or less as deep as Bagby gets. She does manage to get fairly insulting however, which is the book's only redeeming quality. In one chapter, she likens those who have paid into Social Security for decades and are now benefitting to leaches.

"Did you know that the government already spent the money it took from you – and that I am actually paying for your Social Security through my taxes? Do you know that by taking that money you were hurting my economic future?" she reportedly asks her 87 year-old grandmother in a chapter called "Social Insecurity." The sarcasm (I sometimes I agree with the Republicans...) is overwhelming.

Neither is being expected to pay $12 to read this piece of garbage. God help us all if this really is Gen-X's best call-to political arms.

UMass volleyball team splits weekend tests

Rival UConn looms tonight



JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Puerto Rico native Lymarie Llovet uses every inch of her 5-foot-10 frame to stuff an opposing player. Llovet and her teammates will need to fire on all cylinders against rival Connecticut tonight.

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Sometimes, it seems a team's performance cannot be fully realized through a contest's final result. Such was the case for the Massachusetts women's volleyball team this weekend, as it split its two matches at home against Temple and LaSalle.

The Minutewomen now stand at 7-10 overall, 4-4 in the Atlantic 10 conference. They stand directly in the middle of the nine-team conference in 5th place, one game behind Dayton, which stands at 5-3 in the conference, and two games ahead of Duquesne, Fordham and Rhode Island, all of which are 2-6 in A-10 play.

"Dayton, Xavier and us are going to have to fight it out for those third and fourth spots," UM Head Coach Bonnie Kenny said. "It's important that we protect our own home court."

TEMPLE (15-13, 12-15, 15-13, 15-10)

In Friday night's game of the weekend double-bill, the Maroon and White fell to Temple (11-6 overall, 8-0 A-10) in four games. But the final result does not truly represent what was one of the grittiest matches the Minutewomen played all season.

"I told them I was really proud of the way they played," coach Kenny said. "I thought we played Temple really well. My comment to them was that [Temple is] definitely the best team in our conference, and if that's the case we're really not that far behind."

Junior co-captain Lymarie Llovet led the Minutewomen with 13 kills, while fellow co-captain Rebecca Hasson was right behind, tallying 11. Senior Jenni Drennan led the way for the Maroon and White on the defensive side by digging 16 balls on the night.

"I think we can learn more from what we did with Temple," Kenny said. "I think we played well enough that we weren't too dejected. We were disappointed that we let that first game slip away and we could have been up 2-0."

Stepping up for the Owls was All-American candidate Alma Kovaci, who returned from an ankle injury she suffered in the team's win over Dayton to tally 17 kills in the four game match.

UMASS (15-8, 15-11, 15-5)

Saturday night brought a better result for UMass as it downed LaSalle University (10-12 overall, 0-7 Atlantic 10) in straight sets. While the Lady Explorers fought hard, they simply did not have enough talent to match up with the Minutewomen.

"I thought it was good. We did what we wanted to do," said Kenny. "We used a lot of people to try and get them some experience. They need to know that a match like this is a great confidence builder for them if they can get in and perform well. I'm pleased that everybody got to play a lot and everybody had fun doing it."

It was Llovet again leading the way for the Maroon and White, this time posting a double-double with 11 kills and 12 digs. Sophomore Jen Davis turned in a strong performance, killing six balls and pulling up eight digs. Junior Janeen DeMarte tallied eight digs of her own in the match.

"I thought all weekend Lymarie [Llovet] played pretty well," stated Kenny. "Janeen DeMarte in that third game [against LaSalle] was the difference. We had an outside hitter that terminated balls consistently, and every time she was in the front row we scored. We scored quickly with her in."

But Kenny was still skeptical about the team's performance on Saturday.

"I think we should have been better at the net. I thought we were physically capable of being a dominant hitting team like Temple was against us last night."

For LaSalle, it was Kristin Russo leading the way with 10 kills and with a vicious jump serve that, when it was on target, proved a tremendous hassle for UMass. Also chipping in for the Lady Explorers was Kelly Daniel who posted nine digs.

The Minutewomen are in action again tonight as they face rival UConn at the Curry Hicks Cage at 7 p.m. The Lady Huskies stand at 12-7 overall and 3-1 in the Big East conference. They are led by Stephanie Schindel, whose 221 kills and 209 digs lead the team, with averages of 3.47 kills and 3.17 digs per game.

"UConn...you say that word around here and people get psyched up," Kenny added.

IF YOU'RE LOOKING FOR A GOOD TIME, WRITE FOR COLLEGIAN SPORTS!!! (Because all of the guys here look like this)

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-3699

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Spacious living room: High ceilings, AC, Puffton Village 549-6434 ASAP

AUTO FOR SALE

90 Ford Bronco II 4x4. Well maintained. $2700 O/B/O 413-532-6535

91 Ford Taurus Black, 90K mi $2200 549-5230

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

89 VW Golf 112k, 4dr, maroon, auto, sunroof, cd, perfect condition. $2900 253-2443

1988 Ford Festiva 155K miles. Excellent condition! $700/obo 413-665-7725

88 Saab 900 5spd. blue. $1900 obo Mike 413-772-2686

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

87 Toyota Tercel Good engine 134,000m $700 Contact 546-2870

AUTO FOR SALE

91 Honda Accord EX Auto, AC, CD, moonroof. 4 new tires. Great condition. 14k $4200. 546-2568 or 617-335-5366

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

88 Dodge Caravan for parts $500 obo 413-549-6175

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

COMPUTERS

HP Internal CD-RW Burner 8x4x32 NEW $250 Call Caroline 253-2362

LAPTOPS for only $599, warranty included + delivery. Email:laptopworldwide@hotmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today; 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. 3hrs per wk to 20hrs per wk flexible work environment. Great gymnastics center with loose foam + resi pit system. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, Mass. 01301 413-773-3646

Dishwashers Great part-time evening positions. $8.50 to start. Must be 18 years old. Apply in person Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton

EMPLOYMENT

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers Wanted Flexible schedule. Must have own vehicle. No late hours or cleaning. $8-$12/hr. Delivery Express 549-0077

Personal Assistant/ Housecleaner. Julia 413-367-0227

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

FOR SALE

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Snowboard! Morrow 158cm, good condition, bindings not included, $100 Call Adam (413) 786-4291

Trek 930 Excellent condition. $325 bo. Call Todd 586-4589

Calloway Golf Clubs. Excellent condition. Complete set. $300 bo call Todd 586-4589

G.E. Dorm Refrigerator works fine $60 Tel. Northampton 584-3364

Three Couches, 4 loveseats, 4 sleep sofas. $65-$150 free delivery 586-2221

HOUSE SITTER

ESCAPE FROM DORMS! HOUSE SITTER NEEDED, NOVEMBER 14-25. 3 MILES FROM DOWNTOWN AMHERST. LIVE IN, FEED TWO CATS. $25/DAY 253-0459

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Djata Bumpus. 256-0364 (Incorrect number ran in previous ads.)

Your AD could be right HERE!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities* Sororities*Clubs* Student Groups* Earn $1000-$2000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling up quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

3 Guys looking for roommate in four bedroom Rolling Green Apt. $300 a month incl. utl. Call 253-4014 ask for Steve, Jim, Justin

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

Place your Ad today!!

Call The Daily Collegian Classifieds

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Ch.
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 International
15 UMass Academic TV
16 WB/New Haven
17 Sundance
18 The Learning Channel
19 UVC-TV19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
21 Govet to Govet
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN Headline News
24 CNN
25 CNN fn
26 CNN Si
27 TBS
28 BET
29 College TV Network
30 Univision
31 Comedy Central
32 Cartoon Network
33 TV Land
34 C-Span
35 ZDTV (Tentative)
36 Bloomberg Financial Network
37 History Channel
38 HSCN Programming

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 17, 2000

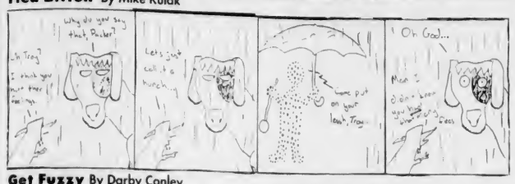
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Building Big (N) (Part 3 of 5)		Political Debate (Live)				Nova "Chasing El Nino"
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "Florida Straights" (N)		Political Debate (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Florida Straights" (N)		Political Debate (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Be-Millionaire	Geene Davis	Political Debate (In Stereo Live)				News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Untouched" (In Stereo)	News			Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	60		News	NBC News	Whee!-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Major League Baseball Playoffs: ALCS Game 6 – Mariners at Yankees or Athletics				News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	★★★ "Copycat" (1995, Suspense) Sigourney Weaver			News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News		Extra		Hollywood		Major League Baseball Playoffs: ALCS Game 6 – Mariners at Yankees or Athletics				News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Fresser	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show	Titus (N)	Dark Angel "Flushed" (N)	News			Friends	Fresser
WWLP	22	News	NBC News		Whee!-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Major League Baseball Playoffs: ALCS Game 6 – Mariners at Yankees or Athletics				News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Building Big (N) (Part 3 of 5)		Political Debate (Live)				Cheiie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fresser	Be-Millionaire	Geene Davis	Political Debate (In Stereo Live)				News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fresser	★★★ "Copycat" (1995, Suspense)		Sigourney Weaver		Fresser	Mad About You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "Jeremiah Johnson" (1972, Adventure)		Robert Redford, Will Geer.				★★½ "The Sons of Katie Elder" (1965, Western)
A&E	105	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Hot Pursuit"		Biography: Phillips		American Justice: Reservation.		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Blue Bamboo"
CNN	29	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Pre-Debate Coverage (Live)		Political Debate (Live)				Post Debate Coverage (Live)
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★★ "Romancing the Stone" (1984, Adventure) Michael Douglas.				Premium	Whose Line?	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	182	Wild Discovery: Creatures		Extreme Australia		On the Inside: Las Vegas		New Detectives		FBI Files "Blood Brothers"		Justice Files
ESPN	33	Sportacenter		1999 World Series Earthquake		PBA Bowling: Brunswick Johnny Petraglia Open.		Wonderful World of Golf (N)				Sportscenter
LIFE	69	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait:		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Strong Medicine "BRCA1/BRCA2" (In Stereo)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	93	Direct Effect	Makeover	TRL (In Stereo)		Jackass	Senseless	Real World	Real World	Real World	Together	Truth (N)	Diary
NICK	55	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	45	Sliders "State of the A.N.T."		Babylon 5 "The Gray"		Batman	Batman	Batman	Batman		Batman	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	27	48 Hours "Perfect Specimen"		Transplant-Tricking		Trauma: Life in the ER (N)		Saving Life and Limb		Leeches, Maggots & Bees		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	65	ER "Ambush" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Indy Show"		★★★ "Ruthless People" (1986, Comedy) Danny DeVito.				Bull "Monday, Bloody Monday"		ER "Truth & Consequences"
USA	70	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Angels 90" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Danger Zone"		"Shows If You Know What I Did Last Friday the 13th" (2000)				Strip Poker	Martin
HBO	30	★★★ "Cookie's Fortune" (1999) Glenn Close. "PG-13"				★★★ "Eyes Wide Shut" (1999, Drama) Tom Cruise. (In Stereo) "R"					Making Love	Sex and City	G-String Divas
MAX	42	(5:15) ★★★ "True Crime" (1999) Clint Eastwood.				★★★½ "The Joy Luck Club" (1993, Drama) Tsai Chin, Kieu Chinh. (In Stereo) "R"				★★½ "Diplomatic Siege" (1999) Peter Weller. "R"		"Cold Wind"
SHOW	36	★★★ "The In-Laws" (1979, Comedy) Peter Falk. "PG"				★½ "Ringmaster" (1998, Comedy) Jerry Springer. "R"				Beggar's and Choosers		★★★ "Trekkies" (1997) "PG"

Dilbert By Scott Adams

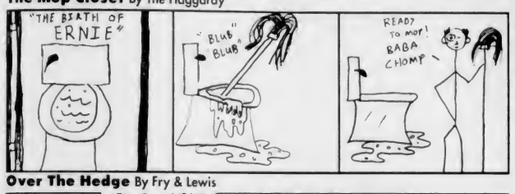
I USED TO HAVE AN E-MAIL MONKEY ON MY BACK, BUT I WENT COLD TURKEY.
I STILL DO A LITTLE CHATTING BUT THAT'S NOT ADDICTIVE.
IS IT?
OH. JUST SHUT UP AND HOP ON.
I'M ROFL!
dilbert.com

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak

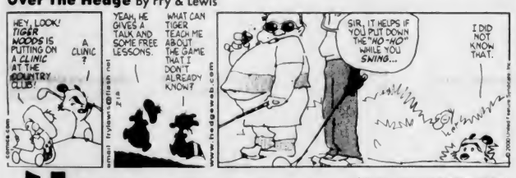


Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

The Mop Closet By The Haggardy



Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis



HEY, LOOK! TIGER WOODS IS PUTTING ON A CLINIC AT THE COUNTRY CLUB.
A CLINIC?
YEAH, HE GIVES A TALK AND SOME FREE LESSONS.
WHAT CAN TIGER TEACH ME ABOUT THE GAME THAT I DON'T ALREADY KNOW?
SIR, IT HELPS IF YOU PUT DOWN THE "NO-HOE" WHILE YOU SWING...
I DID NOT KNOW THAT.
www.hedgewick.com

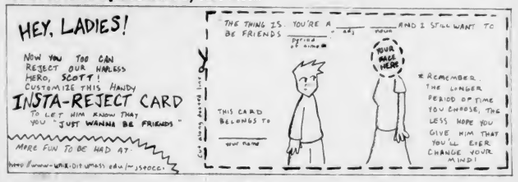
Frosh By Megan Orosz

Tragedy occurs during a game of ultimate frisbee by the campus pond.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

WE GOT A SURPLUS OF NON-STANDARD LIGHTBULBS TO MOVE. YOUR JOB IS TO GO THROUGH THOSE BOXES AND THINK UP AN EYE-CATCHING WAY TO SELL THAT MERCHANDISE...
THE HOUSE DIDN'T BURN DOWN!
WHY DON'T WE RIG A DISPLAY, LIGHT UP ONE OF THESE BABIES, AND HANG A SIGN: NON-STANDARD LIGHTBULBS FOR SALE?!
HEY! I JUST GOT A GREAT IDEA!
BOOM!

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci



HEY, LADIES!
NOW YOU TOO CAN REJECT OUR HARDLY HERO, SCOTT! CUSTOMIZE THIS HANDY
INSTA-REJECT CARD
TO LET HIM KNOW THAT YOU "JUST WANNA BE FRIENDS" MORE FUN TO BE HAD AT
THE THING IS, YOU'RE A ... AND I STILL WANT TO BE FRIENDS
THIS CARD BELONGS TO YOUR FACE HERE!
REMEMBER, THE LONGER PERIOD OF TIME YOU CHOOSE, THE LESS HOPE YOU GIVE HIM THAT YOU'LL EVER CHANGE YOUR MIND!

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may be considered out your league by some people today, but the fact is that you simply haven't unleashed all of your talents yet.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You mustn't be wishy-washy today. If you make a decision, stick to it. You don't want to have the competition see you be uncertain.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You're after something steady and dependable today, and you may have it – though you must avoid getting distracted by anything unrealistic.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Fall back to the basics today and you'll realize just where you've been going wrong – and just how you can reduce stress and strain.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Fulfillment may seem incomplete for a time today, until you finally open up and tell a loved one just what you want and why.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Take care that you respect the boundaries that others have established. Take even one step too far and the repercussions may be serious.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – That which you have in common with a loved one will prove more important to you today than those secret differences you harbor beneath the surface.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You are in the mood for some stimulating interaction today – and conversation will only go so far. During evening hours a door may open.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You'll come to terms with an aspect of your own personality today with which you've been at odds for quite some time.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You're after a little more romance in all areas of your life, but it's best to begin at home. Don't let yourself become gloomy over the future.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone may be trying to tame you, but today you'll be beyond all external controls – following your own instincts, without fear.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can keep romance alive today even while you are tending to your professional responsibilities. Your imagination can work wonders!

Amherst Weather

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 56 LOW: 46	HIGH: 61 LOW: 41	HIGH: 61 LOW: 38

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBJ
www.monkey-box.net
"I REKON I'LL NEVER FORGET THE DAY THAT 'TALL MAN' MCQUIGLY RODE INTO TOWN. HE HAD QUITE THE POKER FACE"
(WYATT EARP'S DIARY, 1888)
© 2000

Quote of the Day

"Hey, if you want me to take a dump in a box and mark it 'guaranteed,' I will. I've got time."

–Tommy Callahan "Tommy Boy"

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

BBQ Pork Sandwich

Baked Ziti (vegetarian)

Ratatouille with Ricotta Cheese and Basil (vegetarian)

Southern 6 Bean Stew (vegan)

Dinner

Thai Meatloaf with Curry Sauce

Leapin' Lizard Chicken

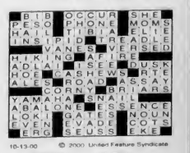
Mixed Bean Creole (vegan) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

Spinach Tortilla Casserole (vegetarian) (Berkshire, Franklin & Worcester)

ACROSS
1 Norse king
5 Hide
10 Read hastily
14 Dr. Gallup's work
15 Eyer, of a sort
16 Threesome
17 Not "pro"
18 Scent
19 Disrespectful
20 Stocky
22 Repairs
23 November word
24 Dry
26 Tavern brew
29 American relative
33 Delight in
34 "— and Punishment"
35 "School" start
36 Fortifies
37 Jazz style
38 Counterfeit
39 Quiche ingredient
40 Pie nut
41 Unspoken
42 Hold back
44 Sign of the future
45 Novelist Bellow
46 Former Atlanta arena
48 Scratchy
51 Kind of soup
55 Exotic island
56 Conditions
58 Hawkeye state
59 Caesar's road
60 Snoozed
61 Swear
62 Foolish
63 Concise
64 Split

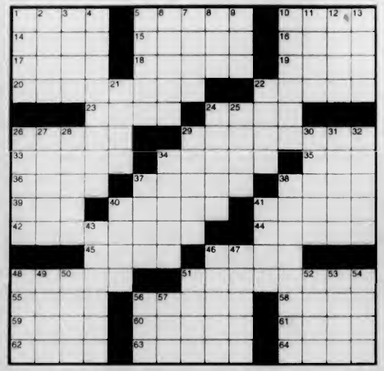
DOWN
1 Bright fish
2 Unattached
3 Can. province
4 Jaspers
5 Glide
6 Match
7 Thicken
8 Dress edge
9 Baseball stat
10 Gall
11 Heart of the matter
12 White House staffer
13 Turndowns
21 Days of — the past
22 Emery board
24 Charged atom
25 Can. law enforcers
26 Weaker, excuse-wise
27 Proverb
28 Bells
29 Ol cities
30 Room
31 "Catch-22" star
32 Gets to know
34 Producer
B. DeMille
37 Sweetheart
38 Common
40 Entreat
41 Writer Morrison
43 Jeans partner
46 Vigor
47 Stale
48 Footnote abbr.
49 "So long!"
50 Music notation
51 Author Harte
52 Cherish
53 Writer Wister
54 Precious ointment
56 Recipe qty.
57 Yale alumnus

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



10-13-00 © 2000 Universal Press Syndicate

THE BEST DEAL AROUND (SINCE YOUR MOM LEFT TOWN)
the HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's Staff

Night Editor — Adam White
Photo Technician — Brian McDermott
Copy Editor — Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor — Adi Huseinovic, Mike Kulak
Production Staff — Jess Grant

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, October 17, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Soccer invades capital; GW falls victim

Deren alone shoots down Colonials

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts soccer team stood on the hallowed ground of our nation's capital this weekend with a lot to prove. UMass was looking to prove that it could bounce back from a less than average showing against Harvard, and it was looking to affirm its position in the Atlantic 10 program.

Umass	1
GW	0

The Minutemen waged a turf war against the Colonials of George Washington on Sunday with Jeff Deren committing the mortal blow in a 1-0 win. With the victory, the Maroon and White improved to 8-4-2, but most importantly, it remained undefeated in A-10 play at 4-0-1. The Colonials dropped to 7-4-2, 4-2 in the conference.

UMass was able to be successful in an area that hasn't been prosperous for the majority of the season, the first half. The Maroon and White offense was clearly a step above the rest in terms of intensity as well as execution. The Minutemen outshot GW by an astounding 11-2 margin in the first half alone.

Coach Sam Koch had said previously that he hoped the loss to Harvard would be a "wake up call." The team responded well in a completely dominating first half effort. Not only did the Maroon and White outshoot GW, it also improved on a flaw that proved to be fatal in Cambridge.

"We got beat to 50/50 balls and we got caught ball watching," said Koch. On Sunday however, it was George Washington's eyes that were rolling as a result improved effort and a flourishing offense pelted certain doom for the home squad.

Colonial goalkeeper Nick Parapynski was tested early and often as he ended up making nine saves on the day. An opportunistic UMass offense was able to consistently threaten the opposing defense. The Minutemen caused problems for the GW backs by varying their attack with long balls to the corner as well as killer passes through the back line.

Despite all the scoring bids, the game remained knotted at zero with only 15 minutes left in the first half. Massachusetts finally cashed in however, with the strike coming from its most likely source.

With 9:49 left in the first frame, leading scorer Deren netted his seventh goal of the year off a rebound chance. His goal, which proved to be the game winner, was unassisted as he beat the GW keeper after a preceding save.

The Minutemen brought a 1-0 lead and a superior performance into halftime, but before they could get the win they would have to stave off a GW run.

The Colonials pulled a U-turn from their performance in the first half, out shooting the Minutemen 11-5 in the second period. The Maroon and White defense was ready however, as was goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn. The junior made four stops on the game, three in the second half, en route to the win. O'Quinn earned his fourth shutout of the year as the stingy UMass defense regained its top form.

Using the Harvard performance as motivation, a UR Pounces led defense stepped up the intensity as well as the physical play, shut down a once potent George Washington attack.

In securing another conference victory, UMass remains one of two remaining undefeated teams in the A-10, the other being Rhode Island. The Minutemen are in sole possession of third place in the conference with 13 points, two behind URI and Dayton. They now look ahead to a mid week showdown with the first place Rams. A win would land the Maroon and White atop the standings and would also give the team increased notoriety, as Rhode Island is a top-notch team in the New England region.

DAN SAVELLA/COLLEGIAN

No. 7 Benny Hoffman tries to advance the ball downfield while his teammate, No. 21 Andrew Eicher, looks on.

Tennis strings together one win in CT

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Correspondent

The undefeated Massachusetts men's tennis squad traveled to Storrs, Connecticut this past weekend to partake in the UConn Invitational. This individual tournament, which included 13 schools, did not affect the Maroon and White's record, but it did give coach Judy Dixon an idea of where her team currently stands against rival UConn.

The major competitors in the three-day tournament were Massachusetts, Connecticut, Marist College and Boston College. It's safe to say that the results for the Minutemen were mixed, in terms of positives and negatives.

UMass definitely looked strong after days one and two, junior Steve Prisco failing to advance to the quarterfinals, as the top seed suffered an upset to Keith Dressler of Providence College 6-4, 6-1 in flight A singles.

"Steve transferred from P.C. and he's always had trouble with this guy," Dixon said. "Also he has some blisters on his feet which gave him some trouble."

Freshman sensation Brent Davis of San Diego, CA continued his successful streak by defeating Dave Gustein of Rhode Island in flight B action. Fourth seed Aron Gortman breezed past Victor Sapeznikov of Marist in the second round of flight B play after having a bye in the first round.

In doubles play the first seeded team of Prisco and Davis advanced in flight A and the tandem of Rory Theis and Will Shaw went on to the quarterfinals in Flight B.

On day two, the squad made a concerted effort, but Davis was the sole winner in four of the five singles matches as he advanced to the finals by defeating Boston College's Mark Lucero 6-6, 6-0, 6-3 in the quarterfinals and Luke Grimshaw of UConn 6-0, 4-6, 6-4 in the semifinals.

The tandems of Prisco/Davis and Shaw/Theis both advanced to the finals by defeating teams from the rival Huskies in the doubles competition. Most of the matches actually came down to a Minuteman against a Husky, which had both its advantages and disadvantages.

"I probably will not have us play in this tournament next year since it doesn't include that many top schools," Dixon said. "It usually comes down to UMass versus UConn. This tournament served as a wake up call. Right now we need to regroup and work hard for our match against UConn on October 28th or we're in trouble."

The tournament closed on day three with Davis breezing past UConn's Mat Zuhatsky, as he knocked him off in straight sets 6-3, 6-4 to win the flight B tournament.

"Brent really played a beautiful match," Dixon said. "He beat two UConn players in the tournament and this was a really good preparation for him."

The Davis/Prisco tandem lost 8-4 in a pro-set match and the team of Shaw/Theis was also defeated in the finals 8-5.

Tomorrow, the Minutemen will play the University of Rhode Island at 2:30 p.m. on the Upper Boyden Courts. The Maroon and White are favored going into this Conference match, but the Rams are a tough, hungry team that should not be taken lightly.

"They have a great No.1 and 2 and they always come ready to play us. We should be able to handle them but it won't be easy. They want to come and get us so we have to be ready," said Dixon.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Bill Greener whacks a backhand by the opposition during the UConn Invitational this past weekend.

Water polo drops trio in West

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

It was the worst of times; it was the worst of times.

The No. 11 Massachusetts men's water polo team traveled to the West coast to take on three of the top teams in the nation with the hopes of scoring some substantial victories. It turned out to be about as disappointing a weekend as a team can have.

The Minutemen (16-6, 6-0 CWPA) began their time out west against No. 9 Pepperdine (6-4). Everything began well, as the Maroon and White rode the Waves to a 4-2 lead at halftime.

"The first half was our best half of water polo for the week," said junior Greg Trayer.

Unfortunately, it was the second half, not the first, which would set the trend for the weekend. The Minutemen were blanked in the third quarter and gave up five goals in the fourth en route to a 10-7 loss and a brutal weekend.

"In the third quarter we let them back into the game; in the fourth we just couldn't finish out the game," Trayer said.

UMass' offense was led by junior Mike Foley's three goals. Juniors Carlos Ramos and Trayer each chipped in with a pair of goals while junior goalie J.R. VanderWall led the defense, making six saves in the Minuteman net.

After Thursday's heartbreaking loss, UMass took on No. 7 Long Beach St. [8-3] and were unable to bounce back. The 49ers jumped out to a 4-1 lead after the first quarter and remained up by three at the half with a score of 6-3.

"We had a couple calls against us early and it just took us out of our game," Trayer said.

The Minutemen couldn't make up for the early deficit and ended up losing by a final score of 9-5.

The Maroon and White was led by Ramos' two goals. Juniors Adam Moore and Foley, and sophomore Ricardo Puig each netted a goal apiece. VanderWall made two saves to increase his total to 136 on the season.

Saturday's game against No. 12 Loyola Maramount proved no more prosperous than the two that came before it. UMass kept the score even through the first half, but the Lions roared to a two-point advantage after three quarters. The Minutemen were eventually devoured by a final score of 9-6.

"That was probably our worst game," said Trayer. "We seemed to get progressively worse throughout the weekend."

Foley had another three goals in the UMass defeat. Juniors Evan Lutz, Ramos, and Puig each added a goal, while senior Brook O'Neill had three assists for the Minutemen. VanderWall made three more saves in goal and now has a season total of 139.

Rams, Bengals a league apart

4th and inches
with
David Rose

It's "The Greatest Show on Earth" vs. "The Show That Should Be Banned from Earth."

The St. Louis Rams and Cincinnati Bengals are going in such opposite directions that the only way they would be able to contact each other is if one of the Rams fell into the Black Hole, where the Bengals currently reside. To put into perspective how far apart these two teams are, I will make a few comparisons between the two teams.

St. Louis- Record 6-0. First Place in the NFC West.

Cincinnati- Record 0-6. Last Place in the AFC Central.

St. Louis- Head Coach Mike Martz- An offensive genius

Cincinnati- Head Coach Dick LeBeau who took over for Bruce Coslet-"nuff said.

St. Louis- Least amount of points scored in a game this year- 37.

Cincinnati- Amount of points scored this entire season- 37.

The fact that there has been 17 different occasions in the NFL this season that a team has scored at least 37 points in a game makes that stat even more dreadful.

St. Louis- Has outscored its opponents by 88 points.

Cincinnati- Has been outscored by its opponents by 106 points. In fact, every other team in the NFL scored this past weekend, with the exception of the Bengals.

St. Louis- Quarterback- Kurt Warner, who has 2260 yards and 17 TD's, and is on pace to throw for over 6,000 yards in one season.

Cincinnati- Quarterback- Akili Smith, whose interceptions appear to have been returned for a combined 2268 yards.

St. Louis- Back-Up QB- Trent Green, who was suppose to be the starter last year before he tore his knee in a preseason game.

Cincinnati- Back-Up QB- Scott Mitchell, who was suppose to be the starter... wait a minute, he's Scott Mitchell, scratch that comment.

St. Louis- Running Back- Marshall Faulk who is on pace to set the NFL record for most combined yards from scrimmage in one season.

Cincinnati- Running Back- Corey Dillon who is about to set the NFL record for most money earned per rushing yard in a single season.

St. Louis- Has a receiving core that rivals the United States 4x100 relay team.

Cincinnati- So far, the receiving core has looked like the track that the Rams run on.

St. Louis- Quote having the most resemblance to them- a line in a Notorious B.I.G. joint, "Time to get paid, blow up like da World Trade."

Cincinnati- Quote having the most resemblance to them- an old quote by former Tampa Bay head coach John McKay talking about his offense's execution, "Ya, I would be OK with that."

St. Louis- Music played behind their highlights- Theme from "The Lone Ranger."

Cincinnati- Music played behind their highlights- Theme from "The Three Stooges."

St. Louis- Has a rap artist from that area with a hit song called, "Country Grammar."

Cincinnati- "Duh, what grammar?"

As you can see, these two teams are going in monumentally opposite directions. The Rams are rivaling the greatest offenses in NFL history, as they go for another Super Bowl.

On the other hand, the Bengals are only rivaling the 1976 Tampa Bay Buccaneers that went 0-14 for the title of "The Worst Team in NFL History."

The only question that keeps these two teams linked together is a simple one, "What will occur first, a Rams loss or a Bengals win?"

Considering the way both teams are playing, don't hold your breath waiting for either.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 30 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, October 18, 2000

Punksters Green Day and local band Traveling Matt release new albums and you can read all about them in Arts today. Arts: we live to serve you.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts volleyball team battled regional rival UConn last night. To find out how it did, check out the back page.

SPORTS p. 10

AC Professor to give class on Spanglish

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

Is Spanglish just another regional dialect? Is it any different than Ebonics? Does it merit more attention than any Creole the world over? Ilan Stavans, Spanish professor at Amherst College, believes Spanglish is unique. So unique, in fact, that he is compiling a Spanglish dictionary and is teaching an entire class on it this semester.

What makes Spanglish unique?

According to Stavans, "Spanglish goes beyond class. Spanglish goes beyond nationality. Spanglish goes beyond a US context."

Whereas Ebonics is "a slang spoken in US cities," Spanglish exists in Puerto Rico and in Mexico, in Los Angeles and in Madrid.

More than 500 million people in the world speak Spanish. As English has become the international language of tecnologia and commerce, it has seeped into the speech of millions of people throughout the world. Spanish speakers have not been left out of this pervasion.

Some call it a perversion.

Stavans has received much criticism from the Royal Academy of Language in Madrid for his work in this field.

"Spain is very territorial about its language," Stavans commented.

He continued by saying that many within the Academy are puristas. They fear that the integrity of the Spanish language is fizzling out through its open exposure to other languages, primarily English.

There are also those in the Academy who are "embracing and open-minded" of the Idea of a Spanglish dicionario.

Response in the United States has been mostly positivo, Stavans said.

"Nothing has ever been pure in this land," wrote Stavans in an essay entitled "The Sounds of Spanglish."

Americans, for the most part, have been "hungry to find out more [about the dictionary]," he said.

Stavans said he hopes to make it easier for people to find out more about Spanglish. As a language, it already has recognition. There's no denying that people speak it. Now it needs to be taken en serio.

"Intellectual circles have [seen Spanglish] as the bastard offspring of English or Spanish," he commented.

Many Latino children in this country are chastised, he said, for speaking Spanglish in school.

"People think they have broken thoughts because they speak a broken language," said Stavans. "But if it serves you to communicate your thoughts, it's a legitimate form of communication."

Just as thoughts are fluid, so, too is language. Stavans described the compilation of the dicionario as a "struggle against time, where you are defeated before you even start."

Some have expressed concern that the written documentation of Spanglish, a language that is ever-changing, will kill it, Stavans, however, is not concerned with that.

"Spanglish is beautiful," he said, "because it is free and unsettled." He said he does not believe that will be lost through its documentation.

That flexibility comes, at least en parte, through the profound elasticity of English and Latin American Spanish.

Por ejemplo, "there are over 108 ways," Stavans mentioned, "of saying 'penis' in Ecuador alone."

Stavans suggested that different languages embody different emotions. For him, "it is easier to argue in English [and] it is easier to dream in Spanish."

Given these differences, he said it only makes sense to have a language that combines the two.

"Latinos," he said, "are trying to define who we are. We are neither Latin American nor American only. We are both."

And Spanglish is the necessary linguistic combination of the modern duality of the Spanish-speaking world.

TIBITHA GRECZYN-BLUM / COLLEGIAN

The ultimate pass

The departure of last weekend's warm temperatures did not stop the new women's ulitmate frisbee club from playing a game yesterday afternoon.

Butterfield student cited in altercation

By Melissa Hammel and Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

Violence was a predominant problem this weekend for the University of Massachusetts Police Department with a number of cases of assault and battery on campus.

On Saturday the 14th officers were called to Butterfield Dormitory at approximately 4 a.m. to investigate a possible assault within the building on the third floor. The call for assistance came from a resident that was involved in an altercation with another female on her floor. The two wrestled on the ground and housing staff was forced to become involved in the incident.

"While the officers were there there was a number of incidents that were occurring," John W. Luippold, Chief of Police explained.

Officers in attendance observed 20 year old UMass senior Eric Stout, a resident of the second floor of the building, in the hallway yelling and creating a disturbance. He was asked to leave the area by both a resident assistant and officers on the scene.

"An officer was on the third floor when he noticed Mr. Stout walking up and down the floor, he was asked to quiet down and to leave the area," Luippold said.

Stout then became confrontational and laughed at the officer when he threatened arrest and continued to run down the hallway banging on doors.

"The [an officer on the scene] then observed Mr. Stout ball up his right fist and attempt to swing at the officer," Luippold said.

The officer dodged the punch while Stout fled to the second floor screaming profanities. The officer caught up with the suspect and arrested him for disorderly conduct, and assault on a police officer.

Police arrested Melanie Sentz, 17, of Baltimore, MD, for assault and battery with a dangerous weapon as a result of a police investigation on Sunday the 15th. The investigation determined that Sentz assaulted a member of her family.

"There were allegations that she was kicked by Sentz," Luippold said.

The third case of assault was reported on Saturday before 1 am, involving a group of students that were traveling back to Patterson Dormitory. While the group was walking along Massachusetts Ave. in lot 24, an altercation occurred with another group. The individual reporting the incident explained that a friend had been punched during the incident and that her purse was stolen during the fight.

"After the incident, she went back to Patterson and reported the assault and battery and the larceny," Luippold said.

Another incident that occurred over the weekend was a report of a intoxicated male, who was removed from Morill Science Center three on Friday the 13th. When officers found the individual, he was wandering around outside of the building carrying a fire extinguisher. The officers found a large amount of blood near a broken window in the building and upon seeing the individual with cuts on his hands took him into protective custody and transported him to Health Services.

Another incident of graffiti was found in Pierpont Dormitory on Tuesday the 10th. Swastikas and anti-Semitic graffiti as well as more homophobic graffiti were found within the dormitory.

"We have our detectives doing follow-ups on the vandalism and vandalism that occurred previously in Pierpont," Luippold said.

There was an incident of breaking and entering on the 15th, when a room in Mary Lyon dormitory was left unlocked for a period of time. While the door was unlocked, 20 individuals entered the room and "trashed" it, stealing a wallet.

"The individuals were drinking alcohol and listening to loud music," Luippold said.

In Baker Dormitory on Saturday the 14th, a condom machine was broken into, spilling its contents and monies onto the floor. The police have no suspects in this matter.

After four and a half hours, Biafra discusses

Just about everything

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

"It has to start somewhere /
It has to start sometime /
What better place than here /
What better time than now."

The words are Rage Against the Machine, but the sentiment was very much alive at Bowker Auditorium Monday night as Jello Biafra concluded a four hour-long spoken word performance at mid night. A man that has dedicated his life to social activism and punk individualism, Biafra, former frontman for the punk band Dead Kennedys, knows that change has to come at a grass roots level, beginning with self-evaluation.

He urged the crowd to not become slaves to corporate culture by taking steps to buy less from huge empires and chains, focusing instead on patronizing respectable local businesses. The audience was prompted to imagine themselves in the positions of their bosses and other executives and think about what they would do differently, because their time is not far off. Finally, and most importantly, Biafra pleaded, "Don't forget who you are, and don't forget what brought you here tonight," after seeing the burning desire of many of his punk peers extinguished and that same ambition still present in the eyes of many at Bowker.

Jello Biafra's airy but commanding voice filled the auditorium at 7:30 p.m. as he walked out onto the stage clad in black sunglasses, a high-collared knee-length black coat, black jeans and sneakers, delivering an ominous warning of upcoming governmental oppression. "Marshall Law will be enacted," he deadpanned, "and all constitutional rights will be suspended." As he went on to detail a somnambulist police state, he informed that "the number one enemy of progress is questions," and humorously added "sports broadcasts will proceed as scheduled."

Biafra took off the coat to reveal an impressively gaudy psychedelic neon shirt and a large long star belt buckle, justifying his legacy as one of the most unique individuals in the music scene. He then tore into an address to the next president of the United States, giving advice for the legalization of drugs, hemp uses and the end of the Three Strikes Law, referred to as "redneck vigilante bullshit." Squatting would be legal in empty buildings, "revitalizing Lowell overnight," and the taxing of religion would help balance the budget. Biafra also proposed a "maximum wage," where six figure earners, such as the singled-out Nomar Garciappara of the Red Sox, would be required to start paying back the community. Free trade would not be practiced where the work force is treated harshly, and he'd "cut the military budget...to zero."

Policy changes continued to include punishments that suit the crimes, such as slumlords living in their own buildings, an idea that has actually become a reality in Massachusetts. The voting age would be lowered to five, workers would elect their bosses and neighborhoods would elect their cops. Biafra also detailed his cabinet if he happened to be president, which would include Secretary of State (respected foreign policy scholar) Noam Chomsky,

turn to JELLO page 2

PHOTOS BY DAVID BROSNAN / COLLEGIAN

Educator Nieto speaks, honored

By Katey Pitts
Collegian Correspondent

With an amazing turnout yesterday, Sonia Nieto delivered a message of the importance of public school education in urban outlets while being presented with the Chancellors Teaching Medal for her work within the School of Education.

Her talk entitled, "What Keeps Teachers Going In Spite Of Everything" focused on a project she worked on with a group of 10 teachers working in inner-city Boston public school districts. This project was aimed at gaining an understanding of what drives highly successful teachers to remain teaching in some of the most discouraging of circumstances.

The situation in inner city districts face according to Nieto, "has a history brimming with inequalities." She went on to say, "Schools can no longer serve the children who need the most attention."

The fault of public school systems taking a downfall in recent years has been placed upon students and teachers. Nieto disagreed saying, "The problem is not just a personal, individual problem. All students of all backgrounds are capable of learning. [Society] puts the problem at the feet of students and teachers. All that does is hide the deep disparities in our society."

Nieto recognized many themes that constantly arose during the course of her research. One was to gain a complete understanding of individual teachers through their personal autobiographical writings. She explained, "Teaching reflects their most deeply embedded values and beliefs." She read an excerpt from Steve Gordon, a colleague, that said, "I teach who I am. My background explains my teaching. I accepted the magic of teaching."

The second theme Nieto addressed dealt with the relationships between students and teachers. A colleague of Nieto remarked as to why she teaches in light of sometimes daunting obstacles, "[The students] keep me going."

In dealing with frustrations that many teachers find among the multi-cultural societies in which they teach, one teacher said, "My students are told to become American. They get so frustrated because they know they will never be completely accepted as 'American.'"

The teachers, according to Nieto, are also frustrated and angry. "Teachers are angry because they see the promises of the public school system. Public education still remains the best hope of a utopian democratic society."

Nieto emphasized the solution in saying, "We need to respect teachers!" In addition to this, she also extended the need for support from every end of society with special regards to individual community support.

Nieto was also presented with the Chancellors Teaching Medal. Patrick Sullivan, a professor in the School of Education said, "She has developed such a reputation as a thoughtful pioneer in multicultural education. This turn-out shows how meaningful her courses have been to her students."

Nieto said at the end. "I feel blessed and grateful that I've been able to work with the teachers I've worked with. It is my hope that all will benefit from their thoughts and wisdom."

THORA GREEVE-BLUM - COLLEGIAN

Professor Sonia Nieto received the Chancellor's Teaching Medal for her work in researching inner city education and teachers.

■ Jello

continued from page 1

Press Secretary (schizophrenic/recording artist) Wesley Willis, and Supreme Court Justice (Hustler founder) Larry Flynt.

As he remembered what a big deal it was when the president came to town as a kid, Biafra linked that feeling to the current overflow crowds greeting "America's latest greatest aeria rock star, Ralph Nader." This stood in stark contrast to the diminishing crowds for Al Gore and King George II, as he put it, who have carefully planned and filled locations for the media to view them.

A probing into the death penalty revealed Biafra's opposition to it on the basis of wrongfully accused inmates on death row, a position he backed with many cases where the executed have later been proven innocent, such as the impending case with the West Memphis Three. It was mentioned that, if on death row, Hurricane Carter would have never been able to prove his innocence. The topic of Mumia Abu-Jamal was raised, with Biafra speaking about whom he believes to be an innocent man, and whose social commentary is vital. Two of his spoken word releases have been distributed through Biafra's San Francisco-based Alternative Tentacles record label.

"Dateline: Hellburbia" began the next portion of the evening, focusing on the Columbine shootings and various issues of teen culture. Various sound bites from Biafra's performance on the Pitchshifter track "As Seen on TV" were present, such as blaming Marilyn Manson and video games for the violence, and the insistence of teens to make themselves unique in ridiculous ways like the suggestions of devil horn and tail implants. Biafra gave theories for the violent nature of the teens, such as sports being pushed over learning in schools, dead-end jobs after college, media forcing girls to obsess about body image, and the fact that Columbine High School was made up of 60 percent evangelical Christians.

"I have no problem with people having religious values, but when people try to push them on me, I fight like a cat in a corner," he stated. The line "What would Jesus do? Who cares what Jesus would do?" caused a large applause from the audience. He also mentioned how the posting of the Ten Commandments and prayer sessions would have been useless and futile methods of trying to prevent the tragedy.

Biafra thought about the hard time he had personally after a fatal rock climbing accident involving his sister and her husband, adding how no explanation could, or should, take his pain away.

"Closure doesn't exist, so don't let anyone try to sell it to you when you're hurting."

Next on the list was mass media, as Biafra quoted numbers from Ben Bagdikian's book The Media Monopoly to enforce the point that increasing concentration of ownership is very dangerous, and one of the main reasons why alternative viewpoints aren't allowed on the air. Speaking for the people, he noted, "Our idea of America's Funniest Home Videos is the Fortune 500 sinking into the sea."

The recent lawsuit against Biafra from former members of the Dead Kennedys was briefly mentioned. Noted was that he would not let the songs that mean so much to him and others be used in a Levi's commercial, and if DK material shows up anywhere besides Alternative Tentacles that the consumer can feel free to spend their money elsewhere.

Biafra went on to create his own "I Have A Dream" speech, envisioning a nation where graffiti is in art galleries, where "stone-age fundamentalist religions can no longer deprive us of birth control" and where people "know the difference between fucking and making love." "Maybe then," he added, "all these frat boys won't have so much trouble finding a date."

At 10:15, after a short intermission wherein a fundamentalist Christian minister rambled over the PA about rock n' roll being evil, Biafra returned to talk about the evils of the World Trade Organization (WTO), the dangers of the EU, and the benefits of the WRC, genetically enhanced "frankenfoods," and both of the political conventions he attended. "Philly makes Worcester look like a tropic resort," he observed.

The undisputed highlight of the second half of the performance was Biafra brandishing a sign that read "Tipper Rocks!" which is simply the most ironic sign on earth if one knows any of the history he has with this woman. He made sure everyone knew the incredible threat of censorship presented by the union of Tipper Gore and Joseph Lieberman on the presidential ticket, as their combined history of attempted and successful censorship is frightening. He talked at length about his obscenity trial and the current list of potentially dangerous material on the government's short list to be censored. Cannibal Corpse was the only showing from the metal community on the list, however, prompting Biafra to humorously accuse metal of "slacking off" in the offensiveness department, not honoring the legacy of predecessors such as Judas Priest and Ozzy Osbourne.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1950. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holsten Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargantа Assistant Business Manager
Karie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

The UMass Index Yearbook
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
OCTOBER 23RD-27TH
Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY
Walsworth Publishing Company
Order Your 2001 Yearbook
ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or
Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

ATTENTION GRADUATE STUDENTS!
COME HEAR WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A SUCCESSFUL FACULTY CANDIDATE AT THE UMASS GRADUATE INFORMATION DAY:
WORKING ON AN ACEDEMIC CAREER
Tuesday October 24th
9:00 am-noon
Student Union Ballroom
Find out what the benefits are in the teaching field and how to prepare an effective Curriculum Vitae and Cover Letter.
ALL DOCTORAL AND MASTERS CANDIDATES ARE WELCOME!
Campus Career Network
Sponsored by the Campus Career Network and the Graduate Studies Office

Restaurants fight hunger

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Today restaurants around all of western Massachusetts will be celebrating "Piece of the Pie Day." This fundraiser is put on by, The Food Bank, in efforts to help raise money and awareness of hunger issues within the surrounding communities.

"This year we have over 168 restaurants involved in Piece of the Pie Day, and this year we included Berkshire County and 31 of its restaurants as a part of the fundraiser, which was a great start," said The Food Banks, Director of Development, Chris Landry.

The Fundraiser was developed 12 years ago in support of hunger, and has grown substantially throughout these past years. Every restaurant involved will donate 10 percent of their gross receipts to help The Food Bank, which in turn uses the money to provide food to fight hunger in western Massachusetts. For every dollar raised about nine dollars worth the food can be purchased for those in need.

"There has been an increasing need for food, a lot of people even with average paying jobs need help, even with our strong economy, the demands for other things often leave people short and in need of food," said Landry.

The overall fundraiser brings in anywhere from $25,000 to $30,000 dollars for The Food bank, explained Landry.

"We realize that not everyone is going to be interested in being apart of this fund raiser, and that's the challenge, making other restaurants and people aware of what we're trying to do. Although we have a lot of support, which is great for us, because it not only helps raise money, but it gets the message out to the public that there is hunger out here."

The Food Bank not only provides services themselves, but also works to help out those making a difference in western Massachusetts.

Over five million pounds of food a year is distributed throughout western Massachusetts to 470 other non-profit programs.

"This event is our largest of the year, and it's great because it allows us to connect with the community, and hopefully next year will have 200 restaurants involved, so that it can keep expanding," said Landry.

This year's event is sponsored by The Valley Advocate, WGGB NEWS40 and by Springfield Advertising. Also in Berkshire Country, sponsorship is being provided by Berkshire Eagle and Callahan Outdoor Advertising.

"Although this is my first year being apart of this, it's really exciting to get out and talk to people. They are really supportive and it's satisfying to see that within these communities, that people are really willing to help out there neighbors," said Landry.

Semester midpoint nears, as does "W" drop deadline

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

For students at the University of Massachusetts, Oct. 30 marks the last day to drop a course without any adverse affects on their cumulative grade point average.

Students may drop a course until Monday Oct. 30, the mid-point of the semester, with a "W", or withdrawal notation, appearing on their transcript in place of a grade.

"This can be a positive thing," said Elaine Parmett, Academic Advisor and Assistant to the Dean in the Pre-Major Department. "To drop a course rather than stay with a sinking ship."

Susan Machala, an Academic Advisor for Pre-Major Advising services, explained that while in the first few weeks of a course there's often little feedback from a professor on student performance, by the mid semester point a student should be able to assess their standing in a course.

"The first step for a student should be to speak to the professor to gauge their performance to determine if a class is right for them," Machala said.

Machala also noted that it is better to receive a "W" on a transcript than an "F" which could lead to academic probation.

"Students don't realize the danger of probation which increases the chances of suspension," Machala said.

If a student's cumulative grade point average falls below 2.0, that student is placed on academic probation. If a student's average falls below 2.0 a second time, the student faces possible suspension, and a third instance scoring under 2 may result in dismissal from the University.

"The poorer a students performance in past semesters, the more important the decision of whether to withdraw from a course becomes," Parmett said. "There's no academic penalty for withdrawal."

Machala went on to say that making up credits is much easier than most students realize. She explained that a student could take an intercession course, participate in an internship or take physical education classes.

"It's a lot better to play catch-up than to suffer with a bad grade," Machala said.

According to Machala, students should be aware that to remain a full-time student they must carry 12 credits per semester and that carrying less than 12 credits may reduce a students financial aid package.

"There is some possible financial risk if you fall below 12 credits," Machala said.

Machala added that students should be aware that they make retake up to 5 courses in which they scored a "D", "D", or an "F".

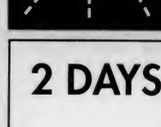
"If a student retakes a course and receives an A or a B, the new grade will figure into the students cumulative average and the old grade won't," Machala said.

Pre-major advising services runs programs to help give students with undeclared majors direction. The department is sponsoring the annual Majors Fair on Wednesday Nov. 1 between 6 and 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

WANTED
Collegian is taking applications for:
ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVES
We are looking for Enthusiastic, Energetic, Organized and Self-motivated Freshmen, Sophomores and Juniors from any major.
If you are guilty of any of these traits.
Contact Eric or Kate at the Collegian Advertising Office at 545-3500 or stop in and fill out an application at 113 Campus Center Basement
Application Deadline October 20th

Two for One!

MANDY BARNETT
That's right! Five College Students can purchase 2 tickets to the Mandy Barnett concert for the price of one. You'll be dazzled by Barnett's voice. It's as startling as Patsy Cline's and as caramel-smooth as Diana Krall's. Don't miss one of the hottest new voices on the new country music scene!
Saturday, October 21 at 8pm
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Get Two
Five College Student Tickets
for only
$5, $7 or $10.
Call 545-2511 Today!



The Daily Collegian.
We'll Drive.

All New All Yours All Free
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
The first three students in each category to place a job will get a free T shirt
Just invite students to MadAdz.com
Limit one T-shirt per student
No Brainer.
$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever awarded to two students a day five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.
Live & Learn.
MadAdz.com hooked me up.
Your Classifieds: You'll Believe It

Advance your career with a graduate degree from the premier institution training communication specialists.
Whatever your goal, our superior academic programs and practical experience position you for professional achievement. Preparation in communication specialties and technology provide a competitive edge
GRADUATE OPEN HOUSE
Saturday, October 28, 2000
9 a.m. - 3 p.m.
For more information contact:
Graduate Admissions
College of Communication
617/353-3481 or comgrad@bu.edu
An equal opportunity, affirmative action institution
Check out our Web site: www.bu.edu/com
WE'RE COMING TO YOU
Wednesday, October 25, 2000
Student Union Ballroom, Campus Center
Boston University College of Communication
Master of Science Programs:
• Print/Magazine Journalism
• News/Editorial Journalism
• Online Journalism
• Photojournalism
• Broadcast Journalism
• Business and Economics Journalism
• Science Journalism
• Communication Studies
• Advertising/Marketing
• Applied Communication Research
• Nonprofit Public Relations
• Corporate Public Relations
• Health Communication
• Television
• Television Management
Master of Fine Arts Programs:
• Film Production
• Screenwriting
• Film Studies
Dual Degrees:
• J.D./M.S. Mass Communication/Law
• M.B.A./M.S. Television Management Certificate:
• Advanced Journalism Studies

2 DAYS OF OPPORTUNITY

UMass Amherst Graduate School Open House
Come learn about some of UMass' outstanding graduate departments
Tuesday October 24, 2000
5:30 to 7:30 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
*door prizes this day only
Annual Five College Graduate and Professional School Day
over 130 Graduate and Professional Schools from throughout the country and abroad
Wednesday October 25, 2000
10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
Excellence Is Within Your Reach
Call 413-577-0417 for more information
See www-ccn.acad.umass.edu for a list of attending departments/schools
Co-sponsored by the Campus Career Network and the Graduate Studies Office

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Parking Services: A crash course

After a carefully looking at the parking situation on campus the Collegian has come to a few conclusions about how Parking Services has decided to handle its shortcomings. And those shortcomings are numerous.

It all began on the very first day of the past semester. As stressed out parents arrived on campus, their mini-vans packed to the roof, they searched long and hard for a parking spot. Granted there are meters, and one would think that on this day, when the population of the University of Massachusetts is nearly doubled, Parking Services might take this into consideration. But one thought wrong. It was just another perfect opportunity for Parking Services to start the year off right with what has always built up their already outstanding reputation: tickets. Although, it's been highly noticeable with students in the past, Parking Services thought that they would pass it on to another aspect of this institution, the parents.

Granted, parents only pay thousands of dollars yearly for their sons and daughters to attend classes, but Parking Services seems to think, "hey, what's another $50 a pop for parking, oh, wait towing, another $95, no big deal right?"

Wrong.

There is just a general lack of parking on campus. Students living in the Southwest residential area are forced to park in spaces that are not even spaces and that's if they don't get back to campus in time on Sundays. Only when they go to use their cars again, maybe as they are heading out to work or are running late, will they find that their car is no longer there.

Not only are these students left without a car, they also have to find a way over to Amherst Towing before they close at 5 p.m. If not, that's another $25 added onto the already exorbitantly high bill.

Parking Services needs to be examined to see how they not only affect the students on campus, but the community as well.

Although UMass embraces the support of the community by opening up the school when speakers such as Ralph Nader come onto campus, Parking Services seems to see this as another gold mine of opportunity. After towing over 17 cars, [those cars belonging to members of the Amherst community who visited the campus for a mere hour and a half], Parking Services insists that it's there job because they don't have stickers.

And all of this behavior ignoring ticketers practice of "stalking." Not quite a creep, man outside in the bushes, but Parking Services has now decided that instead of searching for offending cars, they simply choose to wait for meters to run out.

Parking Services needs to change. They cannot continue to force community and students to be fearful of driving a car on campus. Parking Services immature and threatening behavior is not a plus for the UMass Campus or the theoretically decent people that work in the Parking Services office. It's an embarrassment to them and a downright punishment for the campus.

Working stiff

Last week something happened to me. Please don't stop reading this because I started the story that way. I promise you, this won't be another one of those "I went to the DC and they served me crap" articles. No, this is a story that begins with a feeling and ends with nothingness. There is no finale to this saga. There's not much of a narrative structure either. You know how you can just feel something going on, but can't really explain what it is. When you finally find the source of the feeling, then you can attempt to analyze it.

I had a nauseous pit in my stomach last Tuesday as I walked through the Campus Center. I've spent most of my college days in the Campus Center, so it's not the atmosphere that made me feel odd. It was my reason for being there. The dreaded career fair was rolling its way through UMass, and I was caught up in its entrancing fever.

I know what you're saying. "Ryan, it's October. You don't graduate for another seven months. That's more than half a year!" I said all of those things to myself as well, but I couldn't help consuming myself with the fact that this time next year I will be in the real world.

Even that term, "the real world," says way too much for me to handle. The fact that we denote the job market as the "real world" immediately equates the world that I live in right now as some sort of a splendorous fantasy. A fantasy that includes my daily routine of going to class, meeting people for lunch at the Hatch and hanging out down in the Collegian office with some great co-workers and close friends. It's a world that will soon vanish as fast as it created itself.

I can't even begin to imagine what life will be like when I'm not in school. I've been in school for sixteen years! That's amazing considering I've only been alive for twenty-one.

It'll all be gone next year. No more classes. No more lunch at the Hatch. No more Collegian. No more sitting around wondering what my life will be like. Will the fun be over?

All of these revelations still do not explain the pit in my stomach last Tuesday. I've tried to come up with reasons for it. Sure, it had something to do with the fact that it's the first career fair I'd ever been to, and I was overwhelmed beyond belief. The massive amounts of adults whom I immediately felt inferior to definitely had an effect.

As I wandered around, I felt worse. I was getting sicker. I felt like I was on a boat. Anyone who knows me can tell you how much I despise sailing. I felt the need to talk to everyone there. As I talked, I felt unintelligent and inferior to the already established business people who could make or break who and what I am for the rest of my life. I simply could not handle that. I cracked under the pressure. I was failing at the job fair. You simply can't fail at the job fair! It's unacceptable! You don't, after all, get a make-up job fair.

All of a sudden a really weird consciousness kicked in. I realized that this was the first time that I'd felt this anxious and sick to my stomach in a long time that was not due to some woman. This was an immediate warning sign, because when I start equating anything in my life to women, I know it's nothing but downhill from there.

I began to take that equation to the next level. "This is much worse than a woman," I thought. This job matter is terrifying me, and unlike a woman, it won't sit me down and ask why I'm afraid of it.

I can't talk my way out of this fright by saying nice charming things, or buy it dinner. I can't go for a teary-eyed walk after it gives me the inevitable shoot down, only to say "Eh, forget about it, I'll live," a week later. My friends won't try to humor me by saying "There are plenty of other jobs in the sea," or "You're too good for that job any way."

Until last Tuesday, I felt in complete control of everything in my life except for my membership in the "dateless loser club" (Mad props to the club by the way). Now there is something different. There's something else out there that scares me more than building up enough nerve to ask some attractive girl I'll meet at the Blaswall out.

I'm a very pessimistic person, and this is a failure that I cannot even fathom. A failure that comes fully equipped with letting down my parents, my friends, anyone who cares about me and worst of all, myself.

Maybe as a reader, you're feeling a little out of place right now. Maybe you're thinking, "Hey, the funny guy it being all serious, and it freaks me out!" Well, I've never bragged to be the king of self-esteem. That's for sure.

Last winter I went with a group of people to the bowling alley in Northampton for "Disco night" or something like that. We began talking to the D.J. and he told us that he had recently graduated from UMass with a degree in Communication. I apologize if this sounds at all stuck-up, but after we left, we all joked that that's what I would be doing when I left college. I thought it was funny at first, but for some reason it clung to me. The thought couldn't leave my mind regardless of how much I tried. I'm not saying I lose sleep over it at night, but it's one of those things will come to mind when someone says, "Hey Ryan, what don't you want to be doing a year from now?" The fact that I almost always immediately respond with "Spinning discs at a bowling alley!" says a lot about myself and what kind of effect that situation had on my life. Let that be a lesson to you, kiddies! A simple conversation with a guy in a bowling alley may be more important than you could ever imagine.

How do I fix this? To be perfectly honest, I have no clue. I'm lost in the dark. All I know is that I've had a nasty stomachache for a week. The Career Fair, something I had been looking forward to, is now something I dread. I get the same emotional apprehension you'd get from running into that old girlfriend that you really didn't want to see (I'm not talking about the girlfriend that you left on good terms with. I mean the one that hit you in the face with a baseball bat and took all your stuff before she left).

Anyway, I promised you an open-ended story, so here's the hitch. I'm still at a loss. If you know of any jobs out there, give me a call. Oh yeah, and after all this complaining, I feel weirdly compelled to beg for women. Maybe I'll take out one of those personal ad. "SWM – Unemployed college graduate and former Arts and Living Editor seeks gorgeous woman who likes football and is willing to listen to his constant whining. Responses can be sent to the bowling alley where he can be found contemplating his future with the disco D.J."

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist.

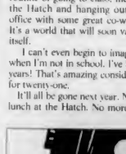
A walk in the clouds



What use is religion to us today? In the ancient times, people needed gods to protect them from bad weather and bad health. Today, we can forecast the weather and have doctors to cure us. Would we have gotten this far if we didn't first believe that something out there has the power to do those things? The idea, belief and theory of religion have existed through most of human history. But today many of us are busy with our lives and with our worries. We don't usually stop to think about it. I hold those traits in myself. And so in this article, I'll try to look back at what religion has meant to me so far.

In my first years of schooling, I studied 30 minutes outside of Moscow, in a small town called Reutov. I was the only Jew in the class. I also had freckles and was a bit big boned. Kids made fun of me, tugged on my pigtails and called me names like "tomato" – which seems silly to me now, but back then it appeared as a major insult. I was dealing with them in one way or another until one time something happened to break my patience.

During the summer a boy, nicknamed Egg, was bothering me and making fun of me. In my own house, which I previously assumed was my safe-haven. I was trying to jump over my jump rope. He interrupted me in mid-flight. The outrage steamed from my head and without thinking, I hit him over the head with the jump rope. Egg stepped aside, rubbing his head and said "I'll get you next year in school." To that I screamed out, in anger, "No, you won't, I'll never go to that school again." And I never did.

There was an experimental Jewish school opening in Moscow, in the central synagogue. So, at the age of nine, I set out to Moscow to get a Jewish education. There were no walls between the classes and the synagogue. Downstairs was the altar where the rabbi delivered morning prayers. And while he was singing praise to the lord, my classmates and I were studying math in the balconies of the upper women's level of the synagogue. The classes were small, typically three to five students. When I tell this story to old people, they remember what it was like in Soviet time. They remember the people who were imprisoned, sent away or otherwise punished for their religious beliefs. I was just taking in the images of the grandiose Torah being taken out of a large closet every morning. And of the rabbi extracting from this mystical book such powerful words that they echoed brightly to all the corners of the synagogue. To me, the synagogue seemed more like a friend in combat than a building in which I was studying.

I went to 10 different schools. Three of them were Jewish. I also went to a few Jewish camps. One time, in a camp, I saw a flood that looked like... it was one big white cloud in the middle of the blue sky, and out of it spread bright golden rays – as if something was about to open the cloud and appear to me in all of its magnificence. But perhaps it wasn't just the appearance of the cloud. Perhaps it was something in the atmosphere of a group of Jewish kids, and me sitting outside and listening to a camp leader give some speech, or introduce some new game that made the cloud into something else. Into a feeling, a thought, a momentary realization of... something. I think I saw God in that cloud. Why do I think that? There were many people sitting there and nobody else seemed to notice. And Jews are not supposed to see God, like Christians might see Christ at church. But I think I did then. Because that wasn't just a cloud but a sort of a fuzzy spirit, slowly hovering above us. Perhaps, that's what spirituality means to me – the feelings I get when I feel at peace because I know somebody is up there - watching, waiting for me to look up or to look within myself and see it - and embrace it.

But perhaps it is something else. While in a Jewish school in New York, I once went on a retreat to a Hassidic home for Shabbat. When I arrived, the family was waiting for the father to come home from the synagogue to start the services. I was playing with some of the numerous children in the house. Then I went into the kitchen to see what the mother was cooking. I noticed that they had two sinks and two compartments for plates - one for the meat plates and one for the milk plates. The table was soon covered with lots of Jewish delicacies like gefilte fish and hallah. All the women in the house were wearing long dresses that covered their arms and feet. The mother was wearing a wig to cover her hair, so that she wouldn't lead men into temptation. Once the father came home, I noticed the big black hat he had on his head and the long curls of hair around his face. He took off the big hat and remained in the kippa - a small flat hat; the rest of the boys in the house also wore it. This was their way of life; this was their tradition, I felt welcome in their home, but I didn't feel at home.

There is an image that stands out from my experiences right here in UMass' Hillel House on Shabbat. The memory is of a bunch of Jews and I standing on top of some shaky tables, dancing and singing. The singing sometimes reaches a level of excitement when people knock hands on the table and stomp their feet. But sometimes, when spirits are especially wild, people start dancing or even dancing on tables. This spiritual or godly experience is very different from the experience of seeking peace and tranquility in religion. This is a form that celebrates religion and God's glory.

All of the above is part of my experience. I'm not sure which part is my way... I guess I haven't found it yet.

So what is religion? Is it a sense of peace and presence of a divine power? Is it the rules that must be followed to achieve a place in paradise? Or is it in the holidays we take to praise the glory of God and his creation? Is religion worth cherishing? Fighting over? Is it worth celebrating? Or is God everywhere and in everything? And it is not just an image or words. But rather a thought at the end of the day that everything is going to be okay. And a feeling that you have something in common with the rest of the universe - the presence of something, some people choose to call God.

Anna Faktorovich is a Collegian Columnist.

Meet the Parents

"And that's my favorite tree!" the girl said with so much innocence and excitement that her parents – and eternally skeptical younger brother – almost believed her. Maybe it was her favorite tree, but chances are she was just trying to make conversation, to do anything to make sense of this situation:

Parents Weekend.

I'm a senior now, so my parents are done with this and rarely leave the house except to go food shopping (this is an all-day event. They don't just go to one supermarket – they go to all of them). But I remember when I was a freshman and they visited, and I had to do what every other freshman has to do – walk aimlessly around campus for about four or five hours, pointing out "favorite trees" and buildings where I should, theoretically, be attending classes. Then, go to Bertucci's and finish the day with a movie (I remember that we saw The Devil's Advocate that year. Note to self: Never watch a movie with lots of nudity with parents again...not sexy).

In other words, freshman and parents do nothing that even remotely relates to actual college life.

In that way, it truly is "Parents" weekend; not a weekend for us to show them college, but a weekend for us to avoid them seeing college – we clear away the beer bottles from our room, and in some cases, don't even let them see our room.

"I'll meet you outside," you might say to your parents. "We'll walk around for a bit, and then you can leave."

Because for us, this weekend means one thing and one thing only: free food from BJ's Wholesale Club. You know, lots of Chex Mix and animal crackers that BJ's conviently packages into "Only a College Student Could Want This Much" size.

And when your parents drop off the food, and you actually have to spend time with them – could it be any more awkward? I'm pretty sure every student has the following conversation with their parents:

PARENT: So...do you take the bus often?
STUDENT: Sometimes.
PARENT: That's good...and does it run often?
STUDENT: Yeah, pretty often.
PARENT: That's good...and it's a good service?
STUDENT: Yeah, it's good.
PARENT: That's good. That's real good that you have a good bus service.
STUDENT: Yeah.

Awkward. Perhaps parents should be blunt and the real questions should just be asked directly:

PARENT: So...been getting drunk a lot?
STUDENT: Sometimes.
PARENT: Having a lot of drunken sex?
STUDENT: Yeah, pretty often.
PARENT: Pretty good, huh?
STUDENT: Yeah, it's good.

This would obviously eliminate a lot of awkwardness.

Of course, sometimes you find that really cool parents actually do exist. I was reading by the campus pond on Saturday, and a family walked by with three younger kids. The dad was playing football with them, obviously enjoying himself a lot. Why can't all dads be like this? Why does my dad insist on knowing all the details of the meal plan, or whether my Ethernet jack is working okay? The kind of dad who plays football is the kind of dad I'd let into my room and even hang out with for a couple hours. Of course, he's also probably the kind of dad who would ask, "So your friend Alyssa is pretty nice...can I get a piece?"

"What about mom, dad?"

"Oh, right. Yeah she's waiting in the car. I should go."

"Yeah."

Unfortunately for parents, that is the one depressing thing about this weekend – it makes them feel really, really, Bob Hope-y old. You invariably get those "Son, when I was in college, we had to walk four miles barefoot to class" stories that somehow pop up when parents revisit college. But who cares? There's that guilty pleasure in knowing that they envy you. When they leave that weekend, you send them off with a smile, because they're going home to work and "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire," and you're going back to the dorm and three gallons of Chex Mix.

I think, also, that it must be really hard for a parent to see their innocent little son or daughter surrounded in a world that seems innocent, but is really anything but. They see these dorms at their absolute pristine-best, on a Saturday and Sunday when nothing is going on. Above everything, visions of ivy and libraries and fireplaced study halls dance in parents' heads. They listen to their daughter talk about her favorite tree, while the daughter has in mind much different things: the party she went to last night, or the late-night talk she had with three new friends or the water gun fight she had with the kid down the hall. It's not the first time that parent and child have been separated so greatly, but perhaps it is the most awkward.

"And that's my favorite tree!" the girl exclaims, putting on her smiling-daughter face, while at the same time, she wears a short skirt and a t-shirt saying "Lil' Hottie." What are the parents supposed to think? The smart ones just smile and nod, letting their new adult friend live and letting go all their own parental, childish visions. But my advice, after that awkward weekend, is to sympathize with your parents for another second. Give them a call when they get home, because they're probably going through their old college yearbook, secretly crying about the days when they still had hair.

Bryan McAllister is a Collegian staff member.

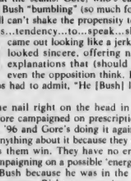
Dubya and Dutch



Watching Al Gore on the screen Tuesday night, I had to ask myself: "People are actually going to vote for him?" What is it about the man that people like? He's a proven liar with no credibility. He willfully solicited illegal campaign contributions, then tried to back out of it with a quote worthy of his boss: "No controlling legal authority." People must realize that Gore takes us for a bunch of saps. Now, every anecdote he alludes to must be checked and rechecked, then counter-referenced with what he said four years ago. Why? The man lies pathologically. So, how can you give him your vote?

A friend of mine cleared it up for me. She said, and I'm quoting here, "I'm not going to vote for Bush because Republicans get us into wars."

She couldn't exactly say what Republicans, or what wars, but she was fairly convinced. Well, I'm sorry to tell you that the American President can't start a war whenever he wants, without the approval of Congress (you can thank Lyndon Johnson, a Democrat, for that). Kennedy (another donkey) got us to invade Cuba for no particular reason, and don't forget the quagmire of Vietnam. Kennedy's injection of 'vigah' into the presidency did little to hide the fact that while talking like a dove, he acted like a hawk. He left his two successors, Johnson and Nixon, to take the fall for escalation.

"Bush bombed Iraq," is the cry that resounds from the Liberal masses. But Kuwait was our ally and an important one, especially economically. With the oil crisis that would follow Iraqi domination of Kuwait, I will wager a guess that the gas-guzzling, SUV driving soccer moms who got Clinton elected would have marched on Washington and deposed Bush themselves, had he taken no action. I can see the criticism now. "He could have defended Kuwait, but didn't." That would have been a major Clinton/Gore campaign issue in '92.

What about the highly criticized sanctions against Iraq, which we now stand practically alone in enforcing? Blame Mr. Clinton for eight years of those. How many people cared about Haiti, Somalia, Bosnia, Sudan and now Colombia, before Clinton?

Now, while his Pax Americana and favorable legacy have crumbled along with the peace process in Jerusalem, I know that nature does have a sense of justice. No Middle East or Irish peace, no nationalization of health care, nothing. In his wake, he leaves a degraded presidency, a demoralized military, a national malaise.

I'm delighted to hear that the supply-side boys from the Hudson Institute are working as advisors to Gov. Bush. They will make great economic policy, partially by restoring some of Ronald Reagan's accomplishments. The economy is wonderful not because of Clinton or Gore, but despite them. The tax burden is the largest in peacetime history, and as Karl Marx would tell you, the best way to kill Capitalism is "taxes, taxes, and more taxes." The Gipper (Reagan) found the economy in a shambles, and by cutting taxes, reforming the tax code, etc., he provided the foundation for today's boom.

Although it is never discussed in the media (one wonders why), Bush offers a tax cut to everyone. Families that make below $38,100 a year will, according to the chart, get a 100% tax cut, and the line curves until those who make $87,600 and above will get a 15% cut. Ask someone whose family lives on that, and they'll tell you that 15% is not outrageous. But don't believe me? Check out the numbers for yourself. You'll have to do some searching, because the main news networks don't report those things (such is the nature of the Liberal media monopoly).

Again, despite what the networks tell me, I know that Dubya and Dutch won their respective debates. Bush conducted himself through the "sighs and lies" of Al Gore, who is beginning to look more and more like he's coming apart at the seams. Gore, who's campaign desperately called Bush "bumbling" (so much for no personal attacks), still can't shake the propensity to bore...people...with...his...tendency...to...speak...slowly. Gore came out looking like a jerk, while Bush looked sincere, offering numbers and explanations that (should have) made even the opposition think. Even George Stephanopoulos had to admit, "He [Bush] looked like a statesman."

Bush hit the nail right on the head in the debate. Clinton and Gore campaigned on prescription drugs for seniors in '92, '96 and Gore's doing it again now. They haven't done anything about it because they need it as an issue...it helps them win. They have no energy policy, and they're campaigning on a possible 'energy crisis,' trying to blame Bush because he was in the oil industry when he was younger. Right now, we import about 20 million barrels a day – one million of them from Iraq. Domestic oil production is at its lowest point in 40 years. This is because of their policies.

Gore and Clinton got elected on the promise of a middle class tax cut, but, as the Governor pointed out again, many families are still waiting for it. They have not delivered on that promise either. Now how is it that Gore can campaign and try to win, promising to wipe out the problems that ballooned while he sat idly by?

Bush even preempted Gore on his own administration's policy. At the very moment that Gore was disagreeing with Bush's idea to let the Russians take a lead in forcing Milosevic out of power, Madeline Albright was on the phone with President Putin, begging him to do exactly that. Nice one Al.

Alan Greenspan has recently noted, "It will be impossible for [anyone] to keep the [social security] system solvent on its own..." with the retirement of the baby boomer generation. While Gore denounces his advice ("I do disagree, Jim,"), Bush wisely agrees. His plan would allow you to stay on Social Security if you want, but if not, to take your money and invest it in a Federal Treasury Bond, which yields four percent interest to Social Security's meager two percent, and is very secure.

So boys, keep it up, you're doing great. Gore hopes he can fool the electorate, but with performances like those at the debates, you proved him wrong. Unfortunately, Gore has the media on his side, and things that are not repeated a million times over are no longer remembered (commercials). So get out there and unveil your tax plan, your Social Security plan. Get out there and show people that you weren't educated like a Washington prince, and that you will get things done. Get out there, and win one for the Gipper.

Information from Investors Business Daily and Time.com was used in this article.

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian Columnist.

All letters to the editor are read but not all are printed.

Letters to the Editor
Questions, answers, and opinions

To the editor:

Last spring, a young woman from UMass had to pay a $4000 penalty for drinking a beer at the Amherst Brewing Co. Actually for trying to drink a beer – I don't believe she got to finish it. A case of "underage" drinking? More a problem of a ridiculously high drinking age. In our society, such problems are artificially manufactured by politicians. Politics and government tend to be dominated by "busybodies." These are nasty, bitter folks who enjoy the power of running other people's lives for them. They get off on tyranny. They have nothing better to do with their time than to make life difficult for others. As long as they go unchallenged, change will never come. If the town treated an ethnic minority the way it treats its college students, there would be a national outcry. But somehow when students are the scapegoats, injustice seems easy to ignore. However, some of us in this town can't just stand by and watch. A great many of you will be paying large fines this year, perhaps even $4000. Quite a few others will end up in jail. If the police broke up your best friend's birthday party, stay angry. If your roommate was busted, get involved. It's hard to believe, but students do have strength. Those swollen with arrogance dismiss any talk of "student power" as a baseless myth worthy of ridicule. And many students are content to sit by, acquiesce, and accept this defeatism. Yet the secret is out, town officials really fear student power.

Terry Franklin
Amherst

To the editor:

I am writing this piece in response to the article, "Our blind little deaths" that was in last Friday's Collegian. I was both saddened and angered by the article's untrue depiction of my deceased friend Rachel. It was disheartening that someone could be so intensive and disrespectful and I feel compelled to share with you what Rachel meant to me.

Rachel was an extremely generous and loving person, who always put her friends and family before everything else. She never passed up an opportunity the people that she cared about and who cared for her. Rachel was a dedicated psychology major and last spring was inducted into the psychology honors society. She had a keen intuitiveness about the people around her and it was not unusual to receive a random card from Rachel just because she was thinking about you. She also loved kids, and she volunteered to take care of children at a local church. When I told her volunteering superseded her debate, she kept telling me how invaluable Rachel had been to them.

My relationship with Rachel has deeply impacted my life. I was Rachel's roommate for the past two years and she was my closest friend at UMass. For me, Rachel was the friend who gave me a safe place to let my hair down. Rachel was probably the most accepting person I have ever known. I could always by myself with Rachel and when I wasn't being myself, she knew that too. I also learned a great deal from Rachel because while I was always too busy with schoolwork and deadlines, she made the most of each moment.

The fact is, Rachel was special to so many people in so many different ways. I'm not going to attempt how to write how others felt about Rachel; the important thing is that I know that those who knew Rachel, know she was an amazing person and she will always be remembered that way.

Kelly Klaiber
Montague

To the editor:

As do thousands of other UMass students, I read the Collegian almost everyday. Under normal circumstances, the paper is quite enjoyable and provides a very accurate insight into student life on and off campus. In fact, most mornings last year the Collegian was the highlight of my morning (the exceptions came when the legendary Worcester Breakfast Sandwiches were served at the Dining Commons). However, over the past two weeks, things have been a little different.

The recent issues of the Collegian have been filled with criticism of our campus' Student Government Association. This criticism has been aimed at individuals in the SGA and at the institution itself. Although I am grateful to the Collegian for bringing important matters (matters such as the validity of the SGA general elections and the possible abuse of funds by SGA officials) to the attention of the student body, I am very upset that certain aspects of these controversial issues have been ignored.

First of all, I must state that the matter of whether the SGA general elections were corrupt or not is a matter to be decided by the Student Judiciary. And although this decision will be vital to the SGA's ability to properly function, it is not the main concern of most students.

The most vital issue to students is whether the Elected Senators, Speakers of the Senate, President, the President's Cabinet, Judiciary, and Student Trustee are more concerned with the well being of the UMass community (particularly the students) or whether they are just a bunch of ego-maniacs looking to fund their RSO's and achieve personal power and fame.

I believe that the overwhelming majority of people involved in the SGA are good, hardworking people who have a vested interest in this campus and the students they represent. Personally, as a newly elected Senator from Orchard Hill, I know that the reason I got involved in the SGA was to change certain problems that myself and others recognized on campus. I resent any attacks made at the SGA as a body. I know that there are individuals within the SGA that are driven by personal motives or vendettas. I also know that for every one person driven by selfish motives there are four or five others who unselfishly give hours of their time each week to provide the students of this University with a representative and powerful vehicle by which changes can be made.

Let us not make the mistake of generalizing the SGA based on the actions of a few individuals. Let us encourage those leaders of the SGA who are caught up in personal attacks on each other and counterproductive infighting to stop the nonsense.

We are dedicated to the students of this campus and are trying to do everything we can make the SGA work. But, without students pressuring the SGA leadership to resolve their petty differences, one of the best vehicles for change on this campus has will have been derailed.

If working effectively with the common goal of improving student life in mind, the Student Government can and will have a tremendous impact on our campus.

Bill Powers
Orchard Hill

Application Sensation

Do you ever have one of those moments when you are in a total state of deja-vu? Your life, memories of moments from your past come rushing back to you, and all of a sudden, it's like someone waved a magic wand and poof, you have traveled back in time, and you are now in the same moment where you were a week ago, or a year ago or perhaps even ten years ago. I often have this strange feeling, this vivid recollection of moments from my past. I had one of these deja-vu moments this weekend, when I was talking to a good friend of mine from high school. She's a really great person who is being driven to the brink of insanity because she is going through a really tough part of her life – the senior year of high school – and in addition to all that stress, she is also doing something millions of other seniors in the United States are agonizing over this month - she is applying to colleges. On the same day, I was talking to some of my friends who are graduating this year and want to go get even more educated in graduate schools. They are also really worried about applying to graduate programs.

Now that I am happily here, a sophomore at UMass, I can look back on my days as a high school senior and nostalgically smile, remembering all the great memories of that year. I have heard a great many horror prom stories from my friends at college, but I, for one, had a great time at prom! I went with a date (who was a friend) and a lot of my close friends as well, so I had an amazing night dancing the night away, unlike many of my friends, who have horror stories of ruined dresses, rude dates or being alone for the slow dances. Really, now that I look back on it, senior year of high school was really great. I did a lot of really cool activities, and although I wasn't crazy about all of my teachers, I didn't really have any classes I couldn't stand. Above all, I was lucky to have a great group of friends, and those are really the people who made it all so memorable.

However, there is one part of senior year that I look back to with cold, cold sweat and a terrified look in my eyes – applying to colleges. I was probably the world's most indecisive college applicant. I knew what I didn't want in a school (for example, I didn't want to be in an isolated area and I wanted to be relatively close to my home base, which is the North Shore of Boston). However, I really didn't know what I did want in a school. I ended up applying to ten different schools that were all very different from each other. Some were in cities; others, such as UMass, were in more suburban or rural locations. Some, such as our school, were large; most were only a few thousand people. Some were strictly for liberal arts, but others offered a variety of "career-oriented" programs. Now I realize that I really wasted my time and money applying to about half of those schools, because I would have never gone there anyway, but at the time, I really wanted to keep my options open and, since I didn't have a clear first choice, I figured I might as well apply to a bunch of random schools and see what happened.

The whole process of applying to colleges is a big nightmare. (I know that most of you reading this paper are college students, so I know that you can empathize with me about the pain I went through applying to colleges.) Applying to one school is hard enough, with all the different requirements - application, essay, transcript - you have to present for evaluation. In addition, many schools also required other things, such as an interview, for prospective applicants. Applying to ten schools is a horror, because inevitably I had some schools with fairly easy applications and some schools with applications that had multiple parts and multiple essays and each part had a very strict submission deadline that I had to meet. I, not being the most organized person in the world, had to keep a separate calendar to keep track of when everything was due.

And, of course, when talking about applying to schools, it's impossible to forget the joys of taking the SATs. I am proud to say that I only took the SATs one time. I know that many people took them two or even three times, but when it came time to retake my SATs, I was a completely stressed-out senior who was trying to deal with visiting colleges and coping with challenging classes, so I really didn't have the energy to retake the test. In a way, I am glad that I didn't. In another way, I'm a little regretful about that as well. I don't think I would have done much better on the test, as I am notoriously bad at taking timed math exams, but still, I would have liked to know what my "best" score could have been. Overall, though, I've really noticed that while SAT scores were a life-and-death issue in senior year, in college, they really don't matter to anyone. Besides a few discussions with fellow freshmen last year, I really haven't gotten a chance to talk to anyone about my SAT scores since I graduated high school in 1999. When I think about the SATs, I have to stop and think about what my scores were at the time, which I consider a great thing. I'm hoping that by the time I'm a senior at UMass, I will have forgotten what my scores were altogether. It's not that I bombed the SATs or that my scores were horrible, because they were not. It's just that I don't think the SATs are something that should matter once you are in college, and I hate people who think they are the bomb just because they aced one timed test in their whole entire life.

When you are a senior in high school, especially if the majority of your senior class is going on to college, which college you will go to seems like the decision of a lifetime. Unfortunately, a lot of people are disappointed each year when they do not get into their first-choice schools. Many of my friends who were lovely, smart, amazing human beings were completely crushed and felt worthless when they were not accepted into the top school of their choice. In reality though, I think it really doesn't matter where you go to school in most cases. I think I could have been comfortable at almost any of the colleges to which I applied. All schools have their own advantages and disadvantages. There is usually enough variety at even the smaller colleges to keep most people happy. And worst-case scenario, you can always transfer. When you choose a school, it's not necessarily a choice for life. Although applying to colleges for a second time seems like a horrible prospect, sometimes a person just doesn't fit with a certain school and needs a change. I have had several friends who transferred to schools different than their original ones and became much happier in the process.

My high school friend occasionally asks me if I think that I made the right choice by coming to UMass. I admit that this school was not my first choice. In fact, I really didn't feel comfortable with choosing to attend UMass until I came to the summer orientation here. However, now that I look back on my decision, I am really glad I decided to come here. I really like the academic environment here, despite the jokes people make about ZooMass. I think the education at pretty much any school is basically what you make out of it, and I think a student can get a good quality of education here, or at Harvard or at Holyoke Community College, as long as he or she is willing to learn and take challenging classes. I have had some amazing classes and amazing professors here, and I have had some classes and professors that I've hated, and I think that's the case for every student at every school. I really like being on a campus where there is a diverse student population (I know it's not as diverse as it could be, but it is more diverse than many other schools). I like being able to walk around and see different types of people peacefully coexisting within the same space. I love meeting different kinds of people here and hearing their stories. For the first time, I have met people from Africa in my residence hall. For the first time, I have had to deal with my feelings about gender while making transgendered friends. I love that diversity. It's really the reason why I finally decided to come to UMass.

I like going to a big university where there is always a lot going on. There are always sports games, concerts, theater productions, lectures and many other events happening at UMass or in the Amherst area. There are also a lot of really good organizations that I have become with which I have become involved, which might not have been the case at another, smaller school. I have lots of resources going to UMass, such as our huge library and the lovely PCCO computer labs where I work. I love the Amherst/ Northampton area, with all the nice shops and good restaurants and the gorgeous nature, especially the beautiful foliage I've been enjoying for the past several weeks. Most of all, I really like the great people I've met here at UMass. I live and study and have fun with a really great group of students. My experience at UMass has been really great so far. I really don't know if I would be happier or sadder at any other school. I suspect that I would have been fairly happy at almost any school in this general area. I don't really have any regrets about my college decision at all. I feel happy, which means I made the right college decision for me. I could have gone to another one of the colleges that I was accepted to, and my experience there could have also been great, but it also could have been terrible. I feel really sad and foolish when I think back to how crushed I was around and how different types of people peacefully coexisting within the same space. I love meeting different kinds of people here and hearing their stories. For the first time, I have met people from Africa in my residence hall. For the first time, I have had to deal with my feelings about gender while making transgendered friends. I love that diversity. It's really the reason why I finally decided to come to UMass.

I like going to a big university where there is always a lot going on. There are always sports games, concerts, theater productions, lectures and many other events happening at UMass or in the Amherst area. There are also a lot of really good organizations that I have become with which I have become involved, which might not have been the case at another, smaller school. I have lots of resources going to UMass, such as our huge library and the lovely PCCO computer labs where I work. I love the Amherst/ Northampton area, with all the nice shops and good restaurants and the gorgeous nature, especially the beautiful foliage I've been enjoying for the past several weeks. Most of all, I really like the great people I've met here at UMass. I live and study and have fun with a really great group of students. My experience at UMass has been really great so far. I really don't know if I would be happier or sadder at any other school. I suspect that I would have been fairly happy at almost any school in this general area. I don't really have any regrets about my college decision at all. I feel happy, which means I made the right college decision for me. I could have gone to another one of the colleges that I was accepted to, and my experience there could have also been great, but it also could have been terrible. I feel really sad and foolish when I think back to how crushed I was around and how different types of people peacefully coexisting within the same space. I love meeting different kinds of people here and hearing their stories. For the first time, I have met people from Africa in my residence hall. For the first time, I have had to deal with my feelings about gender while making transgendered friends. I love that diversity. It's really the reason why I finally decided to come to UMass.

I like going to a big university where there is always a lot going on. There are always sports games, concerts, theater productions, lectures and many other events happening at UMass or in the Amherst area. There are also a lot of really good organizations that I have become with which I have become involved, which might not have been the case at another, smaller school. I have lots of resources going to UMass, such as our huge library and the lovely PCCO computer labs where I work. I love the Amherst/ Northampton area, with all the nice shops and good restaurants and the gorgeous nature, especially the beautiful foliage I've been enjoying for the past several

So to my friend who is in high school, and agonizing over applying to colleges, I told her to relax. It will be fine. You can't spend your whole senior year worrying about college. You have to enjoy the present and the great experiences that come along with being a high school senior. I have the same advice for all of my friends and everyone else at UMass who's graduating this year to go on to graduate school. Relax. Don't put yourself through agony applying to schools. Realize that whatever happens, was probably meant to happen and happens for a reason. What you think of now as your first-choice graduate program might not really be the best place for you to be. Take it easy, and good luck to everyone... high school and college seniors alike.

Jeanie Gorlovsky is a Collegian columnist

The Boys of Punk Return

GREEN DAY
Warning
Reprise Records

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

"Blood, Sex and Booze" "Fashion Victim, Misery," "Jackass," and "Church on Sundays." No, they're not terms used to describe President Clinton's past eight years in office. They're track listings from Green Day's most recent musical project.

The most recognizable punk band from the last decade is back with their sixth studio album. Warning is Green Day's attempt to satiate desperate fans who have been void of the band's presence since 1998's remarkable Nimrod.

From the second the album starts, there's no mistaking that you are listening to Green Day. Unlike bands such as Pearl Jam, Bush and Tool who constantly try to change their image for fear of being pegged as unoriginal, Green Day seems to pride themselves on the fact that they keep their sound consistent.

The lyrics are meaningful and well thought out. On "Jackass" they say, "Everyone likes a joke, but no one likes a fool." Most of the tracks have an underlying tone that screams individualism, but in a way that will make you look intelligent. From the time when their album Dookie became popular and made them one of the most influential albums on the rock scene, no one has ever accused Green Day of being stupid. They try exceedingly hard to give the listener something thing they will remember in more ways than one.

Though the band has been criticized often for playing a minute amount of chords and having a lead singer in Billy Joe Armstrong with a voice that could get on the most relaxed person's nerves, there is real stability in their sound. "Deadbeat Holiday" sounds exactly like previous Green Day hits like "Nice Guys Finish Last."

The first single from the album, "Minority" has immediately found commercial success as enjoyable pop-tune with some very strong beats. The song presents itself in typical Green Day fashion, being very short, direct and having an immediate impact. Just the way the band likes its fans to interpret their music.

The most popular song from Nimrod ended up being a ballad called, "Good Riddance (Time of Your Life)." The tune was much different from what fans had previously heard from the punk band. It was much slower, and focused on Armstrong's guitar ability. They added a song like that on Warning, perhaps to try to parallel the success of "Good Riddance," "Macy's Day Parade" is much more sluggish and not nearly as hard-hitting as the Green Day that we have become so accustomed to.

So where is Green Day headed from here? It appears that they are definitely going to attempt to sell the new album on the crutch that has motivated them so much in the time we have known them. It seems that Warning may be much more than just a weary caution that Green Day is here to stay.

COURTESY WWW.GREENDAY.COM

Those crazy Green Day guys return to rock with their latest, Warning.

COURTESY OF THE KOREAN BUDDHIST AND DANCE PROGRAM

Pomp'ae and Circumstance

"The Sound of Ecstasy and Nectar of Enlightenment," music and dance inspired by the Korean Buddhist religious tradition, comes to UMass this Friday at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Call the Fine Arts Center box office for more info: 545-2511.

Local band tells 'Stories for a Day'

TRAVELING MATT
Stories for a Day
Independent Release

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

If you're at all familiar with the UMass music scene, you've no doubt come across the name Traveling Matt—the five-piece band won the Southwest Battle of the Bands last semester, earning them an opening slot at the Spring Concert, and numerous other performances in the area have garnered them an enthusiastic and ever-growing following.

They celebrated another career first this past Friday night with a CD release concert at the Iron Horse in Northampton for their debut full-length album, Stories for a Day, playing before a sold-out crowd.

Traveling Matt wears their influences on their sleeve—namely, Dave Matthews Band. From the acrobatic acoustic footwork to the faux crowd noise, nearly every notable element of DMB is present here in greater or lesser amounts, as illustrated by the opening track, "Puddle Jumping." And yet the song, lighthearted and derivative as it is, is also irresistible and arranged with the sort of maturity and attention to detail you wouldn't expect from a college band.

The band's frequent use of an electric guitar also lends a Phish-esque flavor to many tracks, most notably the excellent "Rosemary's Hand," and along with some tasteful keyboard additions, allows for a greater range of musical textures. Energetic, danceable jams are offset with a series of softer, more thoughtful tunes, and the album displays a general sense of balance. Plenty of time is allowed for the musicians, especially saxophonist Joe Sparkes, to strut their considerable talent, but these digressions never cross the line into self-indulgence.

Lyrics, as might be expected from the band's obvious fondness for Dave Matthews, generally fall into the gather-ye-rosebuds category, and although this works well enough for most of the album (supported by the thankfully competent vocals of co-frontmen Daniel Storch and Justin Schwenk), the sentiment begins to wear thin when, on the seventh track, Schwenk is still singing choruses that begin, "Come around now girl and dance with me." Some effort at breaking away from the horny poet shtick would have been appreciated.

As evident as their influences may be, however, Traveling Matt aren't limited by them, and even across the album's timid nine-track length evidence accumulates of the band's potential to expand beyond their origins. "Number 9," notwithstanding the DMB-ish naming convention and the song's superficial similarity to "Two Step," has a subtle ring of true uniqueness—or at the very least a masterful replication of "Two Step's" urgency, coupled with an excellent display of restraint, both in the song's slow escalation of force, and in the simplicity, almost bleakness, of the chorus.

The album's finest moment of songwriting (lyrics aside), however, comes in "Something of Mine." The central guitar figure isn't the catchiest on the album, at first listen, but the understated groove, the solidity of the acoustic/electric guitar combo, and the outro of spacey keyboards all combine to excellent effect.

Any way you look at it Traveling Matt sounds a lot like Dave Matthews Band, but to the extent that they don't, to the extent that they reach beyond their foundation of neo-hippyism and exert themselves as uniquely creative songwriters, their music shows great promise; and to the extent that they don't, it's still a great time.

Free stuff.
Concert tickets.
Front row seats to every play.
CD's you don't pay for, before your friends can get them in the stores.
Do you need any more reasons to write for Arts?
Come down to the Campus Center basement and ask for Ryan, Dave, Kristi or Mike.
The UMass Daily Collegian. Need a Kick?

Write for Arts!

Learn to Meditate!
Meditation Workshops
UMASS Campus Center, Room 811
Saturday October 21, 3-5 pm
Sunday October 22, 3-5 pm
Workshops include lecture on meditation techniques, medical-on practice, theory for meditators, and introductory video.
FREE, no charge, nothing to buy. Just a great chance to learn how to meditate!

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS $10.
25 n pleasant st amherst 256 0733
145 main st northampton 586 0155

LIVE MUSIC
McMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
10-1am
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

FREE
1 Log on www.campusi.com
2 Enter existing email address.
3 Click.
▶ Cash In
Earn $150+ in minutes @
CAMPUSI.COM
Check school email Anywhere!

FREE EVENT
Ready for law school?
Attend a mock first-year law class with a leading law school expert.
Presenter: Dr. Paul M. Lisnek, JD, PhD
Wednesday, Oct 18th, 6:30pm
Student Union Ballroom
UMass
To register today, call 1-800-KAP-TEST or visit us online at www.kaptest.com/events.
sponsored by:
Alumni Association
KAPLAN
barbri

For area employers to find you appealing, they first have to find you.

www.masslive.com/careers

MassLive is ready to take your job search to the next level.
Grab the cutting-edge tool that uses the power of the Internet and manage your career.
At Advance Careers on MassLive, simply post your personal profile and you'll be on your way to exploring thousands of new opportunities. You will even have your own Personal Message Center. It directs you to the positions of employers who have matched their opportunities to your profile and want you to apply for that job online. So take the first step in really managing your career and let MassLive start working for you.

mass LIVE
IN AFFILIATION WITH THE UNION-NEWS-SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
www.masslive.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Spacious living room High ceilings, AC, Puffton Village 549-6434 ASAP

AUTO FOR SALE

Quality Autos For Sale 85 Doge Caravan, 5speed, loaded $450 90 Ford Ranger XLT, burgandy $1000 Call 413-286-0857

91 Ford Taurus black, 90k mi $2200 549-5230

90 For Bronco II 4x4 Well maintained. $2700 obo 413-532-6535

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

89 VW Golf 112k, 4dr, maroon, auto, sunroof, cd, perfect condition. $2900 253-2443

1988 Ford Festiva 155K miles. Excellent condition! $700/obo 413-665-7725

88 Saab 900 5spd. blue. $1900 obo Mike 413-772-2686

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

87 Toyota Tercel Good engine 134,000m $700 Contact 546-2870

91 Honda Accord EX Auto, AC, CD, moonroof. 4 new tires. Great condition. 14k $4200. 546-2568 or 617-335-5366

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

88 Dodge Caravan for parts $500 obo 413-549-6175

COMPUTERS

HP Internal CD-RW Burner 8x4x32 NEW $250 Call Caroline 253-2362

LAPTOPS for only $399, warranty included. Email: laptop4me @hotmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME
Research Interviewers
Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc.
Paul Bebo
Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514
paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

EMPLOYMENT

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today; 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Gymnastics Instructor
Preschool, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. 3hrs per wk to 20hrs per wk flexible work environment. Great gymnastics center with loose foam + resi pit system. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, Mass. 01301 413-773-3646

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

Snowboard! Morrow 158cm, good condition, bindings not included, $100 Call Adam (413) 786-4291

Trek 930 Excellent condition. $325 bo. Call Todd 586-4589

Calloway Golf Clubs. Excellent condition. Complete set. $300 bo call Todd 586-4589

Three Couches, 4 loveseats, 4 sleep sofas. $65-$150 free delivery 586-2221

HOUSE SITTER

ESCAPE FROM DORMS! HOUSE SITTER NEEDED, NOVEMBER 14-25. 3 MILES FROM DOWNTOWN AMHERST. LIVE IN, FEED TWO CATS. $25/DAY 253-0459

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Djata Bumpus. 256-0364 (Incorrect number ran in previous ads.)

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

RAISE $1600-$7000 + GET FREE CAPS T-SHIRTS & PHONE CARDS! This one week fundraiser requires no investment and small amount of time from you or your club. Qualified callers receive a free gift just for calling. Call today at 1-800-808-7442 x 80

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

5 Girls need housemate for big house on Main St. Private room $230/mo + utilities. 2 blocks from Amherst Center. No sex preference call Sam @ 253-9627

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED, CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates.

25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspringbreak.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

what are you waiting for??

advertise today!!

call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN International
14	UMass Academic TV
15	WB/New Haven
16	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV 9
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Govnt to Govnt
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 18, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Lost Treasures-Ancient World		Critical Condition (N) (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Bette (N)		Welcome-N.Y.	"For All Time" (2000, Romance)	Mark Harmon		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Bette (N)		Welcome-N.Y.	"For All Time" (2000, Romance)	Mark Harmon		News	Late Show
WGVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Spin City	Gideon's Crossing	"The Way"	News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Civilesss	Friends	Nanny	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity "Hello, I Must Be Going"		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Major League Baseball Playoffs: ALCS Game 7 -- Mariners at Yankees or Athletics				News		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	9	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	7 Days "Peacekeepers" (N)		Star Trek: Voyager "Drive"		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Major League Baseball Playoffs: ALCS Game 7 -- Mariners at Yankees or Athletics				News		Friends	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Baseball Playoffs		Seinfeld	Friends	When Cameras Cross the Line		Truth Behind the Rumors		News		Friends	Fraser
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Major League Baseball Playoffs: ALCS Game 7 -- Mariners at Yankees or Athletics				News		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	8	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Critical Condition (N) (In Stereo)						Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Spin City	Gideon's Crossing	"The Way"	News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	7 Days "Peacekeepers" (N)		Star Trek: Voyager "Drive"		Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	69	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	43	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Sandra Dee		Behind Closed Doors		Investigative Reports		Law & Order	"Right to Counsel"
CNN	20	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	39	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★½ "Booty Call" (1997, Comedy)		Jaime Pressly, Tommy Davidson		South Park	Bottleboots	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	49	Wild Discovery: Coca		Great White Down Under		On the Inside: Warrior's Power		Desert Mummies of Peru		Warrior Island: Ysl		Justice Files	"Why They Kill"
ESPN	40	Sportscenter		Big League Challenge		Behind Skatepark Tour		Japanese Sumo Wrestling (N)		Billiards		Sportscenter
LIFE	45	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: "Bette Midler"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	42	Direct Effect	Making-Video	TRL (In Stereo)		Movie Awards Uncensored		Choose	Fear (In Stereo)			Truth (N)	Making-Video
NICK	46	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Catdog	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	44	Sliders "Season's Greedings"		Babylon 5 "Eyes" (In Stereo)		★★½ "Pumpkinhead" (1988, Horror)	Lance Henriksen		Exposure (N) (In Stereo)			Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	48	48 Hours		Operation "Liver Transplant"		Cities on the Sea		Secret World of Cruise Ships		Ultimate Ten Hotels		Cities on the Sea
TNT	67	Golf (In Stereo)		Pretender "Orgolo Jarod"		★★★★ "Rain Man" (1988, Drama)	Dustin Hoffman, Tom Cruise					"A River Runs Through It"
USA	47	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		"Terror Tract" (2000, Horror)	John Ritter, (In Stereo)			Strip Poker	Martin
HBO	60	(5:45) ★★½ "The Bounty" (1984, Drama)	Mel Gibson, PG			Reel Sports		Sex and-City	Curb-Enthem	Oz "Secret Identities" (In Stereo)		Chris Rock	"Three Kings"
MAX	61	(5:00)	★★½ "Sleeping With the Enemy" (1991)			★★★ "Mars Attacks!" (1996, Drama)		Attc Baldwin, (In Stereo)		★★½ "Best Laid Plans" (1999)		Assassins (N)	Bedtime
SHOW	70	★★ "FX 2" (1991, Adventure)	Bryan Brown, (In Stereo)	PG-13'		★½ "Stigmata" (1999, Horror)	Patricia Arquette, (In Stereo)	"R"		Soul Food (In Stereo)		Resurrection	"Night Shift: R

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

CHRIS, I'm NOT SURE ABOUT THIS...
DON'T BE SUCH A WUSS.
WOULDN'T IT BE SAFER TO FREAK WATER BALLOONS?
WHY?!... CERTAINLY LAWYER BUT NOT AS MUCH FUN.
HOW DID I EVEN GET YOU GUYS ME UP HERE?
EGGS, PEOPLE EXTANT BROCK TO SKIN FROM THE WRANCH. WE GIVE THE PEOPLE WHAT THEY WANT.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

SPUNK in the conclusion of PLANET OF THE APES
COL. TAYLOR & NOVA ESCAPE THE APE COLONY AND RIDE TO SAFETY UNAWARE OF THE HORROR THAT AWAITS THEM!
"YOU MANIAC, YOU BLEW IT UP!" DAMN YOU! GOD DAMN YOU ALL TO HELL!"
The End!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

THIS #5 ZINC-PLATED PHILLIPS HEAD WOOD SCREW BIN IS EMPTY
OKEY-DOKEY THAT SHOULDN'T BE A PROBLEM.
I THINK, I YES! I THINK WE HAVE THEM IN STOCK!
IF YOU'LL BEAR WITH ME SIR, I'LL HAVE ONE FOR YOU AS SOON AS POSSIBLE!
20 MINUTES LATER...
HERE YA GO, SIR. ONE #5 ZINC-PLATED PH WOOD SCREW.
SAD PHILLIPS HEAD.

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

THIS GIRL ASKED IF I WANTED TO GO TO A SHAKESPEARE PRODUCTION WITH HER. I ONLY WENT SO I COULD GET SOME ASS.
THAT'S THE JOKE?! THAT SUCKS!
I NAMED MY REFLECTION IN THE MIRROR LAST NIGHT, BUT WHEN I GOT UP THIS MORNING, IT WAS A DIFFERENT REFLECTION, SO I HAD TO COME UP WITH A NEW NAME.
IS THAT EVEN SUPPOSED TO BE FUNNY?
I FRENCH-KISS PUBLIC DRINKING FOUNTAINS SOMETIMES

Dilbert By Scott Adams

DOGBERT CONSULTS
HERE'S MY REPORT FULL OF OBVIOUS GENERALITIES
MY FEE IS $90,000
WHAT ARE YOU RECOMMENDING?
I RECOMMEND TELLING EVERYONE IT WAS FREE.
dilbert.com

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

I THINK WE SHOULD BREAK UP.
AAAA!
AND SEE OTHER PEOPLE
AAAA!
AFTER ALL, IT'S NOT LIKE YOU'RE THAT GREAT A KISSER.
AAAA! AAAA! AAAA!
WHAT'S HALLOWEEN WITHOUT A FEW GOOD SCARES?
WHATEVER HAPPENED TO SATING BOO?!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WELL, YOU WORE ME DOWN, INCHY. I'M GOING TO RAKE YOUR ALLOWANCE BY 10¢. I EVEN FOUND SOME SPECIAL NEW PRETTY MONEY TO PAY YOU WITH. HERE'S YOUR DOLLAR COIN.
HEY
I'LL EXPLAIN LATER. SATCH.
COOL. IT'S GOT A LOON ON IT.

MONKEY-BOX BY PBRJ

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sep. 23-Oct. 22) - Wouldn't it be weird if the horoscopes were exactly perfect about your day? Like they say "Today the red-haired girl in your 10:10 Herter class will sit behind you. Plus you have a sassy blue H&M shirt on," and it was all true? Oh well, it ain't gonna happen. Because you and I both know you shop at Aeropostale anyway.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Scorpio, you are known to be the most passionate sign. So lets this party started!
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Ani DiFranco said "Everyone's a  Napoleon." Sound familiar?
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - FYI: it's pronounced can-DEE co-rn. But y'all are good kids. Have fun today.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) - You know what's a snooze? When you tell that story about the time you got so drunk in Pierpont that you ended up wandering down the street to the Big Y and hitting on the cashiers. Zzzzzzzzz. Here's a hint: people like people who have something going on in their life besides the sweet, sweet liquor
PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20) - Women, don't buy the male-produced idea that being pretty is somehow the only way to have power. Be intelligent today. the world needs you like that!
ARIES (March 21- April 19) - Rumor on the street is, you're in looooooooove. It is always better to live your life without regrets- so ask him or her out. Hint: speaking French is always impressive.
TAURUS (April 20 - May 20) - Sing a song really loudly today. No, a GOOD song.
GEMINI (May 21 - June 20) - Plan a trip to Egypt. Seriously, it's an incredible place, and you'll learn a lot more than staying in Newton or Framingham or whatever "20 minutes from Boston" city you're from.
CANCER (June 21 - July 22) - Today's the day! You'll meet the man of your dreams. He'll be cute, cuddly, and write for Arts and Ed-Op at the newspaper. His name sounds like Lion Renharris, but we changed his name to protect the innocent.
LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22) - Amherst College needs to stop mistaking wealth for intelligence. Know what I mean?
VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22) - "In the end, the love you make is equal to the love you take." -The Beatles Yeah.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 55 LOW: 43	HIGH: 59 LOW: 37	HIGH: 59 LOW: 41

Quote of the Day

"No, not today!"

–Superstar Kara Stokes

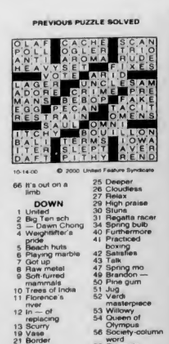
ACROSS
1 Fish bait
5 Rebound
10 Hairless
14 Biblical twin
15 Greek marketplace
16 Opera song
17 Membership fee
18 Belter, at times
20 Packing container
22 Cattle call
23 Briny
25 Singer Horne
26 Movie theater
27 Chaney of horror flicks
28 In the vicinity
32 Some August babies
33 One-pot dinners
35 Japanese wrestling
36 Make a mistake
37 Rocky Mountain tribe
38 Ordinance
39 Fine horse
41 Drink noisily
43 Flow slowly
44 Tidy the lawn
45 Card spot
46 Having more capacity
48
50 Returns the favor
51 Not as hard
54 Cupid's target
55 Uninhabited region
57 Currier and —
61 Mr. Adams
62 Spooky
63 French river
64 Farm animals
65 Faculty heads

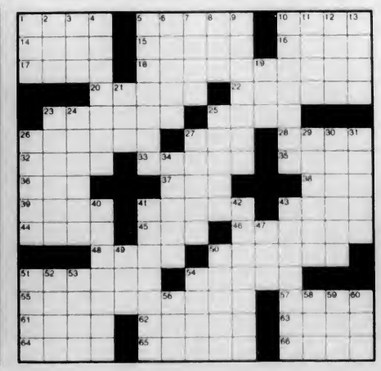
DOWN
1 Limited
2 Big Ten sch.
3 — Lin Chong
4 Weightlifter's girdle
5 Beach huts
6 Playing marble
7 Got up
8 Raw metal
9 Soft-furred mammals
10 Trees of India
11 Florence's river
12 In — of replacing
13 Scurry
19 Vase
21 Bomber
23 Movie, "Hugh —"
24 Parka
25 Deeper
26 CloudNess
27 Relax
29 High praise
30 Stune
31 Regatta racer
34 Spring bulb
40 Furthermore
41 Practiced boxing
42 Satisfies
43 Talk
47 Spring mo
49 Brandon —
50 Pine gum
51 Jug
52 Verdi masterpiece
53 Willowy
54 Queen of Olympus
56 Society-column word
58 Compete
59 Curved letter
60 AR — ready

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



10-14-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

WE'LL SCARE THE ALE OUT OF YOU THURSDAY NIGHT
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Chicken Cutlet Sandwich

Taco Bar

Vegetarian Bean Taco (Berkshire, Hampshire, Worcester)

Eggplant Parmesan (vegan)

Dinner

Fried Chicken

Cheese Lasagna

Meat Lasagna

Jamaican 3 Bean Stew (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Boyzone Martignetti
Photo Technician	Tibora N'Sync-Blum
Copy Editor	Jessica Simpson-Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Brian Spears
Production Staff	Christina-Kara Aguilera, 98 Degrees of John Z

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, October 18, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Massive Triumph

Minutewomen down UConn in hard-fought win

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

UConn (record) - 1

The University of Connecticut 2. The object of the most hatred from any member of the UMass community.

When it comes to UMass sports, any game against the Huskies is intense. The Massachusetts women's volleyball team (8-10 overall, 4-4 A-10) showed just how intense it can get by virtue of their five game (15-6, 7-15, 15-7, 15-17, 15-11) victory over UConn last night at the Curry Hicks Cage.

"I can't take a whole lot of credit for this one. I thought [assistant coach] Cindy [Gregory] did a great job preparing them for this one," UMass coach Bonnie Kenny said. "She did all the film work for this match."

The Minutewomen kept the crowd on the edge of their seat from the start of the match to when senior co-captain Rebecca Hasson threw down the final kill. Hasson tallied three kills in the final game, including the last two points while fellow co-captain Lymarie Llovet added three of her own in the final game. Both would finish with 19 kills for the match. Llovet notching an impressive .341 kill percentage on the night.

"I thought Lymarie was excellent tonight. She passed the ball well and she served well," stated Kenny.

After seesawing back and forth in the final game, the Maroon and White found themselves tied with UConn at 11. Then, Llovet sent the Huskies sprawling with her final kill of the night, and UMass rolled to four straight points to finish the match.

"I thought we did really well, we kept putting the pressure on them which I thought was good," senior Jenni Drennan said. "I thought Rebecca [Hasson] did unreal the last few points, which was really good for us."

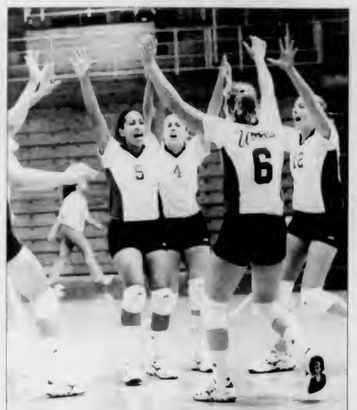
The fourth match saw an incredible amount of drama unfold. The two teams jockeyed back and forth, eventually deadlocked at 10. It was then that Connecticut seemed to gain momentum from a tremendous block by Melissa Woolley and a questionable call on an attempted kill by freshman Kelly Lewis to take the Maroon and White to the brink at 14-10.

But the Minutewomen rallied back slowly but surely, largely on the strong play of sophomore Jen Davis, who tallied 12 kills on the evening. A brilliant block by Drennan looked to be the knockout blow as UMass had worked its way back to lead 15-14. But after five consecutive sideouts, the Huskies tallied three straight points to take the game.

Game three saw the Maroon and White come on strong after trailing 5-4. At that point, sophomore Claire Baxter entered the game and tallied two kills in the next three points. The Huskies looked to try and get momentum back while down 14-5, but Baxter slammed the door, knocking back three attempted kills by Husky attackers in one volley. The game eventually ended on a kill by Davis, giving the Minutewomen a two games to one lead.

"I wasn't sure coming in whether it would be Celia or Claire starting and I thought we could get a little more offense running slides with Claire," Kenny said.

Game two was all UConn as they took the lead at 4-3 and never looked back, cruising to the 15-7 victory. The first game was the mirror opposite of the second, as the Maroon and White took the lead at 6-5 and quickly cruised to victory.



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts volleyball team put forth a total team effort in last night's game against Connecticut.

Total team effort spells winning formula for UM

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

Thirteen ladies don the Maroon and White during the fall season to represent the University of Massachusetts on the volleyball court, and 15 elements are what Head Coach Bonnie Kenny uses in her formula to spell success.

Throughout the fall semester, the Curry Hicks Cage has been the stomping ground for the UMass volleyball team almost every night of the week, be it for practices or games. And last night against UConn, like many other nights this semester, that floor took a beating.

The ladies, who have been bouncing and diving and running across the Cage all semester together, did what they do best last night - play volleyball - and did it with a charisma and attitude all their own as they added another point to the win column. The Cage floor saw action from 11 of the 15 ladies last night, and all 13 were integral parts of the LaSalle win on Saturday.

The UMass volleyball community has seen Rebecca Hasson, the senior co-captain and kills leader, take the court for the past four seasons and crucify opposing defenses with a shot that isn't just fast and powerful, but also always in the right spot at the right time.

But Hasson hasn't been setting the ball to herself for the past four years. That's where senior Jenni Drennan comes into the equation. Drennan leads the team in assists, most of which usually head in Hasson's direction, on average about 10.45 times a game. Drennan's consistency on the court setting the ball may seem routine, but every now and then she'll set a shot up behind her back or surprise everyone by taking a shot herself.

But good defenses are going to key on star players, like Hasson and Drennan. And although they can't stop Drennan, they can try to stop Hasson. It is at that point in the equation where Lymarie Llovet comes in.

Llovet proved to be just as dangerous as her co-captain counterpart, Hasson, as each scored 19 kills throughout five matches last night. Llovet shares the quick delivery that Hasson has, but plays a mean defensive game. The Puerto Rico native is second on the team in blocks and leads the team night in and night out on throwing herself on the floor to save the ball, a stat the Atlantic 10 calls "digs". These three players lead the Maroon and White every weekend in most statistical categories, but most importantly, they lead by their play on the court.

Hasson and Drennan are unable to return next season, to the dismay of the volleyball community. Llovet has only one season left. So where is the future of the squad? On the court.

Players like sophomores Jen Davis and Clare Baxter and freshmen Kelly Lewis and Kealei Kamanao play distinctive roles on the court, and while they have specific roles, they are going to be the keys to the future success of the program. While juniors Janeen DeMartic, Lauren Vander Veen and Celia Witte play less glorious roles than their classmate Llovet, they round out a well-balanced and deep squad.

Much like oxygen is the less abundant element in water, the lesser-publicized role players on the squad are who make this squad a team rather than a six-woman show.

Marcus Camby didn't take the basketball team to the Final Four himself, and Hasson can't do it by herself either. Wins like the one UMass earned last night are what it's going to take to qualify for the A-10 tourney, a tourney that only selects the top four teams in the conference.

"People that came in contributed and that was the difference," Kenny said. "I thought we rose to the challenge and we had people who wanted to be out there tonight. They knew they could win if they just stayed together and played well, and that was good to see."

The fourth set of last night's game, or rather, battle, was a setback that would send most teams into the fifth game with their heads down. The Maroon and White lost that fourth game while playing their hearts out. Any heartache or disappointment the Minutewomen felt was replaced by adrenaline and aggression as the Huskies succumbed to the physically superior UMass team.

Men's soccer to face Rhode Island UM looks to Deren for big game

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Jeff Deren

When the Massachusetts soccer team bumps heads with the Rams of Rhode Island tonight it will represent a golden opportunity. If the Minutemen emerge victorious, then they would take sole possession of first place in the Atlantic 10.

The Maroon and White haven't defeated the Rams since 1997 and they go into this game looking to avenge a 7-0 debacle in the A-10 tournament semifinals last year.

UMass will look to their scoring tandem of Yuri Morales and Jeff Deren to continue their torrid pace. Deren leads the team in scoring with seven goals and 14 points. Morales, who has been a deadly assist man from the midfield, has two goals and five helpers for nine points. With junior Fred Kinateder starting to show the scoring prowess that gave him so much success last year, offense should not be a problem.

J.R. Pouncey, Patrick Beattie and the rest of the defense will have a hill to climb when the Minutemen travel to Kingston, RI for a 7 p.m. start this evening.

Needless to say, they will have to contend with two of the most lethal scorers in the A-10, Nicholas McCreath is second in the conference with 12 goals and 27 points. Fellow striker Steve Demoura is eighth in the A-10 in scoring with 14 points, while both front-runners have combined for six-game winning goals on the year.

Pouncey and company will have to at least match Sunday's George Washington performance, a game in which they shut out one of the top scoring teams in the conference. Stopper Shawn Green will need to have a good game, as his play is key to the success of the rest of the defense. Junior goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn will also be tested by the powerful Rams offense. O'Quinn is among the conference leaders in all categories, but he faces his biggest test this evening.

This game's importance is on a wider scope than just the game itself. UMass needs to prove that they can play on the same level as the Rams, something they failed to do last year. A victory this evening against the class of the conference would boost the team spirit as well as the program as a whole.

Cross country squads fare well at NE Championships

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts men's cross country team had a decent showing at the New England championships over the weekend.

The Massachusetts cross country teams played the role of neither the tortoise nor the hare this weekend at the New England Championships in Boston. The women managed a fifth place finish at Franklin Park, while the men placed 11th overall.

For the third race in a row, junior Kristin Cisowski was the Maroon and White's top finisher with a time of 18:07. Cisowski's 11th place finish was followed by senior Melissa Henderson, who finished 24th with a time of 18:33. The next three UMass finishers were Megan McCormick, Molly Ketschek and Katherine Blais.

The men placed 11th with Mike Pieck as their top finisher. The senior ended with a time of 25:18 and was followed by junior Kevin Curtin, who placed 78th with a final time of 26:05. Three New York natives followed as Ryan Corbett, Brendan Sullivan and Sal Nastasi finished 93rd, 94th and 121st respectively.

The women's team can walk away from this competition with the knowledge that they can compete with the best teams in New England. The men's squad, on the other hand, showed some promise in finishing a runner in the top thirty but some work still needs to be done to compete with the likes of Providence and Keene State.

Providence won the 42-team men's competition while Yale was victorious by a landslide in the 36-team field for the women.

Both cross country teams are back in competition on October 28, as they travel to Pittsburgh for the annual Atlantic 10 championships. Again UMass has a chance to prove themselves, only this time it will be against conference competition.

UMass Minutemen crush Rhode Island Rams in Atlantic 10 matchup

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts' men's tennis team was undefeated against non-league teams going into yesterday's Atlantic 10 conference match against the University of Rhode Island. However, yesterday's 7-0 league win by the Minutemen definitely scored high in coach Judy Dixon's play book.

"The first conference match is always meaningful in terms of seeds for the tournament," she said. "If we beat a team by 7-0 and say, for example, that Duquesne only beats that team by 5-2 then we get the higher seed."

Led by No. 1 singles player Steve Prisco, the Maroon and White dominated all six singles matches. Prisco beat the Rams strong No. 1, Phil Johnson, easily in straight sets by scores of 6-2, 6-3.

Freshman phenom Brent Davis played a beautiful match and also beat his opponent, Bill Moran, in straight sets 6-3, 7-6. The domination continued at the No. 3 spot, as Todd Champeau knocked off Kevin Colozzi 6-3, 6-4. Sophomore Will Shaw and senior Bill Greener also breezed by the competition in two sets.

"Bill made short work of his opponent," Champeau said. "He just thrives under pressure."

Only freshman Aron Gortman fought through three sets in order to come out with the victory, 4-6, 6-1, 6-4.

"Aron has been struggling with his confidence and his game," Dixon said. "I need him to play bigger. In the heart of our lineup at the three and four, we need stronger play."

Gortman, a ranked player, has high expectations and also feels his play has not been up to par despite his solid wins this season.

"I'm only playing at about twenty-five percent right now," he said. "Although I'm not playing my best tennis I'm happy that I pulled through today."

In doubles action, the tandem of Prisco and Davis defeated the duo of Johnson/Moran 8-5 in a pro-set. Shaw then teamed up with Rory Theis at the No. 3 doubles spot and also enjoyed success with an 8-3 victory over the tandem of Karlis Antons and Dan Romeyn.

Things were not so smooth for the newly formed pair of Champeau and Phil Rodrigues, however, who lost their match 8-0 to the strong pairing of Colozzi and Dave Guntein.

"We have a solid No. 1 doubles team with Brent and Steve that's here to stay," Dixon said. "But I have been fooling around with the other two teams, which I am going to have to figure out soon. In the spring season, the other two teams will be set, but right now I'm experimenting."

The next two matches for the Minutemen will be quite crucial as the team will take on the Red Storm of St. John's on Saturday and rival Connecticut on Oct. 28.

"We have never beaten St. John's as far as I know. This win against the Rams was definitely a good tune-up," Greener said.

The Red Storm are definitely a force to be reckoned with, led by Eric Sharf, but the undefeated Minutemen have every right to have a positive outlook going into the match.

"We have to go after them as a team," Dixon said. "We can't just focus on this one player, Eric Sharf. We need everyone to be focused and play up to their abilities in order to come out with a victory."

Awwwww. If this smiling sheep isn't enough to get you to read our Area Farms arts cover, ain't nothin' gonna.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

His friends and coach call him T. As a result, we made the obvious joke about it in the headline of the story. See it (the story) inside.

SPORTS p. 15

Volume CVII Issue 31 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, October 19, 2000

Local politics heat up...

McCain campaigns for Abair

By Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

ADRIAN PETERSON/COLLEGIAN

Arizona Senator John McCain and local Republican candidate Peter Abair made appearances in both Westfield and Holyoke yesterday as Abair attempts to knock incumbent John Olver out of office.

Senator John McCain brought a boost of publicity for Republican congressional candidate Peter Abair at a fundraiser yesterday in Holyoke.

The campaign event was intended to bring publicity to Abair's race against incumbent John Olver, D-Amherst, for the first congressional district, representing most of Western Massachusetts.

Despite chilling rain, about two hundred people gathered at Barnes Municipal Airport in Westfield for the chance to see Senator McCain. A press conference was held for Abair featuring Senator McCain and members of Massachusetts' Republican leadership.

Following the press conference, reporters were invited to join McCain and Abair in a version of "The Straight Talk Express" for the ride to a $100-a-plate fundraiser at the WhereHouse? in Holyoke. A Peter Pan Bus took the place of the famed rolling press conference, giving reporters up close and personal contact with McCain and Abair.

McCain said he made the trip to Massachusetts to support Abair because he has a responsibility to help young candidates who are dedicated to reform.

"One of my goals is to help and support young candidates who are willing to serve the country whether it be Massachusetts or Arizona," said McCain. "I came because I believe in Pete Abair and I'm impressed by his commitment to reform the institutions of government, including campaign finance reform. It's important in my job and at my age to pass the torch off to another generation of leadership of Americans."

The Congressional seat for the first district is one of the few contested seats in Massachusetts, but Abair has been facing an uphill battle against incumbent Olver. Abair began his campaign with little money and little notoriety, but hopes McCain's appearance will give him the exposure he needs to challenge Olver.

With over 500,000 dollars in his campaign war chest, Olver can outspend Abair's 6,000 dollars ten to one. Olver was elected in 1991 in a special election after the death of Representative Silvio O. Conte, still a legendary figure in the first district.

One of Abair's most touted assets was his place on the late Conte's staff in Washington D.C., and he hopes to appeal to voters who miss Conte.

"I can't be Senator Conte," said Abair at the fundraiser. "but I will carry on the spirit of Senator Conte in Washington D.C."

The campaign event centered on Abair's slogan "Putting people before politics," with a platform sharing McCain's reform agenda and crusade for campaign finance reform.

"We are going to put people first, not the special interests, not politics," said Abair. "It's a message most people in this district share with us."

When he spoke at the fundraiser, Abair started by thanking the 300 people who spent $100 per ticket to see him, with a joking sidelong glance at the fundraiser's guest of honor, Senator McCain, who is one of the Republican Party's biggest celebrities.

"I have the great honor at this point to introduce a great U.S. Senator, a great man, a great American and a true hero," said Abair, introducing McCain. "I am so honored by his coming and supporting this campaign."

McCain attracted many supporters to the event, especially from the ranks of his successful campaign during the primaries last spring. McCain swept Massachusetts in the presidential primaries, garnering the support of thousands of democrats and independents that switched party registration to vote for McCain.

At the press conference at Barnes Municipal Airport, many spectators said they showed up for the chance to see Senator McCain in the flesh. Members of the UMass Republican Club came to support Abair but also to see John McCain.

Mike Marin, a junior political science major at UMass and the president of the UMass Republicans Club brought a few students to see McCain.

"I'm here to support Pete Abair," said Marin, "and I'm proud to see that John McCain is coming to support Pete."

One student, Chuck Johnson, a sophomore at UMass and a member of the UMass Republicans Club, volunteered for McCain in Massachusetts and New Hampshire during the primaries.

"I'm here to support Abair now," said Johnson. "I like his slogan, putting people before politics because politics plays too big a role for John Olver."

McCain focused on his reform message at the fundraiser, especially campaign financing, which he said is the most divisive force in politics. McCain said the only way to motivate people to participate in government and take back the election is to get special interests out of Washington.

Even though the presidency, the Congress and the Senate could all possibly change party hands this November, McCain said that this election could possibly see the lowest voter turnout in American history.

McCain said part of this is due to disillusionment among the youth. He wants to reach young people with his campaign and convince them to become more involved in their democracy.

Turn to POLITICS, page 3

SGA again discusses Greek issue

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

Last night the University of Massachusetts Student Government eulogized the controversy around Greek Area Government. That it is a dead issue was apparent in the exasperation of the Senators when the issue was brought up.

Sheila Tunney, Secretary of Administrative Affairs, talked the issue of the exclusion of a Greek Area Government (GAG) in the Title V document passed last Spring by the Senate.

In the document, GAG is grouped under the broader category of Commuter Area Government. This denies specific representation to the Greek Area.

Tunney, primary author of Title V, defended the document, echoing the mantra of last night's meeting: the SGA gets things done.

"I decided to work with the Area Governments that were already in place," Tunney said. "It's something I did to empower students. [Title V] was passed to empower the other 97 percent of the student body."

The confusion around GAG lies in that many Greeks live in dorms or off campus altogether, not in the fraternity or sorority University houses. Should Greeks be represented through their own Area Government? Or should they be represented by the existing Area Governments in the residential areas in which they live?

By passing Title V last Spring, the SGA ruled for the latter.

The decision was not permanent, though. A final vote on this matter will take place by the current Senate before the end of this semester.

Many have questioned whether or not the increased involvement of Greeks in the SGA this fall is linked to this issue.

Jonathan Moore, Commuter Senator and fraternity member, refuted the insinuation that the Greeks ran for Senate simply to push a Greek agenda.

"We're not here to bring the Greek Area Government back," Moore said. "We know it's been defunct for years. We're here to get involved."

Juliet Okafor, Secretary of Diversity, encouraged all Senators, not just Greek Senators, to get involved in a wide range of things and to stretch themselves.

"When you step out of your box," Okafor told the Senate, "you can make rational, diverse decisions that can help all students."

A diverse group of students was appointed by SGA President Jeff Howe to fill the positions on the Student Judiciary.

The appointments of Winifred Chen, Marina Grallon, Andy Delean, Frantz Pamphile and Edward Kim were all approved by the Senate at last night's meeting. The five new justices bring diverse backgrounds and perspectives to their positions.

Kim said he had no previous experience in student government, but didn't feel that would impede him from doing a good job.

"My job is to be impartial," Kim said.

He went on to say that his lack of prior involvement in the SGA will help him to be fair in his rulings.

Of all three, last debate the most colorful

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

In the last of three presidential debates Al Gore and George W. Bush presented the nation with contrasting views of the role of the federal government in education, Medicare, Social Security and taxation.

Gore vigorously attacked Bush's tax plan, claiming it favored the wealthiest Americans, while Bush depicted Gore as an advocate of big government in Tuesday's debate in St. Louis.

"I think the candidates wanted people to know the differences between them when they turned the TV off," said Michael Hannahan, Professor of Political Science at the University of Massachusetts.

The format of the debate was that of a town meeting, with an audience of undecided voters chosen by the Gallup Organization asking questions of the candidates.

The debate began with Gore and Bush agreeing on the need for a Patients Bill of Rights to protect Americans from having their doctor's recommendations overruled by Health Maintenance Organizations (HMOs). Gore then attacked Bush for not supporting the Dingell-Norwood bill which is pending in Congress and gives patients the right to sue HMOs.

"I do support a Patients Bill of Rights," Bush said. "The difference is I can get the bill passed."

Gore stated that a goal of his administration would be to bring affordable, high quality health care coverage to all children in America within four years.

"I think we should move step by step towards universal health care coverage," Gore said. "Forty-four million people are without health care coverage and we need to improve that, and improve coverage for those who do have it."

Gore also attacked Bush's record in Texas claiming that Texas ranked 50th out of 50 states in health care coverage for its citizens.

Bush responded, "We're providing health care for our people, we've got a strong safety net."

Bush spoke about his support for Medicare reform saying that the government should provide a prescription drug benefit for seniors.

"I propose an immediate helping hand, giving aid to states to combat drug prices for seniors," Bush said.

Gore responded, "If you want somebody who will fight for you and who will fight for the middle-class families and working men and women who are sick and tired of having their parents and grandparents pay higher prices for prescription drugs than anybody else, then I want to fight for you."

Gore leapt at the chance to draw contrasts between Bush and himself when he was asked about education. Gore criticized Bush's plan to provide government vouchers to parents of students enrolled in "failed" schools to help pay for private school education.

"[Bush] proposes to drain more taxpayer money out of the public schools for private school vouchers than all of the money that he proposes in his entire budget for public schools themselves," Gore said.

Bush retorted, "Vouchers are up to states. I strongly believe in local control of schools. I don't like it when the federal government tells us what to do."

Gore entered the first debate with a slight lead over Bush in most national polls. Bush enjoyed a lead of two to three points in most polls after the first two debates. Tuesday's debate began with a general sense that Gore had to perform better than he had in the first two debates to overtake Bush.

"I don't think this debate changed anything. Gore is still the kid in class that you wanted to

Turn to DEBATES, page 3

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

For a good cause

Robin Black hands out Breast Cancer Awareness ribbons in Berkshire Dinning Commons yesterday as part of Breast Cancer Awareness week.

Canceled!

Barney Frank, Representative from the 4th Massachusetts Congressional District, postponed his speech on the global economy scheduled for Thursday Oct. 19th. Frank's speech will be held in Mahar Auditorium at 4 p.m. on Thursday Nov. 9th.

TRUE OR FALSE?

25% OF PEOPLE SAY THEY CAN DETECT THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN HOW EACH NOSTRIL PERCEIVES SMELL.

AMERICANS EAT APPROXIMATELY 350 SLICES OF PIZZA PER SECOND.

7 OUT OF 100 AMERICANS HAVE FLOSSED THEIR TEETH WITH THEIR HAIR.

MEN BURP 4.7 TIMES PER DAY WHILE WOMEN BURP 2.1 TIMES PER DAY.

8% OF COLLEGE STUDENTS HAVE NOT WATCHED T.V. IN THE LAST WEEK.

NEARLY 2/3 OF COLLEGE STUDENTS DRINK ON AVERAGE LESS THAN ONE ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE PER DAY.*

ONE OUT OF EVERY FOUR AMERICANS HAS APPEARED ON TV.

3.9% OF WOMEN DON'T WEAR ANY UNDERWEAR. 6.4% OF MEN GO COMMANDO.

*SOURCE: CORE INSTITUTE 1999

GUESS WHAT? EVERY ONE OF THESE IS TRUE. MOST IMPORTANTLY, COLLEGE STUDENTS ARE MAKING RESPONSIBLE CHOICES ABOUT DRINKING. THANKS FOR MAKING INTELLIGENT CHOICES THE NORM.

ANHEUSER BUSCH Companies
www.beresponsible.com

THE 200+ PUBLIC UNIVERSITIES OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE UNIVERSITIES AND LAND-GRANT COLLEGES (NASULGC) www.nasulgc.org

politics

continued from page 1

"I'd like to tell young people that this is a critical election," said McCain on the bus ride to Holyoke, "and that we have to elect people who are committed to reforming the institutions of government and the campaign finance system which has become corrupt, so they can be connected with their government again and be represented again. It is crucial that we end this tidal wave of big money which is only representing special interests and is depriving them of their voice in government."

Since McCain's loss to Governor George W. Bush during the primaries last spring, he has committed his campaign to supporting candidates that embrace his reform minded agenda.

McCain said his plan until the election is, "to campaign for people committed to a reform agenda so we can lay the ground work for those reforms. The crusade goes on." "I will continue this reform agenda, to reform education, reform the military, reform the tax code, and all the institutions of government."

At 35 years old, Abair is trying to represent himself as a younger, fresher candidate for Congress. Contrasting this image with the 64 year-old Olver, many feel, will be all too easy for Abair's campaign. Olver's tall and statesman like demeanor is sometimes characterized as aloof and withdrawn, and he has been teased for looking the part of his previous profession as a chemistry professor at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

But when it comes to the record, Abair will have a hard time competing with Olver's well-known ability to bring millions of dollars in federal funds to Western Massachusetts. This includes $11 million to repair Coolidge Memorial Bridge in Northampton, $50 million for Westover Airforce Base in Chicopee, $22 million for the Air National Guard Base at Barnes Municipal Airport in Westover and millions of dollars in grants for a joint venture between UMass and Mexico to build a telescope.

Abair and Olver will debate in Amherst at the Bangs Community Center next Tuesday, Oct. 26.

MAUREEN MAJEWSKI/COLLEGIAN

Its Halloweeny...
A student and his scarecrow hang out in Orchard Hill last week

Candlelight vigil to be held for Mid-East Peace

In the midst of the crisis in the Middle East that has claimed one hundred lives in the past several weeks, and an international summit between the Palestinians and Israelis well under way in Egypt, UMass students are responding to the on-going violence in the region. Tonight, on Thursday October 19 at 7:30 p.m., the University of Massachusetts will be hosting a candlelight vigil for the Middle Eastern peace.

This event is sponsored by the Arab Student Club, Hillel House, International Relations Club, Jewish Student Union and Muslim Student Association, and will take place on the South steps of the Student Union.

The organizers of the event conceived the vigil as a non-partisan event against violence. The planned event will be a peace vigil where no sides will be taken, and speakers will not be permitted to express any partisan political views. The participants will be trying to state that violence is not a solution to conflict in the Middle East. The vigil will be an event where the organizers hope "everyone will get involved in re-committing themselves to the peace process."

The vigil will also serve as an opportunity for remembering those who have died in the recent weeks of fighting in the Middle East both Arab and Israeli.

This event is being held simultaneously with a similar event at Tufts University. Similar vigils are being held also at Harvard University, Yale University, Columbia University, Northwestern University and the University of Houston. Students at Tufts and UMass-Amherst have organized their respective universities through a rapid-action, grassroots effort over just the past week. Several student organization working together on organizing the event hope that the vigil will help raise awareness of the current situation in Israel and throughout the Middle East.

The vigil is expected to be a reaffirmation of solidarity by students at UMass and other schools, which will remind the participants that hope for peace should be sustained even in the times of crisis.

Sasha Senderovich

debates

continued from page 1

punch," said Hannahan. "Bush still speaks in generalities but he seems more comfortable speaking to people."

The candidate's discussion of education led to an argument over Gore's position on government spending, with Bush accusing Gore of wanting to grow the size of government.

"Gore proposes more federal spending than [Walter] Mondale and [Michael] Dukakais combined," Bush said. "When you total up all his new spending there won't be any money left."

Gore retorted, "Federal spending this year will be the smallest it has been in fifty years, interest on the national debt accounts for one-third of all spending. I will pay down the debt every year until it is gone in the next decade."

Throughout the debate, Gore criticized Bush's plan to budget 1.6 trillion dollars of the projected federal surplus for tax relief, claiming his plan disproportionately benefits the wealthiest Americans.

When moderator Jim Lehrer, of PBS's "The News Hour," asked Bush if his plan benefits the wealthy excessively he said, "of course it does."

"I think everyone ought to get tax relief, therefore wealthy people will get it," Bush said. "I believe the people who pay the bills ought to get some relief."

The candidates also discussed the estate tax, which taxes the estates of the deceased valued over $600,000. Bush said he would repeal the tax, while Gore said he favored reform of the tax to exempt family farms.

"The problem with completely eliminating the tax is again the wealthiest get tax relief and the revenues must be made up from the pockets of middle-class families," Gore said.

"The death tax is a bad tax," Bush said. "People shouldn't be taxed twice on their assets, there ought to be fair taxation for everyone-not fair taxation for some."

When asked about affirmative action Bush explained that he had been successful breaking down barriers in Texas, and had included people from different groups in his administration. Bush also said we should break down barriers that pit group against group.

"I'm for affirmative action," Gore said. "We have to enforce civil rights laws, affirmative action is not quotas. Quotas are illegal."

Gore then challenged Bush to pledge his support for affirmative action. If affirmative action is quotas, I'm against it, if affirmative action is what I described, I'm for it," Bush said. Adding, "Jim [Lehrer], can we go on to something else?"

Bush and Gore sparred on Social Security near the close of the debate, with Gore accusing Bush of overspending. Gore said that Bush promised $1 trillion of the Social Security trust fund to younger workers to invest in the stock market and promised seniors $1 trillion in benefits.

"It reminds me of the movie 'show me the money'," Gore said. "The promise he made to young people he also made to seniors; he can't keep both promises."

Bush replied, "You bet we are going to let you invest your own money as you see fit, to get a better rate of return than the paltry two percent you get from social security." Lehrer held a moment of silence for Missouri Governor Mel Carnahan who died in a plane crash on Monday night. Both candidates expressed their condolences to Carnahan's family and offered words of praise for Carnahan.

The debate was held in the Field House of Washington University.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Janet Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppas Classified Advertising
Brent Simanski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Cargnoni Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

UMASS The UMass Index Yearbook
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
OCTOBER 23RD-27TH
Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY
Walsworth Publishing Company
Order Your 2001 Yearbook
ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

SEARCHING SUCKS

THIRD VOICE DOESN'T

Let the information you want on the Web come to you. Don't go anywhere. Just click Third Voice™ free software that brings you info in a way that goes above and beyond what your search engine can do. Get it. And get it over with.

thirdvoice
www.thirdvoice.com

© 2000 Third Voice Inc

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Disparity in Baseball?
Mets Yankees prove it

When the final out was made in last night's American league Championship Series deciding game six, the fate of our national pastime was officially sealed.

One fan in the box seats at Yankee Stadium held up a homemade sign reading "I WANT TO BE A PART OF IT: NEW YORK – NEW YORK." While this at first seems nothing more than a catchy play on the Frank Sinatra song, it is in fact a sobering statement about how far baseball has fallen and the pathetic state that its once-hallowed championship now rests in.

Now it seems the World Series of Baseball is actually the world championship of payroll. With clubs earning a portion of the overall media revenue teams in the biggest media market will reap the benefits of a higher payroll. Where are the two biggest media markets in the United States you ask: New York and New York.

It shouldn't come as any surprise that the Mets and the Yankees will duel it out in this year's battle of the buck, as they are two of the highest spending teams in the majors.

The chain of events that leads to a world series for a ball club has changed drastically in the last decade. No longer are young players brought through a farm system than developed into stars as they lead the team they were drafted by to the promised land. Instead you see teams like the 1997 Florida Marlins go on free agent spending frees for a championship, than selling their entire team away.

Never is the influence of money in baseball more evident than in this year's playoffs. The Yankees in recent years were forced to spend their money on resigning players who came up through their own system but now command millions as they are stars on the diamond. This season was different however, as George Steinbrenner went on a massive spending spree because his team was not performing up to his lofty expectations. Signing decent veterans with inflated price tags such as Jose Canseco, Glenallen Hill and Jose Vizcaino have ballooned New York's payroll to well above tops in the league.

The Mets on the other hand took a more gradual trail to their enormous payroll. Steve Phillips started the road to the World Series over four years ago when he started spending massive dollars on the free agent market. Every off-season the Mets would make a marquee free agent signing. This off-season was no different as they brought in 20 game winner Mike Hampton as well as bobbled outfielder Derek Bell, both of whom the Astros could not afford to keep.

Other baseball clubs such as the Minnesota Twins and the Montreal Expos cannot afford to keep their talented players once their original rookie contracts run out. Players such as Vladimir Guerrerro will command massive offers from other teams, offers that the Expos could not even dream of matching.

With teams such as the Yankees able to wave millions in the faces of young stars, wooing them away from low budget teams like the Twins, parody in baseball is non-existent. The reason that the Yankees get away with their big spending habits is the disparity in media revenue. The Yankees bring in a total of 160 million dollars in media revenue, compared to the Twins who bring in a total of 6 million dollars. With such an immense difference in revenue low budget teams have no hope of competing in a cash-dominated league. The only hope for the Expos and Twins of Major League Baseball would be profit sharing, an idea that could be closer to fantasy rather than reality.

Home, lost and gone forever

ROB SCHULZE

My home is going away. I went home this weekend, and as I was driving around the place I grew up I was continually crushed by the realization that it isn't going to be there someday, and someday soon.

Let me state, right now, that I love my home. I'm from the town of Plymouth, Massachusetts, which is a massive rural Puritan colony down next to Cape Cod. I'm from the left corner of West Plymouth, if you want to get technical, with five-minute walking distance of the towns of Carver and Kingston. When I say "my home" I don't just mean Plymouth (as much as I love my hometown), I mean more along the lines of the whole rural South Shore area: Plymouth, Carver, Kingston, Middleboro, Wareham, Rochester, Freetown, Lakeville – all those oldschool MA towns you never really hear about, clustered down by the ocean and the Cape.

My home is, as I previously stated, beautiful. It is old, old, OLD. There are seventeenth century stone walls dotting the landscape everywhere you go. The roads are twisty and random, mostly because they're just old Pilgrim cowpaths paved over. Houses from the nineteenth, eighteenth, and (yes) even the seventeenth century are more the rule than the exception in a lot of the places you go.

It's totally rural. Trees are the exception rather than the rule, and most of the land is undeveloped. Cranberry bogs are everywhere – I grew up with one literally a one-minute walk behind my house, and driving around the area they're just impossible to miss, especially since the roads around them tend to be curvy, and you have to fight to avoid plunging into them. There aren't many "downtown"-like areas – downtown Plymouth is pretty developed, mostly because of Plymouth Rock tourists, but downtown Middleboro is basically the police station, a pizza place, the board park, and some empty buildings. (It is still referred to as "downtown" Middleboro, though.) The other towns are much the same.

The major industries are... nothing. Cranberry farming is the biggest, with commuting to other places to work a short second. People work where they can – restaurants, chain stores (Wal-Mart, etc.), video stores – wherever they can get the money to pay the bills. People work hard because they have to.

There are downsides. There isn't that much to do, really. In their spare time people drink and smoke weed, mostly, if they're adults, and do E and coke if they're kids. Drug use is rampant, especially in the smaller towns. People die a lot and locals (the only people who notice) tend to think it was suicide, but no one's really sure, unless it's obvious, like the kid who drove his car into a tree in Carver this year. From what I gather, he just didn't think life was worth it.

The good outweighs the bad, though – for every coke-addict, there's a good family man doing what he can to stay afloat, for every alcoholic a single mom feeding her kids by herself. The place is beautiful physically and spiritually – good people come from my home, and I'm not even talking about myself.

I always wanted it to just say the same, but it isn't. And the change isn't for the better.

Plymouth itself is being built up like life itself depended on it. Plymouth is, by sheer square mileage, the biggest town in Massachusetts, but it's always been sort of thought of as a little backwater place, because it's always been all woods and bogs. That is changing. The Pine Hills in South Plymouth are being turned into big-money massive homes, that's it, just homes, a huge Edward Scissorhands housing development for rich people who're going to come from Boston because they want to be close to the Cape but not too far away from the city. It's assumed that most of them will be retired and not have kids to put through school, and that those who do will send them through private school at Sacred Heart or BC High or CM or something, because obviously my high school isn't good enough for them. They've already built one golf course (it's been in Golf Magazine a couple times – whoop de freakin' do) and there are plans to build a couple more – one designed by Jack Nicklaus, no less. They want to build hotels and convention centers near my house. They're already started building more houses in West Plymouth. This is called "progress."

Oh, and did I mention the new Home Depot opening soon?

I picked up the Boston Globe Magazine this weekend. The cover story was on the plight of the cranberry farmers. I won't go into too much detail, but the basic story is that the cranberry industry had one of the best years ever last year, and another one this year, and so it is going bankrupt. There are too many cranberries, and you can't get any money from them anymore. This is common knowledge in the area – you see the "For Sale" signs on a fairly nice house in Carver (10% of all the cranberries in the world come from Carver) and you can just assume it belongs to a cranberry farmer who can't support his family anymore.

This is just a little side note that I think is interesting: Carver has, I think, four fire stations due to the fact that it is huge and covered in highly flammable trees. Carver has no firemen – it is done on a strictly volunteer basis, and the volunteers are mostly cranberry men. What with them all going through these horrible hard times, they're dropping like flies out of the fireman job, and the town is now almost without anyone to fight a fire, should one break out. Funny how things are all related, eh?

Anyways, according to the Globe article, times are tough in the cranberry towns (Carver, Middleboro, Wareham, etc). Wow, isn't that investigative journalism at it's finest! Whatever... this is screwing up all the towns, driving people out of business, making people homeless, causing massive tax problems, and all that other stuff that comes with the ruining of people's lives. So, as it says so beautifully in the article, the guys that own most of the bogs (not the guys who actually work them for a living, mind, but the owners), are going to "create a master plan with zoning changes that would allow him [Christopher Makepeace, head of A.D. Makepeace, largest cranberry company in Mass.] to develop about 9,500 acres into residential and office tracts, as well as recreation areas, with some land preserved as open space... will be a baron of business tracts, condominiums, and golf courses. Cranberries could just be an aftertaste."

Why golf courses? Why is it always GOD DAMNED golf courses? It's OK – we'll just exchange three hundred years of history, the lives of the citizens, and the basis of life for as long as anyone can remember, for 18 holes and a cheap bar.

So, my home is going away. I'm going to come home one day to class warfare (you don't insert a massive high-economic-class housing development into a mostly low-middle class area without causing problems – I hope people realize this), golf courses, condominiums, and "open space," which I take to mean a piece of ratty grass covered with cigarette butts and a spraypainted bench stuck between the McDonalds and the Jiffy Lube. You won't be able to see the cranberry harvest in the fall anymore, where it looks like the whole earth is bleeding, and feel fresh air as you drive down the winding rural roads past the trees changing color. I've left someplace that I consider to be beautiful, and I'm going to come back to another ratty suburb of Boston. There's no real way around it. I figure that the new rich people will want all that they were used to in the city and build it over the trees, and that the people who were there all along will, what with their livelihood turned into condos, just waste away. You know that drug/suicide problem I mentioned before? Don't look for this to make it anything but worse. Despair is coming to the place where I grew up, the place I love. If you want to see it go now, before it becomes Brockton.

I will miss my home. It breaks my heart.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

I hate NY sports

SAM WILKINSON

Generally, my only sports vices involve teams that I have die-hard attachments to: the Cubs and the West Virginia University Mountaineers. Those are the only two sports teams that can get me truly emotional about a sporting event.

The last time the Cubbies made the playoffs, I delayed everything to participate in the make or break game, a deciding one-game playoff between the San Francisco Giants and the Cubs that we won. During that game, I engaged in every single good luck ritual that I could think of, and lo and behold, they worked. I jumped around my house like we'd won the Series because I knew that we weren't going to win the Series, and that actually getting to the playoffs was going to have to be enough.

And when WVU's Mountaineers played Miami and all we had to do was punt the ball away or, perhaps, take a safety to win 6-0, Tremaine Mack blocked the punt and scored a game winning touchdown with nine seconds left. I felt as if my heart had been torn out, my every fear came suddenly true in front of me on the screen and out my window, I could hear 67,000 screaming fans fall dead silent at the pain.

Sports teams have that kind of affect, whether it makes us comfortable to admit or not, and I'm willing to admit that crying isn't all that bad when it comes to a sports team. Most of the readers of this column know it: they're Bo-Sox fans, a team that has, like my Cubs, continually broken your hearts. Booted ground balls, homeruns for the oppositions and tastes of sweetness yanked suddenly away, the Bo-Sox have become, perhaps, my second favorite team in baseball, thanks to its fans.

But those fans and I, we share a dark secret, the dark side of intense passions for the game. For all teams that can make us cry out of pain or pleasure, there are those teams that make us think the most evil of thoughts, dream the most evil of dreams. Separated hips and torn ACLs, crashed planes and tortured players, these are my thoughts for New Yorkers and their damned sports teams.

Like the child on the block who always got every toy that he wanted, who always got away with rule-breaking when the other kids didn't, New York has, quite simply, always gotten everything they ever wanted. They are the team that wins by cheating, the team that beats up on the little guys, the cool kid in school who always picked on everyone else. They are the kid in the class who always had it easy, the guy who runs through yellow-orange-red lights and never gets pulled over. They're the one that gets all the right bounces: the investor with all the right tips, the journalist with all the good leads. They are the people who get every little thing they've ever wanted.

Except for perhaps the final gift for their greedy gullets, a Subway Series between the Mets and Yankees and two nights ago, they got that. Worldwide bragging rights will now either go to New York City or New York City, a reality so distressing that I can't even begin to think of the consequences.

Typical to their smarmy arrogant selves, New York sports fans' overconfidence and in-your-face attitude will only increase with the entrance of not one, but both of their teams in the annual Fall Classic. They will be able to say that, not only do they have the best team in baseball, but they have the second best one too. That just isn't right.

Teams like the Yankees have had their turn. Team likes the Mets have had theirs.

And in a playoffs when we could have had the infinitely more entertaining St. Louis Cardinals versus the Oakland A's, we are stuck with New Yorkers and their damn teams.

I, for one, wish them the worst of luck.

I hope their games take forty-eight innings apiece so as to ruin it for the New Yorkers watching.

I hope that Derek Jeter separates his hip and is so forever injured, he can never play again. I hope Justice loses ability to swing and Riviera loses the ability to throw.

I hope that Mike Hampton's arm shreds like those of pitchers on teams who never really have a shot and we never have to see his smug little grin ever again. I hope Valentine loses the ability to coach and Aghayani is forced to return to Hawaii.

I hope that both teams get stuck on a subway and are forced to eat one another to survive.

I hope for all of this and more because I'm sick of the big guy always winning the title, always getting to be number one, always getting to be the best. I've had to watch the Yankees win World Series after World Series. I've had to listen to Mets fans complain that its been almost fourteen years since their last visit to the World Series. I've had to hear about how New York sports fans suffer too because their poor Rangers didn't win a Stanley Cup for 54 years and that Jets fans suffer too and the Knicks never quite finished it off.

And I hate them all for it. For their inability to realize just how lucky they are, as a city, to have won as much and as often as they have. To complain that they had to wait 54 years for a Stanley Cup, as if they're somehow entitled to it sooner than that. To point towards the Jets, perhaps the most incompetent of the New York teams that still had a damn good chance to make it to the Super Bowl two years ago and pretend like the suffering of the Green and White makes them true sports fans. To suggest that the Knicks' suffering is somehow true suffering, when we all know the truth.

Don't they understand that most sports fans never even get close to the title game? Don't they understand that complaining about not winning something for 54 years just doesn't matter because, in the end, they did win it? Don't they see that most cities don't have multiple teams that can threaten to win major titles?

Of course they don't, because they're too damn spoiled to know the difference, and now they pat themselves on the back and smile at the rest of the world knowing that in no more than two weeks, one of their teams will be the world champion and Milwaukee and Philadelphia and Seattle will once again finish the seasons with nothing?

The great thing about sport is that most teams, at one point or another, at least get a shot and sometimes they win. The fans who stick it out for those up and down seasons in between are the truly committed sports fans. New Yorkers?

They're spoiled little children who will never know the pain that the rest of us do because they've always gotten what they want; here's hoping for a fire in Shea Stadium, flesh-eating bacteria at Yankee Stadium and a World Series between the Angels and the Astros.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

The break - up blues

KATEY PITTS

I know it's not Valentines Day. In fact, it's nowhere close to being Valentine's Day, but I am choosing to write a deposition on love, or, er, lack of it. I am writing on the big "B-U." Nope, not a cheer for a collegiate team but the big "Break-Up." A friend once told me that love is the hardest drug to come down off of. Yeah, well, they couldn't be closer to the truth.

Everyone has had a friend who felt like his/her life was completely destroyed by a few devastating words from an ex-beau. Being the best friend that you are, you listen to their tales of woe and give advice as mechanically as Ann Landers would.

But after awhile, you give up and let them go through their self-destroying task of torture. From their room the only sounds you hear are "their songs." Songs like "Angel Eyes" by the Jeff Healy Band, "Killing Me Softly" by the Fugees, or other terribly grievous songs that would make anyone not going through a heartache want to kill themselves.

You start wondering, "When did they start listening to country?" Even better yet, they start listening to radio talk shows like "Delilia" or reading self-help books like, Helping the Self Overcome the Heart. And you think, "All for love? Never me...Noooo way. Besides, what is all this love business anyway?"

I know you have that same thought. Ah, but as Shakespeare once said, "Beware of the green eyed monster that doth mock the meat it feeds on." The tables change, my friend, when you are the one who is broken up with. You become the one cornering any sorry sap with two ears to listen to your depressingly sad life. The cheesy 80's rock music that wanted to make you toss last nights DC meal is now making you believe that you have some strange connection with guys such as Rod Stewart or Elton John. You even find misery in Metallica.

As someone who is getting through the last chapter of my self-help book, I feel encouraged enough to throw a few words of advice to all you lovers, or unlovers, out there. Being broken up with sucks. There is no one in this world who can tell me that having your heart (and, consequently, pride) ripped from you is a good thing. But, overanalyzing how happy Monica and Chandler are on Friends is not going to help the pain. That's why they're actors. They can fake that comedic blissful crap that realistically lasts for only 3 dates because they get dropped a million each time to do it. Wouldn't you fake it to?

And for all you volunteer shrinks out there enduring the repercussions of your friends' merry mishap, I feel for you. I really do. After all, you're probably wondering what could be as bad as listening to your buddy sniffling whenever an insurance ad comes on the TV. Let me tell you: not having someone there when you're Hallmark heartbroken is hands-down the worst. And don't think that you're immune from it.

But besides overanalyzing where your relationship took a big dive, listening to terrible sappy love songs and endlessly writing in your journal, try to reap the benefits that being single offers. Invest in the neglected work and friendships that were lost amidst love. Look around you. Open your eyes. You'll probably realize soon enough that your "one-and-only-love" was just a "one-and-only-loser." After all, they broke up with you, right?

If you can't think of anything else than the ex, do me a huge favor and don't listen to every schmuck that thinks that a heart can be mended by a pack of cigarettes, a beer and their personally autographed book. After all, if you want to end the pain, look where the source of it is—the heart. Oh, but a beer sounds good too.

Katey Pitts is a UMass student.

Local Area Farms

Down on the Farm

By Ryan Bernharris
Collegian Staff

The sure signs that fall has arrived can be felt in the air. There are no better places to experience rustic life fully than at area farms. If you are new to the area, you may not be familiar with some of its landmarks.

The University of Massachusetts owns and operates its own farm directly adjacent to campus in the Hadley Farms, where all of the University's animal science majors can study by hands on experience.

Melissa Lukey, a senior Animal Science major has worked at the Hadley Farm during her time in college. She's worked in the stalls, cleaning and raising livestock. She comments on the farm's adjustment to the upcoming cold weather. "To prepare to the winter, both of the barns have heated pipes to keep from freezing. They also make sure that the windows are all in good repair."

She also said that the farm does not do anything specific to the animals to make them more comfortable. "They (animals) get a heavier coat and that's pretty much it. They don't have to do too much to help them."

One of the most popular farms outside of campus, one which has almost nothing to do with the raising of animals, is Atkins Farm and Country Market in Amherst. Atkins Farm grows primarily apples, and raises other crops to a lesser amount. Some of the services you'll find there are a deli, a bakery and a full supermarket.

Harold Gould, a manager at Atkins Farm, said that they have been exceedingly busy since around Columbus Day. "We peaked in October, and it slows down a bit before the big Thanksgiving, Christmas rush."

Atkins Farm uses this time of year to boost their profit margin. Since they grow their own apples, they are their most important product. Gould says that they work really hard to make sure the apples are perfect. "They have come in excellent quality this year," he said. "This is probably due to a cool spring and plenty of rain this summer. We lost a bit to some hailstorms, but that didn't really set us back too much."

He said another big item this time of year is pumpkins. With all of the things to do with pumpkins, especially during Halloween, they are in big demand. Gould said Atkins Farm gets a good supply of pumpkins from farms in Western Massachusetts, and they do not expect to run out at all.

Atkins does not grow all of its own fruits and vegetables. Gould said that they have really good relationships with farms around the area that provide them with other things. The get raspberries from Whately, MA, and crops such as spinach, gourds, corn, and onions can all be purchased within ten miles of Atkins. Atkins' actual farm is in Belchertown, located right next to the UMass farm.

Of course, baked goods are a favorite around Halloween time. Gould said that Atkins has quite a bit to offer. Their treats do not end at apple and pumpkin pies. Atkins is really proud of their cider donuts, and the cider to go along with them. Gould also mentioned apple squares and turnovers. Since pumpkin is so popular, Atkins make almost anything they can with it. There's pumpkin pie, donuts, muffins, fudge and even soup.

Atkins also has several ongoing events taking place. They offer tours to local elementary school kids. On the tours, they can carve pumpkins, make their own scarecrows and occasionally pick apples. He said that students come all the way from Springfield to see what they have to offer.

Atkins farm has tons of things for consumers to fulfill their shopping needs. Something that they do not have, however, are haunted hayrides. Haunted Hayrides are very popular this time of year, and are just one of the places that the locals can get a scare. The Bison Farm in Hadley has an extremely popular haunted hayride. To find similar scares Six Flags New England in Agawam, MA has a "Fright Fest." There is also Spooky World in Foxboro, MA that has been running for over five years.

If you're looking for local culture, you can get your fill from the farms around this area. Everything from food to animals to education is only a walk away. For more information about events going on at the farm, check out The Source in the Collegian every Thursday.

Photography and Design by Kara Stokes

Star Trek comes to an end

Ladies and gentleman, it is the end of a dorky era. This season marks the ending of the fourth installment of "Star Trek," in the form of "Star Trek Voyager" (UPN). The news of the shows ending was publicized at UPN's announcement of its 2000-2001 schedule. The news comes as no surprise to both TV analysts and die hard "Star Trek" fans who site both the show's sagging ratings, once the highest on the network, and "Star Trek's" tradition of only producing new shows for seven years, a tradition all of the four programs have done. Well, they'll tell you that, but the fact that the show is about as exciting as a Maytag commercial may also have had something to do with its cancellation. Writers and Paramount muckity-mucks say that the new season promises many surprises, but are refusing to tell the fate of the plot and characters. Makes sense why watch the show if not for the plot of Seven of Nine, which is the reason why I watch, oh yes. The spirit of the season is to paraphrase Paramount to wrap up the characters. That's fine, but I wasn't aware there were characters. I thought people watched it for the pretty spinning colors and sounds.

Even more important than the ending of a "Star Trek," is the ending of a staple of science fiction. For exactly 34 years (as of September 8th) a "Star Trek" series has been on television. Despite all of the social implications it has taken on – for example, a new reason for people to beat up nerds – it also opened up the door to sci-fi for the United States, some say for the entire world. This isn't to say it was the first attempt at a televised science fiction series, anything but. It is, however, the first sci-fi show that ever made a real impact on the way people watch TV. Even given that admitting to watching the show was social death in high school (well, it really still is) it has spawned three spin-offs to date and nine movies. No one can dispute the market power it holds today.

The examples of the shows for which it paced the way are obvious. Regrettably, there is the crap that labels all fans of this genre as dorks. It's easy to explain – it is crap. Let's not start on "Andromeda," a sci-fi show staring Kevin Sorbo, of "Hercules" fame. The original script may have come from a script from a Gene Roddenberry short story, but that isn't exactly a guarantee for the success of the show. The creator of "Star Trek" is considered one of the best sci-fi "masters" ever, and yet there is this awful show. Oh well. There are countless examples of this – hey, "Battlestar Galactica," a personal favorite is on the list. The whole point is to appreciate, if not a good thing, at least a thing that's not too bad. Oh, and Seven of Nine. Damn, just damn. And all types of television has the odd bad show, isn't that right "Absolutely Fabulous"? So lay off!

Have no fear, however, Dungeons and Dragons adoring masses, your weeks won't go without the wacky antics of Klingons and Vulcans; another series has been planned. Few details are forthcoming, but producers are quoted as saying that this will be the star trek that "brings the series into the future." Whatever that means.

No matter how much Star Trek is critiqued, no matter how many pot shots are taken at it (and funny pot shots they are), it's done with a little love. Life without it would be hard to imagine. The person who tormented the class brain would have to use another reason to flush his head down a toilet. Dragon-shirted throngs of people leaving movie theaters would be quoting Dragon Heart and Seven instead of debating who the better captain was, Picard or Kirk? Saturday night live would be a slightly less-interesting place without such a fertile place to satire. So come on, admit it Umass, you like it a little too.

Scott Newport is a U-Mass Student

Musician turned professional actor describes aesthetics of entertainment

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

To break into the world of film is the dream of every human being. Though dreaming may be easy, actually working in the movie business is not. This is what makes Todd Brendan Poudrier's life so interesting.

37-year old Todd Brendan Poudrier spends his days moving through the film industry. He has been in over fifty films in the last two years, and has quite a bit more planned in the immediate upcoming future. The film industry is certainly not something that Poudrier has been able to tackle easily. Poudrier is from Middleboro, MA, a suburb of Boston. Before he moved into filmmaking, he tried his luck in a number of rock bands, playing the keyboard. He really began a serious acting job while studying at Bridgewater State College, where he took on the role of Danny Zuko in their production of Grease. Poudrier talks about his loving relationship for his work in the film industry.

"Filmmaking is really hard," Poudrier says. "There's a lot of talent, but with the advent of digital technology, it seems like everyone's trying to make a film. Trying to make a decent living in Boston or Rhode Island is difficult and almost impossible."

During the past few years, Poudrier has worked with some pretty influential people in the film world. He joined George Clooney on the set of The Perfect Storm, which was filmed in Gloucester, MA. He rubbed arms with the Farrelly Brothers in their latest release, Me, Myself & Irene. Recently he was even given a compliment by one of his film idols, David Mamet, while filming his new flick, State and Main.

One of his favorite roles he undertook was the part of a man taking care of his mother-in-law in a short film called The Exchange. The film was shot on 16mm film, and was recognized at several independent film award ceremonies.

As an actor, Poudrier says that he is typically cast as "the guy in trouble." He even described one of the roles he currently has been cast in as a man who can get drugs or weapons in three phone calls or less. He's become very accustomed to the type casting, but doesn't really mind it. He says that the way he acts is really stemmed from watching some of his favorite stars of the past and present, Kevin Spacey, Robert DeNero, and Al Pacino all came to mind when he describes the actors he models himself after. "I'm really into films with a more developed character," he explains. "I see myself as more of a character actor who tries to play the lead."

He explains that he truly needs to be on his toes at all times. "I think I always try to change my look for each part I do. I try not to repeat myself. Now I'm more into playing parts that are more substance over dialogue."

Poudrier does not forget the fact that his job is extremely difficult. He commented on the diversity in phone calls he gets for jobs. In the midst of the work he is doing for films, producers of the NBC series "Providence" called him out of the blue. He said that it can be a difficult transition to jump from role to role, but that is one of the things responsible for the talent he possesses today.

"I had to do all those films to get good at what I did. It's tiring," he proclaims. "They call me the busiest film actor in New England. I do what I have to do to pay the bills, but now I'd rather work less and do quality work rather than just go for quantity. I'm turning things down because I'm not interested in things that are not well made anymore."

Todd Brendan Poudrier has a number of projects due up. He is currently working with two residents of North Attleboro, MA on a film that begins production this spring, and he is really looking forward to future endeavors. He says about the world of film, "There's a lot of sacrifice involved, and always someone else who is going to work harder than you. It is just learning about how to be a good actor. It's difficult, but I'm positive and I really have fun with it."

COURTESY TODD BRENDAN POUDRIER

Professional actor Todd Brendan Poudrier discusses his life in film, television and music.

STUDENT TELEPHONE DIRECTORY!

The Student Telephone Directory will be delivered during the week of October 23rd.

It will take approximately one full work week to complete distribution.
Thank you for your patience.

University Directories Chapel Hill, NC

Two for One!

MANDY BARNETT

That's right! Five College Students can purchase 2 tickets to the Mandy Barnett concert for the price of one. You'll be dazzled by Barnett's voice. It's as startling as Patsy Cline's and as caramel-smooth as Diana Krall's. Don't miss one of the hottest new voices on the new country music scene!

Saturday, October 21 at 8pm
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall

Get Two
Five College Student Tickets
for only
$5, $7 or $10.

Call 545-2511 Today!

FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY

LIVE, STUDY AND WORK ABROAD WHILE EARNING COLLEGE CREDIT

• Year and semester-long programs in JAPAN, CHINA, ISRAEL, INDIA, ENGLAND OR COSTA RICA.
• Year-long program in Comparative Religion & Culture in TAIWAN, THAILAND, INDIA and ISRAEL

Experiential learning through cultural immersion, academic seminars, and independent field study makes Friends World the educational experience of a lifetime

(631) 287-8474
e-mail: fw@southampton.liunet.edu
www.southampton.edu/fw

FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY
239 Montauk Highway • Southampton, NY 11968

GLOBAL EDUCATION FOR SOCIAL CHANGE

it's not web radio,
it's not streaming audio,
it's not an MP3,
it's ClickRadio.

don't listen. choose.

www.clickradio.com

CLICKRADIO

FREE

1 Log on www.campusi.com
2 Enter existing email address.
3 Click.

▶ Cash In
Earn $150+ in minutes @

CAMPUSI.COM
Check school email Anywhere!

Perry forms techno oddity by mixing in Jamaican-pop

Stuck Mojo continues to innovate, M.O.P. rips a hip-hop rage and several artists bow down to the Priest

LEE SCRATCH PERRY
Techno Party
Beatville Records

There's a techno party going down, and everyone's invited. However, if Lee Scratch Perry is going to be there, I'd strongly advise you to get your groove on somewhere else. After taking a long listen to Techno Party, I can't even find the words to describe what it is. It's not that I'm speechless. It's just that I'm pretty sure there are no words to describe its utter weirdness.

The album combines the rave-induced beats of techno with (are you ready for this?) Jamaican-pop music. I think that Perry has forgotten the most important rule of life: just because you like two things doesn't mean that you'll like what happens when they're mixed together. I like swimming, and I like watching television. I'll be damned if I'm going to bring my TV into the pool, though.

Perry doesn't only bring the TV into the pool, he dresses it up in a bathing suit and teaches it the butterfly-stroke. He does everything in his power to try to sell the fact that he has mashed together sounds that he really shouldn't have united. It's kind of interesting though. If you listen closely, you can separate the techno from the Jamaican-pop parts of each song. Unfortunately the two are linked together by Perry screaming in a language that is not English. (Though there was a song called "Armageddon War" where I was able to catch him shout, "they wear pants but no panties" in the middle of it) Well, it's not English for the first half of the album, but for some reason, and I wish to God he didn't, he decides to include some of the more vulgar aspects of American tongue on the latter tracks. The lyrics, I cannot repeat in a newspaper, but we'll just say that he suggests eating and drinking bodily waste that my mom told me is not chock full of nutrition.

To say that this album is devoid of any sort of normality would probably be dead on. There is, although, a sweet rendition of "This Old Man" on there. I don't know about you, but I'm a bit apprehensive about dropping thirteen bucks on a CD that declares, "This old man, he played one, he played knick-knack on my bum." (Ryan Benharris)

STUCK MOJO
Declaration of a Headhunter
Century Media

Stuck Mojo are one of the most go-against-the-grain bands in music today. They're anchoconservative in a liberal-by-nature genre. They did rapmetal before it was popular, and once it did catch on they decided to work in traditional metal elements (spoken word, singing vocals, screaming choruses) and de-emphasize turntables and such for rock-hard riffs and deathlike double-bass drumlines instead of the flava-of-the-month bands around them. They pose with automatic weapons in their album artwork. Their outright aggression and lack of compassion for anything considered as weak is almost shocking in the nu-metal world of sensitivity and victimhood we live in – these are the guys who beat up Jonathan Davis as a kid.

Oh, yeah, and did I mention that they f'n rock?

Declaration of a Headhunter is one of the most vicious, brutal, and yet catchy and listenable albums of the year. Songs like "Raise the Deadman" and "Hatebreed" are full of hard-core riffs, high-melodic choruses, and catchy, danceable rhythms with singer Bonz's raps bouncing over it all. This is the current pinnacle of the rapmetal subgenre right here – it simply does not get any better than this. This is the music you crank in your car while driving well over the speed limit and pounding on your leather-covered steering wheel. This music was made for radio (even though you've never, ever heard it over the airwaves, which is a crime).

When I say that this music has limitless commercial possibilities, I don't mean it in a negative way. Rather then sell-ing out, the Mojo have perfected their sound to the point where it can appeal to almost any rock, metal, or rap fans who'd care to give it a listen.

The politics, agree with them or not, simply fall to the wayside as your listen to the perfect songs and head-bobbing rhythms on Declaration of a Headhunter. This is the peak of the rapmetal genre and a new high point for all other imitators to follow. Crank "Raise the Deadman" and kick the ass of a random stranger – Stuck Mojo wouldn't have it any other way. (Rob Schulze)

M.O.P.
Warriorz
Loud Records

Here's a warning for the faint of heart: Do not listen to M.O.P.'s Warriorz. The Mash Out Posse from Brownsville come with harder than any rap group has in a minute. Lil' Fame and Billy Danz are pure John Blaze for all 19 tracks. And they blaze with the flare of an inferno.

Warriorz will please real hip-hop fans because half of the songs are either produced or mixed by the legendary DJ Premier. He wheets the appetite in "Premier Intro" with his best 40 seconds of beats since Jay-Z's Hard Knock Life (Volume 2 intro. To further feed the quality-starved masses, Premo presides over M.O.P.'s soul-driven collabo with Product G&B in "Everyday." G&B bring the same flava that made their "Maria, Maria" a hit without going pop. M.O.P. hold nothing back in "Ante Up", the album's first single, which features Hot 97's Funkmaster Flex. Premo and M.O.P. continue to show that they are as good a producer-artist combo as Premier and Guru are for Gangstarr.

But this is an M.O.P. joint with or without DJ Premier. Lil' Fame take the reigns as producer for a large chunk of the album under the pseudonym Fizzy Womack. Tracks like the jazzy "Nig-gotiate" and the sublime but haunting beat of "Calm Down" (in which Fame proclaims, "I make noise/ You tucking with the original BackStreet Boys") display signs of hella production skills. But it is in the standout "Cold As Ice", already a mix tape classic, that M.O.P. deserves mad props for being their own men.

In this near perfect marriage of grime and beats, other producers deliver, too. The Ruff Ryder fam gets some long missing street cred with the Mahogany-produced title track. Nottz does his thang in cellar-dwelling "Home Sweet Home" with Flipmode's Lord Have Mercy. But the Brownsville duo get to reminisce about when every pair sneakers had to have a hat to match" in the Laze E Laze-laced "Old Timerz."

For an album this long (almost 70 minutes) and this deep it is nothing less than astounding. At times, however, M.O.P. may get slightly annoying with the constant yelling. It is their lyrics and production that puts this among the best rap albums of the year. Warriorz is a litmus test for those who claim to love hip-hop: if you're not feeling this one maybe it's time for you to beat N Sync full time. (Jenn Holston)

VARIOUS ARTISTS
A Tribute to Judas Priest: Delivering the Goods, Vol. II
Century Media

This CD really didn't need to be made.

Judas Priest was huge 20 years ago, but those days are gone. True, there are fond memories that could be capitalized on to make a tribute album and sell a few copies to diehard fans, but that's hardly a reason to devote all the time to compiling this collection, let alone for the bands to take the time to record them except for the cheap money.

This album fails in another regard as well: aren't cover albums supposed to contain all the old favorites that fans love? Where the hell did songs like "Desert Plains" and "Bloodstone" come from? I realize that this is a Part II CD, but still..., are songs like that really necessary?

And where did these bands come from? I like to consider myself somewhat versed in metal, but Angra? Virgin Steele? Iron Savior? These are the glory-metal bands unheard of except for Brazil and maybe the heart of Denmark somewhere, where they are worshipped as gods despite sucking real, real bad. Oh, yeah, and they all sound the same.

High points? Sure, there are some – after all, Priest was a great band in its day, and some of these bands covering the songs are pretty good, and one plus one does equal two last time I checked. U.D.O.'s "Metal God" is excellent, and Blind Guardian's "Beyond the Realm of Death" is kind of fun in that it's like the original but with cheesemetal vocals, like it should have been originally.

Truth be told, these covers are boring. If you really want to hear an interesting Judas Priest cover, check out Slayer's "Dissident Aggrssor" from the South of Heaven album, or Six Feet Under's version of "Grinder." These are good covers – done in a different way, not exactly alike the original, these songs seem new.

For those few of you who care about Priest, save your money. For the rest of you, consider yourself warned: this CD sucks. (Rob Schulze)

www.dailycollegian.com

Shear Bliss
Holistic Salon
413-253-2322
• Excellent Cuts & Colors
• Facials • Aveda/Alterna
• Body Sugaring & more
Bring in soupon
Get $5 off Haircolor or Perm

Primordial Sound Meditation
A program developed by
Deepak Chopra, MD
Learn the Personal Mantra which makes Meditation Easy and Effective. Discover the Silence which develops Inner Peace and Activates the Power to Create the Life you Desire.
Classes now forming in Northampton
For information call
1-888-270-2031

Learn to Meditate!
Meditation Workshops
UMASS Campus Center, Room 811
Saturday October 21, 3-5 pm
Sunday October 22, 3-5 pm
FREE
Workshops include lecture on meditation techniques, meditation practice, music for meditation, and instructional video
FREE, no charge, nothing to buy - just a great chance to learn how to meditate

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
studentuniverse.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

Sell your little sister on the black market. OR Get paid for the stuff you know.
InfoRocket.com
Answer questions. Earn cash.
★ ENTER TO WIN A TRIP TO CANCUN FOR SPRING BREAK. ★
REGISTER TO ENTER AT www.inforocket.com/amherst
SWEEPSTAKES ENDS JANUARY 31, 2001. SUBJECT TO COMPLETE OFFICIAL RULES

THE SOURCE

This Week's Highlights:

This weekend the music department brings the 2nd Annual Choral Spectrum to UMass, coordinated by Dr. E. Wayne Abercrombie. The Spectrum unites a wide variety of sound from the university community and outside the community, including the University Chamber Choir, Chorale, Madrigal Singers, Vocal Jazz & Women's Choir, the Hampshire Choral Society Young People's Chorus & Newton North High School Family Singers.

Also, the Fine Arts Center is offering a fantastic deal this weekend to five college students: two-for-one ticket prices for Mandy Barnett, a singer that has been compared to Patsy Cline, fusing country and big band sounds, at the Concert Hall Saturday night at 8 p.m.

Tickets for both events are available at the Fine Arts Center box office: 545-2511.

ART

Black (Red), Sound Installation: thru Oct. 28. Work by German artist Rolf Julius.
University Gallery

Abstract Notions: thru Oct. 28
Work from University Gallery's Permanent Collection
University Gallery

Earthbound: thru Nov. 6
Hampden Gallery

People I've Never Seen: thru Nov. 9
Central Gallery

Memory: Personal and Social Testimonies
Oct. 25 thru Nov. 21
Opening reception: Oct. 25, 5 p.m.
Augusta Savage Gallery

MUSIC

The Sound and Ecstasy & The Nectar of Enlightenment
Buddhist Ritual Song and Dance from Korea
Oct. 20, 8 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium

2nd Annual Choral Spectrum
Oct. 20, 7:30 p.m.
Concert Hall

Mandy Barnett
Oct. 21, 8 p.m.
Concert Hall

University Orchestra
Oct. 24, 8 p.m.
Concert Hall

THEATRE/DANCE

The Misanthrope
Oct. 19-21, 8 p.m., Oct. 21, 2 p.m.
Curtain Theater

Corpus Christi
Oct. 21, 8 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium

The Food Chain
Oct. 19-21, 25-28, 8 p.m.
Theater 14, Smith College

Beyond Therapy
Oct. 21-22, 26-28, 8 p.m.
Mainstage, Dickinson Hall, Hampshire College

FILM

AMC Mountain Farms 4
Call for listings: (413) 584-9153
Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters
Call for listings: (413) 586-0935
Northampton

Academy of Music
Call for listings: (413) 584-8335
Northampton

Tower Theaters
Call for listings (413) 533-3456
South Hadley

OTHER

Thursday Night Dance Party
Oct. 19, 9 p.m.
Skybox

Comedian Tiny Glover
Oct. 20, 8 p.m.
Bhewall

Mission Improvable
Oct. 21, 8 p.m.
Campus Center Rm. 163

Don Tison's Trumpet Talks "The Orchestral Player"
Oct. 22, 3 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall
Master Class
Oct. 23, 11:15 a.m.
Rm. 36, FAC
"The Audition"
Oct. 24, 1:25 p.m.
Rm. 44, FAC

Project 2050: Open Studio/Open Dialogues
Teen Resource Project
Oct. 25, 7:30 p.m.
136 Suffolk St., Holyoke

ATTENTION:

What in the world are you waiting for!?

You or your club have an event you want people to know about. Postering just doesn't cut it. Get free advertisement in the Collegian—where readership has reached 20,000—here in the Source. Send detailed information down to the Collegian office in the basement of the Campus Center. Or email us at source.submissions@hotmail.com.

COURTESY ASIAN DANCE AND MUSIC PROGRAM

The 5 College Dance Alumni Festival will take Thursday October 26 and Friday October 27 at Mount Holyoke College.

CONVENIENTLY LOCATED NEXT TO DUNKIN DONUTS

Four Seasons WINE & LIQUOR

BECKS Case 24 btls $19.99+ dep	ICEHOUSE 30 pack cans $12.99+ dep	RED DOG 30 pack cans $11.49+ dep	"EXLUSIVE" RETAILER FOR 99.3 FM WLZX ROCKTOBERFEST LAGER
SIERRA NEVADA 12 pack btls $11.99+ dep	WACHUSETT 12 pack btls $10.99+ dep	OTTER CREEK 12 pack btls $9.99 + dep
CORONA 12 pack btls $9.99 + dep	D.N.A. 6 pack btls $4.99 + dep	MURPHY'S STOUT 4 pack btls $4.99 + dep	TRY ONE TODAY! Sale ends 10/26/00

333 Russell St. (RTE.9) Hadley, MA 584-8174 Hours: Mon - Sat 9am -11pm.
American Express, ATM, Debit, Discover, Master Card, and Visa accepted.
Not Responsible for typographical errors. ID's checked by Legal Age Software

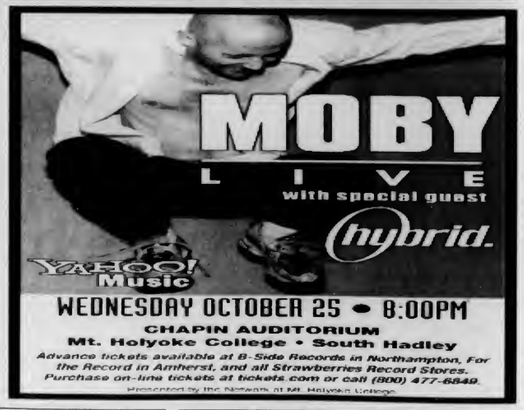
Council Travel
America's Leader in Student Travel
SALE SALE SALE
Sale Dates: 10/24-10/28

LONDON	$195
PARIS	$245
MADRID	$305
DUBLIN	$255
AMSTERDAM	$295

Other destinations available!

Shop extended hours-Tues-Fri: 9-7, Sat: 11-3
44 Main Street
413-256-1261
1 800 2COUNCIL
counciltravel.com

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
NEW YORK STYLE ATMOSPHERE IN DOWNTOWN AMHERST
WEEKLY ENTERTAINMENT SCHEDULE
THURSDAY - The Monkey Bar presents ELEMENTS featuring DJ Frez spinning the best in progressive house, trance, & Top 40 dance
FRIDAY & SATURDAY - The best in Top 40, hip-hop, r+b, & house spun by SVE productions DJs: Frez, Creme, Uneek, & DJ
Now Featuring
Bud + Bud Light Pitchers $6.00
Domestic Beer Bottles $2.25
Rad Devil + Vodka $6.00
This week's drink specials are Bacardi Limon + Heineken
Come enjoy our outdoor patio + bar
LOCATED @ 63 N. PLEASANT ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST 259-1000



WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 25 • 8:00PM
CHAPIN AUDITORIUM
Mt. Holyoke College • South Hadley
Advance tickets available at B-Side Records in Northampton, For the Record in Amherst, and all Strawberries Record Stores.
Purchase on-line tickets at tickets.com or call (800) 477-6849.
presented by the Students of Mt. Holyoke College

UMASS ATHLETICS MEN'S BASKETBALL & ICE HOCKEY STUDENT TICKET PICK-UP SCHEDULE
9:00 AM – 4:30 PM - CURRY HICKS CAGE
10:00 AM – 2:00 PM – CAMPUS CENTER (Near info desk)

ALL STUDENT SEATS FOR ICE HOCKEY AND MEN'S BASKETBALL FOR T 2000-2001 SEASONS ARE GENERAL ADMISSION!!!!

PICK-UP DATE	SPORT	DATE OF GAME/OPPONENT
Tuesday, October 10, 2000	Hockey	Oct. 21, 2000 vs. Colgate
Monday, October 16, 2000	Hockey	Oct. 27, 2000 vs. Merrimack
	Men's Basketball	Nov. 3, 2000 vs. California All-Stars
Monday, October 23, 2000	Hockey	Nov. 4, 2000 vs. New Hampshire
	Men's Basketball	Nov. 10, 2000 vs. Stankmaster.Com
Monday, October 30, 2000	Hockey	Nov. 10, 2000 vs. Connecticut
	Men's Basketball	Nov. 18, 2000 vs. Iona
Monday, November 13, 2000	Hockey	Nov. 25, 2000 vs. St. Cloud State
Monday, November 20, 2000	Hockey	Dec. 1, 2000 vs. Boston University
	Men's Basketball	Dec. 7, 2000 vs. Providence
Monday, November 27, 2000	Men's Basketball	Dec. 17, 2000 vs. Boston College
Monday, December 11, 2000	Hockey	Dec. 30, 2000 vs. Brown
	Men's Basketball	Jan. 6, 2001 vs. George Washington
	Hockey	Jan. 7, 2001 vs. Providence
	Hockey	Jan. 13, 2001 vs. Northeastern
	Men's Basketball	Jan. 18, 2001 vs. Dayton
	Hockey	Jan. 19, 2001 vs. Merrimack
	Hockey	Jan. 25, 2001 vs. UMass Lowell
	Hockey	Jan. 27, 2001 vs. Northeastern
Monday, January 29, 2001	Men's Basketball	Feb. 3, 2001 vs. Fordham
	Hockey	Feb. 9, 2001 vs. Maine
	Hockey	Feb. 10, 2001 vs. Maine
Monday, February 5, 2001	Men's Basketball	Feb. 14, 2001 vs. Xavier
	Men's Basketball	Feb. 17, 2001 vs. Temple
	Men's Basketball	Feb. 20, 2001 vs. Rhode Island
Monday, February 12, 2001	Hockey	Feb. 24, 2001 vs. Boston College
Tuesday, February 20, 2001	Men's Basketball	March 3, 2001 vs. St. Bonaventure
	Hockey	March 3, 2001 vs. New Hampshire

PICK-UP & GAME DATES SUBJECT TO CHANGE. VALID UMASS STUDENT ID CARD NEEDED TO PICK-UP TICKETS. AUXILIARY FEE SHOULD HAVE ALREADY BEEN PAID.

Styles by Deborah proudly announces
New Spa Services featuring All Natural Skin Care Products
- Luxury Facials
- Spa Pedicures
- Body Waxing
- Manicures

65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

ARTIST PROFILE

Abernethy wins comedy bake-off, named funniest person at UMass

By Bryan McAllister
Collegian Staff

Name: Jake Abernethy
Age: 19
Year: Senior
Major: Math

When senior Jake Abernethy saw a sign for a Comedy Bake-off at UMass two weeks ago, he didn't think much of it at first. But Abernethy, a professional juggler of five years, decided he'd give it a shot just for fun. The result? Being named "Funniest Man on Campus," a free spring break trip, and a chance to tour with Janeane Garofalo. Abernethy is already a veteran of hundreds of juggling performances as a regular street performer at Faneuil Hall and Harvard Square. The Collegian talked with him about the competition, his juggling, and doing performances. You can check out a clip of his Comedy Bake-off skit at www.comedy.icast.com.

COLLEGIAN: What was the Funniest Man competition like?

Jake Abernethy: I didn't really know much about it at first. But I saw the sign and was like, "I guess I'll do it and show up," and saw some friends who were doing it too, so I signed up, then forgot about it. They called and said, "If you still want to do the show, come meet at 7:30." So I thought I could do it – show up for an hour and then leave. But when I got there it was actually a pretty big deal. Colin Quinn was co-hosting it, and actually did a half hour comedy bit. And also a guy named Ralph Harris, from "Seinfeld," was doing it. So I showed up and it was a pretty big event; there were like 700 people there.

COLLEGIAN: Did you do your juggling act?

Jake: Yeah. I'm a professional juggler, so I do juggling shows a lot. I went out and had all this equipment with me. Which was funny because five minutes is really nothing for me, cause I could do a show for an hour. So I went out with all my juggling equipment, including an unsupported ladder. But because it was a comedy competition the juggling wasn't the main focus – if it was I would have done my grand finale with everything. But I just tried to be funny and do a character.

COLLEGIAN: What kind of funny stuff did you do?

Jake: Well, actually, I was surprised because before I went out there I was pretty nervous about the thing, which was uncommon because I do this sort of thing all the time. Probably because there were so many people – 600 or 700 people out there. So I was really nervous, and I remembered that [in a previous show] I had tried coming out on stage doing a nervous character, so I said "I'll go out and be kinda nervous at first." Ralph Harris was the MC, and he announced me and said the wrong name. He said, "Here is Jason Abernethy." So I thought that was a perfect opportunity for my nervous character. So I came out, very nervous, and said "Um...um...um...My name's actually Jacob." And people immediately thought that was funny, it was working really well. So I continued it. I looked really sheepishly into the microphone and said, "Um...I'm gonna...I'm gonna try and do...do a juggling show." And they laughed again. So I said [stuttering], "What's...what's so funny?" And it kept working...after that was smooth sailing, because immediately the audience liked me. And I guess like the people before hadn't been very solid. So I did a lot of bits from my shows; I used a lot of my immature stuff. I was still the nervous character, and I said, "Next I'm going to perform my favorite trick. It's called 'One on top, two on the bottom.' Which is also my favorite position." And the crowd went crazy. Like they couldn't believe this kid would say that. I did a lot of stuff like that. Actually, a lot of my other jokes were kinda ripped off from another performer, a juggler named Dan Foley.

COLLEGIAN: The nervous character sounds very Andy Kaufman-esque, too.

Jake: Yeah, exactly. I sorta realized that was the beginning of it. Because I had recently seen Man on the Moon and I was very interested in that. I liked that idea a lot. That was kinda the motivation behind it. So I did a lot of jokes that were kinda just 'jokes.' Like I did 'Italian juggling where I throw it behind my back and then grabbed my ass. And 'Irish juggling' where you throw it up and catch it, and then I turned it over and started drinking from it.

COLLEGIAN: And was the competition audience-judged?

Jake: Yeah, it was audience judged. We were in a line, and I could tell that they liked me because they were really loud. Actually, there were other people in the line that they were loud for too. So they brought it down to five people, then two, and it was me and some other kid who did Chris Farley impressions.

COLLEGIAN: Did you pretty much know you were going to win?

Jake: I didn't really pay attention to the competition, I was just worried whether they'd like me. I don't like to beat people. I just like doing shows. But naturally it was a competition, and my friends were up there. So I actually didn't watch any of their acts because I didn't want to be like, "Oh, I'm better than that."

COLLEGIAN: It's like Star Search.

Jake: Exactly, yeah. But once I was done I thought I had done a pretty good job. And people were kinda saying, "Oh, you were the best so far."

COLLEGIAN: People see you on campus now, and they know you won the award for Funniest Man on Campus – do they expect you say something funny, to be funny all the time?

Jake: I'm not very funny, that's the whole thing. People have these high expectations, they hear I'm the funniest man on campus. But ixcially I'm not very funny. I don't like tell jokes or anything. I mostly write material and do shows, but I don't really make stuff up on the spot.

COLLEGIAN: Yeah, you read about performers like David Letterman and how they are off camera. And not that he's not funny off camera, but he'll go on camera and he'll just be "on." So is it more of a performance thing for you?

Jake: Yeah, it's totally a performance thing. A lot of people at the comedy competition were doing it for their first time, while I had done this type of thing hundreds of times. So it was very rehearsed. You learn how to react to the audience. I know the lines to throw in and I know where the audience doesn't respond. So like when you're doing your act and only one person claps, you say, "Thanks, thanks both of you." Figuring out the audience is the most important. But I don't know what's funny. Andy Kaufman said he didn't know what was funny. So maybe there's some hope for me yet.

COLLEGIAN: How did you get into juggling?

Jake: Well I wasn't doing my work for school. That was really it. I wasn't doing really anything else, I was doing poorly in school. So I ended up dropping out of school. I don't really know what got me interested in juggling, but I read some books, and I put a lot of time into it. I spent hours a day when I was a kid.

COLLEGIAN: You mostly do street shows, right? Where do you perform?

Jake: Boston, mostly. I've been in the Faneuil Hall Street Performers Program for the last three years. And I go to Harvard Square, too. I've had a lot of other cool gigs too, like my biggest one thing was probably performing at the Davis Cup. It's basically my weekend summer job.

COLLEGIAN: Do you have any good stories from your shows?

Jake: I've had so many bad shows. I have a whole collection of them. I've had shows where the whole audience will leave. I like suddenly a whole section will just walk out. And I've had shows where the audience just doesn't like me. I've had near accidents before, where I had little children on my shoulders – nothing serious or anything.

COLLEGIAN: What do you want to do for your career?

Jake: I don't know. I'm a pretty involved math student as well, and I'm doing really well. So that's a real interest as well. The juggling is really the perfect college job, because you always have that weekend to do it.

COLLEGIAN: If you could juggle math, that would be pretty cool. What music is currently in your cd player (tape, mp3 player, or 8 track player?

Jake: I'm gonna say the Barenaked Ladies. I'm into all

The official "funniest man on campus" poses boldly for the camera.

www.dailycollegian.com

Northeastern UNIVERSITY
Boston, Massachusetts
GRADUATE PROGRAMS

Prepare to Succeed.

Located in the heart of Boston, Massachusetts, Northeastern University has long been known for combining academic rigor with experiential learning. Our programs offer the opportunity for experience in your field through practicums, internships, and cooperative education. Whether your goal is professional advancement, scholarly activity or societal contribution, let Northeastern University prepare you to experience a lifetime of achievement.

Visit us at your upcoming college Graduate Fair and meet representatives from Arts & Sciences, Engineering or Bouve College of Health Sciences.

Contact us at:

- Arts & Sciences: (617) 373-3982 www.casdn.neu.edu/graduate artscigradinfo@casdn.neu.edu
- Engineering: (617) 373-2711 www.coe.neu.edu/grad_school grad-eng@coe.neu.edu
- Health Sciences: (617) 373-2708 www.neu.edu/bouve w.purnell@nunet.neu.edu
- All other Graduate programs: www.neu.edu/gradadmission

GRADUATE FAIR: OCTOBER 25

PRIUS HYBRID GAS/ELECTRIC 52 MPG CITY
www.toyota.com/prius
MEET THE VEHICLE FOR THE NEW MILLENNIUM
Over 100 PREOWNED CERTIFIED SELECT USED CARS AS LOW AS $4,995

We are a MASS STATE INSPECTION STATION #4799

OIL AND FILTER CHANGE
Service includes:
- Up to 5 quarts of premium oil
- GENUINE TOYOTA oil filter
- Check all fluid levels

PLUS
Includes 21-Point Check
$23.95
For Toyotas only.
Tax and environmental fee extra.
Exp 11/1/00

GENUINE TOYOTA MUFFLERS -NON-STAINLESS-$169.95*
Plus tax
Excludes hangers and hardware
TOYOTA LIFETIME GUARANTEE
Mufflers • Exhaust Pipes • Shocks • Struts
*Price includes installation with Lifetime Guarantee. Offer good at participating dealers only. Special offer good through 11/1/00 for Camry, Corolla, Tercel, Truck and 4Runner.

NORTHAMPTON TOYOTA
280 King St., (Rte. 5), Northampton, MA 800-866-5866 • 413-586-8922
Call us on Great Rental Car Prices

IT'S YOUR BODY

If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.

DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

Black Sabbath Guitarist Iommi returns with surprising album

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Correspondent

TONY IOMMI
Iommi
Devine Records

Pushing the envelope with a solo album, legendary Black Sabbath guitarist Tony Iommi debuted his self-titled Iommi disk Tuesday on the Priority Records label.

Featuring several well-known frontmen in Sabbath-inspired bands of the nineties (the Foo Fighters Dave Grohl, Pantera's Phil Anselmo, The Smashing Pumpkins' Billy Corgan, and Type O Negative's Peter Steele all take turns behind the mike, for example) Iommi has put together an interesting album filled with everything that any Black Sabbath fan would expect.

However, this album is not for the light of heart, and fans of oh-so-'90s Foo Fighters, should know this. This isn't an album filled with songs like "Big Me" – the songs are heavy, lengthy, and filled with Iommi's sizzling riffs. There isn't a pop song within miles of this disc.

Just as in Santana did in Supernatural, Iommi leaves all of the vocals on Iommi to others. In fact, he did not even contribute to the writing of song lyrics for the album – it's not his specialty.

As it would be expected, fellow rock superstar/Black Sabbath icon Ozzy Osbourne makes an appearance on the album with "Who's Fooling Who." It's a great throwback to early Sabbath tunes, where the emotion and mysteriousness that their music could inspire meant just as much as the music itself.

Two other big highlights on the album are "Goodbye Lament," with Grohl, and "Time is Mine," with Anselmo. "Goodbye Lament," which has made its way onto the rock radio airwaves as the first single from the album, stands out because of the chemistry between Grohl and Iommi. Grohl's raspy voice perfectly conveys the sense of frustration and loss that builds in the tune. Anselmo, meanwhile, takes no prisoners in a song that, quite simply, sizzles. New listeners get a full introduction to just what Mr. Iommi can do with his guitar on these two songs.

As there is on nearly any album, there are a few weaknesses with the disc. While Iommi himself sizzles from beginning to end, several of his singers don't make the grade. System of a Down's Serj Tankian (and his high, nasal voice) sounds annoying and out of place on the slow, pounding "Patterns." It's not that he can't do Sabbath tunes; on the Nativity in Black 2 CD that was released this summer System of a Down did an outstanding cover of Sabbath's "Slowblind." He misses the grade on this one, however.

Another problematic song on this album is "Into the Night," with Billy Idol. What is he doing on this album, anyway? This is probably Iommi's one glaring mistake in making the album. Even Iommi's riffs can't save a song with the corny lyrics Idol wrote. How does "...I'm going to leave this world, I'm going to wake the dead..." sound? It's pretty pathetic from my vantage point.

Overall, though, Iommi's debut album is a smashing success. With the success of last year's Black Sabbath Reunion album and tour and now this, it looks like Tony Iommi is approaching his golden years with life and vigor.

COURTESY IOMMI.COM

Tony Iommi (pictured 3rd from left) stands with his legendary band Black Sabbath.

COURTESY JOSHUA KESSLER

Who Sucked out the Feeling?
Superdrag will play the Skybox Friday night with special guests American Hi-fi. The show is at 8:30p.m. Doors are at 8:00p.m.

Ani
Ani WITH SARA LEE
DiFRANCO
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Saturday, October 28th - 8:00pm
Advance tickets available at the Mullins Center Box Office, online at ticketmaster.com, by phone at (413) 733-2500 or at all Ticketmaster Outlets (Planet at the Ingleside Mall in Holyoke and the Fairfield Mall in Springfield).
For more information call the Mullins Center Box Office at (413) 545-0505.
Presented by MassConcerts www.massconcerts.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Spacious living room. High ceilings, AC, Puffton Village 549-6434 ASAP

AUTO FOR SALE

HONDA ACCORD LX, 1990, AT/PW/PL/AC, 140k miles, excellent condition. Contact evenings, 413-736-6161

1981 Mazda 626 Sports coupe. Loaded $750 obo 253-1708

Quality Autos For Sale 85 Doge Caravan, 5speed, loaded $450. 90 Ford Ranger XLT, burgandy $1000 Call 413-286-0857

91 Ford Taurus black, 90k mi $2200 549-5230

90 For Bronco II 4x4. Well maintained. $2700 obo 413-532-6535

89 VW Golf 112k, 4dr, maroon, auto, sunroof, cd, perfect condition. $2900 253-2443

1988 Ford Festiva 155K miles. Excellent condition! $700/obo 413-665-7725

88 Saab 900 5spd. blue. $1900 obo Mike 413-772-2686

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

88 Dodge Caravan for parts $500 obo 413-549-6175

COMPUTERS

HP Internal CD-RW Burner 8x4x32 NEW $250 Call Caroline 253-2362

LAPTOPS for only $399, warranty included. Email:laptop4me@hotmail.com

FOR SALE: used desktop computer - P3 500MHZ, 128MB, 20BG, DVD, CDRW, NIC, ATI, 3D Card Plus more. Call Surya @ 546-2613

EMPLOYMENT

FREELANCE SPORTS WRITERS! All sports, health and fitness issues, and events for the physically challenged. Target audience ages 14-24. To be published on the internet. Digital photos preferred, not required. $15 for articles of 200-300 words if accepted. Reference # umass required on all submissions to: articles@islandoaks.com

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

PAID MEDIA INTERNSHiP AVAILABLE Are you looking for a way to combine an education in journalism or communication with social activism? Do you have an interest in grassroots organizing and want to learn how to use the media as a tool for political activism? If you have taken basic journalism or communication coursework, the Peace Development Fund has a paid internship position for you. Position begins immediately and runs until May/June 2001. Flexible schedule. For more information contact Rose Sackey-Milligan at 413-256-8306, ext. 227, or rose@peacefund.org. Send resume and cover letter to Media Internship at PDF, P.O. Box 1280, Amherst, MA 01004, or to rose@peacefund.org

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

EMPLOYMENT

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field--work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary--training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today; 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

EMPLOYMENT

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. 3hrs per wk to 20hrs per wk flexible work environment. Great gymnastics center with loose foam + resi pit system. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, Mass. 01301 413-773-3646

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Snowboard! Morrow 158cm, good condition, bindings not included, $100 Call Adam (413) 786-4291

Three Couches, 4 loveseats, 4 sleep sofas. $65-$150 free delivery 586-2221

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Djata Bumpus. 256-0364 (Incorrect number ran in previous ads.)

Your Ad Could Be Right Here!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

5 Girls need housemate for big house on Main St. Private room $230/mo + utilities. 2 blocks from Amherst Center. No sex preference call Sam @ 253-9627

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspringbreak.com

TRAVEL

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

Look No Further...

You Found Your Place to Advertise!!

The Daily Collegian Classifieds

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Ch
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WCCH & HSCN International
14 UMass Academic TV
15 WB/New Haven
17 Sundance
18 The Learning Channel
19 UVC-TV19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
21 Cornel to Cornel
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN Headline News
24 CNN
25 CNN fn
26 CNN SI
27 TBS
28 BET
29 College TV Network
30 Univision
31 Comedy Central
32 Cartoon Network
33 TV Land
34 C-Span
35 ZDTV (Tentative)
36 Bloomberg Financial Network
37 History Channel
38 HSCN Programming

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 19, 2000

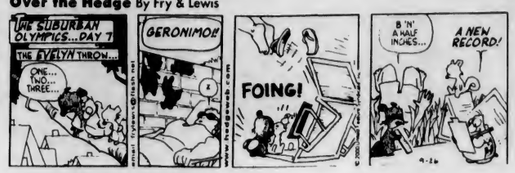
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	13 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Scenic Rail Journeys		Mystery! "The Wyvern Mystery"		Being Served	Keeping Up	Wall for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	48 Hours (In Stereo)		City of Angels (N) (In Stereo)		City of Angels (N)	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours (In Stereo)		City of Angels (N) (In Stereo)		City of Angels (N)	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends		Gilmore Girls "Kill Me Now"		Charmed "Once Upon a Time"		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Sand and Water" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8 7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT		30 News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Sand and Water" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	61 Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Major League Baseball Playoffs: NLCS Game 7 -- Mets or Giants vs. Cardinals						News	Frasier
WWLP	9	22 News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Sand and Water" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Ons. on Call	Mystery! "The Wyvern Mystery"		Grafters (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	20 News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Nowhere to Run" (1993, Adventure) Jean-Claude Van Damme.						"Jackie Chan's First Strike" (1996)
A&E	42	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Mother Love"		Biography: Frances		Murder One "Chapter Six"		Investigative Reports		Law & Order
CNN	43	23 Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)			Crossfire		World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand	Sports Moneyline
COM	53	78 Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"Ploky's Bi The Next Day" (1963, Comedy) Dan Monahan,				Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	48	Wild Discovery: Koala		Wild Discovery: Reds!		On the Inside: U.S. Customs		Hospital (N)		Science Mysteries		Justice Files	Cops Gone Bad
ESPN	49	Sportscenter		2-Minute Drill	NFL 2Night (N)			NFL Football: Detroit Lions at Tampa Bay Buccaneers. (Live)					Sportscenter
LIFE	50	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"If Someone Had Known" (1995, Drama) Kellie Martin				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	51	Direct Effect	Makeover	TRL (In Stereo)		TRL Uncensored (In Stereo)				Real World	Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Truth (N) Choose
NICK	52	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	55	Sliders "Murder Most Foul"		Babylon 5 "Legacies"		Teles-Crypt	Crypt Teles	Crypt Teles	Crypt Teles	Crypt Teles	Crypt Teles	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	56	28 48 Hours "Revenge"		48 Hours "Perfect Match"		Peremedics (N)		Showgirl Stories				Peremedics
TNT	57	ER "Something New" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Cry Surprise"		"Corrina, Corrina" (1994, Comedy-Drama) Whoopi Goldberg, Ray Liotta.						"Corrina, Corrina" (1994) Whoopi Goldberg
USA	58	Welker, Texas Ranger "Patriot"		JAG "People v. Mac" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Touchdown"						Strip Poker	Martin
HBO	59	"Space Truckers" (1997) Dennis Hopper. PG-13				Inside the NFL (N)		"One Good Cop" (1991) Michael Keaton. R		Play It Forward	G-String Divas	Inside the NFL
MAX	60	"Above the Law" (1988) Steven Seagal. R		"Heartbreak Ridge" (1986, Drama) Clint Eastwood. (In Stereo)								"Serpent's Lair" (1995, Horror) Jeff Fahey. R	"Commando"
SHOW	61	"Star Trek: Insurrection" (1998) Patrick Stewart. PG				"Sin of Echoes" (1999, Horror) Kevin Bacon.				Rude Awaken.		"Freddy's Dead: The Final Nightmare" (1991)

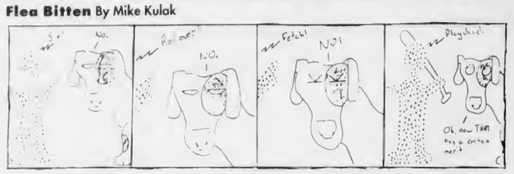
Dilbert By Scott Adams

THIS NEEDS YOUR APPROVAL
THE COMPANY WILL SAVE FORTY MILLION DOLLARS BUT YOU'LL BE TEN THOUSAND OVER BUDGET.
AND BEFORE YOU ASK, NO IT WON'T WORK THE OTHER WAY AROUND.
WHOSE SIDE ARE YOU ON?

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



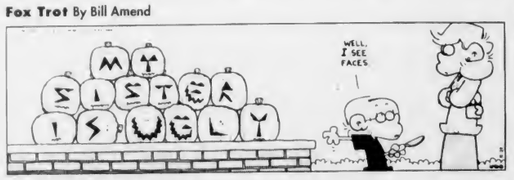
Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak



Robotman By Jim Meddick

WHAT? DO I LOOK FAT TO YOU? DO I HAVE THUNDER THIGHS?
WHATTHE YOU TALKING ABOUT?
THIS DIET YOU HAVE ME ON...BIRD FEED? BIRD FEED! EVERY DAY BIRD FEED!
THAT'S BECAUSE YOU'RE A BIRD
WELL I CAN'T ARGUE WITH THAT LOGIC
BUT I'LL BE CURSED IF I CAN'T STOP THINKING ABOUT A BIG MAC, CHOCOLATE SHAKE AND SUPER-SIZED ORDER OF FRIES

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

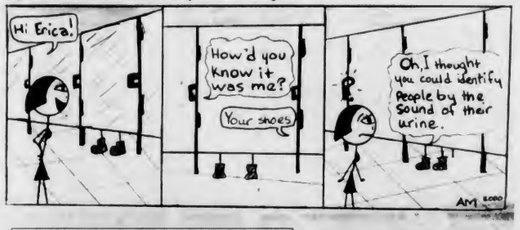


Robotman By Jim Meddick

NOW THAT YOU BROUGHT IT UP, I AM WORRIED. YOU'RE GETTING A BIT FLABBY.
HEY, YOU'RE NO ARNOLD SCHWARZENEGGER YOURSELF!
IF I PUT ON WEIGHT, I DON'T LOOK GOOD IN A SPEEDO. BUT IF YOU PUT ON WEIGHT, YOU CAN'T FLY!
FLY? YOU THINK I CAN'T FLY?? HA!
FLAP FLAP FLAP
OK Y'KNOW WHAT THE PROBLEM IS? THE PROBLEM IS I NEED A RUNNING START.
A RUNNING START??
HEY, EVAN. FILL UP TONIGHT. I NEED THE DECK OF AN AIRCRAFT CARRIER.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Up the Hill Backwards By Andrea Mangini



The Mop Closet By The Haggardy

Horoscopes

Aries
It today someone will require of you to explain your behaviour, quote something suitable, or try to laugh off. Today it is not necessary to devote anybody neither in your own plans, nor in their motivations.

Taurus
It is not worth to trust the first impression excessively. It, probably, is the brightest one, but it does not mean that it cannot be deceptive. Be vigilant!

Gemini
Do not rely on good memory today, neither your, nor another's. Otherwise you will have to stray, having forgotten the address, or you will get in an awkward situation having no ability to remember a name of the interlocutor. In any case, it is better to write down all.

Cancer
Today you need open space for activity. It will be better, if you would manage to obtain it, in other case you will begin to act on available space what can result in catastrophic consequences.

Leo
Everything you would do would turn out well today. Your logic is indisputable, a choice in the moment is perfect. If you wouldn't be lazy, you would achieve a lot with the representatives of other zodiacs - it will be useless and unpleasant.

Pisces
Listen to silence between words, it has the greater sense than the words. Today with you will try to communicate and to transmit the information by unusual way.

Virgo
Open a ved, which separates you internal world from environmental. It will help you to understand and to be understood.

Libra
Today you can appear a little bit too vindictive. It is necessary to take into account that it fray firmly your own nerves.

Scorpio
Be careful, the probability to say something wrong at the most improper moment is too great today. There can occur a couple of very sensitive people among your environment.

Sagittarius
It is not necessary to use disappointment in something as the justification of silly actions, or, that it is worse, absence of slightest attributes of activity. Make something sensible today.

Capricorn
Today the sense of fellowship will be especially strong in you. You can without any problem join any collective and any sorts of activity. However to become the initiator of something will be difficult to you.

Aquarius
Today the most successful and even pleasant the contacts with Leo, Gemini and Aquarius will be. Try to avoid dealing

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 58 LOW: 40	HIGH: 59 LOW: 41	HIGH: 62 LOW: 36

YOUNG TODD WAS REALLY ENJOYING HIS NEW NIKE TREE-KILLAZ COMPLETE WITH DEFORESTATION SOLES

© 2000

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Quote of the Day

"He's bringing the dogs to dinner."

– The University of Alaska Sports Contact

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Maureen Maske
Copy Editor	David Troupes
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Sarah Wingardner, Jasmine Trabelsi

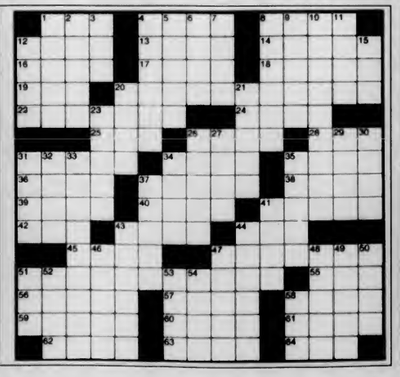
ACROSS
1 TV add-on
4 Pocket money
8 Gets better, as wine
12 About 2.2 pounds
13 "— Ben Adhem"
14 Ploys
16 "Garfield" pooch
17 Blacken
18 Type of pants
19 Dress part
20 Scant attention
22 Popular seafood
24 Fashion designer Gucci
25 Concealed
26 Sly
28 Last but — least
31 Cavalry sword
34 Trademark
35 Shue's "Leaving Las Vegas" co-star
36 Urge
37 Tornado warning
38 Taj Mahal site
39 Taverns
40 Valet
41 Brook
42 Exertion mo.
43 Sewing joint
45 Admin. head
46 Aunt Bea's nephew
47 Ginger fabric
50 Violet hue
55 Dozen, to Caesar
56 Proverb
57 Scare away a fly
58 Unlock
59 Navajo lodge
60 Congeals
61 Word that follows "crew" or "V"
62 Landlord's fee
63 Heckling
64 Fiesta shout

DOWN
1 It's used in 1 Across
2 Conquer Everest
3 Caviar
4 Stashed in a secret place
5 Fly high
6 Damage
7 Flirtatiously
8 Sentry
9 Spy work
10 Feudal slave
11 Eye makeup
12 Take a chair
15 Agitate
20 Early Brit
21 Molts
23 Roman marketplace
27 Curved molding
29 Fairy tale meanie
30 Salad bowl wood
31 Turn
32 "New Yorker" cartoonist
33 "Have a great trip!"
34 Italian dollar
35 Cut the turkey
37 Alps, e.g., mountains
41 Dove's home
43 Type of partner or movie
44 Waterproof overshoe
46 Idolater
47 Dalmatian markings
48 Oust
49 Brother's child
50 Basin
51 Cheerleader's shout
52 Aroma
53 Gorbachev's domain (abbr.)
54 Mother of Zeus
58 Singer Yoko

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	O	A	K		A	N	G	L	E		M	A	R	S
E	D	G	E		V	A	D	E	R		A	S	A	P
R	O	U	E		E	M	O	T	E		P	I	C	A
B	R	A	N	D	N	E	W	R	E	L	A	S
			E	A	U		C	O	N	N	E
C	H	A	S	T	E		P	I	G	S	K	I	N
H	A	S	T	E		B	E	A	U		I	N	A
E	D	S		S	T	O	R	Y		B	W	E	T
S	T	E		H	U	N	T		F	L	I	R	T
T	O	T	A	L	E	D		C	R	U	S	T	Y
			P	O	S	E		C	A	B
W	E	A	L	T	H		P	O	N	Y	T	A	I	L
A	L	D	A		E	R	O	D	E		E	L	S	A
S	L	I	M		R	I	L	E	Y		R	O	B	S
P	A	T	E		D	O	O	R	S		S	U	N	S

11-13-00 © 2000 Universal Feature Syndicate



THE ONLY GAME AFTER THE GAME
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE

Sports Spotlight

J.R. VanderWall - Water Polo

Class: Junior
Major: Sport Management
DOB: 10-26-79
Age: 20
Zodiac Sign: Scorpio
Hometown: Rockford, MI
Favorite Food: Chicken
Favorite Junk Food: Swedish Fish – By far, the best candy ever!
Favorite TV Show: The Simpsons
Favorite Movie: Billy Madison
Favorite Vacation Spot: British Virgin Islands
Favorite Class: Sociology of Sport
Favorite Professor: Dr. Todd Crosset
Favorite Music: Reggae/ Classic Rock
What would you save in a fire: My dog, Mikasa
Are you a righty or a lefty: Righty
Describe a funny experience during your time at UMass: Last Spring, I witnessed two abnormally large men slopping around in a kiddie pool filled with pudding.
Career Ambition: I want to market the sport of water polo nationally.
Sports Rituals: No one can touch my cap before the game. I hide it from everyone – When I get into the net, I hit the crossbar with my right hand and then the left post with my left and the right post with my right and then the crossbar again with my left – I don't watch penalty shots.

J.R. VanderWall

J. R. VanderWall's success in water polo stems from his success in math.

During his freshman year of high school, he earned an "A" on a math test and the teacher, who was also the water polo coach, shook his hand. He commented on the size of VanderWall's hand and convinced him to tryout for water polo the following year.

The coach told his prospective players that if they didn't know the rules, to play goalie. Since VanderWall had no idea what was going on, he hopped in the pool and made his way over to the net.

"I was trying to play goal and all the seniors were trying to play these hotshot moves on me and I was just blocking everything," he said of his tryout performance.

He quickly became the starting goalie, but still had not learned the rules of the game. That problem was solved when he was told to give the ball to a specific player every time he caught it.

"For pretty much of the first half of my sophomore year, I had no idea what was going on," he said. "I just blocked the ball and threw it at the same guy every time."

VanderWall's younger brother, Todd, 18, also fell in love with water polo and currently plays for Michigan State.

"Our whole lives revolve around water polo," he said of his family. "My parents save all their frequent flyer miles to come out and watch me play."

VanderWall, co-captain of this year's team, is the backbone of the Minuteman defense and has helped them to rank in the top 15 in the nation.

While he's not playing water polo, he likes to take in the outdoors. His favorite activities include hiking, mountain climbing and skiing.

VanderWall, like most athletes, has made several trips to the emergency room. He's broken his left arm twice, his collarbone and two bones in his hand. He's also had throat and knee surgery and "stitches like you wouldn't believe!"

He also finds it too much of a hassle to get a haircut. When most guys get them every three or four weeks, VanderWall aims for twice a year.

He plans to get his degree in sport management and continue his education and earn his masters in marketing.

"I would love to market the sport of water polo and try and take it to another level nationally," he said.

P.S. - Sorry, ladies. This 6'5" blondie is already taken by his girlfriend, Ronda, who also plays water polo here at UMass. They celebrated their 15-month anniversary on Tuesday. Happy Anniversary!

-- Julie Robenhymer

www.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.

Castaway Lounge
Routes 5 & 10, Whately, MA • (413) 665-8733
(North of 91 Exit 22 take route 5 & 10 North 2 miles, South of 91 Exit 24 take route 5 & 10 South 2 miles)
Open to all students over 21 years old
We are now hiring girls 18 and over who need to make big money in the entertainment business
We are now open for Monday Night Football @ 4pm
6 Dancers • Food • Prizes
VIP room always open for private parties

We Sell BEER & WINE on SUNDAYS
12 NOON - 9 PM -SuperBowl Sunday Only
12 NOON - 7 PM -regular hours
MONTAGUE MINI MART
We accept Visa & Mastercard
367-9551
60 Main St. Montague Center
10 Mins. from Campus

Thai Corner
Please Join us for our anniversary
SPECIAL MENU
10/23-10/31
Thank you for your support
We are going into our third year
31 Boltwood Walk
Amherst, MA 413-253-1639
Mon-Sat 11:30-3 &5-9
Fri&Sat till10•Sun 5-9

one hit wonders are the by-product of speculation.
don't listen, choose.
CLICKRADIO

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
student universe.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676
Buenos Aires Lima Tokyo Santiago London Dublin Paris Nice Copenhagen Stockholm Oslo Amsterdam Berlin Munich Zürich Istanbul Rome Venice Florence Vienna Budapest Prague Bangkok Moscow Lisbon Madrid Barcelona Tel Aviv Johannesburg Delhi Hong Kong

THE FIVE ARTS CENTER SILVER SEASON
CELEBRATING 25 YEARS OF GREAT PERFORMANCES
TICKETS ONLY $5 $7 $10 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
Torch with a Twang
MANDY BARNETT
You'll be dazzled by Barnett's voice. It's as startling as Patsy Cline's and as caramel-smooth as Diana Krall's. Don't miss one of the hottest new voices on the country music scene as Barnett and her band deliver an evening of pure Nashville
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21 AT 8PM CONCERT HALL
Stars, Stripes and the FAC Forever
THE BOSTON POPS
Keith Lockhart, conductor
It's a 25th Anniversary Celebration complete with an all-American program of Copeland, Bernstein, Loesser, Williams, Gershwin, and tributes to Elvis Presley and Paul Simon. Join the fun and catch the Boston Pops right in your own backyard
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28 AT 8PM, CONCERT HALL
A Treasure from Down Under
The Sydney Dance Company
Graeme Murphy, Artistic Director
Air and other Invisible Forces
Air is a mosaic of innovative movement, stunning stage design, diaphanous costumes, and haunting music performed by one of the most technically brilliant dance companies in the world. This work has riveted audiences, winning standing ovations, and great critical acclaim at every performance
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 14 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL
Let the ovations continue!
www.fineartscenter.com
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for tickets
THE FINE ARTS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

St. Patrick eclipses Sawchuk's mark

In the red corner, weighing in at just over 200 pounds, the undisputed greatest goaltender of all time...Terry Sawchuk. In the white corner, standing six feet tall, weighing 192 pounds, the challenger...Patrick Roy. Extra! Extra! After 16 years and 448 wins, Sawchuk is TKO'd by Roy on the seventeenth of December.

During a career spanning two decades, Patrick Roy has made history everywhere he has been. On Tuesday night, however, Roy secured his title as the greatest goaltender in the history of the National Hockey League.

St. Patrick's name was etched in the NHL's icy timeline in a very Roy-esque fashion. At the end of regulation time in Colorado's Tuesday night game against the Capitals, the score was even at three apiece.

The game went into overtime, a domain that Roy has ruled from the very outset of his career. After demoning the Capitals numerous times on the doorstep, the stage was set for another historic overtime victory. A Colorado faceoff in the Washington zone led to a point shot from future hall of famer Raymond Bourque. Bourque's shot was deflected in front by lethal Swedish center Peter Forsberg. The shot beat Washington goalie Olaf Kolzig as he came out to challenge the Bourque blast, causing instant jubilation.

Roy sprinted from his goal crease, leaping numerous times in joy as he met his teammates at the blue line. The entire Colorado bench erupted as ted lamp hi signifying the game-winning marker.

With the goal, Roy surpassed the man whom he considered to be the greatest goaltender of all time. For once Mr. Roy is incorrect. He surpassed a record that at one time was considered unbreakable as unreachable as Wayne Gretzky's single season goal-scoring mark.

Commissioner Gary Bettman told NHL.com "Patrick Roy's passion to play is surpassed only by his passion to win...this remarkable achievement is a testimony to his consistency, his durability, his pride, his skill, and perhaps most of all his nightly determination to reach the highest standards of goaltending excellence his own.

Roy adds this record to an already long and impressive Hall of Fame resume, including three Stanley Cups, a Calder Trophy, Three Vezina Trophies, a 2.48 career goals against average and 46 career shutouts.

Even if Roy does not add a fourth Stanley Cup ring this year, he will still go down in history as the greatest clutch goaltender in hockey's illustrious history. In his rookie season of '85-'86, Roy entered the playoffs as the starting goaltender for the most storied hockey franchise of all time, the Montreal Canadiens. What Roy proceeded to do was beyond remarkable, beyond astounding, it was simply something that had never been done and probably will never be repeated.

The brash rookie came in and led the Habs to eight straight overtime victories in the Wales Conference finals and the Stanley Cup finals, en route to Montreal's 21st Cup win. Roy posted a remarkable 1.93 goals against average in those playoffs, racking up 15 wins and one shutout.

Roy will not only be remembered as a great player, but he will also join the ranks of hockey's illustrious characters. He is a very superstitious man in that he eats the same steak dinner before every game and he refuses to skate over any lines while making his way towards the net. He can also talk trash with the best of them.

After Game One of the Divisional Playoffs when Chicago's Jeremy Roenick beat Roy in overtime, Roenick made a comment about Roy and his lack of presence on that goal. His comment caused hysterics in the media, but Roy was not without a response saying, "I couldn't hear what Jeremy was saying because I had my two Stanley Cup rings in my ears." Needless to say, Roy and his Avalanche took care of the 'Hawks and tore through the rest of the playoffs, winning Roy's third Stanley Cup.

Patrick Roy will be remembered as many things when he finally decides to hang up his skates. He will be known as an innovator who refined and perfected the butterfly style of goaltending that so many net minders adhere to in the modern game. He will be remembered as a character that was never at a loss of words, never lacking a witty line for the papers. He will be remembered as a warrior who never stopped battling, whose stare could bleed into you, whose work ethic was unrivaled and whose passion to win was unquestioned. But most of all he will be remembered because big players come up big in big games, and Roy...well he was as big as they come.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

■ third

continued from page 15

positions.

Bond, however, said that an extensive knowledge of the game is not necessary. Anyone interested in trying out for the team should send Bond an e-mail at sports@ccc.cced.edu or call her at (714) 432-5899. But that's if you're willing to transfer.

"Southern California is a hot spot for badmintons," Hilgendorf said. "The high schools even offer it for both men's and women's teams."

Arena football

Many local sports fans were hurt when, in one of the most depressingly disappointing events to hit New England since Babe Ruth left for New York, the Arena Football League announced its plans to move the Connecticut-based New England Sea Wolves to Toronto. The Toronto team will begin play in 2001.

Fans of Arena football have had quite a response. An expert in the sport, known only by his AOL screen name, "collegesyscho" said that it might actually be a good idea. "They weren't getting much fan support so in order to get more fans, they made the right move. I don't think you can compare this with Roger Clemens though."

Roger Clemens made a similar run in 1998 when he left New England to become a Toronto Blue Jay.

"Clemens went because of the money, their (Sea Wolves') move was to get more fan support because they didn't want an AFL team in that (New England) area. This will try to expand the team to another area."

Rodeo

Varr Myers wasn't home when we called this week, but we're sure to have an interview with the coach of championship Vaqueros of Central Arizona College next week. But before we can get that interview, you need to know a little bit about this developing team.

Coach Myers has been in the rodeo business for almost 25 years, and coaching for 18. According to his website at www.cac.cc.az.us/athletics/Rodeo/rodeocoach.htm, Myers coaches because "it gives many young adults the incentive to attend college and earn a degree and improve their lives."

There's no disagreement on that from us. Rodeo has long been proven to improve and enrich the lives of developing or endangered youth. Myers is a founding member of the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association (NIRA) and has personal experience as a bareback rider and a team roper.

His coaching staff consists of the nasty husband/wife combination of Woody and Dixie Shettel. Woody has experience as a champion calf-roper as well as experience team-roping and bulldogging. He's also a professional ferrier who specializes in navicular and other lameness corrections. Dixie's well-known for her goat-tying, breakaway roping and barrel racing. She also teaches elementary school.

Check this column next week for an interview with Coach with a season preview for Vaqueros.

Cricket

At Rutgers University, they play a sport not known to many of us in the United States: cricket. Cricket is a sport recognized as a forerunner to baseball and is played mainly in Britain and former British colonies. The club practices regularly and plays intra-squad scrimmages, and also plays matches against other amateur teams. May the lord be with them.

Events

Dave Pallone, a former umpire for Major League Baseball spoke at Augsburg College. He discussed his 1990 book Behind the Mask: My Double Life in Baseball. The event was free and sponsored by Augsburg Student Activities Council (ASAC).

■ Boston

continued from page 15

We can't look to the Celtics for help. The only positive that can be taken out of the preseason thus far is the play of unknown rookie big man Mark Blount and the fact that Paul Pierce isn't dead, hopefully ending that Boston curse begun by Len Bias. UMass alumni Rick Pitino has stated that he will be leaving the franchise if the Celts don't make the playoffs this season. I guess it is time to start looking for a new coach, then, because it would take a super-sized miracle for that to happen.

This is the year Antoine Walker needs to prove himself worthy of the top dollar contract he signed prior to the '98-'99 season. If the Celtics are going anywhere this year, it will be on the shoulders of the co-captains Antoine Walker and Paul Pierce. If not, major changes should be made after the season.

There is no hope for help from the Celtics arena-mates, either. The Bruins are simply never going to win with Jeremy Jacobs and his "this team is for profit only" attitude. That is all that needs to be addressed, as far the Bruins are concerned.

Bostonians look at their four major professional teams and feel like they must be living in Jobbertown, USA. Ah, to live in St. Louis and be a Rams and Cardinals fan, to live in Oakland and root for the Athletics and the Raiders, but NEVER to wish to live in New York as a Mets, Yankees, Giants, or Jets fan.

The worst part of the entire situation is the fact that none of these teams seems to be on their way up. The Red Sox appear to be stalled out at that dreaded level just below being a major playoff caliber team. The Patriots will improve, but not nearly to take much notice of. The Celtics look like a team that will once again narrowly miss the playoffs, while the Bruins are just not a quality franchise and will never be under their current leadership.

Does anyone have a map to the University of Missouri? I am thinking about transferring.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian Columnist.

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

2 A great place to get contact lenses

3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions

4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases

5 Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office

6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

Special Offer: any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
PRE-REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2001

The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST will be offered on Wednesday, OCTOBER 25th @ 7pm in BARTLETT #61.

This test may be taken only once.

students should pre-register for ENGLWP before pre-registration ends.

Students do not need to register for the test.

YAMAHA HONDA DUCATI KTM Husqvarna
VALLEY MOTORSPORTS
M.V. Augusta Kawasaki CAGIVA bimota
State Inspection & Winter Storage
SUPERB, PROFESSIONAL SERVICE

OUR PRICES ARE SO LOW THEY'RE SCARY!!
LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive

EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS COORS, COORS LIGHT $39.99 +DEP
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB, MICHELOB LIGHT, KEYSTONE, LITE $45.99 +DEP
1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $37.99 +DEP
1/2 KEGS BUDWEISER BREWING CO. ALL PLAYOFFS $82.99 +DEP

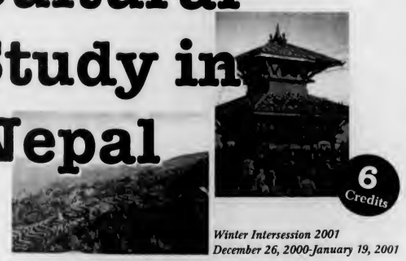
COORS LIGHT & COORS 30 PACK $16.99 +DEP
BUSCH & BUSCH LIGHT 30 PACK $12.99 +DEP; 4 PACK $4.99 +DEP
GUINNESS 4 PACK $4.99
OTTER CREEK 2 PACK ALL TYPES $9.99 +DEP
HEINEKEN CASE $19.99 +DEP
NATURAL LIGHT & NATURAL ICE CASE $8.99 +DEP
JACK DANIELS COUNTRY COCKTAILS 4 PACK $4.99

WINES OF THE MONTH
BUENA VISTA (CALIFORNIA WINES) $7.99
Almaden $6.99
RENE JUNOT WINES $5.99
COLUMBIA CREST CHARDONNAY $6.99
VENDANGE WINES $7.99
MELINI CHIANTI BORGHI D'ELSA $5.99

SMIRNOFF VODKA $17.49
TANQUERAY GIN $14.99
SOUTHERN COMFORT $18.49
BLACK VELVET CANADIAN WHISKEY $12.99
MALIBU RUM $11.99
ABSOLUT CITRON VODKA $15.49

Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor. Ask For Details.
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 10/19/00 THRU WEDS. 10/25/00

Cultural Study in Nepal



6 Credits

Winter Intersession 2001
December 26, 2000-January 19, 2001

Integrating classroom instruction with cultural appreciation and adventure, UConn's unique Cultural Study in Nepal program allows students to earn 6 academic credits. This 4-week program will be under the guidance of UConn faculty. Students will learn about Nepal's language, culture, economy and ecology, and develop a research project tailored to their specific academic requirements.

For more information, visit us online at www.ce.uconn.edu/nepal.html, call us for a free brochure at 800-622-9908 or come to one of our open house sessions at the Bishop Center on the Storrs campus.

University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies
International Studies

All New All Yours All Free

No Brainer.

$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever, awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.

MadAdz welcomes University of Massachusetts Amherst

The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T-shirt. Just another way in which MadAdz.com will hook you up.

MadAdz.com hooked me up. Your Classifieds, Your Connections

Limit one t-shirt per student.

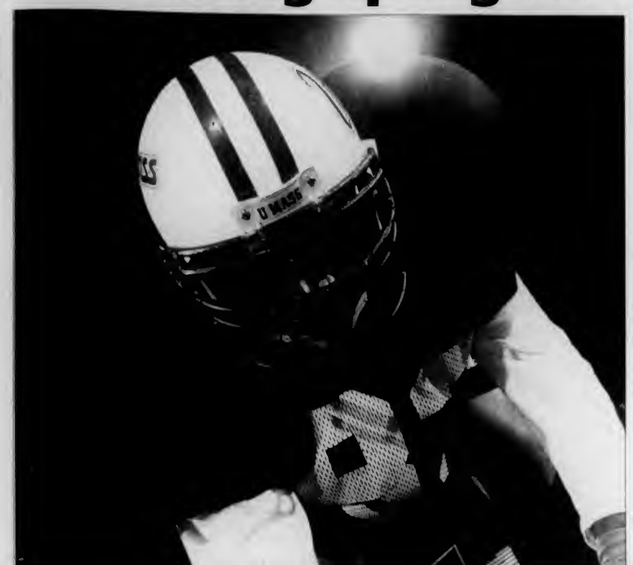
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

"T" coming up big for UMass' A-Team

Brower supplying power for surging Minuteman defense

By Adam White
Collegian Staff



DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

After posting a career-high four sacks last Saturday against Maine, Valdamar "T" Brower has vowed to put on his war face for every game.

Pity the fool who takes Valdamar Brower lightly.

Known as "T" since childhood when his sister Valerie laid claim to "Val" and Mr. T was all the rage), the 6-foot-5, 235-pound Northampton native seems like an absolute monster. But as a defensive end for the Massachusetts football team, Brower routinely goes up against guys who outweigh him by a full 100 pounds.

So how has this redshirt freshman managed to crack the UMass starting lineup and become a true terror for the Maroon and White defense?

"T has really come a long was since making the team," Head Coach Mark Whipple said of this week's WHMP Athlete of the Week. "He has worked hard to gain a lot of weight and strength. He has great quickness and has gained a lot of confidence. I think he is a great athlete with a great future."

Brower's road to gridiron greatness didn't really start until his junior year at Northampton High, when football coach Frank Tudryn suggested he had what it takes to succeed at the next level. Already a two-sport star in football and basketball, Brower put together a solid senior year for Tudryn's Blue Devils and earned All-League and All-Western Mass. accolades while leading the team to the league finals.

But a loss in that title game left Brower with a bitter taste that he is still trying to wash away today.

"Losing to Longmeadow in the '98 League Championship was something I will never forget," Brower said. "I had a real bad game, too. But coming so close in high school makes me want it so much more now."

Brower graduated with quite a resume: he had amassed 201 tackles, nine sacks and seven interceptions for the Blue Devil defense while catching 89 passes for 1,310 yards and 12 touchdowns playing on the other side of the football as a tight end. He also led the basketball team to back-to-back Western Mass. titles as a center and power forward.

Although he dominated his position at Northampton High, Brower lacked the natural size and build that many saw as necessary to making a major college football team. That didn't stop him from making the trip to UMass tryouts, where he sized up the competition and decided that he truly belonged in Maroon and White.

"When I walked on, I was playing against guys much bigger than I was," Brower said. "But that didn't matter to me at all. I took one look and I just knew that I could play with them."

Not only did Brower make the cut, but he proposed a dilemma to Whipple and company as well: should they redshirt the young talent and let him mature physically, or should they cast him right into the fire and let him learn on the fly?

"We almost played him last year because of how athletic he is," Whipple said. "But I think he has really played into his own. He wasn't making as many plays earlier [this] year because he wasn't used to how physical the game is. But each game that has gone by, he has gained more confidence."

Brower's emergence culminated with an explosive performance at home against Maine last Saturday, when he terrorized the Black Bears for eight tackles and four sacks, the highest single-game sack total ever by an individual player during the Whipple regime. He came within one sack of the school record, set by Scott Assencoa against Connecticut in 1992.

Brower attributed his eruption on Saturday not to his pregame breakfast of pancakes but instead to an aggressive new rushing scheme designed by Defensive Coordinator Neil McGrath.

"We changed up our pass rush, and put in a lot of twists," Brower said. "That's what I do best."

Brower has racked up 29 total tackles on the season, including 15 unassisted. But more importantly, he has developed a killer attitude on the field that has him ready to lead UMass back to the football Promised Land.

"We're not going to lose from here on out," Brower said. "We had high expectations coming into the season, but now we're finally starting to gel. It's time to get after it."

Controversy swirls around Nat'l crown

By Jaret Barr, Eric Soderstrom, Sam Wilkinson and Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

This is our second installment of "dritte und vierzig acht uber den Zustanden" (better known to English speakers as "Third and Forty-Eight Across the Nation").

Again, all quotes are completely legitimate – straight from the vocal cords we've attributed them to.

Livestock Judging

Scandal began to brew in "the Heartland" when the Casper College men's livestock judging team captured its second National Championship in the last five years. The only problem, according to arch-rival Connors State College coach Jerry McPeak is that, "there is no livestock judging National Championship."

An investigation launched by The Collegian has confirmed the fact that there is indeed no National Championship at that level of competition.

Casper coach Kelly Burch claims the point irrelevant and points blame at Connors State.

"They're second behind us every time," a sleep deprived Burch said. "We beat everyone in the country."

Dale Hummel of Joliet Junior College has even heard that Casper College has created its own trophy. "That is so sad," an anonymous source said upon learning of the trophy debacle.

The question remains: has the sport of livestock judging been tainted? "No, it's still huge out here," exclaimed Connors College sophomore Lindsey McInery. "Although they do look like a bunch of crazy people walking around the parking lot late at night, talking to themselves."

McInery said that livestock judging is "the most difficult mental activity on campus." The Collegian asked if it was more taxing than popcorn ball making to which Lindsey had no response. "Those guys do whatever it takes," Lindsey continued. "Even in making up their own trophies and national championships," the Collegian asked. "I guess," Lindsey sulked.

It must be noted that Dan Hogue, President of the Livestock Association was not available at press time for comment, although it has been noted that he is indeed out of the barn. For those still in the dark, livestock judging is when a person judges some livestock, and then a judge judges the judger.

Badminton

Badminton is budding in the Sunshine State. And Orange Coast College is adding to this development with Athletic Director Jane Hilgendorf's decision to add the sport to her school's list of intercollegiate athletics.

"It's what you'd call an emerging sport," Hilgendorf said. "It's going to be a women's sport only and we're glad that we've added another opportunity for women to get involved in collegiate athletics."

The addition gives the Pirates an even two-dozen varsity teams, and although the badminton battles won't begin until the spring term, Barbara Bond, the badminton commander-in-chief, is already out recruiting to fill her fifteen roster

Turn to THIRD, page 14

Minutemen triumph in battle with No. 19 URI

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

Instead of the Maroon and White, the University of Massachusetts, could have been mistaken for the electric blue of Windex, as they wiped away an eighteen game winning streak yesterday evening.

In the 1-0 overtime victory, the Minutemen defeated the number 19 University of Rhode Island, putting an end to an eighteen game undefeated streak at home for the Rams. In a game where UMass offense was almost silent, being outshot 20-6, the Minutemen were able to find the back of the net early in the overtime session to get their first victory against U.R.I. since 1997.

Senior Seth Lilburn delivered the game-winning goal fifteen minutes into the period after receiving a pass from sophomore Andrew Eicher. Eicher had captured a loose ball around the mid-field line and then found Lilburn who finished the scoring opportunity. The goal would be the second of the season for Lilburn, as Eicher would tally his third assist for the Minutemen.

Despite the Rams' powerful offensive attack, lead by Nicholas McCreath and Steve Denoura, who are among the lead scorers in the Atlantic-10 conference, the University of Rhode Island could not find a hole in the UMass defense. The duo have totaled more than forty points between them, but without a goal in yesterday's game, UMass' shutout win marked only the second time this season that a team was able to completely keep the Rams off the scoreboard.

Fending off the charging Rams for the Minutemen were senior fullback Patrick Beattie and junior fullback J.R Pouncey, with junior goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn behind them in net. O'Quinn recorded eleven saves in the win, improving on his less than one goal a game average and .783 save percentage.

The University of Massachusetts now stands at 9-4-2 overall and remains undefeated in A-10 play at 5-0-1, while U.R.I falls to 10-4-1 with a 3-1-0 record in the Atlantic 10. The game was pivotal for both soccer programs as the winner claimed the top spot in the Atlantic 10, and is in good position to extend their year into the post-season Atlantic 10 tournament.

However, riding at the top of the A-10 also means that UMass will be the most hunted team in the conference, and with four Atlantic-10 games remaining this season, staying in front of the field will not be an easy position to maintain.

Dayton and Xavier will both try to dethrone the Minutemen when they travel to Totman field this weekend. Dayton will arrive on Friday afternoon with a 10-3-0 record this season and are right behind UMass, ranked in second place at 5-1-0 in the Atlantic-10.

Xavier, who will not play until Sunday afternoon against UMass, does not have an impressive overall record, standing at 4-10 this season, but have amassed four wins in the A-10, losing only to Duquesne and Fordham.

The Minutemen will take the field at Totman at 3:30 p.m. on Friday against Dayton and then return to action on Sunday against Xavier at 1:00 p.m.

NY's success accentuates Boston teams' ineptitude

Sports fans in Boston always think of their city as being one of the elite, in the same breath as New York City, Chicago, or even St. Louis. We think our sports franchises are of the same quality as those in the highest markets and always expect them to play up to par with the top teams in the country. This past year, things could not have gone worse and fans feel like any other common city filled with mediocre sports teams.

While two New York teams are going to play in the World Series for the first time since 1956, the Red Sox are at home wondering who will buy the team, who will play center field, and who is going to pitch in the rotation after Pedro next year.

This was the Sox' year to dethrone the dreaded Yankees. The Bombers from the Bronx finished with the worst record of any playoff team and shouldn't have been allowed to go to the World Series without finding a scalper.

Instead, Roger Clemens and the Yankees are favored to win their fourth World Series title in five years and their cross-town rival Mets are back in the World Series for the first time since 1986 with less franchise players than the Red Sox have.

As if baseball isn't depressing enough, both New York football teams are in first place in their respective divisions, while the Patriots are drowning at the bottom of the AFC East once again. Former Patriot and current Jet running back Curtis Martin is probably the AFC Most Valuable.

Player through seven weeks, while Jet head coach Al Groh has to be considered the early favorite for coach of the year honors.

After showing some signs of life for the two weeks prior, Drew Bledsoe and the Patriots were routed by the Jets last weekend and looked completely pathetic. With a loss at Indianapolis this Sunday, the Pats would match their 2-6 record in the second half of last season with another 2-6 record in the first half of this season.

Turn to BOSTON, page 14

Dunks Away
Jameel Pugh slams it home at Midnight Madness

OFFcampus ONline

www.masslive.com/offcampus

3 students 1 Web cam 24/7!

Three UMass seniors are sharing their final year of college with the world.

Meet Deanna, Ruth and Laura

MassLive.com's Web cam is... in their apartment.

Now you can get a real–life look at their lives!

OFFcampus ONline: It's the coolest show on the Web.

For Real!

mass LIVE

www.masslive.com

GET ON IT!

www.masslive.com/offcampus

Dave Troupes talks to up and coming band Charlie in the box. Read all about it in the Arts section today.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Marcel Shipp and the Massachusetts football team host American International College Saturday at 1 p.m. at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 32 www.dailycollegian.com Friday, October 20, 2000

Music and dance; Jeans and T-shirt bash raises money

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

For 22 straight years, the Black Mass Communication Project has thrown the biggest party in New England. This year, they shoot to add one more.

On Saturday Night, BMCP presents Jeans and T-Shirts, the annual fundraiser party that attracts close to 1,000 people. Paying a $10 dollar cover at the door, students this year will have access to two separate rooms, seven different DJs and four and a half-hours of what should be, according to WMUA DJ Big Ant, "definitely a good time."

"This is the biggest college party in New England," Big Ant, also the General Manager of the BMCP, said. "People come from New York to Boston, so this just isn't a UMass event."

The name of the event comes from the "uniform people are expected to wear," Big Ant said. "[Everyone should] be loose and have a good time."

And the event is expanding; this year will be the first year that Latin music will take a role in the party. There will be two rooms at the event, one for hip-hop and the other for Latin music.

In the Campus Center Ballroom, DJs Red, a WMUA DJ whose show is on from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Saturday nights, and DRS, a former BMCP DJ who, according to Big Ant, has helped the BMCP before, will be performing for the first time at the Saturday night event.

Beyond that, Concepto Latino, from New York City, another WMUA DJ whose show is on from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday, will be spinning Latin music in the Cape Cod Lounge, as will Infiniti Sound, a group of four Boston DJs who will spin Caribbean sounds in both the CCD and the CCB.

Big Ant, also the BMCP General Manager, said the event will definitely be a lot of fun.

Doors open for the event at 9:30 p.m. Saturday night and close for good at 1:00 a.m. The party itself ends at 2:00 a.m. Call 545-2426 for more information.

ANNA WEISFEILER / COLLEGIAN

Students gathered on the Student Union steps last night in a vigil for Middle East peace.

Stonewall Center educates with play

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

In their on-going effort to promote education and awareness in the University community, the Stonewall Center will bring Terence McNally's Corpus Christi to Bowker Auditorium tomorrow night at 8 p.m. The production will be performed by Connecticut's Hole in the Wall Theater Company.

The play has been described by critics as a retelling of the story of Christ. It takes place in Corpus Christi, Texas during the 1950's and 1960's, where a man named Joshua realizes he's gay. He leaves the town in search of a more accepting community and meets twelve friends, also gay men. Eventually Joshua returns to Corpus Christi and is betrayed by a former lover. In the end, he is crucified during a hate crime.

Corpus Christi was scheduled for original production in 1997 by the Manhattan Theater Club. The Club's decision to premier the piece erupted in controversy. So much so, that it cancelled the play after the lives of board members were threatened.

Subsequently, several other playwrights that were slated to fill the Club's season, including Tony Kushner, said they would withdraw their plays if the board didn't reconsider. The Club retracted its decision and opened Corpus Christi with almost 2000 protestors surrounding the theater.

Here at UMass, however, Stephen Pereira, Assistant Director of the Stonewall Center, said he isn't anticipating public adversity to the play. This week the Stonewall staff met with the Religious Affairs Committee in what he described as a "gesture of good will," to provide an open dialogue amongst the communities.

Pereira said that the Stonewall Center hopes the play will do the same work all of their programs aim to do: educate the community through exposure to diversity.

"We hope that people will be able to look past the obvious issues of controversy and come see what the play is really about before making any judgements," Pereira said.

In trying to explain why Corpus Christi is a relevant piece, Pereira cited Mr. Nally's own notes on the play, where the playwright stated that people called it ridiculous and something that could never really happen. However, Pereira said, two years ago, Matthew Shepard was murdered under circumstances not unlike those seen in Corpus Christi, simply because he was gay.

Corpus Christi will be presented in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tickets are available through the Fine Arts box office at 545-2511 or at the door before the performance.

Research on at risk students displayed at student symposium on Monday

By Rachael Delvaney
Collegian Staff

Twenty-one students committed themselves last semester to the program, "Integrative Approach for Personal Liberation and Academic Fulfillment," in order to develop a united approach exploring students' potential for higher academic achievement.

Students, who participated in this program, will give a symposium on their research and results Monday, Oct. 23, from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. in room 168 Campus Center.

Tony Jno Baptiste, and Tanya Kachwacha, both graduate students at UMass, came across information that showed generally low retention rates for at risk students and people of color at the university level. They decided to take some of their own time, and focus it on helping these students so they could develop the skills to become personally empowered to change their emotions, attitudes, and behaviors.

Goals of Baptiste, and Kachwacha, are to guide these students to eventually create their own strategies, and ensure their social and academic success in their ongoing lifetimes.

"Many of our students felt like they were struggling with how to do well. It was not necessarily academic," said Kachwacha. "We want to help any group of people that are struggling in some way."

Existing research shows that these low retention rates for students of color, and at risk students, are caused by a lack of high quality social and academic support systems, meaningful faculty/student relations and well supported student involvement.

"There are a lot of reasons why [retention rates are low]," Kachwacha said. "This is about a societal, social dilemma. Part of the process is getting students to recognize this. It's a system, and it is not just about them."

Throughout the semester, students engaged in dialogue and critical reflection to find the obstacles in their way of success, be it academic, emotional, or physical. They analyzed how the problems impacted them, and examined personal feelings they had towards these difficulties.

"Because it was a very progressive procedure, each progression, was based on information of the previous one," said Baptiste. "Their information, ideas and content was not preset, but it evolved as the process went along. Because the students led, we went through the process along with them."

Kachwacha agreed, and expressed that there were a lot of ups and downs.

"It's a self expiration process. The students were continually pushed and challenged to think and work beyond social confines," said Kachwacha. "They needed to look, and find the barriers, and the patterns of their behavior, and push those barriers."

With help from coordinators, and

Turn to STUDY page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE IV / COLLEGIAN

Blow that horn

Resently retired music professor Walter Chestnut plays his trumper at the Fine Arts Center.

EMS holds instructional sessions for UM campus and community

By Kristen Shrewsbury and Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The UMass Emergency Medical Services [EMS] Unit will be putting on two cardio pulmonary reportory [CPR] courses on Oct. 21.

EMS is an UMass student organization of trained volunteers who are on call at campus events in order to provide first-response services to those who need them.

The group also provides first aid classes for interested parties, EMT demonstrations, and classes for EMTs as well.

"We are trying to get general awareness out of what to do if you are put into a specific situation," said CPR instructor Tom Leeson.

Leeson explained that the event's focus is on real life situations, some that many students often find themselves facing. He commented that the class would be focusing primarily on three very specific issues.

Some of the goals for the session include teaching participants how to deal with life-threatening situations and how to assist someone who is choking.

"You will learn how to deal with a variety of situations in the CPR course," Lesson said.

According to Leeson, the group hopes to train 500 people in basic CPR techniques that are based upon American Red Cross (ARC) standards.

In addition to personnel from UMass Medical Services there will also be volunteers from Hampshire County ARC and staff members from the UMass Environmental Heath and Safety Office that will assist volunteers at both sessions.

Both groups consistently provide service to the campus at large and assist EMS when they are needed.

"What would you do if your date started choking on linguini? How can you help a friend who just passed out from drinking too much? And finally, what can you do if your relative or professor just had a heart attack?" Leeson asked.

The program is open to anyone interested on campus and in the community at large. The program spans for one half a day and is offered in the Campus Center rooms 101 and 163 at both 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. The class is $5 for all high school and college participants and $20 for members of the community.

Anyone interested in participating in either the morning or afternoon sessions of these classes can call the EMS office at 545-1885 for more information.

ANNA WEISFEILER / COLLEGIAN

ISO speaks

Doug Murray from the International Socialist Organization spoke yesterday on recent violence in Palestine. Calling for US to stop aid to Israel, he said that Palestine is uprising from the oppression of Israel.

Students keep hope of peace alive

ANNA WESTFELER/ COLLEGIAN

"We're not meant to fight, we're meant to play soccer," Dan Yagudin as he led his portion of the three part of the prayer for peace.

By Daniella Ben-Simon
Collegian Correspondent

A peace vigil took place last night on the steps outside the Student Union Building composed of students, faculty and community members with one purpose: to keep the hope of peace in the Middle East alive.

The vigil was co-sponsored by the Arab Student Club, Hillel House, International Relations Club, Jewish Student Union and the Muslim Student Association.

David Mason, the organizer of the vigil, addressed the crowd. "It is you who will make a difference in this world."

Mason explained that merely gathering together these groups during the current situation of strife between many Arabs and Jews and their supporters, was an outstanding accomplishment. Over this past week, Mason and his organizers coordinated last night's peace vigil on the University of Massachusetts campus with a similar rapid-action grassroots student movement at Tufts University in Boston.

While most of the world merely sits back and watches the news and reads the newspaper regarding the recent violence in the Middle East, many universities across the country including Howard, Yale, Tufts, Northwestern and the University of Houston, have organized similar peace vigils to call for an end to the violence.

Larry Goldman, chair of the Office of Jewish Affairs at UMass, urged everyone, "Reach out across the divide." He encouraged the crowd to develop relationships with people who hold different viewpoints because it is the only way that a peaceful compromise will occur.

The peace vigil was non-partisan and attended by students, faculty, and community members who are concerned for the future of peace in the Middle East. No one was permitted to take a side or express their personal political views, but rather people were urged to re-commit themselves to peace and to recognize that violence is not a solution to the problems in Israel and the rest of the Middle East.

Ilya Rasner, an undeclared sophomore, said he came, "to support the hope of a peaceful end to the violence in the Middle East." Legal Studies and Judaic/Near Eastern Studies Professor David Mednicoff addressed the crowd and urged us to "look past our differences."

Students read various prayers in English, Hebrew and Arabic, and UMass sophomore, Ahmed Basabih, a representative of the Muslim Student Association said, "Let us understand that we are all the same."

After the vigil, many people stayed after to discuss the current issues. One of the opinions discussed during this dialogue was that Jews and Arabs have many commonalities including similar language and culture, that the fact that a peaceful coexistence has not been attained is sad.

Many participants walked away from the vigil with a feeling of accomplishment, that they too could somehow help to bring about peace, maybe not in the Middle East, but on our campus.

Daniel Yagudin, a junior computer science major, said, "We're not meant to fight. We're meant to play soccer."

Franklin/Hampshire Health Care Coalition to meet in discussion of Massachusetts health care system reform

By Lindsey Knox
Collegian Correspondent

The Franklin/Hampshire Health Care Coalition is holding a conference Saturday at 10 a.m. at the JFK Middle School in Northampton. The purpose is to expand the grassroots movement to reform the Massachusetts's health care systems.

The coalition will discuss changing the recent dollar-driven health care system to a patient-centered, universal, single-payer health care program.

"The purpose of the meeting in general is to get health care reform carried though by the legislation," George Markham, a member of the coalition, said.

"This piece of legislation [health care reform] was adopted in August, and the Governor signed it. It was prepared by a number of different groups interested in a solution for a single payer system."

According to Markham, the people who are promoting this piece of legislation are the people who are active in Question Five on this November's ballot. Question Five goes beyond the patient's rights and says there ought to be universal health system care set up by July 2, 2002. This means that if this piece of legislation passes, then the state is required to organize a system of Universal Health Care by this date.

"If the legislation passes, then it sets up a study of a commission of, like, 35 individuals who will then hire a consultant," Markham said. "The consultant would then supervise research on setting up health care systems. The consultant will be in charge of setting up this committee."

Also, according to Markham, another benefit of the approval is that industrial organizations that have an interest in health care can nominate people to sit on this committee. Other nominations will also be coming from the governor, and the state speaker of the house.

The legislation also allocated $230,000 to pay the expenses of setting up this committee and its study of health care.

"The forces who are opposed are insurance companies, and pharmaceutical companies," Markham said. "It will come down to a battle of popularity."

Another issue that will be discussed Saturday is Question Nine, or Eleven in Hatfield, which is centered on single-power health care.

Along with the coalition, there are other local organizations that will be sponsoring the event: Smith College School for Social Work, Northampton City Democratic Committee, Western Mass. American Friends Service Committee, MASSPIRG, Social Workers for Peach and Justice, Pioneer Valley NASW, Jobs with Justice, Northampton and Amherst Leagues of Women Voters, Interfaith Service Council of Amherst, ARISE for Social Justice, and Hampshire Interfaith Council.

The keynote speaker for the conference will be Deborah Richter, M.D., of Montpelier, VT. She is the president of Physicians for a National Health Program, which is a nation-wide organization of 9,000 physicians supporting a universal health program that guarantees full lifetime coverage of everyone.

There will also be three panelists joining Dr. Richter: Jeffrey Seaton, M.D., Medical Director of Brightwood Health center in Springfield, Peggy O' Malley R.N. of Glochester, a leader in the Mass. Nurses Association, and Nancy DePrisse of Amherst, who is a union leader for Local 252 United Auto Workers AFL-CIO.

UMass student apponted to Board of Higher Ed

By Jessica May
Collegian Staff

Nicholas D. Kurowski, a senior and active student leader at the University of Massachusetts, Dartmouth, has been appointed the student member of the Board of Higher Education.

Governor Paul Cellucci and Lieutenant Governor Jane Swift cited Kurowski's experience as a student leader at UMass Dartmouth when appointing him to the Board.

"Governor Cellucci and I were impressed with Nick's credentials as a student leader, and we look forward to working with him on the challenges facing higher education," Swift said.

Board of Higher Education Chairman Stephen P. Tocco welcomed Kurowski to the panel. "Our student members always bring with them an intelligence, enthusiasm, and a fresh perspective," Tocco said. "Nick will be an asset to the Board."

Chancellor Judith I. Gill said she is looking forward to working with Kurowski, especially in developing a "tutor corps" to help high school students succeed on the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System test. This program is aimed to pair 10th grade students who fail the MCAS test with college students who will mentor and expose them to college classes. By 2003, passing the math and English portion of the MCAS will be a high school graduation requirement.

Gill encouraged Kurowski to take a leadership role in the tutor corps program and to challenge other students, from both public and private institutions, to get involved.

"I think it is a great concept," Gill said of the tutor corps. "With Nick's help, I believe we can inspire other students to participate."

Kutowski has been actively involved in student government on the UMass Dartmouth campus, holding executive positions in the Student Senate, Residence Hall Congress and Class Officer seats.

A resident of South Hadley, Kurowski is a 1996 graduate of South Hadley High School. He is majoring in English and plans to attend graduate school after graduation while studying Higher Education and Administration.

"What interests me most about this position is the opportunity to represent students not just attending my own school, but on a statewide basis," Kurowski said. "I believe that it is utterly important that the student seat is filled by someone who not only has the general know-how of representing students' interests, but is also willing and able to go out on a limb and voice opinions that may or may not be popular."

Kurowski's appointment expires July 1, 2001.

Turn to SCERA page 3

SCERA and Res Halls raise voter registration

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Resident halls around the University of Massachusetts recently participated in a contest to support voter registration. Resident assistants and resident directors around campus set up tables within their dorms and encouraged students to register to vote.

The competition, put on by SCERA [Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy], offered the prize of a big screen TV for the winning hall. As always, it has to come down to one winner — one dorm that walks away with the ultimate prize. This year the award went to a dorm located in the South West residential area.

John Quincy Adams [IQA] residence hall walked away with the grand prize, a big screen TV, with 16.3 percent of its residents registering to vote.

The overall scores of the contest were determined by percentage, not sheer numbers, as to ensure fairness between each hall participating.

"We were really excited about this; everyone was really supportive. We worked with a lot of people – the SGA, MASSPIRG, as well as the different political parties represented on campus," said SCERA Voter Registration Coordinator, Jess Cantelo.

The competition began on Oct. 12 and continued through Oct. 16. The competition focused not only on getting students to register to vote, but to get awareness out. Not only did SCERA stress registering to vote in the residence halls, but throughout the school as well.

"It was really positive to see students from my dorm as well as others, not only going to the tables set up outside the Student Union, but asking questions and trying to learn more," said SGA member Carrie Mulcahy.

"In order to make this happen we had to contact RA's and RD's around the campus and they had to work out when they thought the turn out would be best, and then

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkowsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Semdenovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

LIVE MUSIC!
at McMURPHY'S
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22
10 pm - 1 am
NO COVER CHARGE!
POSITIVE ID REQUIRED

GET YOUR GRADUATE DEGREE somewhere
Meet with representatives from international universities in ENGLAND, AUSTRALIA & IRELAND
ON CAMPUS:
Wednesday, October 25th
Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center room 903 UMass / Amherst
4:00 – 6:00pm
Free Information Seminar
Thursday, October 26th
Sheraton Boston Hotel Beacon D Meeting Room Prudential Center
6:30pm – 8:30pm
sponsored events
Semester / year abroad information also available!
STUDYabroad -CIS
Center for International Studies
info@studyabroad-cis.com
www.studyabroad-CIS.com
toll free phone 877 617 9090
OFFICIAL REPRESENTATIVE FOR UNIVERSITIES IN AUSTRALIA, ENGLAND, IRELAND, NEW ZEALAND AND SCOTLAND

Massachusetts School of Law AT ANDOVER
CLASSES START IN JANUARY
• LSAT NOT REQUIRED
• DAY AND EVENING PROGRAMS
• AFFORDABLE TUITION PLANS - 1/2 THE MEDIAN LAW SCHOOL TUITION IN NEW ENGLAND
• OUR PRACTICAL/THEORETICAL PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR THE PRACTICE OF LAW AS WELL AS NUMEROUS OTHER PROFESSIONS
THE LEADER OF REFORM IN LEGAL EDUCATION
500 FEDERAL STREET, ANDOVER, MA 01810
Phone: (978) 681-0800 • email: pcolby@mslaw.edu
www.mslaw.edu
CONTACT US NOW FOR YOUR COPY OF FEDERAL REPORTS
600+ THINGS YOU CAN DO WITH A LAW DEGREE

A future of possibilities
Choose a career that bridges healing traditions and modern health science
Learn about Bastyr University Graduate & Professional Schools Information Day
Wednesday, October 25
Student Union Ballroom
10 am - 3 pm
Campus just north of Seattle
(425) 602 3330 www.bastyr.edu
BASTYR

STUDENT TELEPHONE DIRECTORY!
The Student Telephone Directory will be delivered during the week of October 23rd.
It will take approximately one full work week to complete distribution.
Thank you for your patience.
University Directories Chapel Hill, NC

Business | Education | Communications | Health | Law
GRADUATE PROGRAMS
MASTER'S:
Business Administration
Health Administration
Teaching
Journalism
E-Media
Advanced Physical Therapy
Biomedical Sciences
Forensic Nursing
Molecular and Cell Biology
Nurse Practitioner
Pathologists' Assistant
Physician Assistant
FIRST PROFESSIONAL:
Law
Law/Business Administration
Law/Health Administration
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
THIS IS WHO I AM. THIS IS WHO I WILL BE.
Hamden, CT 06518 • www.quinnipiac.edu • 203-582-8672/1-800-462-1944

GLBT Center Project hits Noho Park

By Katy LoConte
Collegian Correspondent

Looking to express your thoughts on diversity? Well, the opportunity awaits on Saturday, Oct. 21 at Pulaski Park in downtown Northampton.

The Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual/Transgender Community Center Project of Western Massachusetts is asking adults and children alike to creatively convey their feelings on diversity at "Art in the Park" from 9:30 a.m. to 11:00 a.m. this Saturday. This event, one of the first in a series of activities, is intended to satisfy the city's "No Place for Hate" campaign commitment.

According to Koren Butler, the coordinator of the "Art In the Park" event, "We are extremely happy to be working with the City of Northampton and the city's Human Right's Commission on this issue."

Butler, who is also a board member of the GLBT Community Center Project, also stated, "The gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender community understands the value of difference and the importance of making our homes and work places safe and welcoming for all our society."

The "No Place for Hate" campaign is an endeavor that Northampton has taken on from the Human Rights Commission. Basically this promotion requires that three community wide events must be held and publicly announced by the mayor of Northampton, Butler stated.

"The GLBT wanted to do one. It's a natural fit."

The "Art in the Park" is aimed at children and the center has mailed out information to pre-schools and churches hoping for a large turnout. Butler also confirmed that the intent is for children to come and make use of the provided art supplies to "draw what diversity means to them." There will also be a pre-school teacher present to guide the kids in their artwork.

Butler also avowed that although the event is aimed at children, there will be something for the adults as well. Comment cards will be on hand so that adults can express their opinions, as well as pledge what they will do to make Northampton more diversified.

The GLBT Community Center Project of Western Massachusetts was formed in 1999, and is devoted to making a secure and friendly place available to youths and adults. The people involved with the center pride themselves on the fact that they are an inviting place for new people, making meetings possible for networking and socializing readily available to the public. The center has organized various enlightening, and social activities, and is dedicated to teaching the people of the community about GLBT issues.

Furthermore, the organization has been a great asset to the public, serving as a resource center, and it even supplies the city with health workshops and information specifically to assist the people of the area.

For more information about the "Art in the Park" event, the GLBT Community Center Project can be reached at (413) 582-0743, or by e-mail at Valleyctr@hotmail.com. The rain date is scheduled for Oct. 22.

Smith College embarks on new engineering school

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Smith College is embracing a new era for women as it is the first all women's college in the nation to have its own engineering program.

The Picker Program in Engineering and Technology went into full effect in fall 2000. However, this program would not be possible without one major aspect. Smith received a $2.5 million gift from Ford Motor Company in order to start up the program.

"We sent in a proposal that we thought was rather compelling and different, and we ended up getting it. It's a tremendous opportunity not only to establish the program, but to work and experiment different ways of doing things," said founding chair of the engineering program, Domenico Grasso.

"The program included two new professors who will be here for the spring 2001 semester, and is looking to add more in the near future," stated Grasso. "So we're starting out with an initial staff of five."

Along with funding for the program itself, the monies will also be used to fund library acquisitions, a seminar series that hopes to bring corporate leaders to Smith, a state-of-the-art videoconferencing facility, and satellite and Internet links which will give Smith students the ability to look at Ford's research laboratories and design centers all around the world.

Smith hopes to offer a different side of engineering, one that many are not used to seeing. Part of the program's diversity lies within the fact that it's an all women's program.

"We're looking for leadership and growth for our company," said Ford's recruiting director, Rose Mari Tarenden. "We can't get there without women as leaders. And we need many of our future women leaders to be engineers."

Through this Ford is looking to name four Ford Scholars a year based on academic performance and there dedication to engineering careers. This is expected to go into affect in the fall of 2001 each individual will receive a full scholarship to Smith for four years and will also be given a laptop computer.

"We're hoping in the future that our graduates will become leaders in the fields of engineering as well as in society. Void from that they will gain a conscious look on life. We hope that they will look back on the education they received and be able to become role models for those in the future," said Grasso.

www.dailycollegian.com

ANNA WESTFELER/ COLLEGIAN

The heather on the hill
View of the Orchard early in the morning.

■ SCERA

continued from page 2

we went from there. Everyone was really supportive and helpful which made it fall together," said Cantelo.

Looking to the next voting year, UMass has high hopes in once again increase our campus voter registration.

"We're hoping to get MTA's 'Rock the Vote' out here for the next voting year; we've been talking to people, so hopefully it will all happen," said Carrie Mulcahy. As far as when this competition is to take place next, Cantelo was unsure.

"We'll hopefully run this contest every two years, every voting year. It was a real success; it gave visibility on what voting and registering is all about and from this we were able to register around 2,000 UMass students."

Each voting year, SCERA puts out a major voter registration drive on the UMass campus.

SCERA's main goal is to register and educate as many students as possible in order to encourage them to take an active role in society as well as their communities.

"SCERA would like to thank all of the participating residence halls and congratulate them on a fine effort," said Cantelo.

■ study

continued from page 1

the creation of a comfortable environment, students created their own perceptions and found their own circumstances. Forms of role-playing, peer teaching sessions, written reflection exercises, large and small group discussions, and presentations were all key to make students fully confront themselves.

"Students were heard, listened to, and taken seriously," said Kachwacha. "The power is not facilitating, or disseminating information. We all worked hard to create a place where we could do this type of work."

Baptiste said that he first started noticing changes in the students when they stopped being critical of the environment, to looking at what they could do to work within it. It was an attitudinal shift that made a difference. Students had consistent attendance, active participation, and persistence in challenging the impact of the process.

"They didn't make the same shifts, but had different self-realizations, said Kachwacha.

"Some saw big changes in their grade point averages, others were motivated to speak to their professors when they couldn't before, some became interested in different organizations or jobs. More than anything, they gained the motivation to do something."

Throughout the process, a real sense of community enveloped the group, which contributed to the enthusiasm for the presentation they will be giving on Monday. They are creating and developing ideas based on what they went through.

"The fact that they are extending the invitation to faculty, staff, administration and support staff, agencies, shows they really are motivated to work together," said Baptiste.

Students will engage with the UMass community on why they wanted to be involved in the program, what they did during the program, and what they plan on doing in the future as a result. Baptiste and Kachwacha will also contribute pieces about the academic level, research review, background development, a self empowerment model and details on what they did day to day.

Overall, this program stimulated students to create coping strategies and action plans to make a positive relationship between environmental and personal resources. Ultimately, the Integrative Approach for Personal Liberation and Academic Fulfillment would love to continue to help students but have very limited time and support, and are extending the request for more participation from other groups.

"We'd love to engage with faculty and staff," said Baptiste. "This is a big commitment for us."

Both Baptiste and Kachwacha know that whether it is now or later the students have gained the motivation to know what it takes to get things in their lives accomplished. "It was great to support people, and look at them become motivated," said Kachwacha. "It's all about tapping into the knowledge of yourself."

Ten slots are left if people are still interested in attending the symposium. Please e-mail at selfmotivation@yahoo.com.

Learn to Meditate!
Meditation Workshops
UMASS Campus Center, Room 811
Saturday October 21, 3-5 pm
Sunday October 22, 3-5 pm
FREE
Workshops include lecture on meditation techniques, meditation practice, music for meditation, and instructional video
FREE: no charge, nothing to buy...just a great chance to learn how to meditate

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration - 11am
in the Jones Library Conference Room
MERCYhouse
www.knowmercy.org
43 Amity Street
Downtown Amherst
It's a Church!
374-7532

FORWARD THINKING

"That's New England School of Law, since the first day we opened our doors. We were the only law school ever established exclusively for women. Today we continue to open doors for both men and women with innovative and relevant programs including the War Crimes Prosecution Project, opportunities for overseas study, a business law center and coursework that includes Internet Law. Looking to the future is what we've always done."
—Michael Scharf, Professor
Director, Center for International Law & Policy
J.D. Duke University School of Law
New England School of Law
154 Stuart Street
Boston, MA 02116
(617) 422-7210
admit@admin.nesl.edu
www.nesl.edu
ABA-accredited
Member of the Association of American Law Schools
SEE US AT THE STUDENT UNION BALLROOM, OCT. 25, 10 AM - 3 PM

2 DAYS OF OPPORTUNITY!
A UMass Graduate School Open House!
AND
The Annual Five College Graduate and Professional School Day
Come learn about some of UMass' outstanding graduate departments!
Tuesday October 24th
5:30 - 7:30 pm
Student Union Ballroom
*door prizes awarded!
Over 130 Graduate and Professional Schools from throughout the country and abroad!
Wednesday October 25th
10:00 am - 3:00 pm
Student Union Ballroom
Excellence is within your reach!
See www-ccn.acad.umass.edu for a list of attending departments/schools
Call 545-0417 for more information
Campus Career Network
Co-sponsored by the Campus Career Network and the Graduate Studies Office

The views and opinion expressed on this page ar those of the individual write and do not necessarily repr sent the views of the Collegian.

Nigerian democracy threatened, but hope for Africa

Ethnic violence has again flared in Nigeria, a country haunted by years of political insability and oppressive regimes, and threatens to destabilize a developing democracy.

More than 100 people have died in the country's commercial capital, Lagos, and now leaders of the Yoruba-led Oodua People's Congress have been arrested. The group was banned on Wednesday night. The upper chamber of the Nigerian government, the Senate, voted to allow Nigerian President Olusegun Obasanjo to impose martial law in Lagos.

It utilized a power given to it in the 1999 Constitution and suggested that he declare the state of emergency immediately.

The capital has quieted down after four days of fighting between northern Hausa-Fulanis and southwestern Yorubas. Northern appeals to Islamic constituents not to gain revenge with killing have been met with agreement so far, as the violence hasn't spread. The military, long the leaders of various Nigerian administrations, has been mobilized and sent to Lagos to contain any violence.

Thursday marked progress in the fighting as businesses opened and traffic, usually a serious problem in the city, was less congested. Of course, that was only a result of fuel shortage because of the fighting.

Meanwhile, while the appeals have so far held things in check to the north, Yorubas are fearful of killers seeking to exact a revenge on them for the southern killing. An Islamic protest march was planned today and Yorubas had been hiding in Mosques and barracks. Obasanjo sent five of his ministers to the north in an attempt to maintain peace.

But Obasanjo's government, under pressure from other sectors of the government, outlawed the OPC and ordered arrests of militia members. Unfortunately, part of the solution has been allowing militia groups to take over for police and executing suspects on the spot. While Nigerians have praised the move, some complain it threatens national unity and the possibility of foreign investment.

With the return of democracy in the past few years, Nigeria's ethnic and religious violence has steadily increasing, thus threatening what could be the greatest nation on the African continent. With oil reserves, the largest continental population and under the guise of democracy, Nigeria could, quite possibly, become not only a powerful and respected African nation – and there is, unfortunately, a lack of them — but also a leader for the rest of the continent.

Since colonial rule left the continent destroyed in so many ways, there have been too many bad leaders and missed opportunities for the peoples of Africa. While the negative influence of colonialism cannot be denied and can, in fact, be blamed for nearly all of Africa's failure, stable benevolent political leadership certainly couldn't hurt the continent.

And Nigeria is certainly one of the countries that could provide such leadership, with both the resources and the people, they have all the possibility in front of them to triumph over the wide range of adversities before them but they have to avoid the kind of ethnic violence that continually tears at the nation. Somehow, Nigeria must find a way to internally sooth ethnic tensions so that they can stabilize themselves as a nation and perhaps, as an end result, be a beacon for the rest of the continent.

American apathy, anyone?

"A young man had fallen in the midst of this moving mass, and instead of giving him the five seconds it would have taken for him to stand up, no one stopped. They stepped over, around him, and on him until he was rolling in agony on the ground."

Imagine yourself standing on a small slope at the base of a large, majestic mountain in the Montana Rockies looking down a beautiful forested valley. Now imagine being in the same place, but the beautiful valley no longer exists. Instead there is a whirling, windblown atmosphere of choking black ash and burning trees as tall as eight story buildings. Flames are searing your face and melting your hair as you strain doubled over to clear a patch of ground between the fire and the small town at the back of the valley. Imagine looking overhead every couple of minutes waiting for an antique WWII bomber plane to bring you temporary relief in the form of 1000 gallons of fire retardant chemicals. Imagine not showering for two weeks and not sleeping a full night for nearly as long because there simply weren't enough people to help with the battle, I don't have to imagine. I was there. Where were you?

Many Americans these day seem to complacently believe they are immune from the world's problems simply because they aren't affected by them. Conflicts around the world get coverage on the national news, but provoke only passing interest and sympathy in Americans. Americans sit in their comfortable easy chairs in their nice cozy houses unaffected by it all. The news does nothing to get them to act or even truly care. "People are killing each other again, what a shame," has earned a place with, "So how 'bout the weather," as a topic of dinnertime conversation. Even things that happen here in our own nation draw the attention of only the few surrounding people who are directly affected.

Americans watch in horror as millions of acres of wilderness burn to the ground in the west, but those with something to lose help fight them. Americans see soot-coated fire fighters standing with shovels amidst the flames doing backbreaking labor to save some houses from impending doom. What Americans can't seem to picture is how much easier those houses would have been to save if they had gotten off their lazy butts and done something to help. They would certainly have felt more inclined to do so if it were their house in danger of burning.

ANDREW TIBBS

Recently at a general admission music festival in Boston, I was part of a standing room only crowd. It sickened me to realize that the great masses of people moved without regard to anything or anyone who got in their way. Case in point: A young man had fallen in the midst of this moving mass, and instead of giving him the five seconds it would have taken for him to stand up, no one stopped. They stepped over, around him, and on him until he was rolling in agony on the ground. He was unable to stand up for ten minutes while the crowd surged over him. Thanks to the help of a few brave souls, who had things thrown at them for their troubles, he escaped with only a broken arm and bruised ribs. He considered himself lucky. I found myself asking why there were only a few people who thought enough of the stranger to help. Wouldn't they want someone to help them in the same situation?

The apathy of American is far-reaching and nearly total. It is the beginning to affect every aspect of daily life in this country. Only a small percentage of American register to vote and out of that percentage an even smaller number actually vote. Therefore it only would be assumed that Americans don't care who makes the rules that they live by. I wonder what would happen if television were outlawed as a result? The nation's news media has use only for items that sell papers, or create ratings. They have long since realized that Americans could care less about actual news. They need news items that interest them, usually stories of murder and death, political infighting, or horrific natural catastrophes, which always seem to happen somewhere else and never at home.

Wars are begun, fought, won and lost, in multiple locations around the globe on a daily basis, and we here in America look on like it's another badly made for Tv movie. Thousands die daily from treatable diseases but we say, "Oh that could never happen to us," and go on with our nice, safe lives complaining about the common cold. We donate money to charity because it gives us a tax break, not because helping someone makes us feel good about ourselves.

Someone please tell me, what exactly does America care about? Obviously, they don't care about death and destruction unless it's for entertainment purposes. Obviously, they don't care about disease plaguing the planet. Obviously, they don't care about natural disasters, provided of course they don't knock the house down. Obviously, they don't give a hoot who represents them in the government, or what those officials do when they get here. What does that leave? Well, we care about things that either negatively or positively affect us in some way and, well, and we care about money. I would say that we care about love and marriage, but then more than 50 percent of all marriages end in divorce, so I can't say that, can I?

Why do Americans not have feelings about anything? Some would suggest that the media has desensitized us, but that only applies to some things. Others say that they are the only one person, and what could they do? To them, I say go and read a book on Martin Luther King, Jr. Go tell him he didn't make a difference. Who knows for sure why Americans have learned to not care? I certainly don't only know that it scares me to see it. It scares me to nearly get plowed under by a mob when my only goal is to help someone else stand up. It scares me to be one of those ash covered men, knowing that we need more help to win against the fire and knowing that we aren't likely to get it. To those Americans for whom this criticism does not apply–those ash covered men, the doctors that fight diseases in third world countries for little or no reward except healing; to those soldiers who die for our interest and us; to those who take time to vote: I salute you all. To everyone else, wake up! Wake up soon, or you may be surprised how much has slipped through your fingers while you were concerned only with yourself and your comfortable lifestyle.

Andrew Tibbs is a UMass student

Write for Ed/OP!

Words from our sponsors

With the recent post-season rush in Major League Baseball it seems impossible to avoid watching a game on television. If you suffered the same inability to miss these televised games as I did, you've realized the world has going to sponsorship hell.

They have sponsors now for calls to the bullpen. Yes, it's true, when Jimmy Williams struts his butt out to the mound to pull the hook on some lame duck Red Sox pitcher, the Fox 25 commentator pauses for a "Verizon Wireless call to the bullpen." Is there a Nokia wireless phone in the dug out where Verizon executives consult Mr. Williams on his bullpen selection? Is that how you become "the call to the bullpen" sponsor, or do you just shell out ridiculously large amounts of Benjamin's like I suspect? Do companies believe I will purchase their product over their competitors' because they own the rights for "the call to the bullpen?" Please don't insult me. I am watching a baseball game and do not appreciate subliminal messages being rammed into my head.

It doesn't end there; it gets worse. Everywhere we go we see sponsors and advertising. Every professional sports player has a contract for some item to promote. Vince Carter has his Pumas and Gatorade, Jordan and Tiger have Nike, and Grant Hill has his disgusting McDonald's French fries. People really don't buy Mickey D's French fries because Grant Hill is paid to say he likes them, do they?

All our scoreboards on campus are littered with sponsors. Are you aware your official school grocer is Big Y? And if you go to Stop & Shop you are not shopping at the official UMASS grocer. Ohhh God, here comes the Fed's to arrest your non-official grocer behind.

JAMES SCHAEFFER

Old school parks, stadiums, and arenas were named after the city they reside in, or its location in the city, or a famous person that contributed to the sport of the team. Now with the massive price tags that state of the art facilities carry, huge Fortune 500 companies must come in and play the name game. For example, we had the name Boston Garden; now it's become the Fleet Center. The only banking going on at the "Fleet Center" is the massive withdrawals of cash out of ATMs to pay for a $15 combo meal consisting of an undersized cheeseburger and watered-down Miller Light beer.

As for the soon-to-be-gone Foxboro Stadium—another Fortune 500 company has laid the smack down and decided to foot part of the bill so they too can have their own "Fleet Center." The last bastion of purity in stadiums, Fenway Park, the home of our beloved Red Sox and oldest park in baseball, will soon vanish as well. Don't be surprised to see it being called "The Mach 3 Gillette Park," or better yet the "Sam Adams Center" (well okay, so maybe that's a good name, but for the sake of my argument ignore this). Colorado has Coors Field, so the Sam Adams Center is a realistic idea. Do we allow these companies' sponsorships to affect our choice in their products?

Unfortunately, yes, we do. I can remember when I was younger and Nike introduced the infamous Nike Air shoe. Everyone wanted them, had to have them. Why? Well they couldn't let you leap small buildings in a single bound, but people like Michael Jordan and Andre Agassi wore them. Their advertisements soaked out culture and you could not avoid the name Air. Michael's infamous Air logo was on the shoe, along with his number. If you didn't have those sneakers, you shouldn't have even bothered to wear sneakers. You were on the way to dorkdom if forced to wear Converse or Adidas (believe me on this). It took a couple good years to convince my parents of the positive affects the Air shoes had on my ability to excel in life. Nike immersed us in Air shoes. It was near impossible to find non-Air shoes, and we began to set Air as the new standard of sneakers.

We have now moved beyond big name stars backing products and billboard advertisement. More complex and physical actions are now sponsored. Pre-game shows, half-time shows, post game shows, post game show interviews, post post game shows—all sponsored by a corporation. I can see it now: A big blimp over the Mullins Center saying, "Your walk to class is brought to you by Fleet Bank" (which I remind you is the official bank of the UMass campus). Then when you finish walking you can go into the DC and see a big banner saying, "This less than satisfactory DC meal has been sponsored by Chevrolet." After the walk and the meal are you going to go to Fleet Bank, open a fat checking account, then go to the closest Chevy dealer and buy a brand new Cavalier? I think not.

If there seems to be this rampant over-commercialism in our society, what is the cause of it? Look through popular magazines in our culture such as Maxim and Cosmopolitan. All you see is one page of stories, the next an advertisement for a designer clothing line. Why do companies pour incredible amounts of money into owning a name or a player, or printing colorful fold out ads?

Some people believe the affect of advertising is not in making you buy a product through seeing the ad, but the other way around. When you see the sponsorship or ad of a product you own you feel proud to be part of something that is relevant, popular, or considered mainstream in our society.

Our clothing is the best example of this. Every time you wear your Abercrombie and Fitch Maui Life Guard shirt it reminds you that you are mainstream and you are cool. Every time you see it on someone else it reminds you: I fit in, I am cool. It's free sponsorship! This company is getting the best advertising money could buy. A black shirt for $19.98 is just a black shirt, but a black shirt that says DKNY is a black shirt suddenly worth $59.99.

I just can't handle it any more. I hate watching television because now a half-hour comedy is nothing more than two-thirds horrible acting and one-third commercials. Watching movies on television is even worse. Movies are edited to fit time slots and broken up so badly you have a hard time following the story. Films that generally would be great works are butchered by network television.

Watching a sporting event is painful because of all the hull commentary. These people are paid to explain to us what a blind man cannot see. Besides explaining the actions of a game, all I need to hear is a commentator do is occasionally make a comment about statistics, and throw in a humorous joke. He is not a pitchman for a company. Don't even get me going on Dennis Miller—you're a good comedian but unless you're doing a stand up act at half time get the hell out of the press box.

I am not some radical socialist—actually, far from it. Many people consider me a materialistic fool, but I do have my limits. I do suck into the coolness of American Eagle and Structure. Not because of the fictional sports teams it claims to be part of, like sky diving, rugby, and lacrosse, but because of the fact that men's fashion is limited to a handful of stores. With the way things are going, with sports players getting paid more, with people spending more money, all I can see is sponsorships becoming an overflowing force. It will get to the point where you will have ads scrolling your web browsers continually, and ads scrolling at the bottom of TV. The producers of televised sporting events will use computers to project a company's image on a field. It is already being done in basketball, and there is very little time before it becomes mainstream. Sports are no longer fun activities to watch, but instead a tool for capitalism to make feeble minded people spend their money on useless items. Television stations think we no longer watch television to learn, or entertain ourselves, but instead to do a form of passive shopping.

James Schaeffer is a UMass student.

Parking lot blues

"Supposedly Parking Services tickets all the lots on a daily basis, which couldn't be possibly true because if they were ticketing, then most of these cars would not be parked in the purple lot."

I am writing this statement because I am concerned about the parking situation on the UMass campus. There are so many students who would like to take their cars to school, but can't because of the lack of parking spaces. Two of my friends, who are now sophomores, brought their cars to campus this year, and were thrilled that they could. They both have paid their fee of $65 and were assigned to the purple lot. They both live in Emerson, a Southwest dorm, and park in the purple lot located on University Drive. That is, when they actually find a parking spot. It seems to me that Parking Services has overbooked the purple lot or expected students to either park in the yellow lot, which is even farther away, or have the students who live in Southwest dorms walk all the way to Orchard Hill to get their cars. On the other hand, the green lot located on University Drive right next to the purple lot has a large number of empty spaces everyday during the week. Both of my friends have had to park in metered parking, or in another color lot, risking the chance of getting a ticket because there were no spaces in their lot.

There are a number of cars in the purple lot with no stickers, last year's sticker, or another color sticker, leaving the people with purple stickers with nowhere to park. Supposedly Parking Services tickets all the lots on a daily basis, which couldn't be possibly true because if they were ticketing, then most of these cars would not be parked in the purple lot. The other day, my friend and I saw a person from Parking Services ticketing cars in the green lot, which is never even half full, yet they didn't even so much as glance at the purple lot, which is always past full. It's so bad that some cars were forced to park on the grass surrounding the purple lot, and I can assure you that these people would be ticketed before those without stickers. Parking Services needs to remove the vehicles with old stickers or no stickers to allot more parking to those individuals who have paid. Another idea would be to number the spaces in each lot and assign each student with a numbered space that only he or she can park in.

MICHELLE MCCUSKER

Both my friends have called and e-mailed Parking Services and in response they have received e-mails saying, "It's being taken care of," and of course it hasn't been yet. Parking Services then told my friends that ALL the purple AND yellow lots have to be filled before something can be done. This means that my friends who live in Southwest would have to park all the way up in Orchard Hill, which is a very far walk. They could also park in the yellow lot, which is also unfair because the people with yellow stickers don't have to pay as much to park on campus. One of my friends has a night job, and works until 11:30 p.m. or midnight, and is afraid to walk to her dorm from University Drive, never mind from Orchard Hill. It is a danger for one person to have to walk all the way across campus late at night with bad sidewalks and poor lighting. Anyway, what's the point of bringing a car to school if you have to walk two miles to get to it? I felt that Parking Services should take in these suggestions, and they should begin listening to the students. After all, we are the ones who have to park in these lots and we pay tuition to attend school here.

The newest piece of information in this whole situation occurred Oct. 3. Every car in the purple lot received a note from Parking Services asking them to please bring their cars home if it is not necessary for them to have one on campus. They described the parking situation as "being tight in Southwest," which in my opinion is their fault. The majority of students on campus live in Southwest and they need more parking in that area, and Parking Services should not have just handed every student a sticker, because they KNEW that parking was limited. They are offering to give each student who took their car home by Oct. 13 a "full refund," yet they still haven't removed the cars with any stickers out of the lots. Many students do not live near campus, and need their cars to get home. By not having a car, they would have to pay an excessive amount of money each time they wanted to go home. I still feel that Parking Services is not alleviating the situation the way it should be.

Michelle McCusker is a UMass student

Please don't pet me, I'm talking to the Collegian

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Boston acoustic popsters Charlie in the Box will bring their quirky, eclectic sound to the Fire and Water Cafe in Northampton tonight to premiere their new album. Please Don't Pet Me, I'm Working.

"The album is kind of a mix of songs from the last year or so," said lead singer and songwriter Willem Hartong, calling the collection largely "archive material." I'm Working was conceived originally as a vehicle for promoting the goofy, adlibbed, and generally unlikely track "Beach Song," which in turn provides the soundtrack to another of Hartong's projects, the film Olympic Greasy Watermelon, which Hartong described as "very Spinal Tap." The film, which features all of the members of Charlie in the Box in some capacity, follows the Olympic Greasy Watermelon Team on the rocky road to victory and glory, and will debut in 2001 in Boston, New York, San Francisco and Minneapolis.

But for now, Hartong and his band are playing a small series of promotional gigs in support of I'm Working, which was fleshed out with three songs recorded in Bearsville Studios in Woodstock, NY, and five less polished tracks recorded by Hartong and his musical cohorts in various apartments across Boston. The band had attempted to re-record some of these roughly cut songs into more finished forms, but the results generally struck Hartong and co. as lacking the charm and appeal of the originals. "We took what we liked and put it in a CD," he says, and I'm Working was born.

Notwithstanding the silliness of "Beach Song," there's a surprising maturity and elegance to the album; the songs are fleshy and dense, but never overproduced, maintaining their sincerity and truthfulness as singer/songwriter fair even through the electric bombast of "Angeline" and the organ-spun tones of "Overdrive," although most of the songs are basically acoustic compositions.

The album follows Charlie in the Box's LP, The Ariadne Thread, which Hartong described as "a little bit more dreamy, not as aggressive, much more polished."

"We're taking a shot at pop, although we aren't really aligned with the mainstream, for a number of reasons," he said, commenting that to him, the album "represents an emerging community."

About the often-praised Boston music scene, Hartong said, "It's competitive to a point, but there're a lot of talented people - insular in a way, but people take care of each other."

Charlie in the Box will be performing at the Fire and Water Café tonight at 9 p.m.

COURTESY OF CHARLIE IN THE BOX

Willem Hartong speaks about his unique style to the Collegian.

Jazz livens UMass

By Jeanie Gorlovsky
Collegian Staff

Feet were tapping and fingers were snapping Tuesday night at the Fine Arts Center as UMass students and Amherst residents enjoyed a concert by the Jazz Lab Ensemble. The show was presented at 8 p.m. by the UMass Jazz Studies Program and the Residential Arts program in the Benzanson Recital Hall.

Before the actual Jazz Lab Ensemble, two "guest" jazz groups performed during the first part of the show. The first "guest" group was called Whiz Kids. It was a group of six undergraduate male students, all but one of whom are freshmen who have only been playing in the group for about six weeks. They performed three jazz pieces. The first was called "Clonk and Dagger," and it featured several impressive solos by the trombone player Richard Hanks and the trumpet player Jeff Wisseit. There was really good musical interplay between the two Whiz Kids. There was also great supporting work done by the bass player Jesse Richards and the drum player Jeff Jones. The second piece, "Autumn Leaves," featured a beautiful trumpet solo by Wisseit and a melodious interlude on the vibes by Steve Brown, the only sophomore in the group. The sounds made on the drums made it seem as though a person on stage was walking through falling leaves. "Late-Night Blues," the last thing Whiz Kids performed, sounded like anything but night blues.

It started with a bright, jaunty beginning on the drums and included cheerful vibe sounds and a very powerful trombone interlude by Hanks. The group's piano player, Toby Parner, seemed to really get into the music on all three songs the Whiz Kids performed. Overall, the group did an excellent job, especially considering that they are all young performers who have not worked together for very long. The only problem I had was that everyone looked very glum on stage, not like they were enjoying themselves.

By contrast, the second "guest" group to perform during the concert, Jazz All Stars, looked like its members were having a great time being on stage. They seemed very relaxed and comfortable with being on stage, which was quite nice. Jazz All Stars is composed of seven more experienced undergraduate jazz musicians. Their first piece, "Bemscha Swing," started with the two saxophone players, Geoff Vidal and Rick Tuntunsian. Throughout their performance both Vidal and Tuntunsian really seemed to work well together and really got into their music. During this piece there was also a great bass solo by Alec Derian, whose fingers just flew on his instrument. Rob David was very professional sounding on the drums. The vibe player, Damon Grant, also added a lot to this ensemble's performance. At the end of "Bemscha Swing" David abruptly stopped playing his backup rhythm and then all of a sudden everyone in the group started playing the ending portion of the song, with it fading out on the sound of the saxes and trumpet playing. It was a very well done conclusion. The Jazz All Stars also played a second piece, "Stella by Starlight," which featured a very long trumpet solo by Missy Moteu and a skillfully done piano interlude by Paul Bueno. In this song the instruments blended together very well, and the musicians seemed to be very in sync with each other. There was a really good interaction between the band members on stage.

For the second part of the performance, the audience enjoyed five selections played by the Jazz Lab Ensemble, which is headed by Chris Kozak, a graduate student in the UMass jazz program. This group is larger than the first two, comprised of about 20 players, including several of the Whiz Kids, and organized into four subgroups—saxes, trumpets, trombones and the rhythm section. The Jazz Lab Ensemble's first piece, "Kingfish," featured two great jazz solos and a very nice trumpet solo. Another piece, "Blue Landscape," was a very energetic song with a really impressive trumpet and sax interlude. Their last performance, called the "One-Fingered Snap," was a really fun piece performed with a great deal of vigor. Tom Bergeron did a beautiful, powerful solo on the trumpet. There was also a nice piano solo by Ben Lyons. A lot of credit has to be given to the rhythm section, which did a wonderful job. Ari Dugan and Jesse Richards, who shared the job of bass player, were especially impressive, as was Jeff Jones on drums. Overall, the group performed really well, with a good interaction between the players. Kozak did a good job conducting, especially considering the fact that this is the first ensemble he has ever conducted. During the evening, he thanked several members of the Jazz Studies Program for helping him learn how to play and teach jazz.

White Ladder triumphs

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

DAVID GRAY
White Ladder
ATO/BMG

It doesn't have to be his soothing, painfully sincere voice. Nor does it have to be his thoughtful, poetic lyrics. It doesn't have to be his deft combination of acoustic and live instrumentation with subtle electronic beats, either. It doesn't have to be any of it could be all of these aspects of Welsh musician David Gray's album White Ladder that get you hooked and pulls you into his world. But chances are something will connect you with Gray's art and keep White Ladder glued in your stereo for all occasions. It happened to me and I'm not alone.

COURTESY OF DAVIDGRAY.COM

David Gray's White Ladder is a benchmark in the singer-songwriter arena.

David Gray has been making a sizable name for himself in the States recently with nearly universal acclaim for his most recent release and regular rotation of the video for the first single "Babylon" on MTV2. No matter what the current musical scene is littered with, intelligent, honest singer-songwriters always feel like a breath of fresh air. However, regardless of talent, such artists are certainly in no small supply; therefore Gray elevates himself from the pack by combining lyrical and vocal talent with sparsely emergent, production and interestingly diverse themes.

Granted, with a voice as emotive as Gray's, it's hard for every song to not sound like a love ballad, and Gray thankfully resists the undeniable urge.

"Silver Lining" appears to be a cryptic look at success balanced with the accompanying negative forces: "Step into the silence/take it into your own two hands/and scatter it like diamonds all across these lands" could refer to the relative silence of mainstream music or his homeland, and when he later asks "why time after time they drag you down, down into the darkness," one is left to wonder in what context these detractors present themselves. "We're Not Right" eloquently tells the tale of an individual wrestling with alcoholism and "Nightblindness" details the hopelessness and impending doom of a family stricken with poverty.

When Gray does write a love song however, it's nothing short of brilliant. "This Year's Love" is possibly the most affecting song on the album, accentuated simply by a piano, and the lyrics have the lovesick progression from confidence to helplessness. "This year's love had better last/heaven knows it's high time," bleeds sorrowfully into, "I open up my arms and fall/lasting all control of every dream inside my soul." Gray speaks of his uncontrolled emotions on "Please Forgive Me," one of the most diverse songs musically on the album, and on "Babylon," he just aches when pouring out the line, "If you want it/come and get it/crying out loud/the love that I was giving you was never in doubt."

Such a line could easily double as an invitation to the listener.

www.dailycollegian.com

In a small port on the shores of Portugal...

Shear Bliss Holistic Salon
413-253-2322
• Excellent Cuts & Colors
• Facials • Aveda/Alterna
• Body Sugaring & more
Bring in coupon
Get $5 off Haircolor or Perm

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
• Cars - Mini Vans
• Trucks - SUV's
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(On bus route)
U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL

Styles by Deborah
proudly announces
New Spa Services featuring All Natural Skin Care Products
❑ Luxury Facials
❑ Spa Pedicures
❑ Body Waxing
❑ Manicures
65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

UMASS ATHLETICS MEN'S BASKETBALL & ICE HOCKEY STUDENT TICKET PICK-UP SCHEDULE
9:00 AM – 4:30 PM – CURRY HICKS CAGE
10:00 AM – 2:00 PM – CAMPUS CENTER (Near info desk)
ALL STUDENT SEATS FOR ICE HOCKEY AND MEN'S BASKETBALL FOR T 2000-2001 SEASONS ARE GENERAL ADMISSION!!!!

PICK-UP DATE	SPORT	DATE OF GAME/OPPONENT
Tuesday, October 10, 2000	Hockey	Oct. 21, 2000 vs. Colgate
Monday, October 16, 2000	Hockey	Oct. 27, 2000 vs. Merrimack
	Men's Basketball	Nov. 3, 2000 vs. California All-Stars
Monday, October 23, 2000	Hockey	Nov. 4, 2000 vs. New Hampshire
	Men's Basketball	Nov. 10, 2000 vs. Statmaster.Com
Monday, October 30, 2000	Hockey	Nov. 16, 2000 vs. Connecticut
	Men's Basketball	Nov. 18, 2000 vs. Iona
Monday, November 13, 2000	Hockey	Nov. 25, 2000 vs. St. Cloud State
Monday, November 20, 2000	Hockey	Dec. 1, 2000 vs. Boston University
	Men's Basketball	Dec. 7, 2000 vs. Providence
Monday, November 27, 2000	Men's Basketball	Dec. 17, 2000 vs. Boston College
Monday, December 11, 2000	Hockey	Dec. 30, 2000 vs. Brown
	Men's Basketball	Jan. 6, 2001 vs. George Washington
	Hockey	Jan. 7, 2001 vs. Providence
	Hockey	Jan. 13, 2001 vs. Northeastern
	Men's Basketball	Jan. 18, 2001 vs. Dayton
	Hockey	Jan. 19, 2001 vs. Merrimack
	Hockey	Jan. 25, 2001 vs. UMass Lowell
	Hockey	Jan. 27, 2001 vs. Northeastern
Monday, January 29, 2001	Men's Basketball	Feb. 3, 2001 vs. Fordham
	Hockey	Feb. 9, 2001 vs. Maine
	Hockey	Feb. 10, 2001 vs. Maine
	Men's Basketball	Feb. 14, 2001 vs. Xavier
Monday, February 5, 2001	Men's Basketball	Feb. 17, 2001 vs. Temple
	Men's Basketball	Feb. 20, 2001 vs. Rhode Island
Monday, February 12, 2001	Hockey	Feb. 24, 2001 vs. Boston College
Tuesday, February 20, 2001	Men's Basketball	March 3, 2001 vs. St. Bonaventure
	Hockey	March 3, 2001 vs. New Hampshire

PICK UP & GAME DATES SUBJECT TO CHANGE. VALID 1 MASS STUDENT ID CARD NEEDED TO PICK UP TICKETS. AUXILIARY FEE SHOULD HAVE ALREADY BEEN PAID.

radical christian worship
real teachings, real praise- for real life
Agape Community Church
47 East Street, Hadley
10-noon • Sundays
413-253-7078 • www.arcchurch.org/agape

Primordial Sound Meditation
A program developed by
Deepak Chopra, MD
Learn the Personal Mantra which makes Meditation Easy and Effective. Discover the Silence which develops Inner Peace and Activates the Power to Create the Life you Desire.
Classes now forming in Northampton
For information call
1-888-270-2031

That's the first lesson liberal arts & sciences majors learn in the 15 month joint
MS Accounting/MBA program at Northeastern University.
Northeastern
Graduate School of Professional Accounting
617-373-3244 • www.cba.neu.edu/gspa
Come learn more about our program at the Graduate & Professional School information Day in the Student Union Ballroom.
Wednesday, October 25 from 10:00am to 3:00 pm.

Minutewomen to host primetime match ups

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

There's no time like primetime and primetime hits the Curry Hicks Cage this weekend when Xavier and Temple bring its beat against the Massachusetts women's volleyball team.

UMass (8-10, 4-4 A-10) is coming off a big five match win on Monday night over longtime rival UConn, and hopes to keep the momentum flowing this weekend. Its last out-of-conference win of the season proved to be a good test for the competition that lies ahead this weekend.

The Atlantic 10 tournament only includes its top four volleyball squads to compete for the championship, and both of the teams entering the Pioneer Valley this weekend hold spots above UMass in the standings.

Xavier (12-6, 6-2 A-10) the 7 p.m. Friday night kick arrives in third place of the standings, and is coming off a couple of sweeps last weekend over Fordham (Friday) and Manhattan (Sunday). The key to the Musketeers offense is junior Sara Bachus, who leads all Xavier scorers with 274 kills, which ranks her third in the A-10 in that category. Bachus scored 19 of those kills against UMass in September.

Earlier this season the Minutewomen gave Xavier all they could handle without succumbing to the Maroon and White. After being shutout in the first match and dropping the second one, UMass shocked the Ohio crowd with wins in the third and fourth games. The fifth match up didn't leave any volleyball fans going home unsatisfied. The Minutewomen had the match tied at 14, but lost when Xavier marked up two quick points. Although UMass returned home with the loss, it proved to everyone that it doesn't let its head get down when the going gets tough. It proved it could play with anyone.

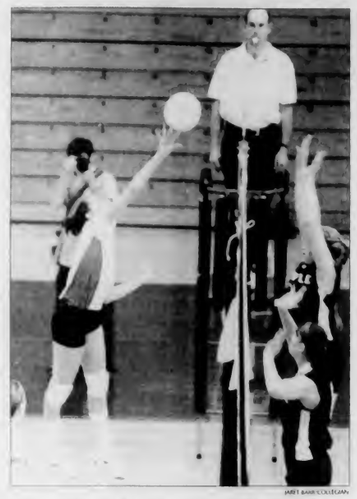
Saturday night's match-up doesn't bring an easier opponent. Dayton (13-7, 5-3 A-10) holds the fourth and final tournament spot in the A-10 rankings and boasts last week's conference player of the week, Carla Muntz. The senior setter notched her 3,000 career assist in the Flyers' last win over Fordham, and grabbed 14 digs over the course of the evening. She's Xavier's version of UMass's senior setter Jenni Drennan.

The last time the Minutewomen were pitted against the Flyers, the Maroon and White didn't fare well losing the game in straight sets. Senior co-captain Rebecca Dawson led UMass scorers with 13 kills in its first conference loss while junior Lymarie Llovet put up 12 kills of her own.

The Minutewomen defense will have to keep its eyes on Susan Westbrock and Sierra Bobby who each banged 14 points for Dayton against UMass.

Playing well recently for the Maroon and White offensive have been Llovet and sophomore Jen Davis, who each scored double-doubles in the UMass win over UConn on Monday night. Sophomore Eric Baxter and senior Jenni Drennan proved to be the defensive standouts for the Maroon and White providing big blocks when the need arrived.

This weekend will determine how much the Minutewomen have improved since mid-September. The popular home court advantage will also come into play, considering both of the losses earlier in the season took place in Ohio.



JANET BARRY/COLLEGIAN

Primetime knocks on the door of the Curry Hicks Cage this weekend when Xavier and Temple bring it to the Massachusetts women's volleyball team.

UMass soccer looks for A-10 elevation

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

Top floor: outdoors apparel, athletic equipment, sporting goods and the Massachusetts men's soccer team.

Taking the elevator up this past Wednesday evening, the Minutemen, with a victory over No. 19 University of Rhode Island, became the first place team in the Atlantic 10 conference with a record of 9-4-2, 3-0-1 in the A-10.

However, UMass will have little time to enjoy the view from the peak of the Atlantic 10 as they will compete in two division games this weekend at Totman field.

Dayton and Xavier will attempt to knock the Minutemen down the A-10 ladder, but they will not have an easy go at it as the Maroon and White are undefeated in the A-10 and have won four out of its last five games, three of which were by shutout.

Helping keep UMass in its lead position this weekend will be junior goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn. O'Quinn has played every minute of every game this season for the Minutemen posting a less than one goal a game average and an almost eighty percent save percentage. Especially dominating the in A-10, O'Quinn has only given up three goals to conference opponents this season.

On the offensive end of the field for the Minutemen, senior Seth Lilburn and sophomore Jeff Deren will create problems for the competition's defense this weekend. Lilburn scored the winning goal and his second of the season against URI early into the overtime period during the game on Wednesday night. Teammate Deren with seven goals is the leading scorer for the Minutemen this season, his last coming in a 1-0 victory over George Washington University last weekend.

Also keeping close tabs on the Minutemen offense will be UMass' opponent on Friday afternoon – the University of Dayton. Entering this weekend with a record of 10-3-0, 5-1 in the A-10, the Flyers, similarly to UMass, have won four out of their last five games.

Scoring six goals in its last two games, the Dayton squad possesses a powerful offense that has pummeled many of its opponents this season. Dayton is lead by a duo of freshmen that have scored more than twenty goals between them. R.J. Kaszuba put away 15 goals this season and recorded four assists, while teammate Sunday Iyenahe has beaten goalies eight times and tallied two assists.

Although not presenting the best overall record (4-10) this season, Xavier is 4-2 in the A-10 and has also been wracking up big numbers offensively lately. Entering the weekend on a three game win streak, the Musketeers have posted eleven goals in their last three games, which is more than they got in the whole month of September.

Leading the offensive charge for Xavier are three juniors, two of which compose the defense for the X-men. Defensemen Rob Baker and Logan Wallace have stepped forward for the Musketeers as Baker has scored three goals and grabbed six assists, while Wallace has netted four goals with a single assist. Not to be outdone, forward Mike Kelly has delivered three goals and the same number of assists for Xavier.

With the level of offense that Dayton and Xavier are capable of generating, the Minuteman defense will have its work cut out for itself when it takes to Totman field at 3:30 p.m. tomorrow for its match against Dayton and 1 p.m. on Sunday in its game against Xavier.

UMass looks for success in familiar aqua vista

Justin Pearson
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's water polo team stays in Amherst for the first and only time this season, looking to erase the memory of last weekend's poor performance. After a disappointing 0-5 showing out West, the Minutemen will look to exact some revenge this weekend at the CWPA League Tournament at Amherst College. Despite having three straight for the first time this season, the Minutemen (19-6, 9-0) dropped only one spot in the national ranking to No. 12.

"We're just looking to put last weekend behind us," junior Greg Traver said. He went on to add, "It's important to come home and play in front of our families and fans, especially after all the traveling that we did last weekend. It'll be nice to finally play at home."

The Minutemen start things off bright and early on Saturday morning at 10 a.m. when they take on Connecticut College. The Camels are set to get over the bump so far in their inaugural season, posting a 1-8 record.

UMass junior Carlos Ramos, the team leader in points with 65, will be looking to pick apart a Camel defense that has allowed more than ten goals in each of its eight losses so far this season. Ramos scored five goals in a California last weekend for the Minutemen, a mark that was bettered only by fellow junior Mike Foley's six in the losses to Pepperdine, Long Beach State, and Loyola Marymount.

Following the match with Connecticut College the Maroon and White head back to the pool on Saturday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. to take on Fordham. The Rams (3-6) have struggled as of late, dropping their last three, all to teams that the Minutemen have already defeated this season.

UMass will take on No. 13 St. Francis at 8:30 p.m. in its third and final match of the night. The Terriers, 12-1-1 who have won ten straight and twenty of their last twenty-one overall will once again look to their foreign legion to shut down the Minutemen. 12 of the 16 players on the St. Francis roster hail from Eastern Europe.

Traver, who is fourth on the team in scoring with 36 points, believes that in order for the Minutemen to end the Terriers winning streak they need to play the way that they are capable of.

"We can't let them dictate the pace of the game," Traver said. "They have good individual players but if

Turn to POLO, page 7

ATTENTION GRADUATE STUDENTS!

COME HEAR WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A SUCCESSFUL FACULTY CANDIDATE AT

THE UMASS GRADUATE INFORMATION DAY: WORKING ON AN ACADEMIC CAREER

Tuesday October 24th
9:00 am-noon
Student Union Ballroom

Find out what the benefits are in the teaching field and how to prepare an effective Curriculum Vitae and Cover Letter.

ALL DOCTORAL AND MASTERS CANDIDATES ARE WELCOME!

Campus Career Network

Sponsored by the Campus Career Network and the Graduate Studies Office

UMASS The UMass Index Yearbook

ATTENTION!!!

CLASS OF 2001

SENIOR PORTRAITS

OCTOBER 23RD-27TH

Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com

School Access #147

(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)

DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY

Walsworth Publishing Company

Order Your 2001 Yearbook ONLY $30.00

Log on to www.walsworth.com or Call 1-800-929-1503

(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

TRASH TALK

NFL Week 8 Note: Picks are for entertainment purposes only	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkinson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
Last Week	(Overall)	6-8-0 (42-40-3)	7-7-0 (42-40-3)	8-6-0 (46-36-3)	8-6-0(41-41-3)	7-7-0 (40-42-3)
Detroit @ Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay by 8 1/2	Tampa Bay	Detroit	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay
New England @ Indianapolis	Indianapolis by 8 1/2	New England	Indianapolis	New England	Indianapolis	Indianapolis
Chicago @ Philadelphia	Philadelphia by 7	Philadelphia	Chicago	Chicago	Philaddelphia	Philadelphia
Tennessee @ Baltimore	Pick Em	Baltimore	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee
Arizona @ Dallas	Dallas by 7	Arizona	Arizona	Dallas	Arizona	Dallas
Denver @ Cincinnati	Denver by 10	Cincinnati	Cincinnati	Denver	Denver	Cincinnati
New Orleans @ Atlanta	Atlanta by 1 1/2	New Orleans	New Orleans	New Orleans	New Orleans	New Orleans
Buffalo @ Minnesota	Minnesota by 6 1/2	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota
San Francisco @ Carolina	Carolina by 3	Carolina	Carolina	San Francisco	San Francisco	San Francisco
St. Louis @ Kansas City	St Louis by 7 1/2	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis	St Louis
Cleveland @ Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh by 9	Cleveland	Cleveland	Cleveland	Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh
Seattle @ Oakland	Oakland by 7 1/2	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland
Washington @ Jacksonville	Washington by 3 1/2	Jacksonville	Washington	Jacksonville	Washington	Jacksonville
Miami @ NY Jets	NY Jets by 3	Miami	Miami	Miami	NY Jets	NY Jets

From worst to first (well at least a tie), I feel kind of like the '91 Braves. Nevermind. That's a sore spot for me right now.

To start out my first "Trash Talk," I have to single out WHITE. When this whole column was initiated and I was wildly opposed to it, it was WHITE who told me that I would never get to write it anyway, that I would never get to put the black ink on the WHITE page. Well, El Blanco, after racing out to a commanding lead and leaving everyone in a cloud of WHITE dust, you've settled back to earth with a couple of consecutively poor performances. You might say that you've been WHITEwashed and you may want to consider using WHITE-Out after making your picks this week, WHITE. WHITE, WHITE. By the way I hold no resentment for that nickname that you somehow forced upon me.

As for Big Daddy, El Torro, the Big Hurt, Die-hard Colts fan Wilkinson, all that I can say is that it's pretty sad when you can't get your name spelled right in your own newsroom. I still don't know how you're one game better than me overall. You're blind dedication to the likes of Cincinnati, Cleveland and Arizona may be admirable, but it's just plain dumb. Still, you have moved into a tie for second place with Chief WHITEtail up there, but I'm looming. I still think it's sad that Elliot Garbauskas could pick games about as good as any of us.

It's hard to toss any flack to my boy Smitty, who is now running away with our friendly little competition, but I'll take a shot. After railing that Amherst High could beat the wasteful Bengals in TT, you go and take them against Pittsburgh. Now granted Kent Graham should never be allowed to step onto an NFL field ever again, but the men of steel were coming off a good road win at the Testaverde-less Jets (Of course, all you losers took Cincinnati, so Smitty shouldn't bear the brunt of the blame. "You are pathetic Shao-Khan wins." Plus, after all you're yapping about how great the Patsies are, and how everyone should take them all the time, they get annihilated at home by the aforementioned QB and their own former RB, Curtis Martin. That was one of the saddest performances I have ever seen.

Last (literally), and in this case least, comes Mr. Rose. Now frankly, I thought you were gonna run away with this thing. For anyone that hasn't met our resident sport's statistics guru, he really does know his stuff. Yet, that hasn't gotten him dunin near anywhere as he's doing a nice job cleaning the basement. I'm going to take it easy on you though because you get mad props for wearing the Big Mac Cardinals jerseys as St. Louis was being eliminated. My advice, write down your picks and then take the exact opposite. It would have worked for Ralls and Koenig.

On to my locks of the week. Let's start out with those Bengals getting 10 at home as Denver comes into town. Last week, Denver had a similar spread against Cleveland (granted at home), and they'll continue to get well this week against the inept team in black and orange.

Remind me again why New Orleans is getting points this week. The Saints head to Atlanta for a showdown against the inept Falcon offense. New Orleans has the league's best defense, making them a sure thing getting one and a half.

Lastly, the disappointing Panthers are favored this week against their division rival, Niners. After a tough loss last week at Lambeau, San Francisco will be hungry for a win. Jeff Garcia is easily this year's biggest surprise at QB. I'll take San Fran getting three.

Adam Martignetti

Minutewomen head to the Charles

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

Most of Boston will be shut down this weekend as rowers from around the world flock to the Charles River for the United States' largest regatta, the Head of the Charles. The city will serve as host for the 36th time.

The race is expected to bring in over 300,000 spectators to see the sport's best athletes compete. The international competition will bring 5,400 competitors to Bean Town to take part in 19 different events. The Charles River course will start at the Boston University Boathouse and continue three miles upstream. This year UMass will be proud to send the Massachusetts crew team with Coach Dietz.

A seat in the one boat that UMass will have in the water this Sunday has brought competition to practice this week. The women of the team woke in the wee hours of the morning to show their skills in seat racing. Vying for a position in the eight-man boat, rowers were put in boats of four to race each other in hopes of finding possible leaders for the team. The rowers for the final boat were picked on Wednesday.

"The seat racing was very competitive. We had to take it to an extra day," Head Coach Jim Dietz said. "We could only fill so many seats. The race was positive because it was so close."

The tight competition came between Laura Kramer, Mila Gorzkowski, Anna Talucci, and Erica Earl. The final boat has Danielle Smith, Mary Neubecker, Julie VanderPloeg, and Heather Walker, who did not have to seat race based on the Erg Score Times, a rowing skills test taken three weeks ago. Seat raced into the Charles will be Kate Tynan, Erika Earl, Mila Gorzkowski, and Anna Talucci. The boat will be lead by cosswain Sara Pragluski.

"Anna Talucci is always a surprise to me," said Dietz. "She's small but she can pull hard."

Last year's crew team raced four boats, but will only have one boat to represent the Maroon and White this year. With an unexpected 300 clubs entering the drawing for the chance to race, UMass was only able to come up with one boat of five in the lottery.

The Charles Race of '99 wasn't a high point of the crew pre-season, only placing 43th in a race of 64 boats. This year the team hopes to finish in the top 20, which would mark a great improvement.

"We are looking for improvement over last year. This race will show where we are nationally ranked," commented Assistant Coach Greg Kruczynski.

The regatta will bring in a lot of strong club programs from around the States as well as many university programs that UMass will face in the spring season, and in the Atlantic 10 Fall Championship on November 5th.

The Minutewomen are looking forward to seeing George Washington University along with Temple, as their toughest competitors. Pragluski was excited on taking out Boston University, Brown, and Northeastern. "We plan on definitely beating them. It will be a tough victory."

Seeing how well the other teams match up will give strong indication on what the women should focus on for skill building during the winter freeze. The Minutewomen will finish practicing this fall on the second week of November.

Dietz is looking for a better outcome this year, but not having been able to practice on Thursday shortened practice time that the eight-man boat has prior to Sunday's race. The best result UMass has had in this race was in 1988, placing 12th.

Along with the team representing UMass will be junior Gavin Blackmore. Noted as one of the top lightweight rowers in the country, he is expected to make the men's singles a tight race. Men's Varsity Club eight and Women's Novice eight will both race on Saturday.

The Minutewomen will head into the Charles River in the Regatta's last race, on Sunday at 5:30 p.m.

soccer

continued from page 10

earned a 3-1 decision at Totman Field last year. Prior to that, Dayton squeezed out a 1-0 win over UMass in the semifinals of the 1998 A-10 tournament at Baujan Field.

However, in their last regular season meeting in Dayton back in 1998, the Minutewomen rallied from a 1-0 deficit late in regulation to pull out a 2-1 win.

The Flyers (11-4, 6-1 in A-10) are led by sophomore Missy Gregg, the conference's leading scorer with 42 points overall. Last season's A-10 Rookie of the Year and third team All-American is making a strong push for the A-10 Player of the Year Award this year.

Senior forward Melissa Bush and junior midfield Bridget Bushman are also key offensive threats for the Flyers. The two players are tied for second on the team with 16 points apiece. Goalkeeper Stephanie Weinfield is statistically the top goalie in the conference, as her 0.92 goals against average is slightly better than Jamie Epperstein of Rhode Island and Kaitlin Glass of La Salle. Xavier (9-6, 6-1 in A-10) is a club that mirrors the Minutewomen in many ways. The Musketeers stumbled out of the gate to a 1-6 start, but have since rebounded to win eight straight.

UMass has bounced back from a 4-5 mark at the midway point of the season to roll off five consecutive wins. But it's clear that something will have to give when the two teams take the field in Cincinnati on Sunday afternoon.

"We're just taking it one game at a time," UMass senior forward Kara Green said. "All we're looking at this week is training and practicing for Dayton, then Xavier. Each game is very important, but I think we're ready."

The Musketeers had massive problems generating offense in the early going, but have had more success as of late. Senior captain Annette Gruber is the only player on the club in double figures in scoring as she is 19 points on the season.

However, it has been defensive and goalkeeping that has allowed Xavier to win eight straight. The Musketeers haven't given up a goal since a 3-1 win over Oregon on Sept. 22, a span of almost a month.

But the Minutewomen haven't been much of a slouch since that same date, either. They have won six of seven since Sept. 22, the only loss coming to a ranked Arizona State club.

Top players for UMass include junior Brooke Bartlett (17 points) and senior Kara Ciocca (15 points). Green is coming off a solid game on Sunday against George Washington where she netted a goal and an assist to boost her point total to 15 points.

Goalkeepers Julie Podbrasky and Kelly Nigh have also been a key factor in the recent resurgence. Nigh is unbeaten on the season (3-0), while Podbrasky has a 1.20 GAA and three shutouts to her credit.

JANET BARRY/COLLEGIAN

This weekend, the Massachusetts women's soccer team heads to the lovely state of Ohio for a pair of Atlantic 10 contests with Dayton and Xavier, looking to virtually clinch an NCAA tournament birth.

UMass HOCKEY TAKES ON

RED RAIDERS COLGATE ATHLETICS

COLGATE

Jeff Turner

THE MASS ATTACK

SATURDAY OCTOBER 21, 2000
William D. Mullins Center

Mass Attack T-Shirt Giveaway Intermission Entertainment

For Tickets Information Call the UMass Athletic Ticket Office

413-545-0810

www.dailycollegian.com

Council Travel
America's Leader in Student Travel

SALE SALE SALE

Sale Dates: 10/24-10/28

LONDON	$195
PARIS	$245
MADRID	$305
DUBLIN	$255
AMSTERDAM	$295

Other destinations available!

Shop extended hours–Tues-Fri: 9-7, Sat: 11-3

44 Main Street
413-256-1261

polo

continued from page 6

we play our style and don't get stuck in too many one on one situations I think we'll do just fine."

UMass coach Russ Yarworth will once again look to junior co-captain, goalie, J.R. Vanderwall and the rest of the Minuteman defense to shut down the Terriers potent offense which scored 50 goals in four games last weekend and has scored in double digits in all 23 matches this season.

If anybody is going to put the kibosh on the Terriers then it is Vanderwall. "The Wall" has made 150 saves in 68 quarters of play in between the pipes for the Minutemen this season and this weekend he should move into the top ten for single season saves in UMass history. He already holds the UMass single season record for goals against average and save percentage—both of which he set during his freshman year.

UMass heads back to the aquatic depths on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. for its fourth and final game to take on the No. 18 Knights of Queens College.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Spacious living room. High ceilings, AC, Puffton Village 549-6434 ASAP

AUTO FOR SALE

97 Honda Civic Ex. Low miles 35,000. Perfect condition, standard. $12,995 Ian 546-0981

HONDA ACCORD LX, 1990, AT/PW/PL/AC, 140k miles, excellent condition. Contact evenings, 413-736-6161

1981 Mazda 626 Sports coupe. Loaded $750 obo 253-1708

Quality Autos For Sale 85 Dodge Caravan, 5speed, loaded $450 90 Ford Ranger XLT, burgandy $1000 Call 413-286-0857

91 Ford Taurus black, 90k mi $2200 549-5230

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

COMPUTERS

For Sale: used desktop computer - P3, 500MHZ, 128MB, 20GB, DVD, CDRW, NIC, ATI 30 card, plus more. Call Surya @ 546-2613

HP Internal CD-RW Burner 8x4x32 NEW $250 Call Caroline 253-2362

LAPTOPS for only $399, warranty included. Email:laptop4me@hotmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office, get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today, 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

EMPLOYMENT

PAID MEDIA INTERNSHIP AVAILABLE
Are you looking for a way to combine an education in journalism or communication with social activism? Do you have an interest in grassroots organizing and want to learn how to use the media as a tool for political activism? If you have taken basic journalism or communication coursework, the Peace Development Fund has a paid internship position for you. Position begins immediately and runs until May/June 2001. Flexible schedule. For more information contact Rose Sackey-Milligan at 413-256-8306, ext. 227, or rose@peacefund.org. Send resume and cover letter to Media Internship at PDF, P.O. Box 1280, Amherst, MA 01004, or to rose@peacefund.org

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. 3hrs per wk to 20hrs per wk flexible work environment. Great gymnastics center with loose foam + resi pit system. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, Mass. 01301 413-773-3646

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME
Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

EMPLOYMENT

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Three Couches, 4 loveseats, 4 sleep sofas. $65-$150 free delivery 586-2221

HOUSE FOR RENT

Fully furnished lovely house for rent Nov. + Dec. only. Car optional. $1200 Nego. 548-7008

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Djata Bumpus. 256-0364 (Incorrect number ran in previous ads.)

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

5 Girls need housemate for big house on Main St. Private room $230/mo + utilities. 2 blocks from Amherst Center. No sex preference call Sam @ 253-9627

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female wanted to share room in apt. Starting Dec/Jan Call 546-3930 ask for Trisha

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours -800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreak direct.com

The Daily Collegain Classifieds has all you Advertising answers!!

Call 545-3500 TODAY!!

YOUR AD COULD BE RIGHT HERE!!

DON'T DELAY CALL TODAY!! 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WCCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Govt to Govt
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	TNT
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

FRIDAY EVENING C - Campus OCTOBER 20, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal	Rewind	Mailer on Mailer: "An American Masters Special"		Fiesta in-Sky
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Fugitive "Guilt" (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investign.		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Fugitive "Guilt" (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investign.		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Two Guys-Girl	Trouble With	Norm (N)	Madigan Men	20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	56		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny		Sabrina-Witch	Grosse Pointe	Popular (N) (In Stereo)		News	Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Providence "Safe at Home"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTAX		7th Heaven "Says Who?"			Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial		World's Nastiest Neighbors		Cheating Spouses		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	18	News		NBC News	Extra		Hollywood	Providence "Safe at Home"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends			Police Videos (In Stereo) (PA)		Freakylinks (N) (In Stereo)		News	Friends	Fraser
WWLP	22	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Providence "Safe at Home"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	The Games	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News		ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier		Two Guys-Girl	Trouble With	Norm (N)	Madigan Men	20/20 (N)	News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier			World's Nastiest Neighbors		Cheating Spouses		Fraser	Mad About You	Spin City
WTBS	72	Rosesnne	Rosesnne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince			★½ "Eagle Vacation" (1997, Comedy) Chevy Chase, Beverly D'Angelo				★★ "The Golden Child" (1986) Eddie Murphy
A&E	45	Night Court		Newsradio	Law & Order "Family Values"			Biography "Annette Funicello"		Poirot "The King of Clubs"		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Trust"
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline	Newshour (N)		Crossfire		World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	26	Saturday Night Live			Daily Show	Stein's Money		Saturday Night Live		Toothbrush	Whose Line?	★½ "Porky's Revenge" (1985, Comedy) Dan Monahan,
DISC	69	Wild Discovery: Sharks			Wild Discovery: Octopus			On the Inside "Inside Area 51"		News	Explore Our	Storm Warning! (N)		Justice Files "Dirty Money"
ESPN	33	Sportscenter			World Series	Reporters		Up Close	World Series	NFL Films (N)		NFL Films (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE	24	Golden Girls	Golden Girls		Intimate Portrait: Wynonna			Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Every Woman's Dream" (1996, Drama) Jeff Fahey,		Once and Again (In Stereo)
MTV	53	Direct Effect	Diary		Road Rules IX Compilation (N) (In Stereo)					Music Videos (In Stereo)		Celebrity
NICK	55	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys		Hey Arnold!	Rugrats		U Pick Toons	Rugrats	U Pick Toons	Facts of Life	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons
SORI	62	Sliders "Slide Like an Egyptian"			Babylon 5			Invisible Man (In Stereo)		★★ "Universal Soldier II: Brothers in Arms" (1998) Matt Battaglia,		Invisible Man (In Stereo)
TLC	29	48 Hours			Heart Surgeon			World's Most Astounding		Sam Sheppard: A Question		48 Hours "On the Run"		World's Most Astounding
TNT	63	ER "Friendly Fire," (In Stereo)			Pretender "A Stand Up Guy"			★★★ "Grease" (1978, Musical) John Travolta, Olivia Newton-John,				★★½ "Baby" (2000, Drama) Farrah Fawcett,
USA	59	Walker, Texas Ranger			JAG "The Black Jet" (In Stereo)			Nash Bridges "Sacraments"		★½ "Cherry Falls" (2000, Suspense) Michael Biehn		Strip Poker	Martin
HBO	67	(4:30)			Bedazzled			Inside the NFL		★★★ "The Hard Way a Vengeance" (1995, Drama) Bruce Willis,		"Blackjop" (2000, Suspense) Lochlyn Munro, (In Stereo)
MAX	65	(4:45)			★★★ "Stakeout" (1987, Comedy-Drama) Richard Dreyfuss,			★ "Drive Me Crazy" (1999, Comedy) Melissa Joan Hart,		★ "Wild Wild West" (1999, Western) Will Smith,		PG-13"
SHOW	65	★★½ "The Nephew" (1998, Drama) Hill Harper, (In Stereo)			NR			★★½ "Mickey Blue Eyes" (1999, Comedy) Hugh Grant,		PG-13		Stargate SG-1 (Outer Limits (In Stereo)			Beggers

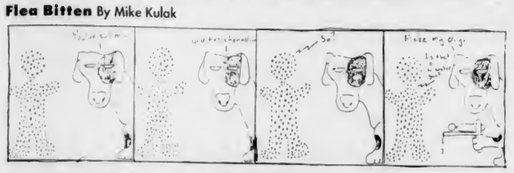
Dilbert By Scott Adams

I'M SURE YOUR BOSS WILL INCREASE THE BUDGET IF YOU SHOW HIM MY PLAN.
I JUST ASKED HIM FOR SOMETHING ELSE I CAN'T KEEP ASKING HIM FOR RESOURCES!
SO... YOU THINK THAT DOING YOUR JOB IS A SIGN OF WEAKNESS?
LOOK WHAT IT DID TO YOU.

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

OH MAN, HERE COMES RODNEY, THE SECOND-GRADE T-BALL JOCKEY.
I'M HERE FOR SOME T-BALL!
YEAH, YOUR MOM'S MY #1 FAN.
DON'T EVEN THINK ABOUT CATCHING THIS, LUNCH TRAY-FACE!
dear diary, I caught my spaghetti reading Marxist literature last night. I worry about things to come.

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak



Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Men's Health magazine recently did an interesting survey.
They ranked UMass as the 9th worst school for today's male
Seriously! My parents Sent me a package two weeks ago, and I still haven't gotten it!

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Robotman By Jim Meddick

ARE YOU SURE YOU WANT TO DO THIS?
I NEED TO PROVE I'M NOT TOO FAT TO FLY. IT'S ALL AERODYNAMICS. I JUST NEED A LITTLE NUDGE TO REACH TAKE-OFF VELOCITY, THAT'S ALL SPRONGGG!
FLAP FLAP FLAP!
FLAP FLAP FLAP!
ACTUALLY, YOU WERE DOING PRETTY WELL UNTIL YOU GOT INTO THAT HOLDING PATTERN OVER THE SNACK BOWL.
LET'S TRY IT ONCE MORE, THIS TIME HIDE THE CHEX MIX.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

ANOTHER DAY, ANOTHER TEA PARTY.
WE'RE NOT TALKING FUZZY-HUZZY MAIN HERE, FOLKS.
WELL, NOT FOR THAT REASON, ABBY, BUT LIKE THE MAIN GOALS HAVE ULTIMATELY NEVER THOUGHT MY FELLOW CITIZENS MORE SENSORS CALLED CYNICISM AND RAGE. EVEN THOUGH THE HERE ARE LESS OF US, OUR ENERGY THOSE DON'T COUNT AS LIES, DO THEY?
NO, NO, THAT'S OKAY. YOU'RE THE DUMB ONE.

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

MMM. A NICE BIG GLASS OF HUMAN BLOOD TO START MY DAY!
HA HA. THAT'S JUST TOMATO JUICE.
IT'LL TAKE A LOT MORE THAN THAT TO GROSS ME OUT, LITTLE BROTHER
THE EXPIRATION DATE ON THE CAN WAS YESTERDAY
EW! BLECCH! DISGUSTING! GET IT AWAY FROM ME!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WHAT'S THAT?
IT'S A SOCK PUPPET. WE'RE USING IT IN AN AD CAMPAIGN AT WORK. I THOUGHT IT WOULD BE FUNNY TO SEE HOW BUCKY REACTS TO IT.
I'VE GOT A BAD FEELING ABOUT THIS.
HEY, BUCKY. I WANT YOU TO MEET MY FRIEND COTTON B. GROSS
WELL, MAKE IT QUICK. I WAS ON MY WAY TO THE WINDOWSILL.

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – I bet you Libra person, are kind of frustrated because we never seem to have serious horoscopes anymore. Even worse, some horoscopes you've read haven't been funny, and your Libra-bearing soul is getting a little antsy. Sucks for Libras, huh? P.S. That rhymes with zebras.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You're likely to come up with an unusual idea today which will surprise you by catching on and gaining in popularity day after day. But I wouldn't call it "McDonalds," because then you're just asking for trouble.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Working for effects is less valuable to you today than working for a true and lasting impression. Life is more than a magic act. Copperfield! To thine own self be true, Romeo! A penny saved is a penny earned. Spelling?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You may meet one of your greatest fans today... and the meeting is sure to be memorable for you – but not for all the expected reasons. It's because that guy from the Ikea kennel floor is really ugly in person.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Oh, Slatbura – you complete me. I eat your pain's wrinkles and I say, "Oh, what a day it will be today." Then I skip down the hall and run into someone and knock them over, seeing them a really big corn spoon. Oops. I guess they weren't eating Starburst.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – I dare you to walk up to your professor today and give him or her an apple. But instead of a regular apple, make it an apple crawling with worms. Or, just give me a worm and say, "Sorry, that used to be an apple."

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You've been a little too intellectual lately, which means hanging out at Smith College to "woo the ladies" probably wasn't a very good idea. Visit Southwest and play beerpong, get really drunk and then go to Antonio's. I don't think we do that enough, really.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – A special relationship is likely to develop soon, and today you'll discover in what direction it is likely to go – like it or not! Ha ha ha! That was so mean! We didn't tell you anything! Like a Magic 8 ball! Come back later!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Have you seen the movie "Air Bud"? It's about this dog who plays basketball, and then the dog goes to the bathroom on a lot, and someone has to clean it up.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – To be or not to be – that is the dumbest question I ever heard. Obviously, the answer is not to be. Because being leaves you on the sidewalk, in the rain, cursing at your ex-girlfriend and sleeping in a trash can.

LEO (Jul. 23-Aug. 22) – Leo, we almost forgot about you! Today will be a Leo-rific day. You'll bask in Leo-ness, and everyone will be saying, "I wish I was a Leo, they get the best stuff." Think of the names with Leo – LEOnardo Di Vinci, LEOnardo DiCaprio, Al Gore, Britney Spears, the entire UMass basketball team, the entire population of China.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Why are you who you are? Cause you aren't much, let me tell ya. You're like a cold, 11 day old Papa John's pizza with only the crust left over.

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 66 LOW: 54	HIGH: 71 LOW: 52	HIGH: 63 LOW: 47

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

LITTLE-KNOWN HISTORY FACT: AFTER APPOINTING HIS HORSE TO CONSUL, CALIGULA BUILT A LARGE CHAIR FOR HIM. © 2000

www.monkey-box.net

Quote of the Day

"I can write in cold blood if I have to, but I like it best when it's fresh and almost too hot to handle."

–Stephen King

ACROSS
1 It's for the course!
4 Trustworthy
9 Bendreader
Count –
14 Hubbub
15 Where the action is 16 Some exams
17 Pre-rain sight
19 Chows a lollipop
20 Chores
21 Food consumer
23 Location
24 Striped animal
27 "Read my –"
30 Read the future
32 Mr. Ziegfeld
33 Kind of track
37 Hen's farewell
39 Admires
40 Reasonable
42 Certain stage comment
43 Lack of manners
44 Guys
45 Less obvious
48 Flower piece
50 Has an intuition
51 Too
55 Boca —, Florida
57 Pack animal
58 Up and about
60 2000 Russell Crowe movie
64 Is concerned
65 Helped
66 – out: scrape by with 67 Rendezvous
68 Slants
69 Like rubies

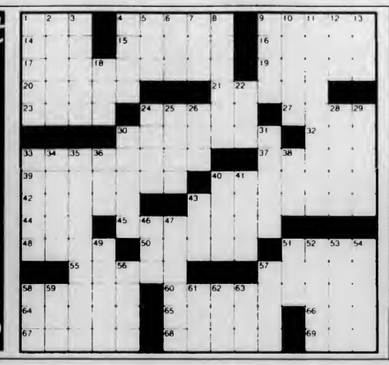
DOWN
1 Agreements
2 Stalesman Stevenson
3 Perch
4 Boys
5 Globe
6 Positive response
7 Ms. Jillian of Los Angeles players
8 Lock pain
9 Spirit in "The Tempest"
10 Kind of hit
12 Type
13 Mountain curve
18 Laura strings
22 Battery size
24 Go very fast
25 Historical time periods
26 River bottom
28 Requests
29 Inner selves
30 Lets go
31 Bail
33 Paper units
34 Valuable thing
35 Travel plan
36 Pioneered
38 Hullabaloo
40 Break in the action
41 Some poems
43 Map abbr
46 Meriam's craft
47 Cincinnati player
49 Manufactures
51 Neighbor of Ga
52 Tardier
53 Use a pipe
54 Rowed
56 Experiment
57 Tops
58 Pretend
59 Kid's card game
61 Fib
62 Nabokov heroine
63 TV room

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

			V	C	R		C	A	S	H	A	G	E	S
			K	I	L	O	A	B	O	U	R	U	S	E
			O	D	I	C	H	A	R	A	P	R	I
			H	E	M		S	H	O	R	T	S	H	I	F	T
			L	O	B	S	T	E	R		A	L	D	O
					H	I	D		F	O	X	Y		N	O	T
			S	A	B	E	R		L	O	G	O		C	A	G	E
			P	I	O		S	I	R	E	N		A	G	R	A
			I	N	N	S		T	R	U	E		C	R	E	E	K
			N	O	V	E	L		F	E	A	M		G	O	V
					O	P	I	E			S	A	T	E	N	S
			R	O	Y	A	L		P	U	R	P	L	E		K	I	T
			A	D	A	G	E		S	H	O	O		O	P	E	N
			H	O	G	A	N		S	E	T	S		N	E	C	K
			H	E	N		R	A	S	H			S	O	L	E

11-14-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

We don't have to tell you to read this page!
Love,
(Night Graphics)



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Sorry No Menu Today

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Kristi Ceccarossi
Photo Technician	Anna Weisfeiler
Copy Editor	Bryan McAllister
Production Supervisor	Roberto Delgado
Production Staff	Elana Premack, Shimauti Dave

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Senior tailback Marcel Shipp, despite missing some time due to a sprained ankle, is back strong to lead the Minutemen into battle against American International College. He rushed 20 times for 114 yards and caught three passes for 20 yards in UMass' 33-10 win over Maine.

Bruised and battered no more; UMass hosts AIC

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts football team has already had one open date on its schedule this season. Having another would not have looked good for the Minutemen when it came time for the selection of the I-AA Playoff teams.

There were talks that the Maroon and White would travel to Manhattan, KS for a clash with Division I powerhouse Kansas State. At the last minute the Wildcats backed out of the contest, suddenly another open date stood. Instead of having two weeks to prepare for New Hampshire, Head Coach Mark Whipple scheduled American International College.

"I'm not going to tell you AIC is an Atlantic 10 caliber team, but we don't need to play an Atlantic 10 caliber team," Whipple said. "We'll get enough of that over the next four weeks."

UMass (4-2, 3-1 A-10) is coming off its most impressive defensive performance of the season. Last week the Minutemen held Maine, one of the nation's top offenses, to 187 total yards.

What is more impressive than the 187 yards allowed is the 24 rushing yards that the Maroon and White surrendered on 31 Maine attempts. This statistic was made possible by 11 sacks of Black Bear quarterback Jake Faton. Redshirt freshman Valdamar Brower had four sacks and for his effort earned A-10 Rookie of the Week honors.

Another reason for UMass' success has been health. For the first time all season, key defensive contributors have been able to practice on a regular basis.

"The defense played its best game of the year," Whipple said. "A lot has to do with health. Kole [Ayi] and Brian Smith have finally been able to practice."

Health has been a problem for the Minutemen for much of the season, most notably at the wide receiver position. The Maroon and White lost Jimmie Howard for the remainder of the season when he tore his anterior cruciate ligament returning a kick in a loss to Hofstra.

Yet the loss of Howard wasn't bad enough, the following week All-America candidate Adrian Zullo went down with a similar injury in a win at Northeastern.

With a depleted receiving corps, UMass was forced to play a more ball control style of offense, but it had to do so with Kevin Quinlan, backup to Walter Payton Award candidate Marcel Shipp. Quinlan did more than a sufficient job, amassing 241 yards in the win over the Huskies. After his A-10 Player of the Week performance, Quinlan was then relegated to splitting time with Shipp as the captain returned from his high ankle sprain.

With all the health problems that the Minutemen have had this season, it seems as though those that have been hobbled with minor injuries throughout the season are recovering at a bad time for the Yellow Jackets.

AIC (5-2, 5-1 Eastern Football Conference), which lost its last game against Southern Connecticut after compiling a five-game winning streak, has more than 1-91 in common with the Maroon and White. The Yellow Jackets will face their second I-AA opponent of the year when they take to the field tomorrow.

FOOTBALL
UMASS VS. AIC
SATURDAY, 1 P.M.
91.1 FM-WMUA
MATT FEATO-PLAY
GENE CISCO-KILL COLOR
PREGAME-12:30
WEEKEND PREVIEW

AIC traveled to NU in its first game of the season and was bombarded, 48-7, by the same Husky squad that UMass defeated five weeks later.

There are two things that Head Coach Art Wilkins will have to deal with when he prepares for tomorrow's game. The Huskies held AIC to negative four yards on the ground and 99 yards through the air in week one. Even worse, in the loss to NU the Yellow Jackets allowed the Huskies a pair of 100-yard rushers. With the Minuteman defense finally emerging from its shell and with the dynamic duo of Shipp and Quinlan in the UMass backfield, it could be could be a long day at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

UMass comes into the contest on a two-game win streak, with both victories coming in the month of October. Whipple's overall record patrolling the UMass sideline is 25-9, but his record outside of September is 20-4.

"I don't have any idea why we're 5-3 in September, but I just thank God that it's October," Whipple said.

The Minutemen also caught a break last week when James Madison lost to Rhode Island 7-6. JMU had been previously unbeaten in A-10 games. The loss moved the Maroon and White into a tie for second place in the A-10 behind Delaware. UMass will face the Blue Hens in its final home contest of the season in a game that may determine the conference crown.

"It was a huge break for us that Rhode Island upset James Madison," Whipple said. "We're in better shape than in '98 or '99. We just need to take care of business over the next five weeks."

It's all "Mass Attack" in Saturday Mullins debut

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

The Mass Attack," a phrase coined by new Massachusetts hockey Head Coach Don Cahoon will make its Mullins Center debut tomorrow night.

The Minutemen will begin their home campaign when Colgate visits Amherst. Cahoon, a native of Massachusetts, came to Amherst last April when UMass decided not to renew the contract of then Head Coach Joe Mallen. The former Boston University player and well-traveled coach has been known throughout his career for change. Tomorrow night should be no different when the Maroon and White will give its faithful their first glimpse of its new uniforms.

To go along with the new uniforms, UMass (0-2, 0-0 Hockey East) will also play its first game from the former bench used by the visiting team. With this change the Minutemen will no longer have to cross the ice to get to its bench, but rather will be greeted by the student section upon taking to the ice.

The Maroon and White are no strangers to the Red Raiders. In last year's season opener UMass fell by a score of 3-2 to Colgate in Hamilton, NY. Markus Helanen made 34 saves in the contest, but his effort was not enough to earn a win.

In that game the Red Raiders had the services of All-American Andy McDonald, who netted Colgate's first goal and goaltender Shep Harder, who got the win.

Even without the services of McDonald and Harder Colgate is off to a good start in the 2000-2001 campaign. The Red Raiders are 1-1-1 on the season posting a win against Sacred Heart University, a tie in the Ice Breaker Cup to host and No. 2 Michigan to go along with a loss to No. 9 New Hampshire.

Colgate is led by Sean Nolan. Nolan scored a pair of goals in last year's win over the Minutemen. Nolan leads the Red Raiders with four goals in the early season. Colgate has two players, Scooter Smith and Chad MacDonald, who have five points on the year. Both have posted three goals and two assists through three games.

The Maroon and White come into the contest having dropped its opening two contests of the season at Wisconsin. UMass came up short in two hard fought games in Madison to the No. 3 Badgers. In their first game the Minutemen fell victim to opening night jitters in a 9-6 loss. The following night the UMass defense rebounded from allowing nine goals, but unfortunately the offense could not click as it was shut out by All-America candidate Graham Melanson in a 3-0 defeat.

Despite the two losses there are many bright spots that can be taken home from the trip to the Midwest. UMass showed an uncanny ability to find the back of the net when it needed to and it held the vaunted Badger power play to 4-17 in the weekend series.

The Minutemen had contributions up and down the lineup with the most notable being Tim Turner. The sophomore, who was snubbed from Hockey East honors in his freshman campaign, posted two goals and three assists against the Badgers. Senior captain and brother Jeff Turner started right where he ended last season, posting three assists.

Junior defenseman Toni Söderholm also had a goal for the Minutemen. Cahoon got great performances out of four newcomers to the program. Freshmen Jimmy Callahan, Scott Horvath and Thomas Pöck all netted goals in their first collegiate games, while Mike Warner played well in his debut.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Defenseman Randy Drohan led UMass in penalties with 32 and penalty minutes with 72 last season. Look for this tenacity to rub off on his teammates on Saturday when the Massachusetts hockey team makes its Mullin Center debut for the 2000-01 campaign.

Stopping the Ram-page

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It is the Warsaw Pact vs. NATO, and the Iron Curtain has come down between the states of Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

And now, the Rams will attempt to knock down the UMass wall that has so often held them back from the Atlantic 10 championship, when the Massachusetts field hockey team invades Kingston for a 1 p.m. showdown.

The Maroon and White will attempt to improve on its No. 9 national ranking and 12-3 (2-0 A-10) overall record, while the 6-10 (1-1 A-10) Rams will try and begin the ascent toward .500.

"We feel good," said UMass Head Coach Patty Shea. "We just have to take care of business. The rest of the season doesn't mean anything if we can't win our conference games."

For the majority of the season, the Minutewomen have indeed taken care of business, with seven wins in the last eight games that have taken place since they fell to No. 1 Maryland on Sept. 16. These wins have not come easy, though, as the Maroon and White have a streak of seven consecutive one-goal games.

"No, I'm not worried about it," said Shea when asked if she was concerned about the inability of her squad to win games by a large margin. "If you look across the board there are a lot of 2-1 games. It is consistent within the sport. We are not going to blow anyone out, especially within the conference when there are so many emotions involved."

It is for good reason that these close games have not concerned Shea, because UMass is 8-2 in one-goal games this season, including 3-0 in overtime play.

A stingy, experienced defense has been the main reason for the current success of the Minutewomen, and nobody has done more to stop the forward march of opposing offenses than senior goalie Zowie Tucker. Tucker has a stifling goals against average of 0.75, to go along with six shutouts and a .884 save percentage. All of these have made her a prime All-American candidate at year's end.

However, Tucker has not done it alone. German native Anke Bruemmer also anchors the defense, knocking balls out of the zone with amazing speed and accuracy. In addition to her role as the last line of defense before the goalie, Bruemmer has come up to the offensive side of the field on penalty corners, and has drilled seven shots into the cage to go along with two assists.

Kerry Ann Jaggassar, Patty Robinson and Lucy Koch have also helped out in holding the opposition to less than one goal per game.

"Our defense has been particularly strong," said Shea. "And our offense is doing what It needs to do to win. It has been especially hard because team's usually step up to play us."

While the offense has not been as dominant as the defense, Kristen Schmidt and Lindsay Abbott have both continued to play well in the opposition's zone. Schmidt leads the team with eight goals and Abbott is not too far behind with five goals and three assists.

"Everybody has been playing well," said Shea. "Nobody has been spectacular, but they are doing their jobs and that is why we are winning."

For Rhode Island, Kelley Barnowski leads the Rams and the Atlantic 10 conference with 13 goals, 11 assists and 37 points. In comparison, the Maroon and White's leading scorers (Schmidt and Bruemmer) have only 32 combined points between them. Recently, Barnowski earned her second A-10 Player of the Week honors, and will be the main threat when URI takes the field against UMass.

Another advantage for the Rams is the fact that the game will take place on grass, as opposed to the artificial turf that the Minutewomen are used to playing on. However, the playing surface won't be all that foreign to UMass, considering that it just took on Syracuse University on grass on Oct. 7.

It is these players as well as a great returning nucleus that will fuel the "Mass Attack" this season.

Face off 2000-2001 home opener is scheduled for 7:00 p.m.

Schmidt honored

She's done it again.

Only a little over a week has passed since Massachusetts field hockey forward Kristen Schmidt was named the Atlantic 10 conference's Player of the Week. On Wednesday, the senior was recognized again, this time as the Co-WHMP/UMass Athlete of the Week.

The award came after a weekend in which the Greenfield native scored two goals (one game winner) in the two games in Philadelphia against conference foes St. Joseph's and Temple.

In the St. Joe's game, she scored with 8:40 remaining in the first overtime to help launch her Minutewomen to a 1-0 victory over the Hawks. The goal was the end result of a cross pass from junior Lindsay Abbott to Schmidt who was centered in front of the net.

Abbot hooked up with Schmidt again versus Temple to give UMass the 1-0 lead in a contest it would eventually win, 2-1. The goal was similar to their St. Joseph's extra period link up as Abbott delivered a cross pass to Schmidt who fired it between the pipes for her eighth goal and sixteenth point of the 2000 campaign.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Kristen Schmidt

The award Is given out every week at the UMass Sports Luncheon.

-Eric Soderstrom

There's a bid to snatch in Ohio

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

For the Massachusetts women's soccer team the road to the NCAA tournament will go through Ohio.

This weekend, the Minutewomen head to the Buckeye State for a pair of Atlantic 10 contests with Dayton and Xavier. At the moment, those two teams currently sit ahead of UMass in the conference standings with a 6-1 mark. The Maroon and White hold down the third place position with a 5-1 record.

Needless to say, a successful weekend will all but lock up an A-10 Tournament bid. However, a pair of losses might send UMass scrambling to keep its post-season hopes alive in the final weekend of the regular season.

"Each week I say that the next two games are the most important of the year," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "That's the way that we're approaching it. We're going to send people in an attacking mode because it's the way that we have to play. We're an attacking team first and a defensive team second, and sometimes that can make it interesting for our goalkeepers."

Ironically, if the Minutewomen do lock up an A-10 tourney berth this weekend, they can book their tickets for a return trip to Ohio in two weeks. Dayton University's Baujan Field is the site of this season's post-season tournament.

In recent years, though, UMass has had its share of difficulties with both Ohio teams. Dayton, tonight's opponent, has won the last two meetings against the Minutewomen. In their most recent meeting, the Flyers

Turn to SOCCER page 7

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Does Haley Joel Osment still see dead people in his new movie Pay it Forward? To find out turn, to Arts and Living...

ARTS p. 5

Tim Turner netted the first of UMass's two goals in the final moments of a 4-4 tie with the No. 12 Red Raiders of Colgate.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 33 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, October 23, 2000

Riots in wild, wild Southwest

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Assault not on tape

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

One student was assaulted and another received minor injuries following a riot in the pyramid of Southwest residential area early Friday morning, but a power failure across the area prevented the incident from being caught on tape as the surveillance camera overlooking the incident shut down.

According to News Director Barbara Pitoniak, the buildings in the area operate under the same electrical circuit in which the security camera is powered. In the instance that power is lost to the area, the camera no longer becomes operational.

According to Pitoniak, no arrests have been made in relation to either of the incidents. Both victims declined medical treatment at the time in question. The names of the victims are not being released. The assault is under investigation by the University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD).

"Bear in mind that this is a pilot program and they [administration] were aware that if the electricity failed, the camera would not receive power," Pitoniak said. "Police would have liked to have had it on tape, but unfortunately don't and are conducting their investigation accordingly."

According to police reports at approximately 2 a.m., a lighting arrester failed in a transformer that feeds the Hampden Dining Commons. This failure caused a major fuse to blow and 12 residence halls in Southwest lost power in addition to Whitmore Administration Building, Goodell and the Animal Care Facility.

Approximately 500 students gathered outside the Pyramid and a riot ensued with bottles being thrown from building windows at people walking below. There were also reports of individuals starting small "campfires" and continuing to feed the flame with t-shirts and toilet paper.

Kevin Keenan, a senior political science and legal studies major, described the scene first-hand as "out-of-hand".

"Right when the power went out, people started going crazy," Keenan said. "We could hear all the noise from the Pyramids all the way down to Pierpont."

In his description, he stated that people started chanting, "Yankees suck," but when the police responded, the chant turned into a rhythmic "Five-o suck. We will riot." It was then, he stated, "the police just jumped into their cars and drove away."

In her statement, Pitoniak said the police were initially phoned in for crowd control, but when they realized the crowd was impassable, they called in to the Amherst Police and State Police for backup.

Southwest Area Governor Kerry Mulcahy describes the police action as "really keeping things under control" and "they were very patient with all the residents there."

Pitoniak said the Amherst Fire Department responded as well, but whose service was ultimately not needed as the fires eventually died out after students stopped feeding the flame with material.

Mulcahy echoed the frustration in having a second blackout within the last year.

"I can't believe this happened again this year," she stated. "About 4,000 people were without power for more than an hour and a half."

However, according to Pitoniak, "This particular incident was no where near the extent of what occurred last spring."

On April 8, a regional power outage resulted in two fires, two arrests, an assault and numerous accounts of property damage in the Southwest residential area. One student was arrested and charged with burning a security desk in Coolidge residence hall. Another fire started in Washington residence hall when a student placed a wet shirt over a halogen lamp. When power was restored, the shirt caught fire. Power was restored to campus after an hour and fifteen minutes.

In an April 9 statement issued by Chancellor David K. Scott, "this kind of behavior is deplorable and incompatible with the University's excellent academics, excellent faculty, and top-notch students," he stated. "We will not tolerate such behavior, and we will see that all appropriate disciplinary steps are taken."

Five months later, on September 5, the University administration responded to the April 8 incident with the announcement that a surveillance camera had been installed overlooking the Pyramid area and would "only be viewed in the event of a crime occurring in the Southwest living area."

According to Pitoniak, the administration was aware of the fact that the camera would be installed without the capacity to operate during a blackout, the very situational circumstances that caused the administration to install it in the first place.

Don Sadler, a security expert among schools, said personnel need to be trained on proper use of the system. User errors ranging from overusing a VCR tape to forgetting to put the tape in the VCR at all can influence the effectiveness of a security mechanism.

Pitoniak said they are looking into tying the security camera into the emergency power system so it will remain operational even during a blackout. She did not comment on how long it would be before such changes would be implemented.

Chaos causes students to flee pyramid

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Student safety became a concern when a 12-building power outage in the Southwest living area led to riots and bonfires early Friday morning.

Some residents feared for their well being after a failed lighting transformer caused a major fuse to blow, knocking out power to not only dormitories but also the security camera overlooking the pyramid.

Most of the activity occurred within the pyramid area, where a group congregated and began throwing bottles and lighting clothing on fire.

"They were gathered under the pyramid," sophomore John Adams resident Nancy Teixeira said. "They pretty much started a riot."

Teixeira explained that the group of about 500 students began chanting "Yankees suck," crowd surfing and letting off fireworks. According to her, thrown objects were a big concern as a bottle nearly struck her roommate, Jolene Galvin, in the head.

"A beer bottle just missed hitting Jolene," Teixeira said. "We saw how [the riot] was and we were like, 'let's just get inside.'"

She went on to say that it was difficult to dodge the bottles because visibility within the living area was so low.

"Southwest was completely dark," she said. "You couldn't see anything."

Ashley Cheschi, a sophomore John Adams resident, commented that the police presence was ineffective during the onset of the riot.

"The cops were there the whole time but they couldn't break it up," Cheschi said. "There were so many students and so few of them."

She also expressed dismay about the fact that the camera could not catch the incident on tape so that violent students could be prosecuted for their crimes.

"I heard that one kid got beat up in the triangle," she said. "The camera definitely couldn't have been working during the power outage."

Although the UMass Police Department called for backup, much of the crowd had dispersed by the time additional help arrived. Victor Apostle, a sophomore resident of Pierpont, explained that he went outside to see what was going on but was forced back inside by the cold weather. Barbara Pitoniak, UMass News Director, speculated that the weather conditions were the reason why many students came in from the riots.

"It was starting to get cold and the crowd dispersed," she said.

There was also a great deal of activity going on within the dormitories at the time. Apostle explained that the reaction inside was immediate once there was a loss of power.

"I was in my room when all of a sudden, I hear people selling 'power outage,'" Apostle said.

Cheschi added that the high degree of chaos within the dormitories was heightened by additional safety concerns there.

"I was walking up the stairs when all of the lights went out, everybody started screaming," she explained. "There were RA's running around with flashlights because there were people stuck in our elevators."

Grant to combat violence

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts received a grant from the U.S. Department of Justice due to a program designed to "Combat Violent Crimes Against Women on Campuses."

Chancellor David K. Scott commented in a statement to the press, "this grant will increase the campus's leadership in making education about – and the prevention of–violence against women an institutional priority."

The federal grant, which is for the amount of $392,238, will be used by the center to hire additional personnel to allow UMass to work closer with the Amherst and Northampton police departments at preventing and educating the population about violent crimes against women. The funds will also be used to train judicial hearing board members, residence hall staff and the UMass Police Department on how to adequately prevent violent crimes on campus. In addition, a portion of the funds will go towards purchasing modern crime fighting devices.

"The money will support a unique collaboration between the Everywoman's Center and a number of other departments including Public Safety," Scott said. "This will allow us to further enhance the campus' efforts to create a positive climate for all of our students. The entire campus thanks Senator Kennedy for his efforts on our behalf in this important area."

Some programs that the center provides for the campus at this point are a counselor and advocate program. This provides students with 24-hour service for both victims and survivors of rape and battering, incest, sexual assault, and harassment. These counselors are specially trained in crisis counseling and advocacy and can provide court and medical advocacy for those in need.

Another program that is offered through the center is designed to address the issues of community education and violence prevention. Within this program, hired counselors complete 70-hours worth of training on issues surrounding violence against women and then teach them to others. Some of the issues that are often addressed are rape awareness, sexual harassment, relationship violence and gender roles.

With the help of this grant the University hopes to lessen the amount of violent crimes against women on campus. According to UMass Police Department Clery Act statistics for the 1999 school year, there were 27 forcible sexual offenses on campus, and 23 in residence sexual offenses. Although this is a decrease from the 1998 school year when on-campus assault totals were at 28 and in residence totals were 26, the University and the Everywoman's Center hope to decrease these numbers even further.

Senator Kennedy commented on the grant in a statement to the press saying, "Today's grant will expand upon the initiatives already underway to ensure a safe environment for students at the University of Massachusetts."

He went on to explain that these types of initiatives were vital to college campuses.

"These federal funds are especially important to college students, who are one of the most at-risk population for sexual assault. Education and training is a key part of the effort to prevent these types of crime," he said. "I commend Chancellor Scott, the Everywoman's Center, and UMass for their responsible leadership on this issue."

Look in tomorrow's paper for more information about the Clery Act Report.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Hay man!

The Common School Children's Fair took place on Saturday at Amherst Common where these children searched for prizes in the hay.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Like father, like son.

Young Johnny Connors hopes to one day to play for his dad, UMass coach Mike Connors.

Locals rally around SOA

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

Pioneer Valley activists are revving up their engines. The Pioneer Valley School of the Americas Project (PV SOAP) is organizing locals to attend the annual School of the Americas vigil to be held Nov. 17-19 at Fort Benning, GA.

The School of the Americas (SOA), located on a U.S. Army base, is a Latin American military training school that has received much criticism in the last several years.

That criticism has been prompted largely by the work done by the School of the Americas Watch. The SOA Watch was founded in 1990 by Father Roy Bourgeois. It is an organization committed to closing the SOA through nonviolent means.

As the SOA Watch has gained public support, national politicians have introduced legislation to close the School. Massachusetts representative Joseph Moakley has been one of the loudest voices in Washington calling for its closure.

Since its founding in 1946, the School has trained over 55,000 Latin American soldiers and officers. Many of those trained at the School have been cited in civil rights abuses in Latin America.

In his most recent bill, Rep. Moakley listed some of the cases in which SOA graduates have been indicted. They include the massacre of 900 civilians in El Mozote, El Salvador and the assassination of Archbishop Oscar Romero in El Salvador.

Leopoldo Galtieri, SOA graduate and former Argentine dictator, was one of the leaders of the "dirty war" in Argentina, during which roughly 30,000 civilians died or disappeared.

That the SOA has been training Latin American military dictators and soldiers involved in civil rights violations is only part of the problem in the view of the SOA Watch.

The other part of the problem lies in that the training is done on a US military base, paid for by US tax dollars.

According to the US Government Budget, "National defense discretionary spending will total an estimated $292 billion in 2001, comprising 16 percent of the [national] budget."

Of that $292 billion, the SOA receives $3.2 million from the US Army. This is over two-thirds of the total SOA budget. The remaining $1.25 million comes from Security Assistance funds.

The movement to close the School has been gaining momentum in the last few years. The annual vigil held outside the gates of Ft. Benning began with a handful of people 10 years ago. In 1998, more than 2,000 people committed an act of civil disobedience and crossed the line onto the base. Last year, nearly 5,000 people crossed the line.

Mary Trotochaud has been involved with the SOA Watch for over four years. She currently does nonviolence trainings and educates people in the Valley about this issue.

Trotochaud got arrested for the first time in her life for crossing the line during the 1996 vigil.

"In the fall of 1997," explained Trotochaud, "seven of us went to Ft. Benning and changed the sign at the

Turn to SOA, page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1992 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Index Life became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Massachusetts Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuna Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

UMASS ATHLETICS MEN'S BASKETBALL & ICE HOCKEY STUDENT TICKET PICK-UP SCHEDULE
9:00 AM - 4:30 PM - CURRY HICKS CAGE
10:00 AM - 2:00 PM - CAMPUS CENTER (Near info desk)

ALL STUDENT SEATS FOR ICE HOCKEY AND MEN'S BASKETBALL FOR T
2000-2001 SEASONS ARE GENERAL ADMISSION!!!!

PICK-UP DATE	SPORT	DATE OF GAME/OPPONENT
Tuesday, October 10, 2000	Hockey	Oct. 21, 2000 vs. Colgate
Monday, October 16, 2000	Hockey	Oct. 27, 2000 vs. Merrimack
	Men's Basketball	Nov. 3, 2000 vs. California All-Stars
Monday, October 23, 2000	Hockey	Nov. 4, 2000 vs. New Hampshire
	Men's Basketball	Nov. 10, 2000 vs. Stonehill Colle
Monday, October 30, 2000	Hockey	Nov. 16, 2000 vs. Connecticut
	Men's Basketball	Nov. 18, 2000 vs. Iona
Monday, November 13, 2000	Hockey	Nov. 25, 2000 vs. St. Cloud State
Monday, November 20, 2000	Hockey	Dec. 1, 2000 vs. Boston University
	Men's Basketball	Dec. 7, 2000 vs. Providence
Monday, November 27, 2000	Men's Basketball	Dec. 17, 2000 vs. Boston College
Monday, December 11, 2000	Hockey	Dec. 30, 2000 vs. Brown
	Men's Basketball	Jan. 6, 2001 vs. George Washington
	Hockey	Jan. 7, 2001 vs. Providence
	Hockey	Jan. 13, 2001 vs. Northeastern
	Men's Basketball	Jan. 18, 2001 vs. Dayton
	Hockey	Jan. 19, 2001 vs. Merrimack
	Hockey	Jan. 25, 2001 vs. UMass Lowell
	Hockey	Jan. 27, 2001 vs. Northeastern
Monday, January 29, 2001	Men's Basketball	Feb. 3, 2001 vs. Fordham
	Hockey	Feb. 9, 2001 vs. Maine
	Hockey	Feb. 10, 2001 vs. Maine
Monday, February 5, 2001	Men's Basketball	Feb. 14, 2001 vs. Xavier
	Men's Basketball	Feb. 17, 2001 vs. Temple
	Men's Basketball	Feb. 25, 2001 vs. Rhode Island
Monday, February 12, 2001	Hockey	Feb. 24, 2001 vs. Boston College
Tuesday, February 20, 2001	Men's Basketball	March 3, 2001 vs. St. Bonaventure
	Hockey	March 3, 2001 vs. New Hampshire

PICK-UP & GAME DATES SUBJECT TO CHANGE. VALID UMASS STUDENT ID CARD NEEDED TO PICK-UP TICKETS. AUXILIARY FEE SHOULD HAVE ALREADY BEEN PAID.

LECTURE

James Cellan Jones
Director Emeritus, British Broadcasting Corporation
TELLING THE TALE

James Cellan Jones, recently retired as Director of Plays for the BBC, has directed over fifty dramatic productions, including such award winning works as The Ambassadors, The Forsyte Saga, The Golden Bowl, and Fortunes of War (starring Kenneth Branagh and Emma Thompson). His work has been nominated for more than twenty-five British Academy and British Critics Awards. Jones will discuss the making of television drama from scriptwriting to film editing, and will illustrate his lecture with exerpts from various productions.

Tuesday, October 24 Campus Center 917 4pm

This Lecture is sponsoredby the College of Humanities & Fine Arts and by the International Programs Office

Council Travel
America's Leader in Student Travel

SALE SALE SALE

Sale Dates: 10/24-10/28

LONDON	$195
PARIS	$245
MADRID	$305
DUBLIN	$255
AMSTERDAM	$295

Other destinations available!

Fares are RT for midweek travel and subject to availability. Tkts are Non-Refundable and exclusive of taxes/surcharges which range from $30-$85. Tkts must be booked and paid for from Oct 24th-28th. Departures from Nov 1 - March 31, 2001. No departures from Dec 12th through Dec 24th. Must hold valid ISIC,ITIC, or IYTC card. Some age and other restrictions may apply.

Shop extended hours–Tues-Fri: 9-7, Sat: 11-3

44 Main Street
413-256-1261
1-800-2COUNCIL (open 9-6 pm Tue midnight Fri est)
counciltravel.com

Nagurney, Manmatha aim at making technology easier

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

Though they inhabit different buildings, different departments, and different fields of research, University of Massachusetts professors Anna Nagurney and Raghavan Manmatha both have similar goals: to make life easier by advancing technology.

Both Nagurney and Manmatha also share the distinction of having received significant grants to support this pursuit from the National Science Foundation (NSF). Manmatha, a professor in the computer science department whose work lies in image and video retrieval, has received a $450,000 grant. Nagurney, a professor in the School of Management who works with complex networking systems, was awarded three grants for three separate projects, a combined total of nearly $470,000.

Manmatha's NSF-funded research will make the handwritten manuscripts of George Washington more easily accessible by speeding the process of searching for a particular quote or piece of information in the document. The manuscript collections, available on-line or on CD-ROM, must be hand-sorted, read, and summarized by researchers before they can be indexed, a process which can be erroneous as well as time-consuming.

According to Manmatha, "with one person's handwriting, there are likely to be similarities" between words, making them like pictures which can be matched and categorized. The result of this process will be an index to the Washington collection, similar to the index of a book, in which specific key words are listed, and their various appearances in the manuscript can be specifically located.

Manmatha predicts that his project will ease the process of historical research across the country.

"Researchers who wish to use the original papers [for their studies] will not have to travel so far to see the original manuscripts in the future," Manmatha said.

The retrieval process could be applied to other collections as well, including the W.E.B. DuBois Collection, which contains a number of handwritten manuscripts. This could allow UMass to share their collections with other research institutions more easily, according to Manmatha.

"Now, someone in California, or Texas who wanted to research DuBois...wouldn't have to come here to do it," he said.

This will also contribute to the preservation of the original documents, a matter of concern to librarians as such documents continue to age.

The benefits of manuscript accessibility will reach beyond collegiate and professional research, Manmatha predicted. He pointed out that the use of original manuscripts could be interesting and appropriate for history classes from the elementary to college level, as well as to further historical knowledge in society.

"People are always saying, this is what the Constitution said, or this is what Thomas Jefferson had in mind," Manmatha stated. "So why not go to the original source?"

Nagurney's research, on the other hand, involves the modern era, and ways in which the complex networking systems common in our information age could benefit from more systematic organization. Such networking systems, according to Nagurney, can include paths of transportation such as highways, bus routes and train tracks or more virtual paths of interaction and communication such as telecommuting and teleshopping. While such systems are highly complex, Nagurney pointed out, "there's more structure than you would think. People, for the most part, are rational."

Nagurney's NSF-funded research is divided into three projects. "Decentralized Decision Making in Complex Network Systems" will examine how telecommuting and teleshopping networks function, and how they affect other networks, including transportation. Much of the science of studying networks, Nagurney explained, relies on understanding how people make decisions.

According to Nagurney, such advanced research will benefit in helping companies and those in charge of administering networks understand the preferences of their customers. It will also benefit customers, in making such networks more easy to use, she said. "Basically we're talking about how the advent of telecommunications can make things better for everyone," she said.

A second project, "Enterprise-Wide Simulation and Modeling of Comprehensive Freight Movements," will find Nagurney working with Kathleen Hancock, professor of Civil and Environmental Engineering and Frank Southworth of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee. The three professors will study how the transportation of goods in the United States has been influenced by expanding e-commerce and will give their recommendations as to how freight networks can be brought up to date.

When asked how they feel their contributions to enhanced technology will apply to distance learning, currently a controversial subject at UMass, both responded by saying they felt strongly committed to a face-to-face element of learning. They felt that the experience of being in a classroom with a teacher and other students is crucial in a student's development.

Both professors defended the partial application of distance learning and pointed out that technology can be beneficial if used correctly. Both pointed out that technology in some form is increasingly necessary.

"Technology is innate to searching materials," Manmatha said, adding that the availability of materials outside the restrictions of location and library hours will be an improvement over more hands-on approaches to research.

"Technology is a very powerful tool," Nagurney said, citing her collaboration with faraway researchers as one beneficial result of the use of technology. "We have women collaborating across campus, across the nation, and overseas because of telecommunication networks...without technology, I could not do this research."

Both professors also cited that the scheduling freedom provided by distance learning can be very beneficial to those in the workforce, whose jobs can prevent them from pursuing full-time, traditional education.

In response to fears that distance learning will replace hands-on experiences for students, both professors said they felt that this was not a realistic possibility.

"At some level, face-to-face contact with teachers is important," Manmatha said.

"I think [total distance learning] would be a huge mistake," Nagurney said. "I think that it will never happen. People need a physical experience."

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6
Special Offer: $25 off

Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

A great place to get contact lenses

FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions

Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases

Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office

FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

Any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient

Northwestern Mutual
FINANCIAL NETWORK™

UMASS INFO SESSIONS

DATES:

Monday, October 23rd	Tuesday, October 24th	Wednsday, November 1st
Campus Rm. 905-909	Campus Rm. 903	Campus Rm. 911-915

TIMES:

12:15pm	12:15pm	12:15pm
1:30 pm	1:30 pm	1:30 pm
3:00 pm	3:00 pm	3:00 pm
4:15 pm	4:15 pm	4:15 pm

INTERESTED? Contact
Tina Kokoszyn, Campus Recruiter,
Northwestern Mutual Financial Network
1351Main Street, Springfield, MA 01103
413•748•6000
or e-mail• tina.kokoszyn@nmfn.com

■ SOA

continued from page 2

gate to properly reflect the training that was/is going on there." [The sign then read "School of Assassins."]

"I also participated in the protest in November," Trotochaud continued. "For those two actions, five of us served a year in prison and are still on two years of probation."

Not everyone involved in the movement crosses the line and risks arrest, though. Many remain outside the base, singing and listening to speakers.

Tao Rodriguez-Seeger is a local musician who has attended the last few vigils, but has never crossed the line. He maintains that risking arrest is not what determines one's level of dedication to the issue.

Regardless of what your role is, "it's impossible not to feel like you're making a difference," he said.

The SOA Watch is very intent on making people feel valued for the contributions they make to the movement. That appreciation is extended to the very policemen standing guard during the vigils.

"The SOA recognizes that it's not us against them," Rodriguez-Seeger commented.

The respect encouraged by the SOA Watch has been noticed by many, an aspect Rodriguez-Seeger said lends the movement credibility and conviction.

Lei Breeden, a second year international politics major at Hampshire College, said attending last year's vigil was a very powerful experience.

Breeden is one of the student organizers of PV SOAP. Her father is an immigrant from Costa Rica. She said she grew up hearing about the SOA, but never really knowing what it was.

"In the Latin American communities, it's not really known about," Breeden said.

She pointed out that many protesters at the recent IMF/World Bank protest in Washington, D.C. were privileged kids who could afford to take time off school or work, not those who are adversely affected by the IMF policies.

"We have time to fight these battles," she said. "The people we're fighting for are fighting to live."

To Breeden, the SOA is slightly different. It is more personal.

As someone with a Costa Rican heritage, Breeden said she feels as though she is "fighting her own battle as well."

health studies

Graduate and Professional Schools Information Day

October 25, 2000
8:45 - 3:00
Student Union Ball Room

Meet a Simmons representative at our booth to learn more about advanced degrees in health studies and other educational opportunities.

Experience
Health Studies at Simmons

...in the heart of Boston's world-renowned academic, medical and research community.

Graduate Program in Health Care Administration
-Masters and Advanced Programs

Graduate Program in Nutrition
-Masters and Internship Programs
-Certificate in Sports Nutrition

Graduate Program in Physical Therapy
-Doctoral Program

Graduate Program in Primary Health Care Nursing
-Masters and Advanced N.P. Programs

SIMMONS
Graduate School for Health Studies

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Red or blue:
UMass recycling choices

The University supplied you with all those multi-colored buckets for a reason.

This university has taken large strides towards increasing the amount of recycling on campus. There have been posters on the PVTA buses, public programs, mailed pamphlets, bulletin boards in the dorms and the inclusion of recycling containers into the dorm rooms.

It hasn't been enough.

Why? Why, what with all that has been said and done, with all the education and promotion and convenience that UMass has admirably done about recycling, why can't students seem to get into the habit of it?

There could be many reasons. Habits, as difficult as they are to break, can be just as hard to fall into. It takes effort to remember to not put that empty bottle into the trash bin but rather into the blue one. People have to pause for a minute before they realize that they probably should have put that old copy of the Collegian into the red recycling bin – but by that time it's too late, and, really, nobody wants to dig that old paper out of the trash. Who would?

Some people do it to prove a social point.

"I hate being talked down to, I hate the establishment, I won't follow your stupid PC trends, I make my own rules, and this Pepsi can is going directly into the trash!" is the mantra of these people, fed up with the movement and its' vilifying of those who do not participate.

It is true that the diehard recycling advocates can be a little worrisome. Not recycling is not, after all, against the law. No one has to recycle anything if they should choose not to. Sometimes, these proponents take a good point and drive it into the area of aggravation, and potential recyclers just drop out.

Some students might just think it's a pain.

Be that as it might, recycling is a positive good. We here at the Collegian wholeheartedly believe that recycling is a small, simply task that everyone can do with little effort to benefit everyone.

Students, you can overcome. Utilize the bins the University provided to you. Take the time to think about what you're doing – leave yourself little notes, place the bins in an obvious place, actually pick the old Collegian out of the trash – whatever will help you.

Ignore the advocates who bother you. Think about what the message is and not those who say it. Most recycling advocates are sincere people who just want to help – (the annoying ones are merely the loudest. Recycling is worth the doing, even for those who hate society.

Finally, yes, we can acknowledge that recycling can be a bit of a pain. Obviously it is easier just to throw everything away without thinking – but it isn't the best possible course. The benefits outweigh the pain involved.

Recycle, UMass. You can do it.

Parking dis-services

This University has a cancer and that cancer has a name. It's a name that I have difficulty speaking aloud due to the bile it raises in my stomach. You have heard this name if you park on campus; you might have even read someone ranting about their methods in this publication. This tale of woe is not simply a complaint about how unfair parking services is; it is a challenge. However, before a challenge, let's frame the conflict.

"Parking Services." I ask you what service they provide. One might say they give you a place to park your vehicle. This is not so. All they give you is a headache. You pay to place your car on university ground. This looks past the fact that if you live in Massachusetts you have already paid to park on the campus, in the form of taxes. So back to the point. After you pay absorbent amounts of money to park what seems like miles from campus, you have already lost. You just joined the countless droves of students that have accepted the fact that yellow or if you're lucky, green lot is the best you can do. Why do you agree to this? What makes the staff and faculty worth a red parking pass that allows them to park in front of their buildings, while placing you so far from campus that the library is barely visible? Are you any less important to the administration then the faculty? Without the students there is no student body. Every new student that accepts these rules allows parking services clutches to become even more deeply embroiled in University policies. My suggestion is there should be space set aside in the red and blue lots for students, perhaps on a first come first serve basis. There is no justification for the students having to drive around in a yellow lot that is obviously filled when they could easily park in a red lot that is never filled. Some professors are only on campus for the days that they teach, which leaves many a space available for the general student body. The University's official position on this is " Our responsibility is to the person (in the red lot) that has purchased the pass, we will tow anytime to insure the owner of that pass has their parking spot, this is why we ask people to park in their lots." My position on this is "Park where ever you can find a space that gets you to class on time, due to the fact that we are a learning community and the first priority should be to our education, not to lining the pockets of Amherst Towing."

Towing is another major part of the problem. I was towed at the beginning of the semester; I was parked in a green lot, the same lot that I have parked in since freshman year. For some reason, Parking Services told me that I could not park in my lot this year, that it was "full". I have been parking on the pavement of lot 33 for 3 years and I have never seen that lot full. Initially I was in a state of disbelief when I could not find my vehicle, I thought that perhaps my car was stolen, or maybe I had parked elsewhere. Unfortunately it was neither of those; my car was jacked by the friendly folks over at Amherst Towing. Although the lot I was parked in was littered with empty spaces, they must have seen my car as beacon of revenue, which for them it was, and removed it from the campus.

ETHAN BERGERON

I caught a ride with one of my professors who was nice enough to go out of her way and drag me to this stockyard of pilfered vehicles previously referred to as Amherst Towing. My emergency brake would argue that they are not Amherst Towing, but rather Amherst Dragging because they seem fond of wrenching automobiles around with their back wheels locked. Anyhow, as I entered the building to pay for the wonderful service that the University and Amherst towing had just conspired to provide for me, I noticed two people inside who has suffered the same fate as me. One of them was irate, to put it mildly. Up until this point I thought that I has seen anger, but I was mistaken, this "gentleman" was in the process of showering the clerk with a spattering of obscenities, some of which were new to me. This chap was mad and he wanted the whole world to hear it. I can understand his pain his Toyota had just been towed for parking on the lawn of a yellow lot; he did this because there were no spaces in said yellow lot. Why tow someone on the lawn? The lawn is for show, parking spaces are for utility, and utility should always come before show. This is simply another example of the exploitation that parking services is involved in.

The other guy in the towing establishment was the polar opposite of Mr. Furious. This guy was concerned that he would not have enough money to pay for the tow, never mind the parking tickets. He said to me "Well, now I don't have enough money to buy books". Think about that: his money was now in the pocket of Amherst Towing instead of going towards an education.

Let's break down the towing fees. Seventy-five dollars is what the tow costs. I can not understand how towing from UMass to the Amherst Towing lair could cost seventy-five dollars. I have had my car towed on the Mass Pike for miles and it did not cost anywhere near that much. On top of the tow, they juice you for storage. Twenty dollars is the cost you pay for the space taken up by your car in their junkyard. This fee is added as soon they drop your car, and I do mean drop, on their property. The only way to avoid having this fee tacked on your bill is to intercept the tow truck en route. This sounds like fun, we could set up in trees like those fuzzy things in "Return of the Jedi" and hurl rock and logs toward the evil towing vehicles and recapture what has been taken from us.

I spoke of a challenge, and not just a mere list of complaints. Here it is: I challenge Parking Services to appoint a champion to debate me over the justification of the current towing and parking conditions. I will prove that the system of parking and towing on campus is unjust and a new one must be implemented. Parking Services must simply defeat me, prove that there is a logical, just reason for the way the system is set up, I will argue that they cannot philosophically justify the current system and if I lose, it stays the same way but if I win then new services must be designed. What do you say Parking Services, do you have someone who will defend the parking pass system or someone who can justify giving 16 minutes for a quarter in your parking meters rather then the accepted norm of one hour? I hope you do. Pick the time and the place and I'll be there. Let's hear it UMass, are you tired of the current parking fiasco? Email me edb@student.umass.edu or write to The Daily Collegian. I want to hear your suggestions.

Ethan Bergeron is a UMass student

Write for Ed/Op.
Just because...that's why.

Free Speech

CHRIS COLLINS

A friend of mine (for the record, he is a computer systems engineer) recently told me "If you plan on making your living with anything that is copy righted, I think you should rethink doing it." The context of the statement really tells the story. He had recently downloaded a program that was capable of turning DVD movies into files on his computer.

Which means, essentially, that instead of buying a DVD of a movie that he likes, he now just needs to either rent it or borrow it, and in the span of however long it takes to encode it, he can have the movie in a format that can be watched, sent to his friends, or distributed over the Internet. This essentially means that, well, there is no media that can't be found, for free, on the Internet.

From the very beginning, the text of books has been available to those who were computer savvy enough to know where to find them. I think that if you don't know about getting free music using either Napster or Scour or any of the other sort of exchange programs, then you are living under a rock that is buried somewhere rather deep on another plant, like Pluto. And now, the technology exists for creating all sorts of DVD quality videos that will eventually (when they become smaller files and when people find themselves with faster connections) be available for downloading.

All of these things mean, frankly, that creative people (like me) are going to have a harder time making a large amount of money from DVDs, just as bands have recently found it just a little hard to peddle CDs when it is possible to find all of the songs from a new release on-line, often before the album can be bought in stores.

Aside from the fact that it is going to be increasingly hard to be turning a profit from things like books, movies, and physical recordings of music, what does it matter that a vast amount of creative material is currently or will be available on the internet?

Well, I think that a couple of things are going to emerge from the explosion of media being free and readily available on the Internet. For one thing, anything that is copied and saved on a hard drive is more or less always going to be available. This means that, frankly, today's culture is going to be available, via the computer, forever. So, we are easily leaving the most complete record that any society has ever left in the world's history. The scholars and historians of the future will have an overabundance of information to use in their examinations of what occurred during the early 21st century.

While this saving of information is generally positive, I'm certainly not going to claim that there won't be negative aspects. For one thing, creative people are not going to be capable of making the same amount of money that they once did from their published works. Now, this is a bad thing, as it could lead to less people entering the creative fields because they are unwilling to work for less money than they did once. This could, in turn, lower the quality of the creative works that end up being produced.

This would naturally be bad. In fact, it would be horrible.

Those who do decide that they want to produce art are going to realize something about what they are making. If all of their work is available for free on-line they are going to have to start selling the experience. It's just like newspapers. Currently, there are faster news sources that exist and compete with newspapers. However, the newspaper has survived because people enjoy the experience of the newspaper. If nothing else, television or radio news does not come with a funnies page or a crossword puzzle, thus people still buy newspapers.

So I see the future of the creative arts as having a similar evolution. Artists, writers, entertainers are going to have to concentrate on selling experiences, not CDs and DVDs. Which means that musicians are going to become even better than they are at performing live, and actors who would currently go no where near a live stage might make their way there in the future, just because people are and will be willing to actually pay for the experience that they are missing out on when they go to Napster Version 76.3 to download the newest music or movies.

It's not that this future is going to be better or that things will happen the way I think they will, but whatever ends up happening, it is certainly going to be an interesting ride.

Chris Collins is a Collegian Columnist.

What's in a lyric?

The recent attention in this and other publications devoted to Eminem's success, controversial lyrics, and "suicide songs," among other things, is nothing new, but it still makes me shake my head in amazement. Quite frankly, I think blaming any of society's problems on today's music is horse manure.

Suicide songs and other songs with violent lyrics are nothing new. I guess that's part of the reason that I don't get the reason for the uprising of people screaming for someone's head this time. Perhaps it's because there are at least three songs (Papa Roach's "Last Resort," 3 Doors Down's "Loser," and Blink 182's "Adam's Song") that have hit it big-time in the last six months.

"Hey Joe, I heard you shot your woman down...Yeah I shot her, I shot her down to the ground... I gave her the gun... I SHOT HER!"

Gee, sounds like the lyrics to a song from today. Anger, frustration, violence, and murder... yup, definitely a song from today. One thing though –this song has been around for over thirty years! Penned by the one and only late, great Jimi Hendrix, "Hey Joe" is a great example of how song lyrics never really change. Jazz this song up a bit, add a drum machine, and fast- forward thirty-five years, and we've got the lyrics to a rap song at the top of the charts. It's sad, but true.

"Happiness is a warm gun... when I hold you in my arm... and I feel my finger on your trigger... I know no one can do me no harm... Because happiness is a warm gun... Yes it is..." The lyrics to this song are mysterious, but scary enough that they make people take notice. Is it a new progressive hand in our new millennium? No! These are the words of John Lennon and Paul McCartney, written In another era (1967), when most of our parents listened to the Beatles daily and knew no other favorite band.

"Suicide songs and other songs with violent lyrics are nothing new. I guess that's part of the reason that I don't get the uprising of people screaming for somone's head this time."

DAN LAMOTHE

"Wine is fine, but whiskey's quicker... Suicide is slow with liquor... Grab a bottle drown your sorrows... then it floods away tomorrows..." If ever there was a suicide song, this is the one. Released in 1981, Ozzy Osbourne's "Suicide Solution" prompted lawsuits and outrage, among other things. Several parents sued Osbourne after their children committed suicide, blaming the mysterious, distorted lyrics of "Suicide Solution" for inspiring children to take their own lives.

For me that is and always will be the act cowards who are unwilling to admit that their children had serious problems in their day to day lives, and who are unwilling to take any of the blame for a tragedy that perhaps could have been prevented. Sound familiar? To me, the outcry that has been raised in the last year or so as Eminem has increased in popularity is pointless. I don't see how any of society's problems can be blamed on the "entertainers." Don't get me wrong. I am not a die-hard fan of Eminem. In fact I think he's an egotistical coward, blasting every racial group and sexual orientation possible from behind the protection of Dr. Dre. He has become famous in much the same way that Dennis Rodman transformed him self from a solid basketball player into a marketing icon. They both shock people, and do little else anymore. Eminem, and all of his anti-everything views, is doing nothing creative with his music. He's copying an age-old model of success for performers. Shock people, and they will listen. By the time people are sick of him, he will have made his millions of dollars, and won't need to shock people anymore.

I guess the point I'm trying to make is that there is no point of making a fuss over music that is about anything other than "Shiny happy people holding hands." In fact, if we listen closely, we might hear something that will make us think closely about our own lives. 3 Doors Down's "suicide song." "Loser," is in fact about their lead singer's (Brad Arnold) childhood and the emotions he experienced while his parents were getting divorced. Isn't it a good thing to share feelings like these? Many people have them.

So while the controversy swirls on, I'll be watching from the edge, and listening. Because while I may not always agree with the feelings and opinions expressed in today's (and yesterday's, for that matter) music, I can at least take the time to try and understand it. It's my belief that if I can do this honestly and without prejudice, I myself can become a better person by sharing in other people's experiences.

Dan Lamothe is a UMass student.

...TERS IN BY WEDNESDAY THEY ...
INCLUDE A PHONE NUMBER. Re...
...E READ, BUT NOT ALL ARE P...

Osment's talent Pays It Forward

PAY IT FORWARD
directed by Mimi Leder
with Kevin Spacey, Helen Hunt and Haley Joel Osment playing at Mt. Farms Four

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

"I just wanted to see if the world would actually change," says seventh grader Trevor McKinney (Haley Joel Osment) in the melodrama, Pay It Forward. Coming from Osment, with innocent, intense, disillusioned eyes, the line makes you pause, however briefly, and question if real change to the world is actually possible. He is the picture of idealism and faith in humanity crushed by an unforgiving reality.

Pay It Forward is Trevor's story, and more specifically the story of his unusual idea to change the world. That said, it is not a new story, but rather one that traverses time – a universal story going all the way back to that of Christ.

Eugene Simonet (Kevin Spacey) is a bitter, hardened man with a rough past (made visible through the burns on his face). He also happens to be Trevor's Social Studies teacher, the teacher who challenges his students (half-heartedly) to change the world as an extra credit project.

Like the symbolic burns on Spacey's face, Pay It Forward is often times quite obvious in its intentions. However, this does not prevent the movie from being, at different times, completely uplifting, genuinely charming and downright depressing.

Using a dual narrative structure, Pay It Forward actually lets the audience see the consequences of Trevor's iden before they know what it actually is. Chris Chandler (Jay Mohr), a freelance reporter, has his car destroyed during a freak accident, but receives a brand new Jaguar from a complete stranger with only these instructions: "Three random favors for three people." Shocked and intrigued, Chandler tries to trace this improbable story to its roots.

Four months earlier, young, idealistic Trevor stands in Mr. Simonet's Social Studies class explaining his idea, "Pay It Forward," to a host of cynics. Trevor plans to help three people, but it has to be something that they can't do on their own, and then they help three more people, and so on until the world is a better place.

If that seems overly saccharine and excessively naive (even for an eleven year old), then Pay It Forward may not be for you. It is the authenticity, earnestness and power of the performances that are worthy here – not the ingenuity of the ideas.

For all the film's talk about changing the world, much of the story centers around Trevor's attempts to set up Mr. Simonet with his not-so-recovering alcoholic mother Arlene (Helen Hunt). The pair battles their own neuroses (in case you haven't noticed, there is something wrong with everyone in this movie) to find a common ground with each other and with Trevor. These three people all need each other in one way or another, and from within this triangle of relationships arises the "Pay It Forward" movement.

As noted above, the performances here are superb all around. Maybe this is to be expected from two Academy Award winners and a third Academy nominee; nonetheless, the actors absolutely carry the heavy-handed film.

Young Haley Joel will no longer be considered, if he ever was, capable only of flashing stares of disbelief and muttering words of terror. His timing and intensity are remarkable in a role requiring a much larger emotional range than that of The Sixth Sense. At age twelve, he is already a much better actor than most of his adult Hollywood counterparts.

Helen Hunt does her usual vulnerability well here, and adds self-destruction in taking on a less than genuine role (major props to some great makeup jobs to vary her appearance). Finally, Kevin Spacey could win an Oscar for almost every role he takes. It's tough to exude a charm while hiding behind a wall of cynicism and self-pity, but Spacey manages to pull it off.

In the end, I think it's hard not to like Pay It Forward, despite the frequent and quite obvious emotional ploys. I'll admit that I was expecting big things from this movie and was definitely let down somewhat. I felt, especially toward the end, that the movie was in some way trying to inspire the audience to carry out the film's message (doing so almost entirely through the sheer charisma of Osment). And in an already emotionally charged movie, I thought this was just too much.

Pay It Forward is worthwhile, if only to see three great actors together, but it is not a great film. It's a very watchable, very gripping film with many problems, saved from being overly sentimental by the sincerity of its performances.

COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB
Haley Joel Osment doesn't see any dead people, but he is in the movie Pay It Forward.

Connecticut based team add twist to Christ story

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

No set. No elaborate costumes. Just a story to tell and a powerful statement to make. This is how Connecticut's Hole in the Wall Company came to Bowker Auditorium Saturday night to perform Terrence McNally's Corpus Christi.

Brought to UMass by the LBGT Graduate Student Organization and the Stonewall Center, "Corpus Christi" is a somewhat oblique retelling of the story of Christ. It begins in contemporary Corpus Christi, Texas, where a young man named Joshua realizes he is gay. He leaves Corpus Christi to meet temptations and deprivations somewhat akin to those Christ met, with minor alterations: for example, James Dean tempts him instead of Satan.

After roaming the desert and accepting what he, as the son of God, has to do, Joshua starts to pick up disciples – twelve, in fact, also gay men. They preach love and good deeds and Joshua performs miracles. Eventually he is ready to return to Corpus Christi where he is betrayed by his lover, Judas, and crucified.

Unlike most of "Corpus Christi's" critics, I found the piece disconcerting not for its supposed irreverence to Christianity and the scripture, but instead for what appeared to be an unsure intention. The play was utterly inconsistent, trying at times to reinterpret the story of Christ as a story of oppression ending in a hate crime against a gay man, while at other times trying to adhere strictly to the chronology of the Bible with occasional insertions of political statements (i.e. Jesus performs a gay civil union). McNally, who is arguably one of the best playwrights still alive and working in America, didn't do his usual fine job of deciding what he wanted this play to be. It wavered between a mockery of the story of Christ and a poignant perception of it, reminding us that Jesus was gay to everyone, blind to their occupation, station or sexuality.

Regardless, the ultimate impression of the play is an important, albeit necessary one. To love without judgment, else lives end like Jesus/Joshua's in senseless cruelty.

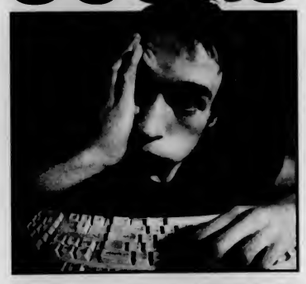
Beyond the playwright's shortcomings, the cast suffered a few of their own. It was pretty split between don't quit-your-day-job performances and the subtle, natural delivery of a script that asks a lot of its actors. Wayne Crow as Joshua was undoubtedly the strongest link in the cast, bringing a gentle naivete to his younger self and an endearing, emotive appeal to his older self.

Scott Auden was also noticeably more professional and involved in his role as Judas, though at times he could have been clearer about his love for Joshua and less forward about his sexual attraction to him – at least to make the betrayal more meaningful. Ben Tradwick-Smith as James and Todd Yocher as Bartholomew were wonderful in their larger and smaller supporting roles, avoiding the all-too-easy work of character acting, revealing instead true talent in a variety of shades. Philip D. Vetro's direction might have risen above the holes of McNally's script a bit more than it did, making it less abrasive on an audience trying to fuse the concepts of the story of Jesus and a story distinctly not the story of Jesus. His choice to use an entirely sparse stage and have the actors clad in what could have been mistaken for a Gap advertisement was conceivable, but less than helpful in the long run.

"Corpus Christi" certainly aims to do something. It hits its target almost exactly, but follows a sometimes-questionable path to get there. In the case of Hole in the Wall's production, effort from all sides could have been more definite, making the end result more palpable to grasp. A tighter cast, a more accessible concept, a clear setting and progression from the playwright all of these things would have made the evening better.

And yet it was provocative, and despite the elusive journey it takes to reach its point, it still reaches its point. Love without fear or judgment and don't let what happened to him happen ever again.

SEARCHING SUCKS



THIRD VOICE DOESN'T

Let the information you want on the Web come to you.
Don't go anywhere. Just click.
Third Voice – free software that brings you info in a way that goes above and beyond what your search engine can do. Get it. And get it over with.

thirdvoice
www.thirdvoice.com

© 2000 Third Voice Inc

2 DAYS OF OPPORTUNITY

UMass Amherst Graduate School Open House

Come learn about some of UMass' outstanding graduate departments

Tuesday October 24, 2000
5:30 to 7:30 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

*door prizes this day only

Annual Five College Graduate and Professional School Day

over 130 Graduate and Professional Schools from throughout the country and abroad

Wednesday October 25, 2000
10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

Excellence Is Within Your Reach

Call 413-577-0417 for more information
See www-ccn.acad.umass.edu for a list of attending departments/schools
Co-sponsored by the Campus Career Network and the Graduate Studies Office

Remembering childhood and what it meant to be cool

Style FILE with Shauna Billings

First step, first word, first friend, first day of school. There are so many firsts in a child's life. So many of them are imperative to a child's development, and then there are those that feel so important, but really make no difference in the grand scheme of things. Like a child's first trend.

As a child, you have your own unique fashion sense that is basically strangled and choked to death by parents who dress their children in plaid jumpers and velvet tuxedo jackets. Children get the occasional say when their parents allow them to pick out the random piece, like leopard print velcro shoes (I wish I still had those!). And it all really doesn't matter to you that much, until suddenly you care how you look, and you want to be cool.

I didn't care about being cool until I was in fifth grade, and then suddenly, BAM! I noticed that everyone in Mrs. Frost's class was wearing stylishly tight rolled Z-Cavariccis, and IOU/B.U.M. Equipment sweatshirts. And there I was, without a B.U.M. to be found.

With the sudden fashion epiphany came the liking of boys, tA psychological connection perhaps?! And me in my Mary Janes and floral dresses could not compete with a cute ten-year-old in white canvas shoes and multi-layered slouch socks for the attention of hot grade-five commodities like Barry Voight. I begged and pleaded, but my mom flat out refused to buy me a shirt that said B.U.M. across it, and so I was left behind by the trend wagon.

Since then, there have been enumerate trends: Hyper Color, Skidz, Starter Jackets, Kharma Beads. Trends that were just not there one day, and then were everywhere the next. Remember the sudden sweeping of Kharma Beads last year? My friend Lauren was the first person I knew to wear them. Everyone oohed and aahed over them in our Italian class, and then a week or so later, everyone had them, including our crazy Italian teacher. (A definite indication that a trend has reached it's peak, and will soon face a speedy decline is when crazy Italian teachers start looking cool.) Every store sold them, and people owned 5 bracelets (all protecting them from different things, with the bracelets meaning things like love, safety, health, intelligence.).

But Kharma Beads are now long forgotten, except by those that actually bought the bracelets because they believed in them. And new trends have taken over. The big trend that the advertising world was pushing for this fall was the Razor Scooter. Yes, the tiny little silver scooter that folds up and can be slung across your back, making you ready to do battle with the pinball machine. The scooters flopped big time amongst the college market. As a person over 5-foot-8 riding a puny scooter generally looks like the ridiculous equivalent to a trained gorilla riding around on a Barbie Big Wheel. I see little kids cruising around on them everywhere I go, but on campus it seems that it is just a few naive freshman who didn't realize the intense slope of the path leading from upper Central and Orchard Hill who fell for the marketing ploy. But not to worry. Health Services is at the bottom of that very steep hill, ready with antiseptic to clean wounds, and rusty saws to amputate if necessary.

The trend that is what the Razor Scooter was supposed to be is, the tied, black wrap sweater. Yes, you know that sweater that EVERY girl on campus has, myself included. Between classes, when the campus suddenly surges to life with thousands of people trying to get from Lederle to Herter in fifteen minutes, a troop of girls are wrapped and tied in black knit. It's like an enemy army of hip, urban Gen-Xers, marching onto UMass, ready to stomp down the unfashionable with their 3 inch platform boots. Rebels will be hanging lanterns in the windows of South College, warning UMass of the approaching trends girls, flashing one if by PVTA bus, two if by Razor Scooter. (The Sweaters are coming! The Sweaters are coming!).

One environment where the black wrap sweater breeds and multiplies is in the closets of sorority houses. Each house must seriously have 50 identical sweaters lying around. How do they keep their black sweaters straight? Or is there a community sweater that they all share? And if so, how do they decide who gets to wear it that day?

Generally there are two types of girls that wear the tie sweater (though of course there are always exceptions to the rule). There are the girls that get totally decked out for class in platform boots, tight pants, the perfect shirt, blow-dried to perfection hair, and just the right make-up. Then there are the girls that like to pretend that they don't care about their appearance, because they have much better things to do. You know the ones that come to class every day in sneakers, baggy t-shirt pants, and that perfectly proportioned white long-sleeve T-shirt that is loose and tight at the proper places. And then they pull their hair into a ponytail, and pull a headband on, and then carefully apply more make-up than RuPaul on an Awards Night. This carefree, I-don't-care-about-how-I-look look generally takes about 30-40 minutes to achieve. Oh, the deception. But both the look-at-me and the pseudo-free-spirit looks both are topped off well with the sweater.

Perhaps the world of fashion should take a cue from the success of the comfortable and always stylish black sweater, and apply it to other designs.

Boot out those weird little straps that cover just your arms and shoulders, or teeteringly high stilettos, or skin-tight pants that overly restrict blood vessels paving the way for some nasty heart trouble. The world would be a better place without them.

As much as I tease about everyone having the black sweater, it really is a fashion staple. It looks great with everything from the dressy to the club-hopping to the jogging pants. It's comfortable and warm, and I wear mine all the time. Just be aware that the look is not original.

As much as everyone loves their black sweaters now, fashion is a fickle, fickle world. So enjoy the trends while you can, because you never know when leg warmers are going to take over.

Shauna Billings is a UMass Student

How about a couple of
TALL FROSTY ONES?
Two Great Mountains.
One Great Pass.
No Restrictions!
With the Stratton/Okemo College Pass you can ski and ride seven days a week, all season long, for $299 if purchased by 12/10/2000.
COLLEGE PASS PURCHASE DEADLINES PRICE
On or before 12/10/00 $299
After 12/10/00 $359
For the Stratton/Okemo College Pass, students must provide full-time status documentation from the Registrar's office. College ID's will not be accepted as proof. All purchase prices subject to 5% Vermont sales tax.
OKEMO MOUNTAIN RESORT
1-802-228-4041 okemo.com
STRATTON VT
1-800-STRATTON stratton.com
OKEMO STRATTON OKEMO STRATTON OKEMO

The UMass Index Yearbook
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
OCTOBER 23RD-27TH
Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY
Walsworth Publishing Company
Order Your 2001 Yearbook
ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or
Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

Sponsored by entreclub.org
Life's a Pitch
You have 45 seconds to sell your idea... what are you going to say?
We'll tell you.
Learn how to develop and pitch a business concept.
"Business Concepts: from Idea to Enterprise"
Event: Business Concepts: from Idea to Enterprise
When: Wednesday, October 25th at 7:00 pm
Where: Memorial Hall, UMass Amherst
Speaker: Jamie Page, founder Crosskate
2nd Place winner MIT's $50k Business Plan Competition
WHAT IS THAT?! Come find out.
Prize Drawing!! Free Admission

football

continued from page 10

fourth quarter.

The two-headed monster of Shipp and Quinlan carried a majority of the UMass offense combining for 284 of UMass 436 total yards. Shipped rushed 25 times for 111 yards and a touchdown. He also caught six passes for 37 yards. Quinlan carried the ball 16 times for 120 yards and two touchdowns and grabbed two passes for 16 yards.

For all of the offensive success in the second half, it was the defense that told the story. The Minutemen had its best statistical game of the year holding AIC (5-3, 5-1 Eastern Football Conference) to a meager 106 yards of total offense.

The defense, after having what was thought to be a shaky start, has allowed only 26 points over the last three games.

"Right now our defense is giving up 160 less yards than the national championship defense had given up to this point," Whipple said. "We were giving up 31 points a game that season, it's not even close [this season]."

It was the stalwart defense effort that gave the Minutemen an opportunity to win the contest despite the ineptitude of the offense for much of the game.

The Maroon and White defense held the Yellow Jacket ground attack to 16 yards on 41 carries. This effort comes a week after they held Maine to 24 yards on 51 carries. UMass has stymied its last two opponents on the defensive side of the ball holding them to a combined 293 yards of total offense.

Even though the Minutemen came away with the victory, there is a lot to be said for what AIC proved in the game. They proved that when you play with emotion anything can happen. UMass played with a little and they played with a lot.

"The score tells one thing, but for us it's a moral victory," AIC cornerback Mike Bonsu said.

"A lot of people expected us to come in here and get destroyed by 70 points," AIC running back Mike Novembre said. "Everybody stayed in it and gave 110%."

quarterbacks

continued from page 10

some times, when you're trying to make something happen."

Lucero fortunately regrouped from his errant throw, leading the team on two more scoring drives to lock up the win. But while his competitive spark was apparent, the lack of fire among the rest of the Minuteman ranks was obvious.

"I saw that at breakfast; I was about to take my plate and throw it against the wall," Whipple said. "If they need theatrics, I'll do it. But they don't need me to throw garbage cans and plates."

But they might need him to throw the football before too long.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist.

hockey

continued from page 10

apart."

Colgate (1-1-2, 0-0-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) had two relatively fluke goals to grab the lead. The first came at 8:38 when a dump in attempt from behind the blue line made a strange carom off the boards to the front of the net. The puck found its way to the stick of Sean Nolan. Nolan then slid a pass to Kevin Johns, who beat a defenseless Helanen to give the Red Raiders a one-goal lead.

They would add to that lead moments later when Chad MacDonald was credited with his fourth goal of the season. Söderholm tried to glove the puck out of the UMass zone, but it hit MacDonald and went into the goal to push the lead to two goals.

"It's one of those freaky goals. I have a lot of confidence in the official. I've known him for a long time, he's a good official," Cahoon said. "He said he saw it. Toni [Söderholm] actually collected the puck and then he tried to shove it out, throw it. He threw it off [MacDonald] into the net.

"[MacDonald] carried it into the net, but Toni threw it to him. It's just one of those unfortunate plays. Fortunately it didn't cost us the game in the end."

UMass, as it had in its two games of the season, again found itself with an early deficit. Nolan scored a power play goal. The senior was the beneficiary of a great individual effort by Scooter Smith. Smith streaked along the right wing boards, which created a 2-on-1 chance and found Nolan at the right of the net for the tally.

The Minutemen tied the game late in the frame when Miljko scored the first of his two goals on the night on a one-timer from the left face-off circle.

The Maroon and White grabbed their only lead of the game midway through the second period when Thomas Pock scored his second goal of the season on a vicious slap shot from just inside the Red Raider blue line. Colgate battled back to tie the game just over three minutes later when Matt Nicholson capitalized on an errant UMass clearing attempt and fired a shot through a crowd that beat Helanen.

Miljko

continued from page 10

with his own player and that left me wide open and Toni made a backhand saucer right to me," stated Miljko.

So, for Miljko and the rest of the Minutemen, their first home contest of the season was, for the most part, an incredibly positive one. Though they did not win, they showed heart that they did not show for the most part last year. Maybe spark plugs like Miljko will be the ones who brought about this change in attitude. And, one can only hope that the tallies will keep coming for the Ontario native and that the injury bug will stay away.

But despite his success in the clutch, Miljko's game is far from complete.

"He's got to do other things in order to have the opportunity to score those goals," said Cahoon.

And for the Minutemen to move into the upper echelon among Hockey East, it is imperative to see more plays like the one Martin Miljko made on Saturday.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

ATTENTION GRADUATE STUDENTS!
Come hear what it takes to be a successful faculty candidate!
UMass Graduate Information Day: Working on an Academic Career
Tuesday October 24th
9:00 am - noon
Student Union Ballroom
Find out what the benefits are in the teaching field and how to prepare an effective Curriculum Vitae and Cover Letter
All Doctoral and Masters Candidates are welcome!
Sponsored by the Campus Career Network and the Graduate Studies Office

Buy the textbooks you need today!
UNIVERSITY STORE'S Textbook Annex UMASS AMHERST
All unsold books will soon be returned to publishers!
Receive a 5% rebate on textbook purchases at the Textbook Annex!
Store Hours
Monday - Friday 9:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m.
Phone: 543-3570
www.umassbkstr.com

WHERE DO WE GO TONIGHT?
CLUB 21
21 PLUS TRIVIA / DANCE PARTY
WITH D.J. MATT Filmore
Every Monday Night 9:30-Closing
DRINK SPECIALS
GIVEAWAYS
CONTESTS
ALL NIGHT MENU
5 TVs
CLUB 21 ROUTE 21 BELCHERTOWN, MA. 323-4117

www.alltrue.com
Alltrue
Watch thousands of killer video clips at www.alltrue.com
made you look

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Spacious living room. High ceilings, AC, Puffton Village 549-6434 ASAP

AUTO FOR SALE

87 Honda Accord 131k at $800/obo. 2dr. sun@geo.umass.edu

1987 Jeep Wrangler 4cyl, hard top. Many new parts. $4100 or bo 665-3013

97 Honda Civic Ex. Low miles 35,000. Perfect condition, standard. $12,995 Ian 546-0981

HONDA ACCORD LX, 1990, AT/PW/PL/AC, 140k miles, excellent condition. Contact evenings, 413-736-6161

Quality Autos For Sale 85 Dodge Caravan, 5speed, loaded $450. 90 Ford Ranger XLT, burgandy $1000 Call 413-286-0857

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

AUTO FOR SALE

91 Ford Taurus black, 90k mi $2200 549-5230

COMPUTERS

For Sale: used desktop computer - P3, 500MHZ, 128MB, 20GB, DVD, CDRW, NIC, ATI 30 card, plus more. Call Surya @ 546-2613

LAPTOPS for only $399, warranty included. Email:laptop4me@hotmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

WANTED: Native speakers of American English for listening experiment $8/hr. 545-6837

Kitchen Help @ meal times. Nice place to work. Near campus. Meals + pay. 549-7719

Paid Business Internship Soph, Jr, + Sr. Preffered. For info and application Go to http://www.jablon.com

Voice Talent Needed Internet/Radio startup seeks fun + energetic person to be our VOICE!!! Radio/acting experience + interesting accent "particularly Jamican, W Indian" a plus. Call 617-598-1030 ext. 1230 for more information.

Rao's Coffee is hiring. Apply only if you are serious about working hard.

EMPLOYMENT

PAID MEDIA INTERNSHiP AVAILABLE Are you looking for a way to combine an education in journalism or communication with social activism? Do you have an interest in grassroots organizing and want to learn how to use the media as a tool for political activism? If you have taken basic journalism or communication coursework, the Peace Development Fund has a paid internship position for you. Position begins immediately and runs until May/June 2001. Flexible schedule. For more information contact Rose Sackey-Milligan at 413-256-8306, ext. 227, or rose@peacefund.org. Send resume and cover letter to Media Internship at PDF, P.O. Box 1280, Amherst, MA 01004, or to rose@peacefund.org

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

EMPLOYMENT

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today; 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Beerpong Tables for sale!! Custom made to order, 4x8. Free delivery to anywhere in Amherst. Call 549-5950 ASAP Ask for Chad

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Djata Bumpus. 256-0364 (Incorrect number ran in previous ads.)

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

5 Girls need housemate for big house on Main St. Private room $230/mo + utilities. 2 blocks from Amherst Center. No sex preference call Sam @ 253-9627

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female wanted to share room in apt. Starting Dec/Jan Call 546-3930 ask for Trisha

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

TRAVEL

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

Need a JOB??

Check us out...

We have everything you might need!!

The Daily Collegian Classifieds

Need to Advertise?

You found the right paper!!

We advertise to THOUSANDS of STUDENTS!!

Advertise with US!

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Ch.
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 International
15 UMass Academic TV
16 WB/New Haven
17 Sundance
18 The Learning Channel
19 UVC-TV19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
21 Govt. to Govt
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN Headline News
24 CNN
25 CNN Fn
26 CNN Si
27 TBS
28 BET
29 College TV Network
30 Univision
31 Comedy Central
32 Cartoon Network
33 TV Land
34 C-Span
35 ZDTV (Tentative)
36 Bloomberg Financial Network
37 History Channel
38 HSCN Programming

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 23, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	(12) Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Antiques Roadshow ⓒ		American Experience "The Rockefellers" (N) (Part 2 of 2) ⓒ				Connecticut Journal Rewind
WFSB	3	(3) News ⓒ	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Yes, Dear ⓒ	Raymond	Becker (N) ⓒ	Family Law "Going Home" ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WBZ	4	(4) News ⓒ	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear ⓒ	Raymond	Becker (N) ⓒ	Family Law "Going Home" ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WCVB	5	(5) News ⓒ	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⓒ	20/20 Downtown (N) ⓒ		NFL Football: Miami Dolphins at New York Jets. (In Stereo Live) ⓒ
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless ⓒ	Friends ⓒ		Nanny ⓒ	7th Heaven "Buried" (In Stereo)	Roswell "Summer of 47" (N) ⓒ		News ⓒ		Friends ⓒ	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Deddio (N) ⓒ	Tucker (N) ⓒ	Deadline (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	(6)	7th Heaven (In Stereo) ⓒ		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Moesha ⓒ	Partners ⓒ	Hughleys ⓒ	Girlfriends ⓒ	News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N) ⓒ		Hollywood	Deddio (N) ⓒ	Tucker (N) ⓒ	Deadline (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ	Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8 (11)	Simpsons ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Boston Public "Chapter One"		Ally McBeal (N) ⓒ		News		Friends ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ
WWLP	9 22	News ⓒ	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Deddio (N) ⓒ	Tucker (N) ⓒ	Deadline (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		News ⓒ	Tonight Show
WGBY	11 (4)	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Antiques Roadshow ⓒ		American Experience "The Rockefellers" (N) (Part 2 of 2) ⓒ				Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⓒ
WGGB	40 28	News ⓒ	ABC News	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	20/20 Downtown (N) ⓒ		NFL Football: Miami Dolphins at New York Jets. (In Stereo Live) ⓒ
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ⓒ	Judge Judy ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Moesha ⓒ	Partners ⓒ	Hughleys ⓒ	Girlfriends ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Mad Abt. You	Spin City ⓒ	Spin City ⓒ
WTBS	42	Roseanne ⓒ	Roseanne ⓒ	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★½ "Big Jake" (1971, Western)		John Wayne, Richard Boone.		★★★ "Mrl Hrrcht" (1963, Western)		John Wayne, Maureen O'Hara
A&E	43	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	Extended Family	Biography: Anne Rice		City Confidential ⓒ		Investigative Reports (N) ⓒ		Law & Order "Terminal" ⓒ
CNN	44 21	Worldview ⓒ	Moneyline Newshour (N) ⓒ		Crossfire ⓒ	World Today ⓒ		Larry King Live ⓒ		Newsstand ⓒ		Sports	Moneyline ⓒ
COM	45 29	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Daily Show ⓒ	Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Strangers	Com.-Presents	Daily Show ⓒ	Stein's Money
DISC	46	Wild Discovery	Swamp Hogs	Wild Discovery	Otters	On the inside: Avalanches		Cosmetic Surgery		Prosecutors-Justice		Justice Files
ESPN	47	Sportscenter ⓒ		2-Minute Drill	Monday Night Countdown (N)			Figure Skating: World Championships – Men's and Ladies'				Dog Show (N)	ESPNews
LIFE	48	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Por		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Fugitive Nights: Danger in the Desert" (1993, Mystery) Tel Gan				To Be Announced
MTV	49	Direct Effect	Road Rules ⓒ	Road Rules ⓒ	Road Rules ⓒ	Road Rules ⓒ	Road Rules ⓒ	Road Rules ⓒ	Road Rules ⓒ	Road Rules ⓒ	Choose	Truth (N)	Jackass
NICK	50	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! ⓒ	Rugrats ⓒ	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	51	Sliders "Paradise Lost" ⓒ		Babylon 5 ⓒ		Outer Limits "Alien Radio" ⓒ		★½ "Child's Play 3" (1991, Horror)		Justin Whalin. (In Stereo) ⓒ		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	52 24	How'd They Do That?		Designer Babies		Code Blue: Fresh Faces (N)		Maternity Ward		Critical Incident: Sudden		Code Blue: Fresh Faces
TNT	53	ER "When the Bough Breaks" ⓒ		Pretender "Unforgotten" ⓒ		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo) ⓒ				Ball "Monday, Bloody Monday"		Pretender (In Stereo) ⓒ
USA	54	Walker, Texas Ranger "Lucky"		JAG "Dungaree Justice" ⓒ		Nash Bridges "Hog Fall" ⓒ		★ "Reform School Girls" (1986, Drama) Linda Carol. (In Stereo)				Farmclub.com (In Stereo) ⓒ
HBO	55	★★ "Just Between Friends" (1986) Mary Tyler Moore. 'PG-13' ⓒ				★★ "Entrapment" (1999, Suspense) Sean Connery. 'PG-13' ⓒ				Hate.com: Ext. Bedazzled		★★½ "Three Kings" (1999) 'R'
MAX	56	(5:00)	★★★ "Another Stakeout" (1993) Richard Dreyfuss. 'PG-13' ⓒ			★★½ "The Highwayman" (1999) Jason Priestley. 'R'				★★½ "Sleeping With the Enemy" (1991) 'R' ⓒ		"Deep Impact"
SHOW	57	★★½ "The Cutting Edge" (1992, Comedy) D.B. Sweeney. 'PG' ⓒ				★★★ "Mean Streets" (1999, Suspense) Scott Salvia, Leon. 'R' ⓒ				Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)		★★★ "Sin of Echoes" (1999) 'R'

Dibbert By Scott Adams

MY SON IS FLUNKING ALL HIS CLASSES. I'M HOPING HE CAN GET A JOB INVOLVING COMPUTERS.
CARRYING THEM?
PEOPLE DON'T LIKE IT WHEN YOU FILL IN THE BLANKS IN THEIR STORIES

Robotman By Jim Meddick

THIS IS REALLY GETTIN' TO ME! I'M TOO FAT TO FLY! WHEN I WAS A YOUNG PARROT I USED TO FLY CIRCLES AROUND THE OTHER PARROTS.
HEY, DON'T FEEL SO BAD! WE ALL REACH A POINT IN OUR LIVES WHEN WE REALIZE WE CAN'T DO SOMETHING AS WELL AS WHEN WE WERE YOUNG.
WHAT? WERE YOU GOOD AT BASKETBALL OR SOMETHING?
I USED TO KICK BUTT AT HOT DOG EATING CONTESTS.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

LISTEN, PEOPLE. I NEED SHIFTLER NUMBERS! I STILL CAN'T EXPLAIN MY OWN TAX PROGRAM!
NOT TO WORRY, SIR. NO BIGGY. CARES IS YOU BAMS CREATE.
WHAT DO YOU MEAN?
WELL, SIR, YOU LEFT STUFF WRONG ALL THE TIME. BUT SINCE IT'S OUT OF ENDURANCE, YOUR ERRORS ARE CONSIDERED "HONEST" MISTAKES.
HONEST MISTAKES?
YES, SIR.
HEE, HEE. HOW COOL IS THAT?
COOL ENOUGH TO START MEASURING FOR DIAPERS.

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Why are you dressed like a cop? We're going to a house party!
Exactly... this is for protection.
When the real ones show up, I just "switch sides."

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCKY, THIS IS MY NEW FRIEND, COTTON B. GROSS.
HI! BUCKY! IT'S SO NICE TO MEET YOU!
?
EW. I REALLY DON'T THINK THIS IS SUCH A GOOD IDEA.
OH. WHAT COULD POSSIBLY—

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

Boooooooooooo.
Boooooooooooo.
I THINK IT'S SO CUTE THE WAY YOUR SISTER IS PRACTICING HER GHOST SOUNDS FOR HALLOWEEN.
GHOST SOUNDS?
MOM, SHE'S WATCHING JERRY SPRINGER.
BUT BABY, IT WAS DADS TOUR GRANDMA LOOKED LIKE YOU!
Boooooooo

Sixteen Lima Bars By Barry Marhefka

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

HEY, IT'S MICHAEL STIPE'S HEAD.
"IT IS CLEAR THAT ARMY ANT WORKERS SOMETIMES CONSUME THEIR OWN BROOD, BUT THE EXTENT TO WHICH CANNIBALISM OCCURS AND THE IMPORTANCE OF THE BROOD AS A FOOD SOURCE AHEM!
MAN, I HAVE TO STOP SMOKING KALEIDOSCOPES

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

R.J. WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO BE FOR HALLOWEEN?
HALLOWEEN IS A JUVENILE CELEBRATION OF SUGAR AND ITS AFTER-EFFECTS...
I'M PASSING THIS YEAR.
YOU'RE GOING AS ME?
WHAT? TOO SCARY?

MONKEY-BOX BY PABLO

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Romance is essential to your mental and physical well-being, so don't be afraid to knock on your RA's door tonight in search of a little midnight lovin'.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Try to put any insecurities you may have aside and accept the compliments and invitations that are liable to be coming your way. They're probably just lies anyway, but it's ok to pretend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You've probably been a bit overworked and overwhelmed lately. But now's a good time to try to re-connect with your sensual nature. And what says sensual more than Ramen by candlelight?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Listen to your friends. Buy a ticket to Seattle and go see Pearl Jam at Key Arena with me. I'll even let you buy me dinner. What's the hesitation? Be impulsive and spend all your money. Stone will love you for it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Star Trek and Anime of a pornographic nature will get you nowhere. It's unhealthy. I'm kiddy for you, you can bake a damn good apple pie and still get the ladies. Don't giggle like that. It's scary.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – If you're reading this in hopes of finding actual direction in your life, I'm sorry. Not here. If you're just killing a second before hitting the crossword, however, than that's cool. Have fun – it's tough today.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – If you do not have a date tonight, you will have a better chance of being asked by someone if you wear a T-Shirt with your favorite band on it. If your favorite band is Creed, however, just stay home and watch TV with your Mom.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – This is a black fingernail polish day – if only it was in fashion! If you have a new set of jobs around the house, now is a good time to discuss a better allowance – or maybe look for part-time afternoon work in the neighborhood.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – If your intuition leads you to suspect that someone else might be interested in you, you're probably right. Like last night when the DC lady winked at you in line? You have a little more than extra mashed potatoes coming your way.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Sorry to break the news to you, but even if you do know it all, you cannot expect the world to applaud you on command. That's it. Sorry.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Skip all of your classes today and head to the music store. Buy a Beatles CD, go home, and listen for the backwards messages. They're not there, but the music is pretty good.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Spend the day and evening with friends, even if they come between you and that mysterious stranger you have been obsessing about lately. Deciding what to wear will take forever, but fate will select the best outfit for you today.

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 60 LOW: 29	HIGH: 65 LOW: 42	HIGH: 67 LOW: 43

Quote of the Day

"Instead of having "answers" on a math test, they should just call them "impressions," and if you got a different "impression," so what, can't we all be brothers?"

-Jack Handy

After all these years, we still love to read the Collegian together!
After all these years, I still don't know what that black spot is on the back of her thigh.

ACROSS

1 Upper atmosphere
4 Fluff, as hair
9 Pedestal
13 Crude metal
14 Earthenware pots
15 Display
16 "Don't be silly"
18 Augusta's state
19 Toll
20 Insisted on 22 Feeling
25 Winter Ayn
26 Braugher of "Homicide"
28 Orders
32 Derby, e g
35 Puts on weight
37 Scared-looking
38 God of love
40 Sailing vessel
42 Garbo movie "Mata —"
43 Oozes out
45 Like a bear
47 Dunk
48 Concocted
50 Pass on (gossip)
52 Even-steven
54 Needed replacing
58 Rainbow
62 Grind one's teeth
63 Shop machine
64 Julia Roberts e g
67 Chloe
68 Verses
69 Conceit
70 Meadow sounds
71 Stairs
72 Johnny — Dixie soldier

DOWN

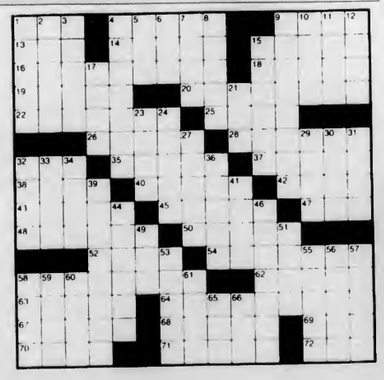
1 Argyles, e g

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

P	A	R		L	O	Y	A	L		B	A	S	I	E
A	D	O		A	R	E	N	A		O	R	A	L	S
C	L	O	U	D	B	A	N	K		L	I	C	K	S
T	A	S	K	S		E	A	T	E	R
S	I	T	E		Z	E	B	R	A		L	I	P	S
		F	O	R	E	S	A	W		F	L	O
R	A	I	L	R	O	A	D		A	D	I	E	U
E	S	T	E	E	M	S		L	O	G	I	C	A	L
A	S	I	D	E		R	U	D	E	N	E	S	S
M	E	N		S	U	B	T	L	E	R
S	T	E	M		F	E	E	L	S		A	L	S	O
		R	A	T	O	N		L	L	A	M	A
A	W	A	K	E		G	L	A	D	I	A	T	O	R
C	A	R	E	S		A	I	D	E	D		E	K	E
T	R	Y	S		L	E	A	N	S		R	E	D

11-15-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

2 Danish dollar
3 Red Sea country
4 Decorating leather
5 Fairy
6 Furry TV alien
7 Uttered
8 Chemical compound
9 Flourish (a weapon)
10 Like the Gobi
11 Reasonable
12 Ogled
15 Donohoe or Plummer
17 Movie lioness
21 Daisy —
23 Sask. neighbor
24 Deep distress
27 Go inside
29 African lake
30 Gain of "Mr. Mom"
31 Cut
32 Position of control
33 Vicinity
34 Pond critter
36 Hardware item
39 Draws
41 Head light?
44 Fitted
46 Generosity
49 Each
51 Inclinations
53 Throws away
55 Horsa opera
56 Custom
57 Ache
58 Untidy one
59 Hemingway nickname
60 Soul-singer James
61 Debatable
65 Victory sign
66 Dewlap



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Charbroiled Chicken Sandwich

Broccoli-Rice Casserole (vegetarian)

Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

Dinner

Beef Fajita

Baked Ziti (vegetarian)

Tofu Fajita (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Dan Santello
Copy Editor	Matt Despres
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Vlad Zakashansky, Soren Nash

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Monday, October 23, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass steals Yellow Jackets' sting

Defense shines as Minutemen blank D-II AIC

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

It was not supposed to be that tough. It was not supposed to be scoreless at halftime. And it was not what most expected. But that is why the games are played.

The Massachusetts football team, winners of its last two games, came into Saturday's contest with Division II American International College hoping to keep its winning streak alive.

UMass 21
AIC 0

That it did, but it was harder than they could have ever imagined.

UMass had a similar problem in week three of the season when New Haven traveled into Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium, but the Minutemen held off the D-II opponent, 39-29. The Maroon and White were never able to take control of that game and against AIC there was much of the same.

The Minutemen had their chances early, but with every miscue that was made, the Yellow Jackets seemed to gain a little more confidence. This was brought to forefront when Walter Payton Award candidate Marcel Shipp was stopped on a fourth-and-one play at the AIC seven-yard line with 21 seconds to go in the first half.

"It's frustrating for all of us," safety Jeremy Robinson said. "It's frustrating for me on defense as well as the offense. I knew [the offense] would come around. We just had to keep holding up [the defensive] end of the bargain."

The squandered opportunity allowed the D-II opponent to have a chance to win the game in the second half. But it would not pan out for them as Head Coach Mark Whipple inserted former starting quarterback Richard Lucero into the game midway through the third quarter in place of Kelly Seibert. The junior ignited the Minuteman offense and led them on three scoring drives and an eventual 21-0 victory.

"We've said from day one that we feel like we have two good quarterbacks," Whipple said. "You just make a move. We made a move beforehand. We felt we needed a change. We've got two good guys that have worked hard, that have concentrated.

"Richard [Lucero] did a really good job. He's the one that sparked the team."

On Lucero's first series of the game, he led the Maroon and White on a six-play, 70-yard drive that was capped by a Kevin Quinlan 19-yard touchdown run, his first of two in the second half.

"Once you get the first touchdown, you're rolling," Whipple said.

After the Quinlan scamper, UMass was able to breathe a sigh of relief and went on to add to more touchdowns.

The junior, who has been splitting time with Shipp over the last two weeks, scored his second of the game on a one-yard plunge with just under 11 minutes remaining in the

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 7

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Wide receiver Jeff Howard and the UMass football team earned a hard-fought victory over Division II American International College on Saturday at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium, 21-0.

Friendly skies anything but as Whipple does QB shuffle

The skies were clear and sunny over McGuirk Alumni Stadium on Saturday. No storm clouds hovered overhead, and no hurricane warnings were broadcast over the PA system. No foul weather whatsoever threatened the afternoon's football game between Massachusetts and American International College.

Yet the Maroon and White Air Force was still grounded.

Despite pulling off a 21-0 shutout of the Division II Yellow Jackets, a rather lax UMass team needed a massive game from its twin rushing warhorses to overcome AIC at all. Were it not for the 231 combined yards from still-ailing Marcel Shipp and backup Kevin Quinlan, the Minutemen's anemic passing game might have spelled defeat for this limp (and still limping) squad.

Quarterback Kelly Seibert made his third-straight start since taking over the signal caller spot from Richard Lucero, but this was simply not the sophomore's day. A steady pattern of screen passes indicated that Seibert was being kept on a short leash by coach Mark Whipple, but on the calls when he could open fire, Seibert repeatedly threw the ball into the ground in front of his intended targets.

"The offense isn't there to set up the punting game, and that's basically what we were doing," Whipple said. "Kelly was just having one of those days. The ball just wasn't coming off his hand; I think his reads were all right, and there were guys open. He just couldn't make the throws that he needed to make."

While Seibert struggled to get the Minutemen off the ground, AIC sensed the ineptitude of the UMass air strike and tightened up an already effective defensive scheme. Coach Art Wilkins began shifting his safeties to split up the secondary and take away UMass' routes, all the while keeping the heat on Seibert.

"We switched the coverage up, playing more two-deep and cover-three," AIC cornerback Mike Bonsu said. "That gave us a better chance at seeing where they were throwing the ball."

"Honestly, we just played very good zone defense," Wilkins said. "We kept the pressure on, making them hold the ball for a pump or a pump-and-a-half longer. When you do that, you're going to get someone in his face."

When the halftime whistle resounded over a 0-0 deadlock, Whipple had seen enough.

"We've said from day one that we have two good quarterbacks," Whipple said. "With a zero on the scoreboard, it's about putting the ball in the endzone. It's time to make a move."

Enter Lucero, the Juco rifleman who had shown a dual personality of brilliance (1,262 yards, 12 touchdown passes) and blunder (nine interceptions) in his four starts on the year.

Luckily for the Minutemen, the Lucero who lined up under center Saturday was the confident leader they needed to take control and pull out a win. He immediately spotted wideout Adonis Kinsey lined up in single coverage on the strong side, and launched a tightly spiraled completion that keyed UMass' first scoring drive.

"Richard is the one who sparked the team," Whipple said. "It was a good drive, and Adonis Kinsey made a couple nice catches. That was a real plus, where [Kinsey] practiced harder this week and worked a little bit better."

Lucero couldn't completely exorcise his interception demons against the Yellow Jackets, as UMass' subsequent drive ended with the junior's tenth pick of the year. He appeared to have DeShon Hardy open at the AIC six, but his line drive throw ended up in the wrong team's hands.

"That was a touchdown, but instead of hanging the ball over the corner, I tried to shoot it in," Lucero said. "You just get anxious

Turn to QUARTERBACKS, page 7

Blazing the comeback trail

UMass raids net late to earn tie with No. 12 Colgate

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Never say die. The Massachusetts hockey team paid tribute to the adage Saturday night at the William D. Mullins Center.

UMass 4
Colgate 4

The Minutemen trailed No. 12 Colgate 4-2 with less than two minutes on the clock, but a resilient UMass squad (0-2-1, 0-0-0 Hockey East) netted a pair of goals to tie the game at four. The back-to-back tallies turned what seemed to be a loss into a hard fought 4-4 deadlock.

"They get to pay attention that the game is 60 minutes long and so you play it for the whole 60 minutes," head coach Don Cahoon said. "They proved that they came here to play until the final buzzer went off."

Martin Miljko, who sat out the final 12 games of last season due to injury, scored the game-tying goal as seven seconds showed on the clock.

The junior's goal came as the Maroon and White had pulled goalie Markus Helanen in favor of an extra attacker. It was not easy for UMass to get the senior netminder from the crease, as the Red Raiders kept the pressure on the Minutemen and forced him to stay within his blue line.

But with Helanen on the bench, the Maroon and White got what it needed: a faceoff in Colgate's zone. The draw was to the left of goaltender Jason Lefevre and left Turner won it cleanly back to Toni Soderholm, who subsequently fed a crisp cross-ice pass to a wide-open Miljko.

Miljko seized the opportunity by blasting a shot to the back of the net to tie the game.

"We did design [the play]," Miljko said. "The play before we had it set up the same way. I was coming off the boards and the 'd' was with me the whole way. This time we drew it up again."

"He shoots the puck better than most guys at this level," Cahoon said. "If given opportunities he should be able to score a few goals."

The native of Etobicoke, Ontario was given the opportunity to tie the game after Tim Turner brought UMass to within a goal when he scored his fourth goal of the year from the doorstep with 1:35 to go in the contest.

Defenseman Luke Duplessis pinched in deep along the left wing boards and found Turner parked all alone at the right side of the net for the goal. The pass from Duplessis went right to the stick of Turner, who redirected the puck into the net for the goal.

UMass was forced to make such a valiant comeback as the result of a sluggish start to the third period. With the game knotted at two, the Minutemen were outplayed for the first 16 minutes of the final frame by Colgate. It was the sluggish play that allowed the Red Raiders to take the 4-2 lead.

"There were a couple of different games that were played out there," Cahoon said. "One I which I was really happy about, they way we were forechecking, the way we were controlling things and then plays when we would just fall

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Tim Turner (17) celebrates Martin Miljko's dramatic, game-tying goal as Colgate netminder Jason Lefevre (32) and Cory Murphy (24) look on in disbelief. The goal came with seven seconds to go in the game.

Long road back: Miljko's return crucial for success

For Martin Miljko, any type of successful return would have been positive. Simply getting a good workout certainly would have been a step in the right direction, but instead of taking a step in the right direction, Miljko ran miles.

In Saturday's tie against Colgate, Miljko scored twice including the game-tying goal, which came with just over seven seconds left and caused the Mullins Center crowd to erupt.

"When he works, he shoots the puck as well as anybody on our team and he's certainly proven that he can score," said coach Don Cahoon.

For the final 12 games of last year and the first two of this season Miljko was relegated to the sidelines because of a serious knee injury; he had surgery on both of his knees. In his first contest since an injury 10 months prior, Miljko returned to the lineup and sparked a remarkable comeback with his two-goal performance.

"Coming off of a knee injury, having surgery on both knees, everyone was curious to see how he was going to react and he stepped up and had a big game tonight," said sophomore forward Tim Turner.

Just 13 minutes into the game, Miljko took a brilliant crossing pass from forward Kris Wallis and tried to slip it into the lower left corner, but Red Raider netminder Jason Lefevre slammed the door, making a brilliant sliding right pad save. Nonetheless, Miljko had shown his shooting ability as well as his ability to get open, and that gave him the confidence needed to rise to the next level.

So, when the Maroon and White were on the power play and trailing, they turned to the junior to find a seam. With UMass seemingly unwilling to take a shot from the outside on the power play, Miljko decided it was time to end the trend. Point man Samuli Ialkanen crossed a pass from just inside the blue line to Miljko in the left slot, and he blasted a rocket past the blocker of Lefevre and into the upper left hand corner.

"That's our power play setup," the winger said. "I either take a one-timer or the defenseman takes it. It's been working well in practice, we've had a lot of success."

Miljko had countless other opportunities from the faceoff circle to the right of the netminder, but Colgate never seemed to catch on, the only thing keeping the junior from tallying countless goals being the side to side quickness of Lefevre. But it looked as though his first period tally would be his only one on the evening.

So Miljko and the Minutemen were left in trouble, desperately needing a score with just over 11 ticks remaining on the clock. With netminder Markus Helanen on the bench for an extra attacker, the Minutemen had their last chance – a faceoff to the left of Lefevre.

After winning the draw and getting the puck into the corner, Toni Söderholm fed the puck to a wide-open Miljko, who simply had to put the puck in the left side of the net. As the rubber hit the twine, the junior's arms shot up in celebration and the entire Colgate lineup crumbled in disappointment.

"I just rolled off and he collided

Turn to MILJKO, page 7

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 34 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, October 24, 2000

Four years after seemingly vanishing from Earth, Poe is back with a nifty new album. And we're excited.

ARTS p. 6

Obie Gravely and the UMass men's soccer team went airborne at Totman Field, but were grounded by the Flyers of Dayton.

SPORTS p. 12

Report reveals high sex crime rate at UMass

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The Clery Act Report released earlier this month by the University of Massachusetts Police Department showed a marked decrease in University crime last year, but the number of forcible sexual offenses is still a total of 27 on campus.

The report, which is mandated by the state, details the amount of crime on campus. Findings showed that overall crime had gone down on campus from the 1998 to 1999 school year, with a few exceptions.

On-campus larceny and drug violations saw a drastic increase this year with an increase from 56 to 72 drug violation incidents for the year, and from 353 to a 533 increase of larceny incidents on campus.

Forcible sexual offenses saw a slight decrease this year with numbers going from 28 offenses on campus to 27, and in-residence altercations dropping from 26 to 23 this year.

Jim Lyons, a spokesman for the UMass Police Department explained that the category of sexual assaults was broad and did not only include rape.

"It includes forcible rape, indecent assault and attempts at either of these," Lyons said. "It is the FBI definition."

According to information from the Clery Act Report guidelines, forcible sexual assaults include forcible rape, forcible sodomy or forced oral or anal sex against one's will, sexual assault with an object or forcible fondling.

This is different from non-forcible counts of sexual assault, which include both incest and statutory rape, for which the University has also seen a decrease.

Also on the decline are the number of incidents of burglary and aggravated assault.

For the third year straight, there were no murders or manslaughters on campus.

The Jeanne Clery Act was originally referred to as the Student's Right to Know Act passed through legislation in 1992, and was brought about by the brutal rape and murder of Jeanne Clery in her dormitory. Clery's parents pushed for legislation allowing students to know what types of crime occurred on all college campuses. There are laws that force college campuses to follow these standards; however, it is believed that not all college campuses fully disclose their crimes making their crime numbers appear lower than they actually are.

Some statistics at other schools around the country point to higher statistics for forcible sexual offenses and larcenies while hate crimes are at a low. At the University of California at Berkeley, a university with a total population of 31,347, the statistics for forcible sexual offenses during the 1999 school year are at three, with 712 thefts on campus.

A smaller school, the University of Daton in Ohio, with an overall population of 10,000 students, had a total of seven forcible sexual offenses with an exceedingly low 25 counts of burglary.

The University of Texas at Austin with a population of 48,000 students reported no rapes during the 1998 school year with a figure of 25 burglaries on campus. This was similar to the figure that came out of the University of Connecticut at Storrs, perhaps the most similar to UMass with a total of 22,736 students to UMass' rough estimate of about 24,000. The school reported in 1998 a forcible sexual offense total of two and 267 counts of larceny. Their total amount of hate crimes was nine, significantly higher than the total at UMass, which was one reported crime this year.

MAUREEN MAHER/ COLLEGIAN

Behind the Masks

Anika Patterson of Mt. Holyoke College and Melinda Nokes of UMass sculpt masks in African clay class.

Conn-quest

Research candidate introduced

By Suzanne Furst
Collegian Correspondent

P. Michael Conn, the latest candidate for the position of Vice Chancellor of Research at the University of Massachusetts, was introduced yesterday in an open meeting among students and faculty.

Conn greeted his audience in room 811 of the Campus Center by shaking the hand of everyone present and traded introductions.

P. Michael Conn comes to having already held the positions of Associate Director and Senior Scientist of the Oregon Regional Primate Research Center, Special Assistant to the President and Professor of Physiology and Pharmacology at Oregon Health Sciences University, and President of STAR Park, Inc. (the science, technology, and research park of Oregon).

Much like the previous candidate, Dr. Richard Koehn, Conn is no stranger to state schools. He graduated with a bachelor's degree and teaching certificate from the University of Michigan followed by a master's from North Carolina State University. He received his PhD. from Baylor College of Medicine.

Conn's research in the area of neuroendocrinology is the work that has made him best known. His other achievements include a MERIT award from the NIH, the J.J. Abel Award of the American Society for Pharmacology and Experimental Therapeutics, the Weitzman and Oppenheimer Awards of the Endocrine Society and the National Science Medal of Mexico. He has either authored or co-authored over 250 publications in this area, and served on the National Board of Medical Examiners that included two years as chairman of the Reproduction and Endocrinology Committee.

> "I would like to be alive when affirmative action is not needed."
>
> - P. Michael Conn, candidate for Vice Chancellor of Research

The question and answer session gave all present an opportunity for inquiries on their interests and concerns. One graduate student posed a question about whether or not Conn felt there was a need to concentrate on research ethics and compliance.

Conn joked, "If my answer is no, I'd better leave now." He then replied on a sterner note that if those topics aren't addressed, "The federal government will shut you down."

Another issue brought up was that of teaching cooperatively. Conn expressed his feelings that interdisciplinary disciplines are very important; he then explained that in establishing them, nothing should be taken away from individual departments.

"You are the sum of all your parts," Conn said. "If you bring five scientists together, you will get 25 ideas."

One student asked Conn whether or not he would find it necessary to foster minorities or more women if appointed to the position.

"I would like to be alive when affirmative action is not needed," Conn said. "[We] need to make all feel welcome."

Conn addressed an inquiry about balancing funding between, for instance, engineering and humanities. The solutions he gave included setting aside funds and bundling departments into programs that are fundable.

The candidate went on to mention the Bayh-dol Act, which he saw as a turning point for educational research. Before 1981, institutions could not sell their licenses for profit, but the Bayh-dol Act made it possible. According to Conn, it has become a part of the V.C.R.'s job to explain to people how to protect their ideas and research.

The third candidate for the Vice Chancellor of Research is W. Richards Adrion. He is the Division Director of Experimental and Integrative Activities at the National Science Foundation and Professor of Computer Science here at UMass.

The search committee welcomes all to attend the second to last open meeting. It will take place in room 805 of the Campus Center at 4:30 p.m. on October 30.

COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB

The Reverend Al Sharpton

Police brutality under fire

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The Reverend Al Sharpton will be making an appearance in the Campus Center tomorrow night at 8 p.m., along with Black Panther Collectives activist Bilal Shakur, in a presentation entitled "Black and Blue: A Discourse on Police Brutality."

Sharpton has been a public figure in the area of civil rights since the Seventies, and has been vocal about police brutality after several incidents in New York City in recent years, including the 1999 shooting of Ghanian immigrant Amadou Diallo. Bilal Shakur worked as a grassroots organizer while a college student, founding a black revolutionary youth organization called the Black Caucus. Most recently he has become a member of the Black Panther Collectives.

The two activists will discuss the subject of police brutality and activism for the first half of the program, and will then field questions for the second segment of the evening. The presentation, which has been organized by the Black Student Union, will specifically address police brutality as one of the major tenets of institutionalized racism in American society, rather than an incidental problem.

According to a press release put out by the Black Student Union, "We need to understand that police brutality and the use of excessive force are a serious violation of our human rights. We need to understand that its very nature is systemic. It is not simply an issue involving a few bad cops, white cops or the police department. More importantly, it is a reflection of the institution of racism and injustice that is so embedded in our society."

Nadira Hairston, a Senior Political Science major and the Event Coordinator for the presentation, said, "the main reason why we want to have the event is to get people aware of how big the issue [of police brutality] is."

She added, "Most people think it's a series of isolated events when it's really a nationwide problem."

Hairston cited the continuing mission of the Black Student Union to educating the campus community on social issues as one impetus for the organization of the program. "With BSU, mainly what we do is educational events, about issues that we could use to educate the community, that we thought the community could be more aware of."

Previous educational programs have included a panel discussion between the founders of the Black Panther and Young Lords parties, similar to that which will be held between Sharpton and Shakur on Wednesday. Julian Bond, a black activist and a former president of the NAACP, has also been brought to speak on campus through the efforts of the Black Student Union.

Delicia Tuitt, President of the Black Student Union and a Junior Psychology major, agreed with Hairston about the educational goals of the BSU. "I'm glad that we're able to put this event on to educate the entire campus, because I think it's important that we all know about the police brutality that goes on today."

Both Hairston and Hewitt also said they felt that police brutality had been a highly visible issue in the media recently, and said that this also generated interest in coordinating Wednesday's program.

"We usually try to watch the news and see what's affecting people today and that was one of he big things we saw, Amadou Diallo and other people getting gunned down by police was a big part of it," said Tuitt.

Tuitt also added that she was most pleased with the question and answer component of the program, saying, "Hopefully it will give people the chance to actually get some questions answered."

According to Hairston, the ultimate goal of the program is to reach students in all walks of life on campus. "Hopefully a lot of students will come, and let us know how successful he [Sharpton] is on taking a stand and organizing the issue," she said. "We want to mobilize the community, if possible."

She added, "We also like to bring out faculty members, because maybe it's something they can discuss in their classrooms."

When asked who she anticipated the most response from, Hairston said that, ideally, the most response would be from all students and anyone interested in politics and fighting for human rights. "I think it's a serious issue in fighting for human rights."

When:
Wednesday, October 25
8 p.m.

Where:
Campus Center Auditorium

Police Log

Annoying Behavior

Oct. 16
An individual was harassing employees in the Campus Center Garage. He was asked to leave the premises.

Oct. 18
An individual reported having problems with another individual at Hills House.

Oct. 21
Two individuals were involved in a verbal argument outside of Cashin Dormitory.

Assault and Battery

Oct. 16
Two individuals reported an assault by another individual in the Student Union. The incident is under investigation.
An individual reported a past assault in the Student Union. Charges will be filed.

Oct. 22
A fight was in progress near the Southwest Mall. No charges were filed.

Breaking and Entering

Oct. 16
A vehicle was broken into on Fearing Street; significant damage was done to the vehicle's interior.

Disturbance

Oct. 20
There was a disturbance in the Southwest Mall relating to the power outage.

Oct. 21
There was a report of a problem with a passenger in the security vehicle in the Southwest circle.

Domestic Disturbance

Oct. 20
Jose Bou, 20, of Northampton was arrested in Coolidge Dormitory.

Oct. 21
An on-call judge for an incident that occurred in Coolidge Dormitory issued an emergency restraining order.

Larceny

Oct. 16
A cell phone was stolen from Kennedy Dormitory.
A cassette player, valued at over $100, was stolen from the Campus Center.

Oct. 17
Tires were stolen from a bicycle in Moore Dormitory.

Oct. 18
A backpack was stolen from Boyden Gymnasium.
A wallet was reported stolen from the Whitmore Bursar's Office.

Oct. 20
A wallet was reported stolen from Emerson Dormitory.

Motor Vehicle Theft

Oct. 21
A vehicle was stolen from lot 11 near Coolidge Dormitory.

Traffic Stop

Oct. 22
Minh Do, 26, of Montague was arrested for speeding, driving under the influence, driving without a license plate and without an inspection sticker on North Pleasant Street.
Diana Lopez, 21, of Montague was arrested for a tail-light violation and for driving under the influence on North Pleasant Street.

Vandalism

Oct. 16
Damage to a vehicle was done in lot 22.
Damage to a card machine in the laundry room in Coolidge Dormitory.

Oct. 18
Damage was done to a window in Bartlett Hall from a BB gun.

Oct. 19
Damage to a vehicle was done to a vehicle in the Campus Center Garage.
A windshield was smashed on John Adams Rd.
There was damage to a vehicle done on University Drive.
Damage to a vehicle was done on Stadium Drive.

Oct. 21
A window was smashed in Crampton Dormitory.
A window was smashed at Homestead in the Faculty Club on Stockbridge Road.

See tomorrow's paper for more information.

Rec. room becomes reality

By Jessica May
Collegian Staff

Brown Residential Hall has a new addition. "The Lower Level," located in room 06 of the basement, opened its doors on October 23 to many anxious residents.

The effort to construct a recreation room was set forth in an attempt to remove an already existing pool table from the smoking lounge, according to Residence Director Matt Blum. The recreation room was funded by House Council dues of $10 from each student, Sylvan Area Government, Associate Director of Residence Life Dawn Thompson, UMass Arts Council and Brown residents.

Residents played an active role in the construction by donating money and organizing a pool tournament. Sophomores Pete Brown and Andrew Campbell, as well as junior Dave Stigers, organized the pool tournament in late September that raised over $350 for the recreation room.

"I just wanted more stuff to play with," said Campbell of his efforts to raise funds.

Brown House Council President Jannelle Roberts and Treasurer Erika Johnson agree that the recreation room will create a stronger sense of community within the building.

"The Lower Level" contains a new air hockey table, pool table, ping-pong table and an electronic dartboard, as well as many student drawn murals.

Commenting on the fruits of his efforts, Brown said, "The new rec. room is the best in the world."

The room will be maintained by House Council and will be locked each evening.

The Brown community has already begun collecting bottles and cans for redemption to raise money for the new recreation.

The group is still looking to put a new television in the recreation room and any donations would be greatly appreciated.

Please contact Brown House Council regarding questions or if you would like to make a donation.

MICHAEL MORAN/COLLEGIAN

I closed the store for this?

Baker claims victory over its Butterfield rivals in intramural hockey on Sunday night.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1935. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanne Gorkowsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senkevitch Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Smiaiwski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beth Assistant Advertising Manager

The Boston North Region of

Enterprise
1 800 rent-a-car

Would like to extend our sincere appreciation for the hard work and dedication of our summer interns...

We could not have achieved this kind of success without you...

Special Thanks to our interns from

Umass - Amherst!

Hansy Eugene
Melissa Robinson
Emmanuel Gonzalez
Bryan Smith

The UMass Index Yearbook

ATTENTION!!!

CLASS OF 2001

SENIOR PORTRAITS

OCTOBER 23RD-27TH

Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com

School Access #147

(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)

DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY

Walsworth Publishing Company

Order Your 2001 Yearbook ONLY $50.00

Log on to www.walsworth.com or Call 1-800-929-1503

(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

Potential peace in Korea:

United States Secretary of State Madeline Albright makes trek to communist country

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

United States Secretary of State Dr. Madeline Albright traveled to North Korea today to meet with leader Kim Jong Il for the first time since the Korean War.

Albright has been sent to the Korean peninsula to test the waters before a tentative visit by President Clinton. Clinton wants to resolve differences with North Korea and close the last chapter in the Korean War, but won't decide on a visit until Albright returns to the United States.

Dr. Albright met with Kim Jong Il's adviser, Vice Marshall Jo Myong Rok, two weeks ago when he visited Washington D.C.

On the way to the capital, Albright visited several fields and greenhouses and watched an acrobatics and dance show with many native dancers. She also visited a kindergarten and watched a play that the children put on for her.

After all of the festivities, the leaders sat down for three hours to discuss issues surrounding US-Korean relations. The goal of the meeting was to find some sort of peace and stability on the Korean Peninsula, which has kept the nickname the "hermit kingdom" since the 19th century, due to its reclusive and almost secretive stance in international relations.

The main question that Albright intends to ask Kim Jong Il is, "where do the North Koreans want to head?" The United States is confident that the country is ready to take positive steps, and perhaps the two countries can normalize relations and even relax sanctions.

One of the issues on the table is the economic crisis within the country, which has crippled the economy, depreciated the currency and virtually stomped out the money supply.

As the country has become poorer, hundreds of thousands have starved. 1.5 million have died in the last six years and one in three North Koreans depend on foreign food shipments to eat. American officials see the country as a virtual human rights nightmare.

However, the biggest obstacle the Koreans face in discussions with the United States is their extensive program of building and exporting missiles, including the exportation of missiles to such terrorist hotbeds as Syria and Iran. The US also claims that North Korea has supported massive armies and terrorism in the past.

The US was ready to go to war again with North Korea in 1994 after it received evidence that North Korea was preparing to create nuclear weapons.

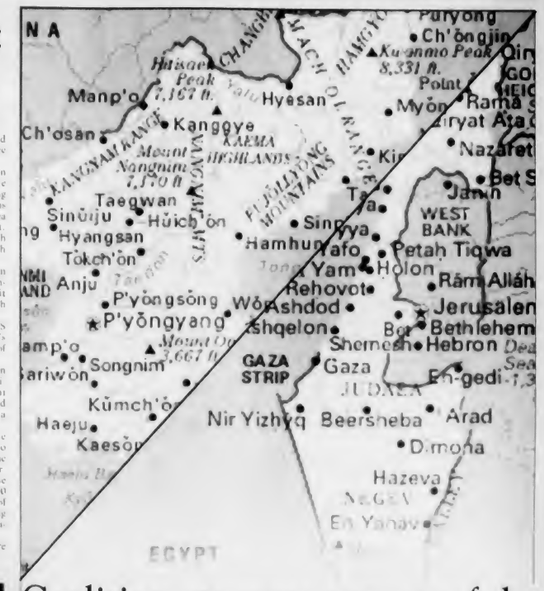
In fact, since January 1988, North Korea has been included on the US list of states supporting international terrorism. The country was put on the list after it bombed Korean Airlines Flight 858, killing 115 South Koreans in November 1987.

The South Koreans have been supportive of the US meetings, viewing them as an effort on North Korea's part to set up new, positive relations with the rest of the world.

There are currently 37,000 American troops in South Korea. The US perceives the peninsula as a serious military threat, whether or not there is an intent of reunification. The United States has considered North Korea a threat and another reason for creating a national military defense.

China also welcomes Dr. Albright's visit to the region. China's defense minister Chi Haotian flew to North Korea for "friendly talks" last week to mark the 50th anniversary of China's entry into the Korean war. Apparently China has been serving as a mentor to the small country for a while, although over 100,000 North Koreans have fled to China in the last couple of years. China has a significant interest in the well being of its neighbor for economic, as well as strategic reasons.

Dr. Albright will be in the country for a few more days of negotiations and visits around the country.



Coalition attempts unsucessful

Negotiations continue in Israel

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The recent trend of failed negotiations in the Middle East continued yesterday in Jerusalem, where Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and right wing opposition leader Ariel Sharon, head of the Likud party, failed to reach a coalition agreement.

The two parties met in an attempt to form a government of national emergency designed to keep Barak in power. The two hoped to renew support for Barak, who now only controls 30 of the 120 seats in the Israeli government, set to reconvene in October. However, Barak found the plan to be unacceptable, and the two plan on reconvening again today.

This potential coalition has a serious bearing on the continued conflict that currently exists in the Middle East. Many seem to have mixed feelings about possible attempts at peace negotiations with the Palestinians with Barak at the helm, while others have come out in support or defense of the addition of Sharon to the mix.

Israeli Cabinet Minister Yossi Beilin told CNN, "I think Prime Minister Barak did so much in order to get to peace and was ready to pay a very high price for peace. It might be erased if Ariel Sharon joined the government and be seen as somebody who is not enthusiastic about the peace process."

Israeli Parliament Member Dan Meridor came out in support of Sharon commenting to CNN that, "bringing in the Likud has two elements, we are under attack. When we are under attack we should unite. Second, bringing in the Likud is bringing in the parts that made peace with Egypt, and bringing in Mr. Sharon, who negotiated with the Palestinians on the Wye (River) agreement and the Hebron agreement."

Much of the controversy comes from the views held by some that Sharon was the catalyst for some of the animosities within the area. The fighting broke out on September 28, after right-wing he led a group of Israeli legislators into the bitterly contested Temple Mount, a holy place where the Prophet Mohammed was said to have descended into heaven. Sharon asserted Jewish claims to the area.

This caused a riot within the temple that moved out onto the streets, where rioting Palestinian citizens injured six Israeli police officers. This later resulted in violent retaliation in which 95 Arabs were killed at the West Bank.

Violence within the region continues to escalate with clashes in both Gaza and the West Bank remaining ongoing. The two Palestinian teenagers injured in fighting last week also died yesterday, leaving the total body count at 139 during the past three and a half weeks of fighting. Additional fighting yesterday left six Palestinians injured.

"I think once Sharon joins the government this will be the bullet of mercy to the peace process," Saeb Erakat told CNN. "Because these people are determined to continue with their settlement activities the confiscation of land and continuing occupation."

Both students and faculty at the University of Massachusetts have also expressed marked concern about the increased violence in the Middle East. During a vigil held this past Friday on the Student Union steps, UMass students expressed their desire for both Israelis and Palestinians to look past their differences and reach towards peace. Organizers of the event asked students to look past differences and realize that everyone has one goal in common: peace.

Another event will be held tomorrow at 7:00 in the School of Management room 120. This will be sponsored by the Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies and is entitled, "Recent Events in the Middle East: Israelis, Palestinians, and Crisis in the Peace Process." The event will be moderated by Professor James F. Young of the sponsoring department and will include discussion from Professor Tayeb El-Hibri and Professor David Mednicoff. All staff and students are invited to attend.

Information from CNN was used in this article.

>Why get an analog degree >in a digital world?_

Stay ahead of technology with a graduate degree from WPI.

A WPI graduate degree gives you a distinct edge in today's fast-growing high-tech job market
We offer more than 50 graduate programs in engineering, science and management—all enhanced by our respected faculty and 135-year history as a leading technological university

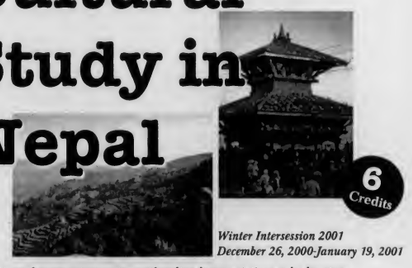
Speak with a WPI representative at:

The Graduate & Professional School Information Day
Student Union Ballroom
Wednesday, October 25
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

GRADUATE PROGRAMS
WPI
WORCESTER POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE

Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Worcester MA
800-WPI-9717 gao@wpi.edu www.wpi.edu/-GAO

Cultural Study in Nepal



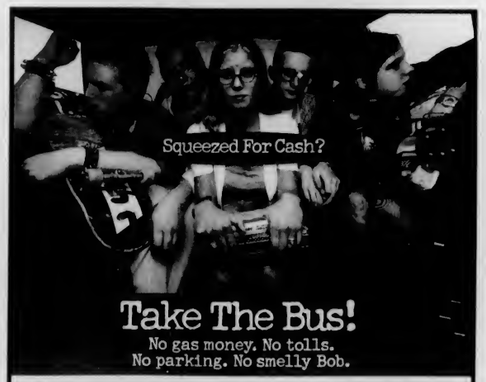
6 Credits

Winter Intersession 2001
December 26, 2000-January 19, 2001

Integrating classroom instruction with cultural appreciation and adventure, UConn's unique Cultural Study in Nepal program allows students to earn 6 academic credits. This 4-week program will be under the guidance of UConn faculty. Students will learn about Nepal's language, culture, economy and ecology, and develop a research project tailored to their specific academic requirements.

For more information, visit us online at www.ce.uconn.edu/nepal.html, call us for a free brochure at 800-622-9908 or come to one of our open house sessions at the Bishop Center on the Storrs campus.

University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies
International Studies



Take The Bus!

No gas money. No tolls.
No parking. No smelly Bob.

Save a few bucks and catch a ride home in Billy's car!...with Jason, Thomas, sleazy Andrew, crazy Jennifer, Kevin and smelly Bob. Oh, and Billy needs the car back on Sunday. Be sure to bring fifty bucks for gas and tolls...whatever! How 'bout some personal space? Maybe leaving on your own time, with some a/c, more leg room, a bathroom...and on some schedules, even a movie. Take your next ride home with Peter Pan/Greyhound. And leave smelly Bob behind.

Peter Pan
www.peterpanbus.com

GREYHOUND.
www.greyhound.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Time to grow up in Southwest

Another Southwest power outage, another chance for the residents there to act like animals.

Why?

What is it that compels these students to launch into fits of destruction at every chance they get? Why is it that each power failure, each meaningful baseball game, each stray animal that wanders by gives residents of that corner of campus an excuse to behave like children?

Maybe there are simply too many of them stuffed into too small of an area. Perhaps they are slowly going insane, packed like rats in their highrises and dying for a chance to break free.

Maybe they feel that since they essentially comprise their own little city, they need to replicate the crime and fear that many associate with the heavily populated areas of this country.

Maybe they're just not ready to live on their own just yet. They need their mothers to scold them, to tell them to play nice and not throw beer bottles out of windows at each other. They need their fathers to teach them that setting fires is dangerous. They need their parents to show them that when the lights go out, it's not OK to assault each other until they come back on.

They need to have some of their precious freedom taken away. They need more cameras installed, one on every building. On second thought, why not put cameras up inside each building as well? Since they cannot behave like responsible adults, they need to be watched by people who can.

Sure, you will get complaints citing invasion of privacy and a totalitarian society being constructed in Southwest. But the fact that people were injured during Friday morning's nonsense renders the privacy argument moot.

If you are throwing bottles into crowds, in the dark, you have hereby given up your right to privacy. You are a criminal, and criminals in this country are not entitled to the same rights as others (just ask the inmates who aren't allowed to vote). So technically, your rights have just gone out the window.

If you are setting fires in the middle of living areas, likewise. Ask the families of the six firefighters who died battling a blaze in Worcester last fall how many rights you should still have. Your behavior isn't just idiotic; it's dangerous. Your rights have just gone up in smoke.

If you are assaulting fellow students in the dark, forget about your rights entirely; you have just become a criminal who shouldn't even be allowed to walk freely across this campus. You have made UMass an unsafe place, and so you no longer deserve to be a part of this campus community. Don't bother arguing about surveillance being unfair; your voice no longer counts.

The University is in the process now of installing cameras throughout the Southwest residential area. Truth be told, the process was underway long before the asinine actions of Friday morning.

But by once again reverting to foolish, primitive behavior at their first chance, the participants in these latest riots have successfully destroyed any defense that the student body might have had in the face of the administration's surveillance push.

Congratulations. You have deprived yourselves of the very ideal that our country is based on. You have given UMass the power and the privileged to strip you of your freedom.

Is he a hero or zero?

BRIAN LOHNES

Paul Parks has been a prominent public figure in Massachusetts for decades. He was a civil rights leader, a state secretary of education and an accomplished engineer. Apparently, he is also an incredible storyteller.

Parks received the prestigious Raoul Wallenberg award on Sunday night for his role in the liberation of the Dachau concentration camp in WWII. Unfortunately for Parks, military records show him 270 miles to the north of that concentration camp and headed away from it. There is a long list of military stories that Parks has been telling the media for decades that have no factual backing to them. Among the stories is one about blowing up a Panzer tank in France with a bazooka, landing on Normandy beach on D-Day, and having soldiers killed all around him. He has a false claim on his resume about holding a doctorate from good ole' UMass and a claim that he witnessed a black member of his Army unit killed in an apparent racist attack in Mississippi.

Parks entered the Army in April of 1943, he attended his basic training in Virginia and joined the 365th Engineering Regiment in New York City, a few days before it shipped out to England on September 30, 1943. Parks claims that while training in Mississippi in 1943, he witnessed a black soldier tied to the back of a truck and dragged to his death in the street.

There are several problems with this story, one is that he was never in Mississippi and the dates his gave for the attack conflict with the dates that his unit was headed to England. Parks describes the incident in vivid detail, "And I saw this comrade of mine, my friend, being drug up and down the street behind a car." The Boston Globe article making the claims against Parks cites military records as evidence against many of Parks' claims.

The most stunning claim and the one with the most evidence against it, is the one that Parks received the award for Sunday night. In 1992, Parks's claims about his role in liberating the Dachau camp were first challenged, so accordingly he changed his story. Parks claimed that he was detached from his unit, which was nearly 300 miles away from Dachau, because of his skill in disarming German mines. Once again military records conflict Parks's claims. A retired Army lieutenant, Hugh Foster, who alerted the award committee to the lack of validity in the stories is concerned about how far they will go. "What'll be next? The claim that he was the pilot on the Enola Gay?" (That was the plane that dropped the Atomic bomb on Hiroshima.)

Parks also claims he was involved in the D-Day invasion. He claims that on June 6, 1944 his unit suffered 60 percent casualties on Omaha beach. The major problem with this story is that Parks's unit was not shipped to France until three weeks after the Normandy invasion. Parks' also cites his expertise with German mines for his role on D-Day. Strangely though, Parks's unit was shipped to France as a road building and construction unit, having nothing to do with land mines. His unit was never near the front and spent most of its time constructing hospitals, and roads to support the massive troop movements through Europe. Parks served as a construction foreman in his unit, and it is never documented that his company ever touched a mine.

A huge hole in Parks's D-Day story is that of Robert Orr. He claims that Orr was shot in the head and killed next to him on Omaha beach. Strangely, military records show Robert Orr was still in Andover, England undergoing training on that date and the only man named Robert Orr in the 365th died three months earlier of natural causes.

Parks claims to have blown up a Panzer tank in the Ardennes forest in France. "I remember taking up a bazooka and stopping a Panzer in the middle of a country road." Once again, military records dismiss this story. The very detailed records do not show any instances of the 365th getting into any combat situations with the Germans.

Parks has also made claims that hit much closer to home about his education. He said that he received a doctorate of education from UMass-Amherst. School records show that Parks did in fact take some graduate courses in the late 1970's and early 1980's but not enough to get a degree. He described himself on a 1997 resume as "Dr. Paul Parks" even though he has not received a true doctorate in anything. He did receive an honorary diploma in Engineering during Northeastern's commencement in 1994.

So who is Paul Parks? At this time no one seems to really know. It is quite obvious that his military record is bunk, his resume is padded beyond anyone's imagination, and not much of what he says can be trusted. Parks did receive the award Sunday night, despite the best efforts of people who have dispelled the original reason for giving the man the award.

No one really knows why Parks created these stories. He was a very prominent and powerful civil rights leader in Boston In the 1960's and well respected in the community and the country. He was the State Secretary of Education and held other governmental positions, so one has to wonder what his motives are in creating these fantastic stories.

I can only imagine the scene in the room when Parks received that award, the uneasy applause; surely there were people who didn't applaud at all. Further investigating may even expose more inaccuracies in Park's past. Surely, this is one story Parks may be hesitant to tell to anyone.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

Driving drunk

Thirty-six percent of college students report to have driven a car one or more times in the past year under the influence of alcohol or drugs. Why do we have statistics like this on a college campus where the students are supposed to be smarter and more educated than the average student? Drinking and driving is probably the most unintelligent thing you can do; I know this from common sense and from personal experience.

It was January 2, 1999. It started as any usual day, but ended in tragedy. One of my friends, Sean, and his girlfriend Betsy, were on their way home from the mall. My boyfriend Jason, who was Sean's best friend, was following them by himself. There were on their way to Betsey's house, and right in front of our high school a drunk driver crossed over the double yellow line and hit them head-on. The truck then rolled over them and bounced over them and bounced off of Jason's car. They were both killed, and Jason escaped by inches. Sean had died instantly; Betsey was pronounced dead in an ambulance. Not only did the driver kill my two friends, but he also killed my spirit.

JENNIFER M. ROBTOY

Jason also had to deal with the aftermath of their deaths. Imagine seeing your best friend killed in front of you. Now imagine having to live with the guilt of why it was your friend and not you. The worst part of Jason's life now is living with that question. On top of all this, he had to testify in court against the man who thought that being drunk was more important than all these lives. That man is now in jail for 18 years thanks to Jason's testimony against him, but he will always have to live with what he saw. Sean and Betsey are now on the side of angels, and I'm sorry to say that another one of my friends almost joined them due to drunk driving.

About a week before I left to come here, I got a call in the morning that my good friend had been flown to Worcester Medical because in the life flight helicopter. He had been drinking and drove into a telephone pole after hitting two parked cars. He was thrown through the windshield. When I got to the hospital they told me that he would be all right but he did not remember anything that had happened the night before. He had minor injuries and a concussion, but the police said that if he'd had a passenger with him, he or she would have been killed instantly.

I though that people knew the dangers of drunk driving and I thought that it wouldn't be an issue, especially on a campus where you can walk everywhere. I found out I was wrong my first week here.

I would hope that it doesn't have to hit close to home for people to realize the danger. According to MADD (Mothers Against Drunk Driving), during a typical weekend one teenager dies every hour in a crash and nearly half of those involve alcohol. With statistics like this I don't know why I hear any talk of driving drunk at all.

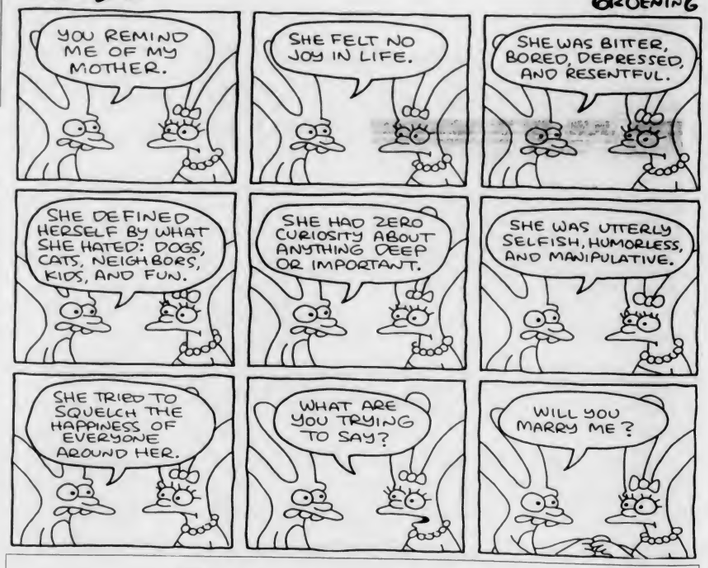
When I was offered a ride home from a kid who could barely walk, I was quite insulted. He assured me that he could "drive better when he was drunk." I wasn't at all impressed. Needless to say, I lost it. I just don't see why people think that they need to drive so badly that they have to get in their car when they're drunk and risk not only their own life but also the lives of others.

While more than one-third of college students surveyed by MADD reported to have driven under the influence, only 1.7 percent of them said that they were arrested for it. Just because a drunk driver doesn't get caught for his or her crime does not mean it didn't happen. It seems to me that people think that the shorter the distance they have to go, the less dangerous it is to drive drunk; that seems to be the was these people justify it to themselves. The man who killed my friends was only going a distance equal to that from Southwest to Sylvan. There is never a good enough reason to drive under the influence, especially on this campus where we have buses, and escort system and your own two feet. Some students may see themselves as immortal, but trust me they're not.

Approximately 240,000 to 360,000 of the nation's 12 million current undergraduate students will ultimately die from alcohol-related causes. That is more then the number of students that will get MAs and PhDs combined. We need to be smart about this. Help your friends get home. Have a designated driver. Based on data collected in 1992, it was estimated that one of every 280 babies born today would die in a crash with an intoxicated driver. A poll conducted in 1993 by MADD found that 40 percent of US adults personally knew someone killed or injured by a drunk driver. Don't get into a car with an intoxicated driver because you are just as much as fault for allowing them to drive. Do it for yourself and for your friends. Don't become a part of the statistics. Have fun but be safe!

Jennifer M. Robtoy is a UMass student.

LIFE IN HELL



YOU REMIND ME OF MY MOTHER.
SHE FELT NO JOY IN LIFE.
SHE WAS BITTER, BORED, DEPRESSED, AND RESENTFUL.
SHE DEFINED HERSELF BY WHAT SHE HATED: DOGS, CATS, NEIGHBORS, KIDS, AND FUN.
SHE HAD ZERO CURIOSITY ABOUT ANYTHING DEEP OR IMPORTANT.
SHE WAS UTTERLY SELFISH, HUMORLESS, AND MANIPULATIVE.
SHE TRIED TO SQUELCH THE HAPPINESS OF EVERYONE AROUND HER.
WHAT ARE YOU TRYING TO SAY?
WILL YOU MARRY ME?

©2000 BY MATT GROENING

Stay on your feet

KATIE LANDERS

Everyone should walk to class. That's right, I said it, so you offended wheel-based people can move on to the crossword. For you walkers like me, keep reading. I'm sure you will agree.

One too many times this year I've been nearly killed or severely maimed by people on bikes or skateboards. Some days I feel that students on wheels pose more of a threat than the Indy 300 that takes place on Mass Ave. everyday. For some reason the bike riders I have had incidents with feel as though they can fly through campus without regard to pedestrians. Just last week, a person I'll call "Hell-on-wheels" nearly dismembered me. "Hell" flew by me at about fifty, coming from behind without any warning. I screamed right there as I nearly fell.

Tonight, in the rain and darkness, a biker who had lost control of his wheels came inches from taking my right leg off. I won't give him all the blame; wet leaves and a narrow sidewalk are at fault too. However, this doesn't lower my need or want for my legs. I'm beginning to feel as though I am being aimed at.

After writing this I probably will be.

I'm positive I am not the only one who is disturbed over this matter. A girl on campus we will call Liad W. (for her own safety) had harsh words for her riding peers. In fact, they included bad names and the phrase "locked up," but I don't have a death wish so I'll keep her comments to myself. Pedestrians are not the only ones annoyed. Drivers, such as a student named Susanne that I spoke to, find that students on bikes are an accident waiting to happen, and should stay off the road. I wouldn't go that far, but maybe they should stick to bike trails. I hear the parks around here have lots of them.

A bicycle accident is a scene that is very familiar to people who go to class. Just last Friday I saw a fellow student take a spill outside the library, where the rough cracked WALKway is uneven. Some sick people might find that humorous; in fact I would bet money that a lot of UMass students would find it funny. In retrospect, it was, but at the time I felt really bad. Someone could get seriously hurt. Had that guy been walking he might have had a better day.

Skaters aren't as threatening, just more of a nuisance. They should stick to the missing pond of the Fine Arts Center. I'm not knocking skaters. It's a tough sport; and I have only played "Tony Hawk: Pro-Skater." I just never know whether to move right, left, or just stand still.

One thing I don't understand is the people on scooters. Not only are they as annoying as skateboards, but I don't see the point in them. From watching, it seems as though it requires serious effort to keep moving. I don't know about you, but I don't like to sweat on the way to class. Apparently other people do, and they have the hundred dollars to throw down for a metal board with wheels and a handle that turns into a back-strap.

Campus is not really an appropriate place for riding things on wheels, unless there is a need for a wheelchair or anything serious like that.

If you do any of the above activities mentioned and still read to the end, don't take my opintions too harshly. The Bike Co-op fn the Student Union seems cool, and a lot of my friends ride bikes. I honestly can't ride a bike (old war injury), and have never touched a skateboard. All I ask is for courtesy to those who walk or drive, and, if at all possible, walk to class. That would be great.

Katie Landers is a Collegian Columnist.

Judaism and Feminism: at the crossroads

My first time is on Yom Kippur.

It's awkward at first, but then seems to fit so perfectly that I think I'm going to cry. It hangs down around my shoulders and the fringes slip through my fingers like fine grains of sand.

I had glanced at it briefly as I passed by the pile of prayer books on my way to my seat before the beginning of Kol Nidre service. I had always been curious about what it would be like to wear a tallis, a prayer shawl traditionally worn by men, but for some reason I never ventured to explore the possibility. I often found my eyes wandering during services, fixated on the women who wore them, looking tall and regal, as if somehow surrounded by a special kind of air.

Tonight, on Kol Nidre, I feel so drawn to the pile of blue and white shawls that I go over and pick one up, holding it gingerly as though it were a new baby or a delicate souffle. I carry it back to my seat and sit, staring at it. I finally muster the courage to ask someone I know what to do, and we say the blessing together.

The tallis is an evening gown; it shimmers and glides around me. I feel transformed, powerful. We begin to pray, and I'm almost really angry with myself for it. I'm supposed to be humble today. But right now, wearing what feels like a new soul, I am the furthest thing from humble.

CHANEL DUBOFSKY

In retrospect, what stays with me about that experience is not even the actual fact that I wore a prayer shawl for the first time in my life, but that I hadn't even remotely considered wearing one before, even as I was transfixed by the sight of other women wearing them. This has made me consider the label that I have placed on myself as a feminist, what it means to me as a Jew, and what it can and should mean to the Jewish community.

It hadn't really hit me until very recently that feminism was a dirty word. Until I started encountering people who notified me almost immediately (probably shortly after being informed about my interest in Women's Studies) that they were by no means a feminist.

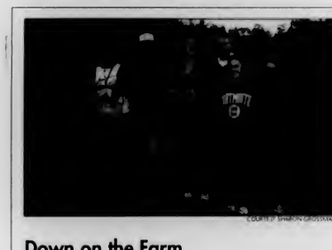
Immediately, I felt defensive upon hearing their disclaimer. It was almost as though they were making sure to tell me that they didn't deal heroin or vote Republican. What was the big confession? I had taken the label of feminist on in high school, fairly certain that I understood what it meant. Since then, I have come to accept the word "feminist" is an evolving term, one which symbolizes fairness, equality and acceptance. What does this have to do with my decision to put on a tallis? I must make a confession here. In spite of my feminist activities, I still felt reservation when I thought about doing some which in Judaism is generally reserved for men. I grew up in a Reform congregation, where women read Torah and there was a choir that sang on Saturday mornings. Slowly, I've begun to travel over to a more traditional practice, which right now I prefer to refer to as simply being Jewish. As I make decisions about my religious life, I find myself consistently torn between tradition and the modern world. I want to be able to recite mourner's Kaddish for my mother, but I am not her firstborn son. I want to be counted in a minyan, traditionally a group of ten men necessary for recitation of certain prayers. I want to be welcomed in all synagogues and be able to pray with all of their members.

The dilemma I have now is one that I spend a lot of time mulling over. How do I integrate my spirituality and my desire to cling to tradition with another set of beliefs that in many ways completely undermine Judaism? It seems to me that there are two ways of approaching this. The first, obviously, is to reject the tenets of Judaism in favor of another religion or no religion at all. The second, which I personally opt for, is to apply one's ideals to religion if they aren't necessarily reflected there. I believe that feminist values are and should be considered Jewish values. After all, the Torah is a constant reminder of how we should treat one another fairly, consider that we are all made in God's image. On the High Holy Days, we listen to the sound of the shofar and hear it as a signal to consider our actions and the way they affect others. At its heart feminism is exactly that: a call to demand equality and respect for all people and values. If this isn't something that is attractive to the Jewish community, it should be.

In the grand scheme of things, rectifying this confusion can only benefit the Jewish community. In a time when intermarriage rates are supposedly soaring (The National Jewish Population Survey has yet to release its 2000 results), American Jews must consider how to preserve and engage its drifting community. One of the main reasons people diverge from religion is because they do not feel that it can accommodate modern viewpoints and changing needs. Judaism, with its many denominations, has shown that it can adjust to the demands of a new century and evolving politics. The conflict of being Jewish and feminist remains one that has to be negotiated. But why? Why is feminism still considered the "F" word, although it is impossible to ignore the positive work that the movement has done? Why are we as Jews resistant to the idea that this can bring great things to our community?

Unfortunately, I have no answers to these questions. The only thing I can do is propose a solution: to educate one another and ourselves. This is one of the highest mitzvot, one of the highest religious obligations a few can perform. We can begin to remedy this schism between Judaism and politics by teaching appreciation for diversity, to value all people and traditions, and create a new Jewish doctrine based on the positive merits of feminism, so that we are no longer forced to make the choice between politics and spirituality.

Chanel Dubofsky is a UMass student



Courtesy Jonathan Grossman

Down on the Farm

UMass students on the apple-picking trip as part of the Tzedek Hillel initiative. Tzedek is a new social action and community service group of UMass Hillel. Concentrating on fighting poverty, and building partnership with other service groups in the area, Tzedek Hillel is an exciting new initiative.

Write for Jewish Affairs!

We've got rhythm, we've got soul: a cross-cultural celebration

8 p.m. Bowker Auditorium

Paulina Stark, Horace Clarence Boyer, and Nigel Coxe performing music from their own and each others' heritage. Hear works by Ellington and Weill, spirituals and gospel, and songs from the Yiddish theater. Tickets available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Sponsored by UMass Dept. of Music/Dance, WFCR, Hillel House, Office of Jewish Affairs and the W.E.B. Dept. of Afro-American Studies.

Sarah Raful: youth and opportunity

By Sasha Senderovich
Collegian Staff

COURTESY SARAH RAF

Sarah Raful, a Jewish Campus Service Corps fellow at UMass Hillel.

She does not sit behind her table at the Campus Center concourse. Sarah Raful stands in front of it, attracting students' attention with her loud voice. "One of my favorite parts about the job is tabling, because that's where I meet people," she says. "I like standing in front of the table talking to people who pass by, and to get groups of people either to talk to me, or talk to somebody that they didn't know before."

A Jewish Campus Service Corps fellow, after two months at UMass Hillel, Raful surely fulfills her job description – she does create opportunities for Jewish students on campus. Whether that means conducting over a hundred interviews of Birthright Israel applicants, advising first year students, working with the Jewish Women's collective, Raful's contribution is essential. And while some will argue today's world may lack inspiring role models, Raful sees herself as one. A positive Jewish role model. One who will, in her own words, "change the world and make it a better place."

Born in Los Angeles, and brought up in Omaha, Nebraska (a wonderful place to grow up, she says, a place with about six hundred Jewish families), Raful credits her caring family for much of her own sense of being positive.

"It doesn't hurt that I came from this incredible family, who are diverse, and passionate and loving, and caring, and supportive," she said. "I amily gave me the foundation. I couldn't be a positive Jewish role model without them."

It is because of her family then, that Raful sees herself as "positive, optimistic, enthusiastic, exciting, lots of energy, and happy. Jewish, being proud to be a Jew, excited about Judaism." Yet, Raful defines her own Judaism as constantly developing. "I know that there are not always answers, but I know where to get the questions to seek these answers," she says. "I don't know exactly what kind of Jew I want to be, because I am still searching. I am still looking, but I am comfortable in that I am still searching. I want to make certain that people I come in contact with, know that it's all right to keep searching."

To Raful, who intends to become a Jewish professional, the position of a Jewish Campus Service Corps fellow is a perfect fit. The job, offered to recent college graduates for the duration of an academic year, just seemed like something that Raful had to do.

"The only other job that I was considering was to be a youth educator for a synagogue," she recalls. "What I came down to, was that this job is a one-shot deal, it's an incredible experience for a year, and you learn about the Jewish community. So, this was the only thing to do. To be a JCSC for a year, learn about the Jewish community and then be a part of a Jewish community. It just made sense for me to do it. It means more of a foundation for me."

Raful sees her responsibilities as a Jewish Campus Service Corps fellow as essential to her becoming a Jewish professional. And, two months into her job, she does not feel even close to being accomplished. She adds that "probably in June, I won't be accomplished either. I tend to set high goals for myself" she giggles. Among those goals are the attempts to use creativity to produce something not usually associated with Judaism. Raful loves this creative part, which has allowed her to let students make their Rosh Hashana cards to send home to their parents. It's the creativity that has allowed her to hand out bouncing balls for Simchat Torah.

"I hoped that whenever they would see a bouncing ball, they would think of circles – and what do we do for Simchat Torah? We dance in circles! It connects, yet bouncing balls is not something that you normally associate with Judaism."

Raful has a response to various statistical numbers (such as intermarriage figures) that speak for deterioration of Jewish identity among the Jewish youth. "There are numbers all over the place," she says. "But there are people like me. There are eighty-two other Jewish Campus Service Corps fellows in colleges across the county. Last year there was only sixty. These numbers are looking good to me, and because these numbers are going up, that means that there are enough people out there who care about the Jewish community."

Speaking of her colleagues in other universities, Raful remarks that it's the little things that make these people active.

"When I went to the leadership conference last August, I thought that people will be like me: from a good Jewish home, went to Jewish summer camp, went to Hebrew school, know Hebrew, learned Torah" she says. "I was so wrong. Some of these people went on Birthright trip to Israel and decided to become Jewish Campus Service Corps fellows. Some of these people really care about the Jewish community – don't want to be Jewish professionals, but want to do this for a year, and then go to law school and be lay leaders after. There is so many ways that you can be Jewish! So many ways!"

As an imposition to Jewish identity in today's youth, Raful sees the fact that "there are so many things that you can do now – all these activities and organizations, and things you can do at home, and plus on the computer, things like that. Then, what's so special about going to Jewish youth group that you can't do with your school friends?"

Yet, she offers a solution. The key is to find that bonding element between Jewish people. Key is trying to introduce youth to it, and once they get it, they are not going to be able to stop. I had my first meaningful Jewish experience at the Jewish camp, and I kept returning there summer after summer because I found that Jewish connection, connection to people like me, who wanted to be what I wanted to be. I had positive Jewish role models."

Her position only a year-long, Raful sees having to leave Hillel in a year as having both pros and cons. "You make these incredible connections, and then you have to leave. That's a con. The pro is that you have made an impact, and that next year someone new will come and do something completely different. There is going to be a continual fresh blood in here, and fresh ideas and fresh programming, and fresh faces, and new and exciting things to look for." Raful adds. "That's the best part about Hillel – it's ever-changing."

Only in the beginning of her year at UMass Hillel, Sarah Raful has esteemed herself as enthusiastic and creative person, serving as an educator, advisor and a role model for the Jewish students. If nothing else, she sees her role in inspiring others. "I want to give and college students the passion for Judaism that I have," she proudly said.

On Middle East crisis: Zionism and Reality

The young man spoke of social racism, of class oppression, and of a people's right to self-determination.

If only he knew what these words meant.

An amazing trait that is common to many of this campus's "radical" political groups is their divorce from reality. The claims that some of these groups advertise at times seem so far fetched that it looks as though they were put up for mere shock value. Posters about "Amerikkkan imperialism" or "the CIA's secret AIDS weapon" never bothered me, however, until one of them insulted my heritage.

Thanks to the latest trouble in (where else?) the Middle East, a few posters began showing up on campus, predictably condemning Israeli "atrocities" in the region. One of the posters, in particular, did not stop at condemning Israeli actions but went so far as to call the philosophy behind Israel "racist" and "colonialist." Noting the ease with which such slogans are spread across campus – I could have just as easily distributed 10,000 flyers calling the Macarena dance a product of Bolshevik propaganda – I decided to see how much backing these people were willing to put behind these words. I attended the meeting about the 'massacre in Palestine,' and this is where the insults began.

Before I go any further, I must relate my background so as to show what I mean by "insulting my heritage." I come from a family of proud Zionists. Zionism, as defined by a person wholly unrelated to the conflict (Mr. Noah Webster - perhaps that is why everyone listens to his definition) is "[The] Jewish nationalism movement that has had as its goal the creation and support of a Jewish national state in Palestine, the ancient homeland of the Jews." In other words, it is the movement to give the Jews their own independent state in Israel. My grandparents were among Zionism's followers. My paternal grandfather, trying to fulfill his dream of living in a Jewish state, was caught attempting to escape from the Soviet Union, and was put in Stalin's Siberian labor camps for eight years. My maternal grandparents survived atrocities in the Holocaust, the horrors of which no pen or pencil can do justice to. They all ended up fulfilling their dreams and dreams of their ancestors' generations by coming to Israel and helping to establish the Jewish state.

My grandfather was always humored by the fact that starting in the early 1990s, Israel sent technological farm aid to the former Soviet Union. "See," he told me, "this is what happens when you stick to an ideology and don't do anything about it. Nothing moves. But if you work hard at it – as we have – five million people can accomplish more in forty years than 200 million can accomplish in 70." He was always proud of all that Zionism had accomplished in Israel, and was glad to live through the death of Communism, which he despised.

My grandparents' generation, and my parents' generation after them, worked hard to establish and then defend Israel and its Zionist ideology. It wasn't easy. Following Israel's offer for "peace and only [with] all neighboring states and their peoples" in its Declaration of Independence in 1948, it was attacked, and has subsequently won its war for independence. This was also the beginning of the Palestinian tragedy, where, as is the case in many modern wars, a large population was displaced and put in refugee camps (in this case, in Jordan, Lebanon, and Israel). The Palestinians began fighting for statehood, and Israel recognized their plight and began peace negotiations with the PLO in 1991.

DAN YAGUDIN

Despite all that Zionism has accomplished, back on UMass campus a very evil picture of Zionism was painted. The main lecturer in the meeting was a UMass student who got up on the podium and for 40 minutes did nothing but read from a piece of paper. Mispronouncing many of the names involved in Israel's history, he claimed that Zionism was a "racist" movement, "capitalist," "imperialist" and other such rhetoric.

My grandfather would have laughed.

"Capitalist??" he would have said, "I wish!! If only we didn't live in tin roofed shacks, we would have had all the time in the world to enjoy our money! Imperialist?? Is that the reason that we gave up all of our conquered territory back to Egypt for peace in 1979? Racist?? That is of course the reason that there are Arabs in Israel who are lawyers, doctors, and members of our Parliament!" Actually, my grandfather probably would never have had the chance to talk. With the lecture about Israel's evils taking 40 minutes, very little was left for "discussion."

The point of the matter is that my grandfather, having suffered true racism for being a Jew in the Soviet Union, having labored in Siberia for eight years for attempting to support his people's right to self determination, used a much better standard to judge Zionism by: reality. He has lived through everything that people accused Zionism as being, and, helping with the building of Israel himself, he knew that these accusations are simply not true, but are simply the product of people who find it convenient to assign blame rather than check the facts as they are.

Barring their ignorance of historical facts, the people in the meeting still did something that no true academe would do – they ignored the plight of one side while blindly supporting that of another. In stating this I am not trying to portray Israel as a perfect angel, but it is hardly the evil Satan that the media and most of the people at the meeting portrayed it to be. Regardless, its side deserved an equal consideration, which I did not see given. For example, the student lecturing us went into great lengths about the death of 12-year-old Muhammad Al Dura who was killed while caught in a Israeli-Palestinian crossfire with his father. What the student did not mention was that the Israeli army issued an apology and said it regretted the incident. He also did not mention the fate of two Israeli soldiers who made a wrong turn into Ramallah (a Palestinian city) and were brutally beaten to death by a Palestinian mob.

What do these incidents tell us? When there is no peace, atrocities happen. thes are horrible and unjustified. This is why we have a peace process so we can resolve our differences around the peace table and not by mobs, or blowing up busses, or firing on demonstrators. The other thing that is lost in the media is that the soldiers that are pitted against the mobs often have their backs to Israeli settlements. The soldiers are ordered to defend the settlements at an price, or else the fate of the two soldiers would be copied to several thousand Jewish families in scenes painfully reminiscing of the pogroms in pre-World War II Europe.

Despite the historical reality of Israel's creation, there was an attempt in the meeting by a woman to separate the notions of Judaism and Zionism. This particular woman spent time at the refugee camps in Israel and accused Israel of the terrible conditions in the camps. She also stated that just because she is Jewish does not mean that she needs to support Israel. Again I point to the historical reality – most of Israel's founders were religious Zionists, and the majority of its inhabitants are practicing Jews, Israel is the only Jewish country in the world, and most of us Jews accept it and try to mend its faults rather than abandon it completely. But some are the exception.

The reality is that every time there is trouble in Israel anti-Semitism worldwide is on the rise. This time is no exception. In the past few weeks there have been attacks on Jews and synagogues in Canberra, Syracuse, New York City, Chicago, Essen, Paris, and Brussels, to name a few. I found suspiciously little mention of this fact, however, on CNN or at the meeting. It seems that the fate of Israel and Zionism have an effect on Jews after all, an effect that is not represented.

Israel is not perfect and it has committed mistakes in the past. Perhaps we could have done more to better the conditions in the refugee camps; perhaps excessive force was used at times in the name of security – but isn't the solution to these problems in Palestinian self-realization? Wouldn't the founding of a Palestinian state empower the Palestinians to be the masters of their own destiny? Israel was willing to sacrifice its precious security and let the Palestinian dream become a reality. But then the rocks started flying.

Some put the blame for starting the violence solely on Israeli right -wing politician Ariel Sharon's visit to the Temple Mount. It is true that his visit sparked the violence, but he was doing what any Israeli or Palestinian could have done by law – that is, visiting holy places of both Muslims and Jews. Even further, none of us base the cause of World War I in the sole fact of assassination of Archduke Ferdinand in 1914. The assassination did trigger the war, but it did not cause it.

Another point brought up in support of Israel's supposed aggression is Israel's bombing of Ramallah in retaliation to the mob killings of the two soldiers. Arafat was quick to say that by bombing it, Israel has "declared war" on the Palestinian authority. I facte mot mentioned, Israel warned the Palestinian Authority of what targets it was going to hit, it hit only six military targets and no one was killed. What kind of an out of control aggressor lets its victims know where it is going to hit?

The American mind tends to value the underdog. America's healthy respect for the rights of all people is very commendable, but could also be manipulated. The problem is that any term or situation cannot be blindly followed but must be critically investigated to determine the truth. This is something that was not done in the meeting – the evidence for Israel and for Zionism was simply discarded, and next to no time was given for rebuttals. All that I ask is that both sides be given a chance. At the very least more time should have been allotted to show our side and not just theirs.

And besides, I never got to bring up my point about the Bolshevik propaganda and the Macarena.

Dan Yagudin is a UMass student.

Poe returns with "Haunted"

POE
Haunted
Atlantic Records

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Poe? Didn't she drop off the planet four years ago?

The incomparable singer/songwriter (and record holder for most allusions to oral sex on an album) disappeared entirely from the public spotlight following the tour for her 1995 debut, Hello; assumptions were made that she was off somewhere, working on her new album, but even rumors were hard to come by. Well, she's back, and toting a 17-track album of electronica-glossed rock.

Hello was a marvel of self-definition; combining elements from nearly every genre of popular music into a sound describable only as Poe. Her sultry, smoky voice enunciated anger and fragility with equal sincerity, and the album's clever but never overstated production gave it a charm and honesty difficult to find in her contemporaries in the realm of mainstream female vocalists.

With Haunted, Poe has taken up the telling of a new autobiography, one that copes more directly with the death of her father, and indirectly soundtracks the experimental novel House of Leaves by her brother Mark Z. Danielewski. The album is thick with non-musical sequences, frightened phone calls and snippets of disconnected voices building around the songs an environment of anxiety and uncertainty, an aural representation of the emotional landscape Poe and Danielewski have known.

Fair enough, but what about the music? Poe describes the album as a "high-tech collage," referring to her fondness for manipulating and constructing songs with computer software in a totally digital environment. Accordingly, Haunted has a highly modern, polished sound; most songs are still guitar-centered compositions, but the solid beats and drifting bleeps and bloops give everything a thick flavor of electronica. The manic-paced first single, "Walk the Walk," exemplifies this fusion of rock and techno, ripe with scratch guitar riffs and digital detritus.

COURTESY ARLANE NIGEN

Poe continues her musical introspection with Haunted.

When you subtract the purely mood-setting tracks, the number of actual songs falls to 13, and not a single one of those songs fails to entertain. Some are better than others, and the first half of the album has more to offer than the second, but, distracting theatrics aside, there's little to complain about. At the same time, though, and for all of the album's emotional posturing, Haunted doesn't carry the same weight as Hello in the way of uniqueness and the synthesis of fresh ideas from source material; the songs are, for lack of a better term, more commercial. They're pop songs – dressed up exquisitely and performed excellently, but pop songs all the same.

The centerpiece of Haunted is, of course, Poe's vocal performance, as singular and inviting as ever. Her voice has a remarkable density to it; her performance isn't effortless, and it is in that effort – a marvelously bent note, a word spit out through clenched teeth while she struggles to maintain her vibrato – that Poe is at her most alluring. Her presence defines Haunted as it defined Hello: as a woman taking on different roles, speaking with different voices, but seeing with one set of eyes.

It would have been nice to discover that Poe had managed to evolve her music further in her years away from public attention; and produced an album as startling and refreshing in today's market as Hello had been in 1995. Haunted is still, however, an excellent accomplishment, smartly crafted and enjoyable for fans rock, electronica, and pop alike.

Black Eyed Peas deliver a hip-hop high note with Bridging the Gap

BLACK EYED PEAS
Bridging the Gap
Interscope Records

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

The Black Eyed Peas are rockin, infectious and danceable hip-hop. And on their latest album Bridging the Gap they're happy to let you hear it.

They play with a live band, blend soul, jazz and Latin rhythms, dance like crazy and basically seem to care more about the quality of the music itself than the image they present.

The band's co-founder Will.I.Am says, "just because we dress the way we do and perform with a band doesn't mean we're not hip hop. This isn't about an image; this is about the music, whether it fits the current scene or not."

Clearly it doesn't fit the current scene: Ja Rule's on top of the charts with his latest hard-core offering, Eminem dominated this past summer and Nelly and Mystical came after him. Clearly, upbeat lyrical offerings and live bands aren't the popular style.

But no matter, Bridging the Gap is one of the better pure hip-hop offerings of the past year, perfectly blending old-school scratches, positive lyrics and the beautiful production on an absolutely key party album.

"Weekends," the first single of the album, is contagious, an upbeat song about planning a weekend mixed with Esthero's otherworldly voice on the chorus. Introductions for all the singers are smuck into the overall feel of the album including the brilliantly done "11 Thursday night and the party was jumping/and the bass was thumping/and people was jumping/and Taboo's at the front door coming/Taboo's at the front door coming." Besides Will and Taboo, the Black Eyed Peas third member is Apl.De.Ap.

COURTESY INTERSCOPE RECORDS

Black Eyed Peas

Making guest appearances on the album include Wyclef on "Rap Song" performing a guitar intro familiar to his listeners then jumping into a bass section. Also a keeper with a visitor is "Request+Line" with Macy Gray, a song with a chorus that sounds like it could have come off Cornershop's When I Was Born for the 7th Time. Mos Def and Les Nubian and De La Soul all make appearances on the record, but that isn't to suggest, even for a minute, that the Peas can't stand-alone and perform well.

"Bringing it Back" is an absolutely studs performance, a driving song about the goals of the band and their disgust. "Mimes is a drug and MCs is on it," they sing, angry about the loss of pure hip-hop in favor of the commercialized garbage that too often makes it to our radio. "Tell Your Mama Come" blends a Latin groove with a smooth bass production.

This album is an all around smash, blending all the things that commercialized rap album frequently can't: a creative sounds, solid rhymes, guest appearances that add to the music and a fluid production that makes Bridging the Gap one the best hip-hop albums released in the past year.

Misanthrope proves a mixed bag

The Misanthrope
Directed by Virginia Scott
Starring Robert K. Wu and Elaine Qualter

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Obsession, passion and unrequited love, all aspects of human existence designed to drive men mad, and all key ingredients in Moliere's The Misanthrope.

The play, directed by Virginia Scott and performed by the University of Massachusetts Theatre Department, was an adaptation of text once written and performed in French. From the onset, the simple setting and aristocratic costumes allowed the audience to suspend reality and be transported back to 19th century France. The otherworldly feel about the play was also advanced by the fact that the entire script was written in rhyming couplets. Although this scheme did make the action almost hard to follow at times, it gave the play an almost musical quality.

The production opened with the character of Alceste, played by Robert K. Wu, storming onto the set in a rampage that would soon become his staple action throughout the entire play. Wu gave perhaps the most solid acting performances of the play during his fits of passion and rage. The play centers on Alceste and his love for the young Celimene, a woman whose speech is often peppered with mistruths and who professes her love to a series of interested suitors.

The play follows the action solely through the point of view of the main character, Alceste. The audience is hurled through unnecessary dialogue regarding his legal matters and his quest for truth in order to finally rest upon his obsession with Celimene.

While Wu's performance of Alceste was both dynamic and multi-faceted, Elaine Qualter's performance as his love interest Celimene was surprisingly flat. Her portrayal of the character, rather than leaving the audience feeling charmed or sympathetic, instead prevented it from relating to her character at all. She came across as one dimensional and boring. She was almost classically opposite of Alceste, coming across as static in the face of the dynamic personality of his character.

Overall, the supporting cast turned out solid performances during the production. Oronte and Arisone played by Joshua Boroff and Maya Sloan, pulled off excellent comic performances during the production; they often broke up the monotony of the two-and-a-half-hour play.

Dinora Walcott and Eric S. Cartier filled the roles of Eliante and Clitandre (respectively) with relative ease. These two characters allowed the audience to see yet another side of love's conquest and the bitter rejection of unrequited love.

This play was well put-together, with themes that are as relevant to modern day life now as they were when the play was originally written. However, the production could have been drastically improved had it simply addressed the feelings of love and rejection rather than going into extraneous scenes regarding legal troubles that are never fully explained.

This central theme of the play, concerning love and the need to be loved regardless of one's faults, was well represented in spite of the production's minor flaws in character and detail. When the final curtain closed, the audience could overlook these slight blemishes and instead focus on the message that The Misanthrope ultimately sent.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
PRE-REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2001
The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST
will be offered on Wednesday, OCTOBER 25th
@ 7pm in BARTLETT #61.
This test may be taken only once.
students should pre-register for ENGLWP before pre-registration ends.
Students do not need to register for the test.

LECTURE
James Cellan
Director Emeritus, British Broadcasting Corporation
TELLING THE TALE
James Cellan Jones, recently retired as Director of Plays for the BBC, has directed over fifty dramatic productions, including such award winning works as The Ambassadors, The Forsyte Saga, The Golden Bowl, and Fortunes of War (starring Kenneth Branagh and Emma Thompson). His work has been nominated for more than twenty-five British Academy and British Critics Awards.
Jones will discuss the making of television drama from scriptwriting to film editing, and will illustrate his lecture with exerpts from various productions.
Tuesday, October 24 Campus Center 917 4pm
This Lecture is sponsored by the College of Humanities & Fine Arts and by the International Programs Office

EMC Corporation, the worldwide leader in Enterprise Storage™ systems, software, and services, is in your life more than you think. In fact, chances are, we're in your life when you use your credit card, make airline reservations, or hop on the Internet to surf, shop, or even look for a job!
We're in your life already. Now get into ours.
Your MBA is your key to getting into our life. Turn the key, and discover an exciting future and a world of opportunity at EMC.
Come learn about exciting career opportunities for talented MBA's at our ON-CAMPUS PRESENTATION: NOVEMBER 7
WE'RE:
• the #1 provider of enterprise storage solutions worldwide
• a Fortune 500 superpower bursting with start-up energy
• a place to learn from top minds...use all the latest tools... team up with decision-makers...feel valued and rewarded
• a company committed to employee education and professional development
• a creative corporate culture that supports your growth without cramping your style.
Come to our presentation on campus, or for more information about EMC or to apply online, please visit us at www.EMC.com. You may also send your resume directly to university@emc.com, Human Resources, University Recruiting, Job Code MBA00. EMC Corporation, 5 Technology Drive, Milford, MA 01757-3681
Here is a list of just some of the positions we currently have available for MBA grads:
• Project Manager
• Associate Program Manager
• Associate Product Manager
• Marketing Manager
• Marketing Consultant
• Internet Capital Investment Manager
EMC² where information lives
EMC is an equal opportunity employer that values the strength diversity brings to our workplace www.emc.com

UNPLANNED PREGNANCY?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
LOCAL CALL: 584-0441
A FULL CIRCLE adoption
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help.
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families.
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten Years Adoption Experience
39 Main Street Northampton, MA 01060 adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

The Headache Experience
- A Nuisance Or A Warning Signal?
October 25, 2000
7:30 pm at the Campus Center, Rm 805-809
Ingeborg van Pelt, MD,
a headache specialist at the UMass Health Services, will give a presentation about headaches, particularly migrane and tension type headaches. She will elaborate on headache triggers, and will introduce self-healing and preventive strategies.
Learn to control your headache before it controls you!

Oteil brings the Peace to Pearl Street despite only a meager crowd

OTEIL AND THE PEACEMAKERS
Pearl Street Clubroom
Oct. 21

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

On Saturday October the 21st, Oteil and the Peacemakers made a stop at the small clubroom of the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. For those who don't know, bass guitarist Oteil Burbidge, who just happens to be in a small Southern rock band known as the Allman Brothers Band, leads this five-piece jazz ensemble. Oteil is one of the most talented and experienced bassist in the country. Bass Guitar magazine must agree, as Oteil was distinguished as the "Best New Bassist" in 1997 when he began his stint with the Allman Brothers. Prior to joining the Allmans, Oteil had been a featured member of the defunct Aquarium Rescue Unit fronted by Colonel Bruce Hampton.

When not touring with ABB, Oteil likes to play with this side project that has been around for more than a decade. Besides the new edition of keyboardist Jason Crosby for this tour, the remainder of the group has been together since the band's inception. The majority of the soloing in the first set was unfortunately not done by Burbidge, but split between the talented Mark Kimbrell on guitar and Kebbi Williams on sax. Oteil still managed to get a few jams in, while consistently laying down the backbone of all of the band's original jazzy numbers. The band opened their set with a very funky song titled "Butter Biscuit." It showcased the reeling sax of Williams and the thumping sensations of Oteil.

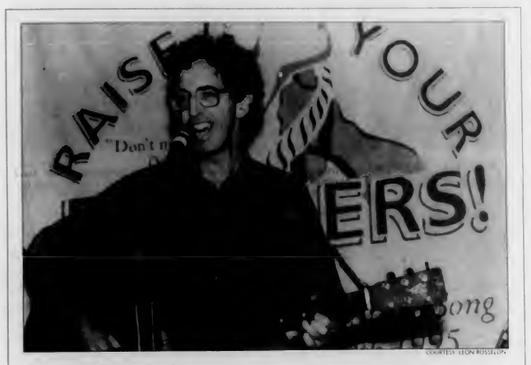
Next, Oteil pulled out an awkward looking electric upright bass on a tripod and proceeded to belt out the opening lyrics to "Monk Funk." The band continued their set with a few more jazzy, funked-up songs before taking a quick set break. At this point, Oteil walked around and welcomed the unexpectedly small crowd, which dwindled even further during the second set that lasted well past midnight. Oteil said that he was completely shocked at the miniscule crowd, as they had just played to a nearly sold-out crowd at the House of Blues in Boston the previous night. He continued to reminisce about a previous performance he had with the Aquarium Rescue Unit in the main Ballroom of Pearl Street, when the up-and-coming Dave Matthews Band opened the gig.

Oteil really took off during the shorter second set as he blew the crowd away with his fast slapping technique. A few times during the set-opener "Subterranea," I realized that my own jaw had dropped. His rapid movements made me wonder how the sound coming out of the speakers was at all related to what he was doing on stage. I now know what 22 years of playing an instrument can do for you.

As I left the venue, I was ashamed at how such a great show with such great performers could be so overlooked in a community with such high regard for its music and culture. I would most certainly hope that if a band of this caliber comes around again the reception would be much greater.

COURTESY OTEIL AND THE PEACEMAKERS

Oteil's bassist tears it up on stage



COURTESY LEON ROSSELON

British folk in Amherst

Direct from England, folk singer/songwriter Leon Rosselon will perform at Amherst's Unitarian Universalist Church on Oct. 26 at 7:30 p.m. For more info call 413-369-0312.

NFL Twilight Zone

All Hell breaks loose as Bengals soar, Rams fall

This past weekend in the NFL has taught me one thing: when it comes to trying to figure out in this league, don't even try.

Week "Crazy" eight was just that: crazy. Apparently, logic and normalcy gave way to the most unexplainable happenings of the season.

One week after I write an article asking which will come first, a Ram loss or a Bengal win, both happen within five minutes of each other. Kurt Warner breaks a thumb, the Kansas City offense breaks loose and Marshall Faulk throws up on the field. What's next, the statue known as Warren Moon throwing for a touchdown? Wait a minute, he did and was 3-5 passing against a defense that gave up 54 points to the Chiefs! The Chiefs had scored 44 points the last two weeks. Hell, the chiefs had only eclipsed 24 points once this season: 42 points versus San Diego, a team that gave up 57 to the Rams.

To those of you who will lose all those fantasy points because Warner got hurt: you should get out more anyway and start trying to live in the real world.

Now to the other end of the spectrum, where the Bengals won a game and almost scored as many points in one game (31) as they had all season (37). That's great. Next thing you know, they are going to tell me that Corey Dillon broke some sort of record. Hold up, 278 yards rushing against... wait a minute 278 YARDS RUSHING?! The record for most rushing yards in a single game goes from the all-time leading rusher... the late Walter Payton, to a Bengal? Figures. I said last week that he would average the most money per rushing yard in one season and he goes off against Denver. To make matters worse, the Broncos third-ranked rushing defense gave up 407 yards rushing Sunday. I have seen an "07" at the end of a team's rushing stats against the Orange and Blue before, but never a "4" in front of it.

Scott Mitchell and Akili Smith went a combined 2-14 through the air and the Bengals had a net of 14 passing yards in the game, which make those stats the best game a Cincinnati quarterback has had all season.

The explanation from Broncos fans for their team's appalling performance may be the fact that Denver overlooked Cincy. They may have a point. The Broncos play bye next week. Wait, they have a bye next week, scratch that.

This is just too much craziness for one fan to take. But wait, there's more.

The Baltimore Ravens have still not scored a touchdown in the month of October. Head coach Brian Billick has benched quarterback Tony Banks and thinks the team savior is going to be Trent Dilfer. DILFER? The only QB controversy that he should be in is the controversy on whether or not he is an actual quarterback. With Dilfer starting for the Ravens, they might go 0-for-forever in terms of team touchdowns.

When your offensive MVP is your kicker Matt Stover and your defense starts practicing the Cal-Stanford play to get the ball into the end zone, maybe it is time for Baltimore to bring John Unitas off the bench.

But there is still some normalcy in the NFL. The rushing record has been broken, but there are still some untouchable records left. Take for instance the record

4th and inches
with
David Rose

for most points in a career. George Blanda's record of 2002 points will never be touched. It would take someone at least 20 years to even have a chance to break it. Take for instance Gary Anderson of the Vikings. He has played for 19 seasons and had 11 points on Sunday. However, that still leaves him well behind Blanda's record. For his career Anderson has 2004 points and... Let me do the math again. 2004 points is more than 2002 points, so that means he just broke the record. You can see what those math classes are doing for me up here at UMass.

That and the fact that Daunte Culpepper and the Vikings are 7-0 make this team the NFL's biggest surprise. It figures that the same Dennis Green who was called crazy for letting go of both Randall Cunningham and Jeff George is now the smartest man in football. Holy hurling bats, what the Hell is going on around here?

Is there anything normal that happened this weekend? Can't find anything yet. The Cleveland Browns had a total of 104 yards of offense. That is not for one person or one half; that performance is for the entire team, all game. In the NFL, 24 players had over 104 yards rushing or receiving by themselves this weekend. That definitely isn't normal.

The Saints' Ricky Williams has gone from dressing up in a wedding gown last year to undressing defenses this year, with five-straight games over the century mark. After a 2-14 season last year, the Saints are 4-3. That definitely isn't normal.

Cowboys quarterback Troy Aikman goes from the laughing stock of the NFL to laughing at the sight of the Arizona Cardinals. The Cowboys won 48-7 and got the right to say that they were the team that got Vince Tubin fired as the Cards' head coach. The Cardinals losing to the Cowboys is "Big D" is normal but the fact that they let up 48 points is definitely not.

Ah, here is something normal, the Patriots held the ball for 39 minutes during the ball game and were able to build up a big enough lead to hold on and beat the Colts, who held the ball for just 21 minutes. J.R. Redmond had a strong game running the ball with 97 yards on 22 carries. Because of the solid running game, the Pats scored 25 points on Indianapolis while they gave up just 30.

Hold up, have to use those math skills again. 30 is more than 25, right? That means the Pats lost. Give me something that was according to norm this weekend.

Next thing you know, Sam Wilkinson will win this week's Collegian NFL predictions article. And as I look at the past week's picks, I find out. HE DID WIN!

Has an evil villain stripped the NFL of any normal happenings? There wasn't even a crime committed by a NFL player this weekend. Will something or somebody please do something normal to give me some hope?

All right, I got something. The NFL can breathe a sigh of relief. Something normal did happen, the 49ers gave up 34 points. Thank God for players like Ahmed Plummer, Jason Webster, Artie Ulmer and the rest of the 49er's defense that can proudly say that they can't stop anybody. Hopefully they can continue to be the normalcy in the NFL. Next weekend, they play the Rams. The Rams lost to KC and will look to take it out on somebody. The 49er's defense was, in fact, the only thing normal in an otherwise abnormal week eight, which considering that I am calling the 49er's defense normal is just not normal anyway.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

Collegian Sports- Gonna fly now

haircuts ★ colors ★ highlights
REGENCY HAIRSTYLISTS
189 N. Pleasant St.
253-9526
perms ★ tanning ★ facial waxing

WWW.COLLEGIAN.COM...
EXACTLY ONE WEEK UNTIL IMAGINATION BECOMES REALITY

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

GET YOUR GRADUATE DEGREE somewhere else.
Meet with representatives from international universities in ENGLAND, AUSTRALIA & IRELAND
ON CAMPUS:
Wednesday, October 25th
Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center room 903
UMass / Amherst
4:00 – 6:00pm
Free Information Seminar
Thursday, October 26th
Sheraton Boston Hotel
Beacon D Meeting Room
Prudential Center
6:30pm – 8:30pm
sponsored events
Semester / year abroad information also available!
STUDYabroad -CIS
Center for International Studies
info@studyabroad-cis.com
www.studyabroad-CIS.com
toll free phone 877.617.8090
OFFICIAL REPRESENTATIVE FOR UNIVERSITIES IN AUSTRALIA, ENGLAND, IRELAND, NEW ZEALAND AND SCOTLAND

Massachusetts School of Law AT ANDOVER
CLASSES START IN JANUARY
• LSAT NOT REQUIRED
• DAY AND EVENING PROGRAMS
• AFFORDABLE TUITION PLANS - 1/2 THE MEDIAN LAW SCHOOL TUITION IN NEW ENGLAND
• OUR PRACTICAL/THEORETICAL PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR THE PRACTICE OF LAW AS WELL AS NUMEROUS OTHER PROFESSIONS
THE LEADER OF REFORM IN LEGAL EDUCATION
500 FEDERAL STREET, ANDOVER, MA 01810
Phone: (978) 681-0800 • email: pcolby@mslaw.edu
www.mslaw.edu
CONTACT US NOW FOR YOUR COPY OF FEDERAL REPORTS 600+ THINGS YOU CAN DO WITH A LAW DEGREE

Council Travel
America's Leader in Student Travel
SALE SALE SALE
Sale Dates: 10/24-10/28
LONDON $195
PARIS $245
MADRID $305
DUBLIN $255
AMSTERDAM $295
Other destinations available!
Shop extended hours-Tues-Fri: 9-7, Sat: 11-3
44 Main Street
413-256-1261

Minutemen tread water in home action over weekend

Water polo butterfly kicks lesser teams, falls in close ones to No. 13 and No. 18

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

Following a tough road trip to California last weekend, the No. 12 Massachusetts men's water polo team was looking to bring strong showing this weekend to its own home stand.

UMass began the weekend by dominating the first two games Connecticut College played the match for Massachusetts falling two. The Maroon and White beat the first-year program by establishing a first quarter lead of 9-1 and holding onto it through the rest of the game as Coach Russ Yarworth took the opportunity to play his underclassmen.

The Minutemen were led by sophomore Brady Hahn, freshmen Marcus Meyer, Jim Gioiello and Andre Swee, who each scored a pair of goals. Freshman goalie Rodrigo Gonzalez played all four quarters and made 12 saves in the net, leading the UMass defense.

The Maroon and White followed up its morning dominance with another solid victory over Fordham University. UMass posted a season high 24 goals that included 10 goals in the first quarter and another eight goals in the second quarter.

Coach Yarworth played his starters in the first half and the pool rust showed for the first two minutes, as the lesser Fordham team kept pace by getting the ball into the two meter up front and scoring from up close. The UMass offense picked up the pace to close out the quarter and had a 10-3 lead by the end of the first behind a pair of goals from sophomore Ricardo Puig. UMass put up another eight goals in the second quarter as junior Mike Foley and sophomore Hahn each tossed in a pair of goals.

Junior Co-captain J.R. VanderWall made five saves in the first half, then turned the reins over to Gonzalez, who made six saves to close it out.

Hahn posted five goals and had a pair of assists in the first two games of the weekend.

In the main event of the evening, the top two ranked teams in the tournament squared off in front of a hometown crowd. The crowd went quiet as UMass fell behind No. 13 St. Francis early, as the Terriers jumped out to 7-2 lead in the first quarter behind a dominating performance by two-meter standout Ali Gozlul's four first quarter goals.

"We knew he was a strong two-meter guy," junior Greg Trayer said. "It was hard to crash down and help out, though, because they had some really good outside shooters."

UMass picked up the pace, playing aggressive defense and pushing the ball on offense. Trayer scored from the outside to cut the lead to four. The Terriers answered quickly, scoring with a "man-up" to bring the lead back to five. Foley and junior Adam Moore scored the next two goals to close the gap to three.

"We stepped up our defensive intensity and that helped out our offense," said junior Justin Houck.

St. Francis scored two more in the 3rd quarter and denied Foley in the two meter, not giving him a chance to get the ball inside. After three quarters, UMass was back where it was after the first, down by five, 10-5.

UMass dominated the fourth as the Terriers tried to run out the clock. Goals from up top by Chad Arnold and Adam Moore and a goal from the two-meter by Foley brought UMass to within two goals for the final, 10-8.

UMass outscored St. Francis 6-3 in the final three quarters, but was unable to make up for the first quarter five-point deficit. The Terriers' early inside domination was the Maroon and White's Achilles heal.

"Once we got back into our game plan, we proved that we are the better team," said Houck.

"[Our players] stepped it up for the last three quarters and played great defense," said VanderWall.

On Sunday, UMass lost a heartbreaker to No. 18 Queens, 10-9. The game began with great goalie play on both sides. With the score knotted at two apiece, VanderWall and the Knight's goalie, Jason Harris, each stopped last breaks.

Houck broke the tie, scoring on a one timer, but the Knights came back, scoring with a "man-up" to even the score at three. UMass took a two-goal lead into the hall after Trayer found Moore in the two-meter, and then in from the wing.

The second half began with some very physical play and more solid goalkeeping. Queens scored on two "man-up" advantages to tie the game with three minutes left in the half. The score didn't stay tied for long, as Moore found Hahn in the corner and then scored as a trailer on a fast break, set up by a VanderWall save.

Very physical play caused more kick outs for the UMass squad. The Knights were able to take advantage of another "man-up" to cut the Minuteman lead to one. Greg Trayer scored at the buzzer from up top to give the Maroon and White an 8-6 lead at the end of the third.

Queens posted two quick goals in the fourth quarter to tie up the game at eight. UMass broke the lead after Arnold made a nice lead pass to Foley in the two meter. UMass gave Queens another "man-up" opportunity and paid for it, as the Knights were able to tie up the game at nine. With just under two minutes left, Queens had possession and took the shot from the two-meter. VanderWall was there to make the save, but the ball tipped off the goalie's arm and bounced into the net to give Queens the lead.

"He barely squeaked one past me," said VanderWall.

UMass was unable to convert on its next possession. Queens had the ball back with under thirty seconds to play and were trying to run down the clock to end the game, but Trayer came up big, taking an offensive foul and getting the Minutemen possession with just ten seconds left, down by one.

After a UMass timeout, there was enough time for one play. After a lob pass into the middle, Moore was unable to gain possession in front of the Knight's goal as time ran out, giving Queens the narrow 10-9 victory in a game it was outplayed in from start to finish.

Queens was able to take advantage of its "man-up" opportunities, giving itself six of its 10 goals and essentially giving the Knights their victory.

"We got too focused on one of their top players (during the "man-up")," said Houck.

"We tried to be physical with them instead of playing our game," said J.R. VanderWall. "It allowed them to dictate the flow of the game."

UMass played six good quarters in two big games this weekend. Unfortunately, the two other quarters killed the Minutemen, as they were outscored 7-2 in the first quarter against St. Francis and 4-1 in the final quarter against Queens.

"We need to put together a 4-quarter game in order to win against the good teams," said VanderWall.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

Adam Moore plays some hard-nosed defense for the Massachusetts water polo team.

Tennis calms incoming Red Storm

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

Two down, one to go.

At the beginning of the season, the Massachusetts men's tennis team pinpointed three matches that would provide tough competition (Boston College, St. John's, and UConn). The Eagles succumbed to the depth of the Minutemen earlier this month, and on Saturday, the Red Storm was merely an early morning drizzle as the Maroon and White cruised to a 5-2 victory. The victory marked the first time in team history that the Minutemen defeated a regionally ranked opponent. Now all that stands between the team and an undefeated fall season is a showdown with the Huskies in Storrs on Saturday.

Head coach Judy Dixon was "extremely pleased" at the team's effort and described the day as a "real statement" for men's tennis at UMass. "This was the best all-around match in the ten years that I've been here. Everyone came to play, and they all played well," she said.

Senior captain Bill Greener reiterated Dixon's statements, calling the victory "the best win we've ever had for our program," and is eagerly anticipating the upcoming match with UConn. "This Saturday is going to be huge," Greener said.

In the warm Saturday afternoon air, the Minutemen were led by freshman Brent Davis, who took care of the Red Storm's Jake Maxwell 6-4, 7-5. The Maroon and White's other two freshman sensations, Aron Gortman and Rory Theis also won in straight sets, as Gortman eased past Brian Scharf 7-5, 6-2 and Theis made quick work of St. John's Christian Carere 7-6, 6-1. The Maroon and White's Will Shaw also won his match in two sets.

Theis, who played strictly doubles at the beginning of the season, has steadily incorporated himself into the singles matches over the last few weeks and has been a solid player, winning two of his three singles contests in dual match play.

"I played a little tentatively on my ankle at first, but these last two weeks I've really been stepping up my game," Theis said. "I'm definitely looking forward to UConn."

In the No. 1 singles match of the day, St. John's picked up one point as the Red Storm's superstar player Erik Scharf defeated Steve Prisco 4-6, 6-3. Prisco battled the entire match, but could not overcome the power and finesse of Scharf, the region's No. 17 ranked player and one of the nation's top 100. Scharf only committed three unforced errors during the entire match, which makes it tough for any opposition to win.

"Steve struggled, but he worked hard, and he did all that he could," Davis said.

Dixon said that the idea was to keep Prisco out on the courts as long as possible and have him fight a long, hard match. She explained that this was to stop Scharf from getting off the courts quickly and providing an emotional boost to his teammates, including his brother Brian.

The Minutemen came out on top in doubles, however, as the tandem of Prisco and Davis improved to 4-0 in dual match play on the season. Todd Champeau and Shaw won their doubles match as well as UMass took two of three.

Now with the second of three Big East opponents laid to waste, the team looks for the trifecta this upcoming weekend.

"We're definitely going in there to win," Gortman said. "We're getting more confident every single day, and working harder, and that's why we're getting better results."

Dixon realizes that the Huskies will be no pushover, however. She expects a large and vocal home crowd; the Maroon and White will have its hands full dealing not just with the Huskies, but also the Husky fans.

"UConn has to be a team effort as everyone will be evenly matched," Dixon said. "I don't think it will be about who plays the best, I think it will come down to who handles the pressure the best and has the most heart."

health studies

Experience
Health Studies at Simmons

...in the heart of Boston's world-renowned academic, medical and research community.

Graduate Program in Health Care Administration
- Masters and Advanced Programs

Graduate Program in Nutrition
- Masters and Internship Programs
- Certificate in Sports Nutrition

Graduate Program in Physical Therapy
- Doctoral Program

Graduate Program in Primary Health Care Nursing
- Masters and Advanced N.P. Programs

Graduate and Professional Schools Information Day
October 25, 2000
8:45 – 3:00
Student Union Ball Room

Meet a Simmons representative at our booth to learn more about advanced degrees in health studies and other educational opportunities.

SIMMONS
GRADUATE SCHOOL FOR HEALTH STUDIES
Boston, MA • 617-521-2650
www.simmons.edu/gshs

THE GRADUATE SCHOOL
UNIVERSITY OF Notre Dame

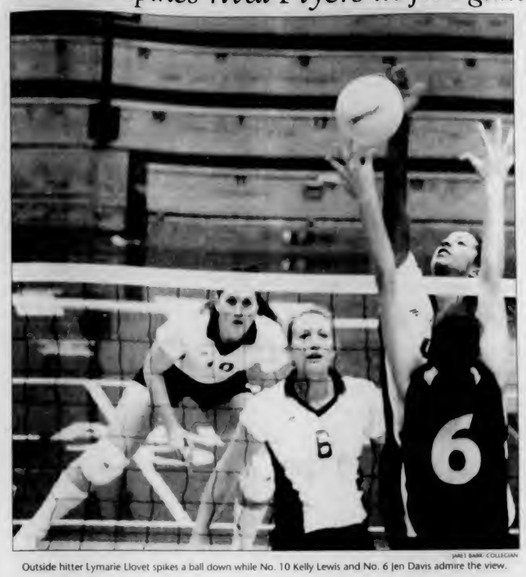
Many opportunities for full funding with stipends ranging from $10,000 to $21,000. If you are from an American racial/ethnic minority, call Associate Dean Poorman at (219) 631-8423.

For more information, call (219) 631-7706, or write to the University of Notre Dame, Graduate Admissions, 502 Main Building, Notre Dame, Indiana 46556-5602
E-mail: gradad.1@nd.edu
http://www.nd.edu/~gradsch/

Come see us at your graduate fair on October 25

Volleyball kills Dayton in high-energy Cage shootout

UMass spikes rival Flyers in five games to gain ground in Atlantic 10 race



JAKE I. BARR / COLLEGIAN

Outside hitter Lymarie Llovet spikes a ball down while No. 10 Kelly Lewis and No. 6 Jen Davis admire the view.

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

Curry Hicks Cage became home to one of the most exciting games in recent memory when Dayton took the court on Saturday night. The Massachusetts women's volleyball team, coming off a hard-fought but unsuccessful night of battle against Xavier, needed to knock off Dayton to move up in the tight Atlantic 10 race for postseason play. But Dayton wouldn't go down easily.

In a game that resembled Muhammad Ali's rope a dope, UMass (9-11, 5-5 A-10) showed signs of playing like two different teams throughout the night.

Dayton (14-8, 6-4 A-10) came into the contest showcasing last week's A-10 player of the week, Carla Muntz. The senior setter, who has solidified the Flyers' middle for the past three seasons, didn't play much. She played in only two of the five games, which many found surprising. And Dayton's sloppy play at the beginning of the night proved that leadership was needed from some of the younger players on the court. Subsequently, the Maroon and White dominated the first two games. UMass got out to leads of 7-0 in the first and 7-1 in the second stanza. Throughout both games, the home team breezed through, allowing the Flyers only 13 points through both stanza.

And then things got interesting.

In the third set, a set that everyone thought UMass would dominate, Dayton began to come into its own. It showed signs of the team that swept UMass a month earlier in Ohio. Senior Sierra Ashley paced the Flyers' offense for the night, knocking 28 kills home while grabbing 19 digs off the floor.

Dayton got its first lead of the night in Game Three at 2-1 and never looked back. The Flyers, stealing momentum from the other bench, made a five point run, and eventually were able to win their first of the night at 15-9.

Game Four – It wasn't the highlight of the season by any means for the Minutewomen. It wasn't anything pretty. UMass got out to a 2-0 lead, and Dayton scored three right away. The Minutewomen got a sideout. Dayton got it back and that was it. The Flyers put up a 12-point run and that capped a game of frustration for the Maroon and White. Nothing fell UMass' way. It it weren't for the one Dayton fan, the Cage would have been silent. Momentum was on the side of the Flyers, and UMass would have to climb a mountain to get it back.

"I think we were two different UMass teams tonight rather than two different Dayton teams," said Head Coach Bonnie Kenny. "I told them, 'don't leave anything.' They'll regret it if they don't leave everything on the court."

Time had come for the leaders of the squad to step up and win, plain and simple. And who else would step up for the Minutewomen except the trio of players who have been playing the roles of leaders all season: senior co-captain Rebecca Hasson, senior Jenni Drennan and junior co-captain Lymarie Llovet.

"I said to them, 'you three, there is some serious tension on the court, something's missing here,'" Kenny said.

The pressure in the fifth and decisive match was so thick you could have choked on it.

Dayton started where it left off in the fourth, serving up an ace right away. Llovet responded with a block for a point to tie it up. The score would bounce back and fourth until the benches were switched at Dayton 8 UMass 7. With the switching of the benches came better luck. Llovet and Claire Baxter put up big points to tie it at 10, but Dayton wouldn't stop its assault. The Flyers scored a controversial point to go up 14-12, and came within one point of sneaking out of the Cage with a win.

But when the going got tough, the tough got going.

"I was confident we would pull together as a team," said Baxter, who had eight kills on the night. "We should have won it in the third."

As Dayton held the Maroon and White by the neck, UMass got a break with a bad Dayton serve leaving the score at 14-13. Another Dayton miscue put the score at 14-14 and a big block by Hasson put UMass up by one, 15-14. The Cage erupted. Dayton scored its last point of the night, tying it at 15. Llovet scored point 16, and served up the last point of the night to notch the win at 17-15.

The Minutewomen rushed the floor while the UMass faithful roared.

"Our starters won that match," Kenny said. "Lindsay Bailey came off the bench and gave Jen Davis a good break when she needed it. Thank God we won. It'll come down to Dayton [or UMass] who gets the fourth spot in the tournament."

When the dust had settled, Hasson once again had led the offense with 18 kills. Llovet had punched in 16 kills of her own, while Jen Davis played a strong defensive game, grabbing 22 digs.

"We knew we were going to win," said Llovet. "The pressure was on us. We knew we were capable of winning; we wanted it too much."

■ Soccer

continued from page 12

Maroon and White sword.

The odds would be stacked against the Musketeers to begin with, but coming into Totman Field after a loss has proved to be a long walk off a short pier for opponents throughout the season.

Emotions were high on Sunday it was the last home match for the senior members of the UMass soccer team. As expected the veterans stepped up as Patrick Beattie, Seth Lilburn and Matt Christy proved that they were still the leaders and the heartbeat of this team.

In a game that had no lack of importance a departing senior would step to the forefront and fire the shot that would slay the Musketeers and bring victory to the Minutemen in a closely contested yet one-sided 1-0 win.

Practicing a long held tradition Coach Sam Koch fielded all of his seniors for the opening kickoff as the home crowd was given the opportunity to pay tribute to the proprietors of UMass soccer for the last four years. The starting seniors included Seth Lilburn, Patrick Beattie, Matt Christy, Dan Brinkman and Benny Hoffman.

The Maroon and White defense locked its jaws on the Xavier offense from the opening kickoff and they wouldn't let go until the sound of the vistor's bus warming up was heard. Led by the black hole at fullback, forwards go in they never come out, John Lytton, the defense allowed little to no offensive chances. O'Quinn would periodically have to take a break from his daydreaming to come out and intercept a long ball but other than those instances the Musketeer attack remained idle.

Lytton who Coach Koch called his "best man marker," game after game defends the oppositions best forwards, this match his duty was no different and neither was the result as he was an essential contributor to the shutout. With UMass' dominating play thoroughly in place the winning goal seemed inevitable. Unfortunately it was not until the second half that the crowd was given a goal to celebrate.

With only 13:40 remaining in the final frame UMass lined up for an all-important corner. Senior Benny Hoffman was in place to take the kick, a position that the Minutemen had failed to come close on the entire contest. Hoffman proceeded to bend the ball into the box towards the far post, out of the reach of defenders as well as the Xavier keeper.

Another senior, Matt Christy, streaked in unnoticed showing of his left foot, which Koch says is the best on the team, by taking the ball on a short hop and burying it in the open net. The crowd erupted as two seniors connected on what ended up being the winning goal in an essential 1-0 conference win.

Coach Koch said after the game that it was a "crucial goal, a huge goal," also going on to say that he "was very happy [Matt] put it in."

The Coach of the Minutemen reacted to the win after the Dayton loss saying he was "very pleased but not surprised" by the effort his team gave.

As the departing masters leave the field of glory one last time, they do so setting a standard for their apprentices to follow as they are the future of UMass soccer.

UMass V-ball drops crucial match to Xavier

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Defend your home court. The rule is simple, and for teams to work toward a successful season, they simply must win the crucial games played at home.

The Massachusetts women's volleyball team failed to do that on Friday night, falling to Xavier in five games (15-10, 11-15, 15-17, 15-9, 15-11). The loss dropped the team's record to 8-11 overall and 4-5 in A-10 play, leaving it smack in the middle of the A-10 in fifth place, with Dayton just ahead.

"I'm disappointed in this loss," said Head Coach Bonnie Kenny. "I think we could have done a little bit better attacking balls and being the aggressor, but I give [Xavier] a lot of credit."

The fifth and final game ended as many points throughout the match did: with Musketeer superstar Sara Bachus throwing down the final tally. Bachus finished with 23 kills while making only six errors on her 45 total attempts. What that all adds up to is a .378 kills percentage, good enough for the highest of any regular in the match.

"She's a great player, and she kills us every time we play them," Kenny said. "We key in on her and we can't even touch a ball she hits."

For the first part of the fifth game, the Maroon and White held tough, fighting its way to a tie at six on the shoulders of Lymarie Llovet, who tallied four of her 11 kills in the rally. But It fell behind at 7-6 on another kill by Bachus. From then on, Xavier never looked back.

The fourth game of the contest was another dismal one for the Minutewomen. Going into the game with a 2-1 lead, the Maroon and White came out strong, combating its way to an 8-8 tie midway through the contest. But then Xavier's big guns took over, with Amanda Lang, Katey Wygant and Bachus all posting kills in a five-point run which left UMass down 13-8, a deficit it could not overcome in the game.

Game Three was one of the most exciting games the Minutewomen have played all season. The Maroon and White sped out of the gates, holding a 9-2 lead early in the game, a lead amassed due to some Xavier miscues, tremendous serves by freshman Kouleti Kamanao and some good net play. Kamanao took the serve while down 1-0 in the game, and served for six consecutive points, with most of her serves ballfling the Musketeer backcourt.

But Xavier was not ready to roll over and give up at that point. After closing the gap to 13-10, the Musketeers ran off four consecutive points to take the lead at 14-13. Leading the way for Xavier was Toni Boutin, who posted two kills in the four-point rally. But just when it seemed that Xavier had gained all the momentum, sophomore Claire Baxter slammed down a kill to get the serve back to the Maroon and White's side. After Xavier took a time out, senior co-captain Rebecca Hasson put home a brilliant tip shot that fell right over the Musketeer blockers. Xavier got another point to drive UMass to the brink again, but this time it was Hasson who shut the door on game point and threw down another kill in the Minutewomen's 3-0 run to win the game 17-15.

Game Two saw the Musketeers jump out to a 4-1 lead early, but the home squad clawed its way back to a six-all tie. After an electrifying block by senior Jenni Drennan and Baxter, the crowd erupted as the Maroon and White took its first lead of the match at 7-6. A Xavier timeout followed, but after a missed kill by Kimberly Cockerel and a block by the tandem of Llovet and Baxter, UMass held a strong 9-6 advantage. The two teams would exchange a few points and eventually the game was tied at 11. But two missed Musketeer kills and another block by Baxter and Llovet propelled the Minutewomen to a 15-11 victory.

The first game of the evening saw the Maroon and White fall behind quickly, and after a block by the Xavier's Cockerel and Jill Hampton, the game was all but lost at 14-5. UMass would not back down, however, and it went on a five point run, with freshman Lindsey Bailey getting two kills, to lessen the deficit to 14-10. But it was too little, too late as the Musketeers took the game 15-10.

"They hit the crap out of the ball and we gave them free balls and tips," Kenny added. "They came in our gym and we let them control and be aggressive. We had three blockers up on [Bachus] and she hit a ball straight down."

For the evening, Hasson led UMass with 20 kills and three blocks. On the defensive end, it was junior Janeen DeMarte and Drennan leading the charge with 19 digs each.

Northwestern Mutual
FINANCIAL NETWORK™

UMASS INFO SESSIONS

DATES:
Tuesday, October 24th, Campus Rm. 903
Last day of Info. Session Wednsday, November 1st, Campus Rm. 911-915

TIMES:
12:15pm, 1:30 pm, 3:00 pm, 4:15 pm
12:15pm, 1:30 pm, 3:00 pm, 4:15 pm

INTERESTED? Contact
Tina Kokoszyn, Campus Recruiter,
Northwestern Mutual Financial Network
1351Main Street, Springfield, MA 01103
413 • 748 • 6000
or e-mail • tina.kokoszyn@nmfn.com

Injury-riddled Minutewomen earn a point in Ohio

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

These days, the Massachusetts women's soccer team resembles a MASH unit more than a soccer team.

With injuries to key players at practically every position, there is no question that as a collective group, the Minutewomen are not even close to full strength. But that didn't stop them from nearly squeezing out two wins this weekend in Ohio against Atlantic 10 rivals Dayton and Xavier.

Instead, UMass battled its opponents into an extra session both times out. Sunday afternoon's game with Xavier resulted in a 1-1 stalemate, but Flyer All-American Missy Gregg netted the game-winning goal on Friday night in a 2-1 Dayton victory.

"If you go into the home of the enemy and get a loss in overtime and a tie in overtime, that would be seen as a pretty positive thing in many circles," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "We played well enough to get two ties, probably even well enough to get two wins. But we were glad to come out of there with at least one point. That makes it a lot easier for us this weekend [with regards to qualifying for the Atlantic 10 tournament]."

With the tie on Sunday, the Minutewomen (9-6-1, 5-2-1 in Atlantic 10) were eliminated from any chance of winning the conference's regular season title, but they did keep themselves in good position for securing an A-10 tourney berth. One win in its final two regular season games this weekend would allow UMass to book its return tickets back to Cincinnati for the weekend of Nov. 3.

"We're giving them two days off, so we're hoping to get our fitness back," Rudy said. "That's a well-deserved rest because we had a very hard weekend. Right now, it's all right in front of us. We wanted to position ourselves to make the playoffs, which we have done."

Friday night, UMass got on the scoreboard first on a goal by senior Kara Green late in the first half. Brooke Bartlett started the play with a ball from the flank that she fired into the box.

However, the Flyers received the game-tying goal from Judi Aschenbrener early in the second half. The contest stayed that way into overtime, when Gregg connected for the game-winner.

"We lost to a good team, and according to their coach, they played their best game of the year by far against us," Rudy said. "We faced a hostile crowd, but I'm proud of the kids. We gave Dayton all that they could handle."

"In the second half, we had three chances to go up 2-0," added Rudy. "But in the end, they just wore us down with too many healthy players."

UMass struck first again on Sunday when Amy Mink finished off her homecoming with a goal. But once again, the home team rallied back, as Tracy Veith tied the game for the Musketeers late in the first half.

"We probably possessed the ball for 70-percent compared to their 30-percent," Rudy said. "They played for the throw-ins. About 70 or 80 percent of their attack must have been throw-ins. We must have lost eight or nine minutes from the

Turn to MASH, page 8

JAKE I. BARR / COLLEGIAN

Amy Mink guards the center of the field for the Minutewoman defense. She would also cross over to the offensive side of the ball and score a pivotal goal against Xavier.

■ Mash

continued from page 9

game because of it."

Rudy also commented on the strong play of freshman defender Michelle Luttati, who kept Gregg and Xavier's Annette Gruber in check over the course of the weekend, even though she was also battling an injury.

"She had a hell of a weekend," he said. "She marked up one of the top goal scorers in the country [Gregg] and held her scoreless until overtime. Then she shuts out one of the all-time leading NCAA scorers [Gruber]. She did a nice job, and she didn't do it cynically with a lot of fouls."

The Minutewomen will be back in action on Friday at 3 p.m. when they face Fordham in an A-10 matchup.

Collegian Sports... our staff writer beat up your Honors student.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

87 Honda Accord 131k at $800/obo 2dr sun@geo.umass.edu

1987 Jeep Wrangler 4cyl, hard top. Many new parts. $4100 or bo 665-3013

97 Honda Civic Ex. Low miles 35,000 Perfect condition, standard. $12,995 Ian 546-0981

HONDA ACCORD LX, 1990, AT/PW/PL/AC, 140k miles, excellent condition Contact evenings, 413-736-6161

Quality Autos For Sale 85 Dodge Caravan, 5speed, loaded $450. 90 Ford Ranger XLT, burgandy $1000 Call 413-286-0857

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

COMPUTERS

For Sale: used desktop computer - P3, 500MHZ, 128MB, 20GB, DVD, CDRW, NIC, ATI 30 card, plus more. Call Surya @ 546-2613

EMPLOYMENT

WANTED: Native speakers of American English for listening experiment $8/hr. 545-6837

Kitchen Help @ meal times. Nice place to work. Near campus. Meals + pay. 549-7719

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today; 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

EMPLOYMENT

PAID MEDIA INTERNSHIP AVAILABLE

Are you looking for a way to combine an education in journalism or communication with social activism? Do you have an interest in grassroots organizing and want to learn how to use the media as a tool for political activism? If you have taken basic journalism or communication coursework, the Peace Development Fund has a paid internship position for you. Position begins immediately and runs until May/June 2001. Flexible schedule. For more information contact Rose Sackey-Milligan at 413-256-8306, ext. 227, or rose@peacefund.org. Send resume and cover letter to Media Internship at PDF, P.O. Box 1280, Amherst, MA 01004, or to rose@peacefund.org

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FOR SALE

Beerpong Tables for sale!! Custom made to order, 4x8. Free delivery to anywhere in Amherst. Call 549-5950 ASAP Ask for Chad

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Djata Bumpus. 256-0364 (Incorrect number ran in previous ads.)

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities* Clubs * Student Groups* Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female wanted to share room in apt. Starting Dec/Jan Call 546-3930 ask for Trisha

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

What are you waiting for??

Advertise to THOUSANDS of students TODAY!!

The Daily Collegian Classifieds

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

C - Campus — TUESDAY EVENING — OCTOBER 24, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	7	16	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Building Big (N) (Part 4 of 5)		Walter: The Drop of Life		Walter: The Drop of Life	Nova "Lincoln's Secret Weapon"
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "Flight Risk" (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight		JAG "Flight Risk" (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	Once and Again (N)	News	Nightline
WLVI	9		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Dear Boy" (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WHDH	6		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		6	7th Heaven "I Hate You"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	"The Inspectors" (1998, Suspense) Louis Gossett Jr.		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WYIT		16	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	3	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	World Series: Game 3 – Yankees or Mariners at Mets or Cardinals				Dateline (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WWLP	3	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	1	8	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Building Big (N) (Part 4 of 5)		Nova "Lincoln's Secret Weapon"		Frontline "The Future of War"	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	4	25	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	Once and Again (N)	News	Nightline
WSBK	1		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	"The Inspectors" (1998, Suspense) Louis Gossett Jr.				Frasier	Mad About You	Spin City
WTBS	2		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"First Daughter" (1999, Suspense) Marie Hemingway				"First Target" (2000, Suspense)	Daryl Hannah, Doug Sheehan
A&E	2		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Benevolence"		Biography "Patrick Swayze"		American Justice		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Born Bad"
CNN	2	23	Worldview	Moneyline	Newshour (N)		Crossfire		World Today		Newsstand		Sports
COM	2	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"The Chase" (1994, Adventure) Charlie Sheen,				Uncomfortably Numb	Whose Line?	Daily Show
DISC	2		Wild Discovery: Dogs		Wild Discovery	House Cats	On the Inside "747 Jumbo Jet"		New Detectives (N)		FBI Files "Firefight"		Cheerleaders
ESPN	2		Sportscenter		Classic Sports Reporters (N)		PBA Bowling: Flagship Open. (Live)				Wonderful World of Golf (N)		Golden Girls
LIFE	2		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Mother, May I Sleep With Danger?" (1996) Tori Spelling		Real World II	Together	Truth (N)
MTV	3		Direct Effect	Diary	Beat or Say What? Karaoke		Corrs Concert	Choose	Real World II	Real World II	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company
NICK	3		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Pelswick	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies			Croaaing Over
SCIFI	4		Sliders "The Exodus"		Babylon 5 "Babylon Squared"		Shadow of the Blair Witch		"Jacob's Ladder" (1990, Suspense) Tim Robbins		Intimate Universe		Trauma: Life in the ER
TLC	2	28	How'd They Do That?		Immortals		Trauma: Life In the ER (N)		Operation		Built (N)		ER "The Peace of Wild Things"
TNT	4		ER "Good Touch, Bad Touch"		Firestarter "Bulletproof"		"I Could Happen to You" (1994) Nicolas Cage
USA	4		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "War Stories"		Nash Bridges "Imposters"		"Sallie's School for Girls" (2000, Suspense) Shannen Doherty		Strip Poker	Martin
HBO	4		(4:30)		"The Evening Star" (1996, Comedy-Drama) Shirley MacLaine. 'PG-13'				"Crazy in Alabama" (1999) Melanie Griffith 'PG-13'		Curb-Entheri.	Q-String Divas
MAX	4		(5:00)		"The Iron Giant" (1999, Adventure) 'PG'		"Above the Law" (1988) Steven Seagal. 'R'		Mutual Love		"Empoy" (1999, Drama) Stephen Dorff. (In Stereo) 'R'
SHOW	4		"Once Upon a Crime" (1992, Comedy) John Candy. 'PG'				"Dick" (1999) Kirsten Dunst. 'PG-13'		Movie News		Beggars and Choosers		"Hideous Kinky" (1998) 'R'

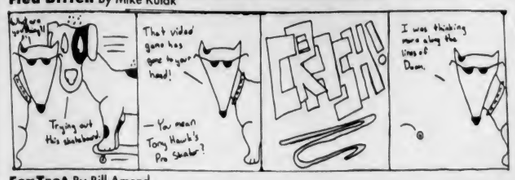
Dilbert By Scott Adams

SPEED IS THE KEY TO SUCCESS.
IS IT OKAY TO DO THINGS WRONG IF WE'RE REALLY, REALLY FAST?
UM... NO.
NOW I'M ALL CONFUSED. THANK YOU VERY MUCH.
www.dilbert.com
scottadams@aol.com
© 2000 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

SO I CAN STRETCH THE TRUTH AND EORS CAN'T?
RIGHT. SINCE GORE COULD STEP UNDAUNTED, BUT DOESN'T. IT'S A CHARACTER FLAW.
BUT BEING "THE DUMB ONE" MEANS WHEN YOU TELL A WHOPPER, YOU CAN'T KNOW ANY BETTER. SO PEOPLE SEE IT AS ENDEARING. LIKE THEY DID WITH REAGAN!
ANGH...
THOSE ARE TALL BOOTS TO UNDERSTAND? I UNDERSTAND THOSE BOOTS!
I'LL ADD IT TO THE LIST.

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak



Trying out this skateboard
That video game has gone to your head!
— You mean Tony Hawk's Pro Skater?
CRASH!
I was thinking more along the lines of Dom

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

ROBBO, WE HAVE TO TALK. MY CAT INSTINCTS TELL ME THAT THIS "COTTON & CROSS" GUY IS NO GOOD. SO HERE'S THE DEAL. EITHER YOU GET RID OF HIM OR I DO. AND THEN I'D COME FOR YOU. "GET" YOU, OR WHATEVER. UM. YOU KNOW WHAT I MEAN, RIGHT?
IS THAT A "THREAT"? ARE YOU TRYING TO THREATEN ME?
THANK YOU. YES, THAT'S THE WORD I'M LOOKING FOR.
GET OUT OF MY ROOM, BUCKY.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

I'M A JOKE A CLOWN? A BIRD WHO CAN'T FLY?
OH COME ON! THERE ARE PLENTY OF RESPECTABLE BIRDS WHO CAN'T FLY.
NAME ONE
LET'S SEE UMMM OK WELL THERE'S THE PENGUIN AND UM THE OSTRICH AND THE CHICKEN THE DODO...
IF ANYONE WANTS ME, I'LL BE IN MY CAGE PAINTING A BIG RED NOSE ON MY BEAK AND PUTTING ON ENORMOUS SHOES
OH WAIT. DODOS WERE CLUBBED INTO EXTINCTION BY PEOPLE WITH STICKS.

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

CHECK IT OUT! I'M GONNA MAKE A COMIC FOR THE SCHOOL PAPER!
WHAT'S IT ABOUT?
IT'S ABOUT A COLLEGE STUDENT AND HIS WACKY ROOMMATES. I WON'T BOTHER DRAWING BACKGROUNDS BECAUSE THEY TAKE TOO LONG. I'LL REUSE THE SAME IDEA REPERTOIRE OF THE BUY SETTING REJECTED BY WOMEN. I'LL TRY TO CONVINCE PEOPLE I CAN DRAW BY SHADING WITH LITTLE PEN LINES AND WHEN I CAN'T THINK OF ANYTHING FUNNY, I'LL STICK IN SENSELESS VIOLENCE. AND I -- HM
NEVER MIND
ZZZZ...

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

YO WILD RICE & CHICKEN ON THE BONE... AT TEN FIFTY I OUTTA TAKE OUT A LOAN! TO EAT AT THIS JOINT... MIKE YOU GET MY POINT
BARRY WHY OH WHY IS MY PASTRAMI ON RYE. SIX TWENTY. YO IT'S TOO MUCH MONEY
HEY! I ATE A LATE LUNCH 'CAUSE I HAD A HUNCH WE'D BE EATIN' ON THE TRAIN. MY WALLET HAS A FROWN CAUSE MY FINANCES ARE DOWN!
HEY! CAN'T YOU GUYS READ?
NO FREESTYLING

The Mop Closet By The Haggardy

GERALD ALWAYS REMEMBERED TO SMILE THROUGH THE PAIN, EVEN AS THE DAISIES BURROWED THROUGH THE BACK OF HIS SKULL AND UP THROUGH HIS EYES © 2000

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Though you may not have the opportunity to give direct input today, you will surely have a major influence simply by being there when needed.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – A combination of tact and aggression can win the day – but you must take care that you don't underestimate an opponent in any way.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19) – Entertain unusual notions today and do not shy away from those ideas that seem to be threatening at first.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Now is not the time to judge others prematurely, lest you be judged unfavorably yourself in the process. Be fair, honest and open.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may be forced to ask some questions today that you have been afraid to ask in the past. The information you receive can be beneficial
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may feel as though someone or something is passing you by today – but with a little effort, you can be sure you won't lose any ground.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may surprise yourself today by accomplishing something you had assumed to be far over your head. This is the beginning of a good trend.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You'll have a chance today to relive a past glory – while improving on it at the same time. Don't rest on your laurels. Strive to outdo yourself.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – A competition is likely to evolve today between you and one who is eager to take your place. Be on your guard at all times.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – It's time to begin a new campaign on your own behalf. You have a project that's ready to roll, and all you need is unqualified support.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Popularity may become a major issue today, but you don't want to get caught up in a race for rewards that are devoid of any real value.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – This is a good day for you to settle back into a routine you are most comfortable with – if only temporarily – while you regain your strength.

Amherst Weather

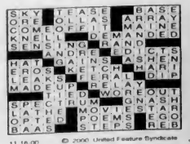
Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 64 LOW: 44	HIGH: 65 LOW: 43	HIGH: 63 LOW: 46

Quote of the Day

"When my fist clenches crack it open, before I use it and lose my cool. When I smile tell me some bad news, before I laugh and act like a fool."
–The Who

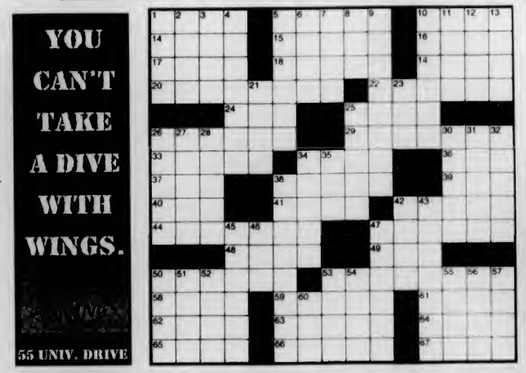
ACROSS
1 — Hari
5 Flightless birds
10 Beggar's cry
14 Gemstone
15 — acid
16 Admirer
17 Pastrami seller
18 Like Moroccan tea
19 Seep
20 Work on an archaeological site
22 Prejudiced
24 Droop
25 Equipment
28 Cabin
29 Purse
31 Lock of hair
34 Shortly
36 Tavern beverage
37 Scrap
38 Yoga position
39 Over there
40 UN member
41 Kind of airpl.
42 Rock
44 Thawing
47 "I don't know" gestures
48 Weeds
49 Can. province
50 Boaster's haven
53 Type of wax
55 Chinese dollar
59 Orchard
61 Patty of "Tank Girl"
62 Astronaut Armstrong
63 Unearthly
64 Commentator Sevareid
65 Calista's role
66 Pods' contents
67 Office need

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



© 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Style
2 Summit
3 Gray-green mineral
4 Assumed names
5 Harm
6 Leave out
7 Eat out
8 Sudbury's prov
9 Foreign chip
10 "All —!"
11 Toiletry and Buscaglia
12 Labyrinth
13 Took to court
21 Delivery trucks
23 Singer Jarvis
25 Horror-movie figure
26 Play a guitar
27 Obliterate
28 Kingly
30 Marshy inlet
31 "— Came Jones"
32 Aubry and Kelly
34 Ballads, e.g.
35 Baseball's Mel
38 Family trees
42 Mets' stadium
43 Toyed (with)
45 Sparsely
46 Charged particle
47 Buying frenzies
50 Talking bird
51 "The Clan of the Cave Bear" author
52 Barrister
53 Skin opening
54 Keen
55 Golfer's cry
56 Eye part
57 Chip
60 Female ruff



YOU CAN'T TAKE A DIVE WITH WINGS.

55 UNIV. DRIVE

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Tator Tot Meat Casserole

Kielbasa Grinder

Tator Tot Casserole (vegetarian) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

African Vegetable Stew (vegan)

Dinner

BBQ Sluggers

Pineapple Ham Steak

Casablanca Stew (vegan) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

Breaded Vegan Cutlet (vegan) (Berkshire, Franklin & Worcester)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Maureen Maske
Copy Editor	Melissa hammel
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak, Adi Husenovic
Production Staff	Jess Grani

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutewomen survive road marathon

Abbott launches field hockey to OT win

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. – The Massachusetts field hockey team would be wise to petition the NCAA for a new rule, allowing it to play 7 on 7 all the time.

For once again, the Minutewomen took a low-scoring game into overtime this past Saturday at Rhode Island, only to win the game 1-0 when the two teams trotted only seven players onto the field, as opposed to the 11 players that are allowed during regulation.

And as it has made a habit of doing this year when playing in the wide open extra frame, UMass won the game at the 7:10 mark of the first OT when Lindsay Abbott dove for a ball in the URI circle and poked a shot by the stunned Ram goalie.

"[The ball] came across," said Abbott. "It starting rolling. I dove, reverse-stick, and hit it in. [The goalie] was coming my way, but I think I kind of surprised her with the dive."

The Minutewomen are now 4-0 in overtime play this season, and with the win improved to 13-3 overall (3-0 Atlantic 10). The Rams dropped to 6-11 (1-2 A-10) and lowered their already sinking chances of qualifying for the conference tournament at the year's end.

For this reason the loss did not sit well with URI Head Coach Rebecca Campbell, and she was uncooperative with the media. "[That] is stuff I don't want to tell you," Campbell said. "We can definitely take positives out of the game, but ... two guys are down at that end of the woods, and whatever I say I don't really want to get used in a way that can go against us."

UMass	1
URI	0

UMass Head Coach Patty Shea, on the other hand, was delighted with the victory. "We had a lot of chances and a lot of shots on goal. We created a lot, which was good, and we hadn't really been doing that, so that is a huge positive and a huge step forward for us," Shea said.

When the final buzzer sounded the scoreboard might have only read 1-0, but the final tally did nothing to dictate the way UMass dominated the game. The Rams were out-shot by their opponents 16-4, and lost the penalty corner battle 12-5. In fact, the score could have easily been much worse if the usually reliable Maroon and White penalty corner team had been able to conquer the grass field and drive the ball past the Rhode Island goalie.

As it turned out, the UMass offense needed eight minutes of overtime play to finally put the winning shot into the back of the cage, which made the game a relatively short one compared to the marathons the team has been playing of late in its current streak of eight consecutive one-goal games.

"Overtime is a normal game for us now," laughed Abbott).

In the first half, the Minutewomen controlled play and kept the ball on the Ram's side of the field, but poor execution on penalty corners and physical defense by URI kept the Maroon and White from scoring. In fact, UMass didn't even get off a shot on a penalty corner until 26:17 remained in the second half.

However, in the second half, the ball continued to remain on the Rhode Island side of the field, and it seemed to be only a matter of time before the Minutewomen put the game away. When Shea inserted seldom-used freshman midfielder Kristen Hopwood into the game, she was able to jumpstart the offense, but numerous chances were squandered and the game proceeded to head into overtime.

"Kristen did an outstanding job," said Shea. "She was a huge spark for us."

A UMass game would not be complete without at least a couple of Zowie Tucker highlights, and once again she did not disappoint. With time running down in the second half, she made a sprawling kick save to deny the Rams one goal, and then a few minutes later stopped a slap shot from point blank range to keep the contest knotted at zero.

For the rest of the game, the defense stepped it up and allowed only one other URI shot. Anke Brauemmer was particularly effective at stopping anything the Rams brought into the zone, and the entire unit did a great job of neutralizing A-10 points leader Kelley Barnowski.

"Anke is playing the best defense of anyone I have seen in the country," said Shea. "And this is the best defensive team I have had since I've been here."

Now, all that is left for the Minutewomen to work on is their offense when all eleven players are on the field.

"We have great individual talent, and this group is willing to work hard for each other on the field," said Shea. "Skill-wise, we are a very, very strong team."

JARET BARR/ COLLEGIAN

No. 10 Kristen Schmidt smacks the ball into the opposition's goal while teammate Lindsay Abbott (right) looks on.

Grass proves unnatural surface to UMass' Astroturf troopers

KINGSTON, R.I. – Talk about not worshipping the ground they played on – the members of the Massachusetts field hockey team couldn't wait to rid themselves of their earth-trodden cleats.

Because after their 1-0 overtime victory on Saturday afternoon, the buzz on the Minutewomen's bus wasn't that they had just won their thirteenth game of the season – it was a general appreciation for the fact that they had just played on a grass surface for the last time this year.

"It's just different," said junior Lindsay Abbott, who scored the game-winning goal against the Rams, said. "And we're not used to it."

"It's so unpredictable," Head Coach Patty Shea said. "You just never know when [the ball] may hit a dip or a little rise on the field. When you're out there you can feel them when you walk but you can't see them. It's just a true surface."

UMass, which calls the artificial turf surface of Richard A. Garber field home, traveled to the Rhode Island Field Hockey Complex this past weekend perfectly aware that its contest with the Rams would be played on grass.

Going in, the Rams knew they had the advantage. And their eventual failure to capitalize on it was unthinkable to them. But what Rhode Island hadn't known was that Shea made her team practice on the jagged green of Lower Boyden Field all last week.

"[Lower Boyden] has the worst grass in the world," Shea said. "But, we do that on purpose because if they can be successful there, then when they come to a field like this, they think they're playing on turf. It's kind of a psychological thing."

Since when has grass been a field hockey foe? Since the invention of artificial turf. But that's not to say that a grass field is the evil spirit of the sport. It's just that on grass and on turf, it's two different games. And it's also a matter of what a team is used to.

ERIC SODERSTROM

"You do change your game and you change your tactics tremendously [on turf]," Shea said. "You're going to hit the ball more into space than you ever would on an artificial surface."

When competing on grass, a team will never take chances to possibly put itself in trouble by going to the center of the field until crossing the 50-yard line. Instead, it'll put everything outside, virtually eliminating any chance for its opponent to break away. On turf, it's more of a direct passing game. As Shea put it, "on turf you play more stick to stick."

The most evident problem that the Rhody grass presented to the Minutewomen was its penalty corner barricade. Since the grass slows the ball down and makes it rather bouncy, it's hard to effectively stop the ball and get a quality shot off on a penalty corner opportunity. UMass was only able to get one shot off the 12 penalty corners that it was awarded. That shot, taken by junior Anke Bruemmer, was hurried and off target.

"It's just the unpredictability of playing on grass," Shea said. "It's just very, very difficult. You have to have a great hit-out from the end.

"You can just tell the difference of execution in [Rhode Island's] corners and our corners," Shea continued. "They get to practice them every single day."

The Maroon and White, which beat Providence College 1-0 in stokes on October 11 on a grass field, looked very strong versus the Rams. UMass kept the ball in its opponent's end of the field for the majority of play.

"We deserved to win this game," Shea said. "I think we outworked Rhode Island. We just couldn't put one in. But for us to dominate the game like that on a surface that we don't particularly play on is a huge positive and I think it gives us a lot of confidence."

As previously mentioned, the Minutewomen will not have to compete any more on grass this season. Their last three opponents all have artificial turf fields and every game of the NCAA tournament is held on turf. And that's because it's impossible to reschedule games due to inclement weather. Games are played on turf even if it rains. In fact, turf fields are watered before every game making it easier for the ball to sail across the field – a hydroplaning concept of the sport.

Although a lot of coaches around the country would enjoy playing every game on an artificial surface, it is impossible to mandate such a rule in a sport that is rarely a revenue one. But, as more and more schools are beginning to see, an artificial turf surface serves more than one purpose. It provides extra practice time for every sport – time that most teams would not normally have.

"It's great for every sport," Shea said. "Our men's lacrosse team is outside more than they ever were. And the baseball, softball and track and field teams get to go out there when usually it's snow covered. It's a huge benefit for everyone."

This year, the Atlantic 10 tournament will be hosted by UMass and played at Garber field on November 4-5. The Maroon and White's final two regular season homes games are next weekend when they face West Chester on Friday at 7 p.m. and La Salle on Sunday at noon. UMass is at Dartmouth on Tuesday.

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian columnist.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

No. 20 Obie Gravely takes to the air to challenge a defender for control of the ball.

Minutemen shot down by Flyers

By Matthew F. Socco
Collegian Staff

Perhaps an air raid siren would have been appropriate as the Dayton Flyers carpet bombed Totman Field on Friday afternoon with three goals, en route to a decisive win over the Massachusetts soccer team.

The Minutemen looked lackadaisical on both ends of the field in Friday's loss to the Flyers. Perhaps the below par effort can be attributed to a let down after an emotional overtime victory over nationally ranked Rhode Island on Wednesday night. Nonetheless the intensity and the spirit that has marked UMass soccer in 2000 were not on display for the home fans in this weekend's opening game.

Dayton	3
UMass	0

The Maroon and White took their vengeance out on Xavier in Sunday's matinee with a 1-0 win, and for the fourth time this season a loss was followed by a victory in the following contest. With the defeat at the hands of Dayton however, UMass lost its first place spot in the conference.

From the outset of this weekend's opener it was clear that the Flyers had a step on the Minutemen. Only eight minutes into the game the UMass backs got caught watching instead of working as Dayton midfielder Denny Clanton put on a dribbling display, leaving the entire Minuteman defense in his wake. Junior Goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn made a magnificent diving save on the bending ball, but the rebound bounced right on the foot of UD's Sunday Isenanme, who pushed it over the goal line for a 1-0 lead.

After the visitors first scoring strike UMass countered with its own brand of offensive pressure. Junior Fred Kinateder sent a killer pass through the heart of the defense but just out of the reach of Yuri Morales as the Flyer keeper came off his line to intercept the scoring bid.

At the 50 minute mark Kinateder again got involved, firing a shot from 18 yards out which deflected off a defender's hands, right to the keeper. UMass kept the pressure on for another 15 minutes with numerous chances such as an 18 yard free kick, two corner kicks, two long throws and a few tic tac toe plays that were mere inches from resulting in goals.

UMass	1
Xavier	0

Another Dayton flurry came with 10 minutes left in the first fram as a cross was cleared over the end line by the UMass defense. The ensuing corner kick was immediately sent out of the box as the Maroon and White made a lightning transition from defense to offense.

With 8:15 remaining the Minutemen earned a free kick from 14 yards away. It was whistled as an indirect kick, meaning someone would have to touch the ball before it was shot. The shot ended up deflecting off the wall for a corner kick, not the result UMass needed. The corner kick was cleared out by a stingy Flyer defense, that chance representing the last opportunity of the half.

Dayton came out "flying" in the second half as they looked to ice the game early with another score. UD used long ball attack which kept the Maroon and White defense off balance as they had to be aware of balls being played over their heads as Flyer strikers streaked past them on the ground.

Once again the Dayton offense struck early as R. J. Kaszuba scored off a 25 yard free kick. Kaszuba delayed as Erik Nelson touched the ball square to the 18 yard box, as his teammate touched the ball Kaszuba ran onto it striking a blistering shot that bended around the Maroon and White wall and into the side netting to O'Quinn's left.

Saytón added an insurance goal with 28 minutes left to play off of a center lob. The ball sailed over the UMass defense to Patrik Wirtz who trapped the ball before chipping over an aggressive O'Quinn.

Possibly the one and only plus of the match was Captain J.R. Pouncey's first goal of the season. The juniors goal only delayed the inevitable however, as UMass fell to an A-10 opponent for the first time all season.

UMass would throw its gauntlet down in the second duel of the weekend, and Xavier would fall by the

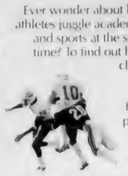
Turn to SOCCER, page 9

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

The Wallflowers latest release goes beyond pop success and into Daddy's territory. The review is in today's arts.

ARTS p. 6

Ever wonder about how athletes juggle academics and sports at the same time? To find out how, check out the back page.



BACK p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 35 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, October 25, 2000

Dynamic speakers, different messages:

Conover and Abair talk at UM

Author Ted Conover, left, spoke at Memorial Hall yesterday. Conover wrote New Jack. Guarding Sing Sing after working as a guard at the notorious prison for on e year.

TIBORA GIRCYC-BLUM/ COLLEGIAN

Pete Abair, a local Republican candidate running against John Oliver spoke two nights ago in the Campus Center.

JARET BARR/ COLLEGIAN

The Reverend Al Sharpton will speak at 8:00 p.m. tonight in the Campus Center Basement. He will discuss police brutality.

By Jason Trenkie and Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

Ted Conover, the author of several books including Newjack: Guarding Sing Sing and an Amherst College graduate, spoke at Memorial Hall yesterday about his year long experience working as a correction officer in one of New York's largest prisons. The event was sponsored by the Journalism Department.

Conover, a freelance journalist for publications like the New York Times Magazine and the New Yorker, said he became interested in the penal system following a rise in prisoner rates during the early 90's.

Prompted by his own questions about the public stigma towards correction officers, he wanted to research the system from their side.

"I wanted to know if it could be possibly be true that this profession as a whole was brutal: if rough people were attracted to the job or if the job made them that way," he said.

Having been denied access to the Correctional Officer Academy as a journalist looking to follow the training of an officer, Conover applied to take the entry exam himself in 1994 and was admitted to the academy in 1997.

"I wanted to see what that world was like," Conover said. "to see if a college educated person could do this job and what wearing the uniform would do to me."

According to him, the experience was, "more intense than he had bargained for." He described himself as a liberal, someone sympathetic to those in the system, but found that once in an officer's uniform, responsible for 115 inmates, Conover said he was changed profoundly.

"Each inmate sizes you up and looks to see what you are made of," Conover said. "Quickly you begin to feel overwhelmed by them. Officers go in [prison blocks] with no weapons other than a baton," Conover said.

"You have to leave your pistol behind because if an inmate gets it, it's worse than if you had left it."

Reflecting on his experience, Conover said "the hardest part was not being able to tell people where I was really coming from." However, he said there was "absolutely no other way to get the story."

On his application, Conover never explained he was a freelance writer researching potential material for a project. However, he said he did not lie or make up a false job history on his application in order to obtain information.

"I only wanted the truth," Conover said. "I don't offer prescriptions. I just wanted to tell a story and let people draw conclusions from it."

Conover's accounts were revealed in the May 2000 publication of his book. In the few months after, he received approximately 200 e-mails from correctional officers. According to him, most of them were positive, even thanking him.

Conover's other books required that he become a participatory observer as well. In Coyotes: A Journey Through the Secret World of America's Illegal Aliens, Conover traveled with illegal aliens, train-hopping between underground railways and walking across deserts to become a participatory observer in the life of Mexicans crossing the border.

Rolling Nowhere, his first book, was originally part of Conover's college thesis. In it, he recounts his travels riding the rails with hobos and tramps. Still surprised by his ability to ride the rails and get credit for it in college, Conover described his work at Amherst as "basically majoring in hobos."

When asked if he has any regrets about his work at Sing Sing, Conover said, "it's a nasty job restricting people in there. I feel like I did something soul-shrinking. But I don't think I would have been able to achieve the depth of understanding about prisons and been able to participate openly otherwise."

By Matthew F. Socco
Collegian Staff

Republican candidate for congress Pete Abair visited the Campus Center Monday night. What he left was a stamp in the minds of those in attendance that he would work with both parties in Washington, with the benefit of the people of the first congressional district in mind.

Abair himself has 15 years experience working in public services for Massachusetts under the late Congressman Silvio Conte. Conte succeeded in working with both parties towards the greater good, despite the fact that he, as a Republican, was in the minority. Abair believes that he will be able to accomplish the same goals in Washington, goals he thinks his opponent, John Olver, has not worked towards.

Abair's platform hinges on his view of bi-partisan politics, which opposes Olver who Abair believes "puts his party over the people."

The Republican candidate began his discussion on Monday night talking about the race itself, and the reasons he decided to enter. He stated "I want to return this government to the people," and "this cause is a good cause," which is why Abair says he decided to "embark on this crusade."

Abair was adamant about how hard fought and "very expensive" this campaign has been calling it a "shoe letter campaign." He even said that he has spent so much time going door to door that he has had to change the soles on his shoes.

The Republican also addressed some questions in the media that it may be difficult to bring both parties together as he is a Republican. He answered these doubts saying, "My entire career I've been in the minority party," going on to say "I can solve problems, that's what I can do for congress."

Abair also made attacks on his opponent, although relegating the accusations to the issues as well as what Olver has not been able to do in congress. He brought up issues such as The "Big Dig" and its lack of progress with extraordinary funds. He also talked about Massachusetts being the only state in the union to have its highway budget cut, as well as ranking 41st in total money received from Washington.

Abair stated that he "wants a one to one relationship in Washington, for more money." He said that with Olver's lack of success on these issues he has "let the people of Massachusetts down, and he has let the delegation down." Abair even went so far as to quote the Democratic Dean of the Delegation when he said Olver wouldn't be in Washington if he had it his way.

The first issue that Abair brought up was the allocation of the government funds. He noted that Social Security always brings in more than it pays out, also claiming that the $30 billion spent on education never

Turn to ABAIR page 3

Assault, DUI top cop log

By Chris Thompson and Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) intervened in two domestic disputes and arrested two individuals for driving while under the influence of alcohol this past week.

UMPD arrested Jose Bou, 20, of Northampton, in Coolidge Dormitory on Friday at 11:30 p.m. and charged him with domestic assault and battery.

The reporting party asked UMPD officers about her options in dealing with Bou, a former boyfriend.

"An immediate restraining order was issued as is standard practice when a restraining order is applied for," said Jim Lyons, spokesman for UMPD. "We assisted the victim in going to court."

Lyons explained that when a restraining order is requested an immediate restraining is given out which is in effect for three days. Later, the decision is made in court to extend the order for 60 days or let the order expire.

An on-call judge issued a restraining order on Saturday against a student's ex-girlfriend after she attacked him in Coolidge Dormitory.

"A person had reported that his ex-girlfriend had entered his room and attacked him," Lyons said. "He was going to Health Services to check out bite and scratch marks."

The judge issued a stay-away order that indicated how many feet she had to stay away from her ex-boyfriend.

UMPD arrested Minh Do, 26, of Amherst for driving while under the influence of alcohol on Sunday at 1 a.m. He was cited for speeding, no inspection sticker and no license plates.

Police also arrested Diana Lopez, 21, of Marlborough for driving while intoxicated.

"The suspect failed the field sobriety test," Lyons said.

Lopez also created a disturbance at the Amherst Police Department after her arrest.

An officer observed a male staggering down University Drive on Saturday at 1:54 a.m. the individual said he had a friend on campus. After attempts to find his friend were unsuccessful he was placed in protective custody. The police called for an ambulance to check on his hand, which appeared fractured. He was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

Windows in Bartlett Hall were broken due to what appeared to be holes from a BB gun. According to Lyons the windows have been replaced three times recently for damage from a BB gun.

"We told the Physical Plant to inform us before they replaced the window again," Lyons said.

A vehicle was reported broken into on Tuesday on Fearing Street. The driver's side door-lock was damaged as was the ignition and the glove box was rifled through. The car was towed because of the damage to the ignition.

A vehicle was found missing from Lot 11 on Saturday at 5:45 p.m. The reporting party first thought they were mistaken about the location of the vehicle, and also asked a friend in possession of a key to the vehicle if they had borrowed it. Amherst Towing Company was also contacted but had not towed the car. Lyons explained that the number of cars broken into had gone up in the past three years but was still low. These past year 25 cars were stolen from the UMass campus.

"I think that we have more cars broken into than we have stolen," Lyons said.

TIBORA GIRCYC-BLUM/ COLLEGIAN

The Real Slim Shady stands up to Worcester

Eminem headlined the Anger Management tour which stopped in Worcester Centrum on Monday evening. For full coverage, see page 6.

Grad fair opens house

By Suzanne Furst
Collegian Correspondent

The first annual Open House for prospective graduate students took place in the Student Union Ballroom early yesterday evening. The event was hosted by the University of Massachusetts Graduate School in combination with the Campus Career Network.

The purpose of the open house was to provide those interested with the occasion to meet faculty and other students and gather information in the sixty-eight fields of graduate study which UMass offers. Furthermore, students will have the chance to receive information on financial aid, scholarships, and fellowships offered by the different departments.

"Excellence Within Your Reach" was theme of 'Open House 2000.' This theme was chosen because of the success of UMass's programs such as linguistics and polymer science. According to Charlena Seymour, dean of the Graduate School, "The University annually awards approximately 300 doctoral degrees and 1,900 master's degrees."

Women's Studies was one of the graduate programs present at the open house. Nancy Campbell Patterson, Graduate Program/Program Development Coordinator of Women's Studies explained that it was a small program with independent certificates. She expressed her happiness to be included in the first annual open house. Patterson stated the benefits derived from the event in relation to the program she was representing by saying, "It is good for exposure."

Another department on display was that of the hotel, restaurant, and travel administration. Dr. Linda J. Shea, Associate Professor of Marketing and Graduate Program Director, was on the scene to discuss the graduate program. She explained, "Many students don't realize that this [the hotel, restaurant, and travel] industry is number one in the world." According to Shea, many international students aren't sure what they will do when they graduate. Her response is, "There are hotels and restaurants everywhere; there is always a need for hospitality."

There was an expectation of twenty-seven graduate programs to take part, however a couple of empty spots with department titles made it doubtful that all showed up for the occasion. Nonetheless, many departments were at the occurrence, including: public health and health sciences; MIE; French and Italian; MFA music; exercise science; nursing; and animal science. A spokesperson from the Kaplan group was also on site.

This open house gave students a chance to broaden their horizons and speak to faculty and students about the various graduate programs available. It was the first, although it seemed successful enough to not be the last.

Gotta call the shots
Mohr, a junior, plays pool in the game room.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1992 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts—operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became The College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Bernhardt Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Sendenovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trendle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hummel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majcrowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiunta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

YOUR IDEA OF BREAKFAST.

Slightly different music (because you're slightly different).

Join Replay.® The club that rewards your love of entertainment™. Ask associate for details.

MEDIA PLAY®
Your Entertainment Superstore

For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
MediaPlay.com™
Pricing may vary online.
Cassettes available on select titles.
Sale ends November 4, 2000.
826800 5626

www.dailycollegian.com

Going up...

Sponsored by
entreclub.org

Life's a Pitch

You have 45 seconds to sell your idea... what are you going to say?

We'll tell you.

Learn how to develop and pitch a business concept.
"Business Concepts: from Idea to Enterprise"

Event: Business Concepts: from Idea to Enterprise
When: Wednesday, October 25th at 7:00 pm
Where: Memorial Hall, UMass Amherst
Speaker: Jamie Page, founder Crosskate
2nd place winner MIT's $50k Business Plan Competition

WHAT IS THAT?! Come find out.

Prize Drawing!! Free Admission

Abair

continued from page 1

reaches schools. "Lets get that money into the classroom," something Abair says will be a higher priority when he takes office.

Abair also claims that if he were in office than the $13 million allocated to the "Big Dig" would have been enough to finish the project, contrary to it's relatively idle status at this point under Olver's watchful eye.

The next issue he brought up was the high gas prices now affecting the citizens of Massachusetts. Abair believes that "we tend not to use our natural resources," which can contribute to rising prices. He also used this opportunity to fire another shot at his opponent saying that while Olver was in Washington he pushed for more taxes on home heat oil, natural gas and electricity. Abair believes we can combat these issues with a better energy policy that would benefit the state.

Abair then brought up a personal point about how "western Massachusetts is dear to [his] heart." He believes that while in office he will be able to bring better jobs and better businesses to the district.

He also discussed the increase in tuition for colleges and universities as well as the government funding.

"It's outrageous," he says about schools such as Harvard University and other Ivy League schools raising their tuition by eight or nine percent a year. He wants to keep school tuitions rising at a level lower than or at inflation, while rewarding schools that lessen their price tags.

Briefly Abair also discussed the uselessness of a marriage tax that affects over 60,000 families.

Abair then moved towards his top four priorities after taking office, the first of which is Medicare. "Medicare commands $200 billion a year," he said, "and by the year 2003 it will cost $3 trillion." This money contributes to the national debt, which will fall on the shoulders of taxpayers about the time present college students will be paying taxes.

His second priority is social security, which Abair believes needs some major reform. He stated that he wants to cut Social Security benefits.

After Social Security he believes that tax reduction should be a top priority. Abair stressed that instead of increasing payroll taxes; individuals should set aside their own money in order to increase the yield.

The fourth and final priority that Abair has set is national debt reduction.

Where, oh where, does the confiscated alcohol go?

By Caroline Brancatella
The Heights (Boston College)

(U-WIRE) CHESTNUT HILL -- Where does it all go?

Every weekend Boston College students pool their money and their efforts to purchase and consume alcoholic beverages at parties, at tailgates or at small gatherings of friends. The problem is that many BC students are under 21, the legal age to purchase and drink alcohol, and many of those students who are of age don't adhere to the guidelines for keeping alcohol on campus.

Every weekend the Boston College Police Department gathers up kegs, 30-packs of beer and handles of hard liquor from students who haven't been following the rules, which raises the question: Where does it all go?

It goes to the "Beer Room," a small, closet-like space not that far from BCPD headquarters. Inside the tiny area is a virtual playground of alcohol rescued from underage consumption and waiting to be dumped down the drain. Don't get any big ideas -- the room is under alarm and any attempt to break in would quickly be thwarted by an army of BCPD officers.

"If you're under 21 and you have alcohol in your possession and it's in an open container, it's dumped on scene," said Lieutenant Margaret Connelly of the Boston College Police Department when asked how the "Beer Room" maintains its large and diverse inventory of beverages.

"If it's packaged such as [the alcohol in the room] is, it's inventoried on a property sheet, you're given a copy of that, and then it comes in here."

Connelly adds that the alcohol doesn't come from one common area or dorm, the original purchasers of the alcohol reside in buildings campus-wide.

Having 21 candles on your birthday cake doesn't make you immune to confiscation, either. One cannot transport more than seven 30-packs at a time. If a student is found moving more than that on campus, BCPD will remove all the alcohol, not just that which exceeds the limit.

Connelly points out that, "We don't have the time to start breaking things up, so everything goes and you can appeal if you want."

Right now, the "Beer Room" contains about a month's worth of confiscated material. There are plenty of 30-packs of Busch Light, Genny and Coors Light. A few cases of Killian's lie at the bottom of the pile, right next to the kegs, on top of which is a case of Oktoberfest. Interspersed among the other brands of beer are bottles of Absolut, hard liquor and a lone bottle of champagne.

On the floor are several backpacks, presumably, the transportation method of the commandeered alcohol. There is easily a few thousand dollars of students' money sitting on the floor and shelves within the four small walls.

"Some of [the alcohol] is called in by the RAs, but most of it is [BCPD] catching them," Connelly said, adding, "You know that square duffel bag is usually a clue."

While Connelly couldn't say exactly when the most alcohol is confiscated, she claims that the weekends when the most beer ends up in BCPD's hallways are those one might expect: football weekend, including the spring game, holiday weekends and Marathon Monday.

And, although she can't say for sure, the most alcohol ever taken from one place at one time is close to 50 30-packs (could have been quite a party).

Why keep all of it locked up in one little room, whose very existence is both tempting and distressing to many students?

Basically, there's nothing else BCPD can do with it. Despite various rumors, the police officers do not drink the alcohol themselves nor is it served at school functions, sold back to area liquor stores or given to members of varsity sports teams, chuckles Connelly.

Instead, she explains why the alcohol is kept.

"The dumping enables us to return the cans and get the money back, and that money is donated to a charity," says Connelly.

She adds that last year, the profits were donated to the Campus School in a check for more than $1,000.

Some quick math shows that over 20,000 cans were redeemed.

But not just anyone gets to spend their time sending the alcohol into the plumbing system. Rather, a community service worker selected by the Dean of Students or by Residential Life takes on the task.

"We ask the Dean of Students if they have anyone who needs to be assigned to community service, if they don't have anyone who needs to be assigned at the time then we call Residential Life ... We try to keep it balanced between the two," says Connelly.

She also confirms that those individuals assigned to dump out the alcohol tend to become a tad emotional, crying is not unheard of Connelly reports that, "The guys tend to get more upset than the girls."

The dumping itself is done in the mens room at BCPD headquarters. The smell of a few 30 packs going down the drain can have quite an effect on the olfactory glands. And since the "Beer Room" is nearly at capacity it's only a matter of time before some student gets the call to come in and serve out his/her punishment by cracking open a few beers -- and then watching them swirl down the sink.

While students may shudder at the thought of such a waste, Connelly says that no crying over the sort, since a group of students from the Campus School were able to participate in the activity because of the money from the redeemed deposits.

Libertarian Party chairman describes positions in A&M speech

By Noel Freeman
The Battalion (Texas A&M U.)

(U-WIRE) COLLEGE STATION, Texas -- About 1,450 Libertarian candidates will be running for various offices across the nation in the Nov. 7 elections, including 250 candidates for Congress. That is more than twice the number of candidates from all of the other third parties combined.

Even with the increasing number of candidates, Dr. Jim Lark, chairman of the national Libertarian Party, said the Libertarian Party is ignored, shown by the exclusion of Harry Browne, the party's presidential candidate, from the presidential debates.

Lark, director of the Financial Engineering Research Group at the University of Virginia, spoke at Texas A&M University's Memorial Student Center (MSC) Monday night to discuss the doctrine of the Libertarian Party as well as challenges that have plagued the party since its inception in 1971.

Lark was the guest speaker at a forum hosted by the MSC Current Issues Awareness Committee and aimed at educating the student body on issues not widely covered by the media. This forum was the second in a series that hosted the American Socialist Party in mid-September and will host the Green Party Nov. 1.

The discussion focused on the doctrine of the Libertarian Party, which says that the rights of Americans should be based on individual liberty and personal responsibility.

"You should have the right to live your life as you see fit, provided you don't violate the like rights of others," Lark said, summing up the doctrine.

He continued by applying the doctrine to some of the major issues of this year's election, including Social Security, foreign affairs and campaign finance reform.

Lark said that Libertarians tend not to like politics and prefer voluntary means to political means.

"I don't believe I have the right to force (someone) to provide for the retirement of others," he said. "The bonds of the community are being broken down by state-provided welfare."

Exploring the realm of foreign policy, a much more conservative approach was taken, chastising the current administration for what Lark characterized as selective intervention in world affairs.

"The only purpose of government is the protection of life, liberty and property of Americans in America -- not to serve as the world's policeman," he said.

However, Lark said the Libertarian Party continues to support a strong military and national defense. Throughout the forum, challenges faced by the Libertarian Party frequently surfaced, prompting discussion of the difficulties faced by the party and the hurdles that have been overcome in its 29-year existence.

"The only real way third parties can get their message out is by using huge amounts of money," Lark said, citing the 1992 presidential race in which Ross Perot was forced to run himself because campaign finance laws prohibited him from using his assets to finance a different candidate.

In 1980, the party nominated Richard Clark and billionaire running mate David Coke for the Libertarian presidential ticket. Clark was able to finance the campaign with his wealth and the Libertarian ticket received more than 920,000 votes that year, compared with the 480,000 votes received by Libertarian Harry Browne in the 1996 presidential race.

In some states it's damn near illegal to run it you're not a Republican or Democrat," Lark said, adding that other challenges include ballot access restrictions and poor local media coverage.

Nonetheless, Lark said party efforts have seen a tremendous increase in local media coverage. He added that problems continue with a lack of attention from what he called the "prestige press," referring to the three major television networks and newspapers such as The New York Times and The Washington Post.

"Nader and Buchanan have made some pretty outrageous statements. Those get news," said Bill Wilder, a Libertarian candidate for Brazos County commissioner. "Libertarians stay out of that stuff -- that's why we don't get news."

The party's success in overcoming these challenges was also addressed at the forum. Currently, more than 300 Libertarians hold public office at the local and state levels. Congressman Ron Paul was elected on a Republican ticket but now serves as a Libertarian.

"This is why you can think of the Libertarian Party as the nation's third party," Lark said. "We hope to become the major party in the not-too-distant future."

The audience was supportive of the ideals and mottoes of the Libertarian Party, although some were interested mainly in breaking away from the establishment.

"I'm sick of the two-party system," said Chris Langford, a senior political science and sociology major. "The Democrats and Republicans get all of the media attention and I believe it's destructive to democracy. I don't necessarily agree with (the Libertarian Party), but I'm here to show my support."

Meanwhile, local support for the party is increasing. Chris Jagge, chairman of the Brazos County Libertarian Party and a technician with the entomology department, said he is interested in representing an alternative political view and is pleased that the local contingent is not ignored. Aggie Libertarians, the on-campus group, was founded in 1998 and now has several dozen regular participants.

"We are here to educate about true freedom and true diversity," said Stephanie Berlin, president of Aggie Libertarians, secretary for the Texas Libertarian Party and a sophomore genetics and biochemistry major.

Write for News

www.dailycollegian.com just blasted off!

Check it out kids!

FORWARD THINKING

"That's New England School of Law, since the first day we opened our doors. We were the only law school ever established exclusively for women. Today we continue to open doors for both men and women with innovative and relevant programs including the War Crimes Prosecution Project, opportunities for overseas study, a business law center and coursework that includes Internet Law. Looking to the future is what we've always done."

Michael Scharf, Professor
Director, Center for International Law & Policy
J.D. Duke University School of Law

New England School of Law
154 Stuart Street
Boston, MA 02116
(617) 422-7210
admit@admin.nesl.edu
www.nesl.edu

ABA-accredited Member of the Association of American Law Schools

SEE US AT THE STUDENT UNION BALLROOM OCT. 25, 10 A.M.-3 P.M.

YOU YOU YOU YOU YOU
+21/4 +25/8 +3 +37/8

Nobody's ever lost investing in themselves.

You'll probably make yourself crazy trying to guess the next big thing in the market. Instead, make yourself the next big thing in the job market by getting a post-graduate degree from the Beaver College Graduate Program. It's the closest thing you'll find to a guaranteed investment.

Right now, Beaver College is offering programs leading to the D.P.T. in Physical Therapy, the MS in Physician Assistant Studies, the MS in Genetic Counseling, and the MA in International Peace and Conflict Resolution. Your degree from Beaver College puts you at the very pinnacle of the talent market in these fields. It tells your present and potential employer just how valuable you can be to the organization.

Everybody's trying to figure out how to make money. How about learning more, doing more, and getting paid more for it? Call the Beaver College Graduate Program and talk with a personal counselor today. After you get your degree, you can play the market with the extra money you'll be making.

Beaver College

1-888-BEAVER-3 (1-888-232-8373)
www.beaver.edu

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Use the surplus everywhere possible

President Bill Clinton unveiled a $237 billion surplus yesterday and asked that at least some of it be used to repair schools across the United States.

The surplus, perhaps the single biggest issue in this year's election, has divided Republicans and Democrats and specifically presidential candidates George W. Bush and Al Gore. Bush wants to use the money on what could be, ultimately, incredible irresponsible across the board tax cuts that will most likely benefit the rich. Gore wants to use money to pay down the national debt and make smaller, class specific tax cuts.

Of course, give any three politicians $237 billion surplus and they're going to give wildly different ways to use that money, but in this case, It is Clinton who has the best idea.

Rather than use the money as a political play piece, he's proposing a reasonable and responsible use for this massive amount of money that the nation now has. Repairing America's decrepit schools will take a serious amount of cash, the kind that is readily available with the surplus.

But the money shouldn't just be used to repair what's old, it needs to be used in other responsible ways. Tax cuts are great, but not for the rich and certainly not for the super rich. Likewise, paying down the debt is an important use, but what of the rest of the money? Where should it be spent?

Use the money to fund homeless shelters that lack money. Help those people that more often than not seem to be simply forgotten, lost in the proverbial shuffle of booming dot-coms and increased salaries.

Fund pay raises for our teachers who work so hard and yet get so little in return. That we trust people to be almost surrogate parents to children and yet pay them as if they're nothing more than the hired help is an out and out embarrassment.

Develop new and interesting ways to fight the drug problem; save money on a failing drug war and pay for shelters and treatment center. We prove nothing by jailing users and letting them rot.

Spend money on our universities that lack necessary funds. Use the funds to create the building blocks of universal health care. Pour money into the financial aid programs and ensure that more of our students can go to the college or university of his or her choosing.

Make this country better: our government, well known for its ineptitude, has finally done enough right to save money. Why waste it on a nationwide tax cut or entirely on paying down the debt; let's hope our politicians can find the sort of middle ground that truly benefits the citizens of this country.

Anything less would be continued proof that our government's ineptitude is creating a serious problem. If the government can't use that surplus wisely, and that doesn't include a massive rich-friendly tax cut, whom exactly have we chosen to put in office? Leaders who care more about their political future than the well-being of the American citizens are of no benefit to anyone.

This surplus is their opportunity to not only commit to a solid proposal by Clinton, but to also propose their own spending ideas that benefit the people of this nation, not their political well-being.

Say my name, say my name

"Hi, what's your name?"
"Hey, I'm Dana."
"What?"
"Dana."
After a long, blank stare, I repeat "Da-na."
"Nice to meet you, Dan."

This is the way the majority of my introductions seem to turn out. If there is one thing that I have learned over the course of the past 20 years, it is that I have a truly original and unusual name. Do I look like maybe I should have a common name or something? It's not like the name "Dana" is completely alien by any means, but at the same time, it does seem to surprise most people when I tell them to call me that.

For one thing, my last name is Oppedisano. It's a Polish name. Nah, I'm just playing. I'm Italian through and through, and my first name isn't exactly straight out of the "Old Country." With a last name like mine, I think most people expect me to have a purely Ginzo name like Guisseppe or Mario or Antonio. From the beginning though, my mother was against me bearing the name of any character in "The Godfather," although I think if it was up to my father, the birth certificate would have turned out a lot different than it did so many years ago.

Here's the deal: the doctors, utilizing their late 70's technological wizardry, told my parents that they had a little girl on the way. When I popped out with three legs (instead of two), it totally screwed up their plans to name me Jessica or Kristen or any of the other totally unoriginal girl's names that I encounter on a daily basis. (I actually think that they wanted to name me Angela, in which case I could be writing this column today about how much I hate my name.) Unable to come up with a unique name that seemed to please everyone, two or three days passed before my Aunt Francesca made her fateful visit to my mother's hospital bed.

She suggested the name "Dana." It was even more uncommon then than it is now, and for whatever the reason, it seemed to strike a chord with my parents. They finally agreed on the not-so Italian first name, and said the hell with a middle name. So here I am, 20 years later, Dana Oppedisano.

Putting the ethnic thing aside, I also think that most people are quick to classify Dana as a girl's name. For everyone's information, the name can be both a girl and a boy's name, although I will concede that the majority of people I come across bearing the same name as mine happen to be of the opposite sex. A personal trainer at the gym I work out at has the name Dana, and she was shocked to hear that we had something in common. "Wow," she says. "I have never met a guy with the name Dana." That's great honey, now shut up. A little research has taught me that my name is, in fact, the feminine form of "Daniel," (but it CAN be masculine, damn it!), and that it means "God is my judge" in Hebrew.

Okay, so having a chick's name can be kind of a drawback, but there have been a handful of popular Danas over the years to help boost my self-esteem. First and foremost, there is Hip-Hop Icon Dana Dane, who has been described as "the Kangol sporting, Designer frame wearing, rapper, entertainer, storytelling, poet...Master of Ceremonies" by The Source magazine. This dude was rocking Gucci and big pimpin' long before anyone else in the music industry was, and you can bet your ass that from about 1988 to 1992 I heard "what up Dana Dane?" about 14 times a day. I occasionally hear the Dana Dane reference today, but I admit that it's died off a bit since he dropped off the face of the planet around 1995. (No disrespect to D, wherever he may be.)

There was former Boston College and NBA star Dana Barros, who for a time was one of the NBA's best point guards. The guy won Most Improved Player in '94-'95 when he was dropping' 20.6 points and 7.5 dimes a night with the Sixers, including a 50-point performance against Houston. Of course, he, too, fell victim to the Boston sports organizations' curse of signing a nasty player who comes to Beantown to turn into a bum (hello Kevin Stevens, Dominique Wilkins, and does anyone remember the '95 Red Sox "No Way Jose" pronto?) For a time though, Dana Barros was the man, and I was sporting my number 11 Celtics jersey with everybody else. I think the guy just got traded to Detroit last week (this third team in about two months), so time will only tell if he has already gone the route of Dana Dane.

There have been a few other pretty cool Danas over the years. Anyone from the Boston area might recognize the name of former middleweight boxing champ "Dangerous" Dana Rosenblatt, or Dana Carvey from "SNL" ("Party on, Garth.") Sigourney Weaver's character from "Ghostbusters" was named Dana, and she was pretty hot. At least, until she transformed into Zuul, the gate keeper dog who tries to kill Bill Murray (Let me clarify here for my boy Edmunds- -when she is the actual dog creature, not the possessed turbo woman.) The hot brunette vampire slayer from "Buffy" played Arnold Schwarzenegger's daughter Dana in that movie "True Lies." Although I must admit that hearing Arnold frantically yell my name in the theater kind of freaked me out.

I like my name. I really do. I know that I would rather have a unique name that stands out instead of being just another Mike, or John, or God I hate it- Dan. In fact, I'll just say it--those names suck. I know it's only my opinion--and the opinion of a guy with a girl's name, to boot--but I'm sure if you do have a common name, you already realize that it sucks. I do realize that not everyone can have a great name like, say, NASCAR's Dick Trickle, or Alf's Melmackian moniker Gordon Schumway, or anywhere close to the level of porn icon T.T. Boy, but at least everywhere I turn I'm not bumping into other Danas. No one who knows me has ever asked, "which Dana are you talking about?"

You know what would be cool, though? If people could just adopt whatever name they desire when they hit a certain age, say around 18. We could all select names that reflect our personalities, like the Seven Dwarfs did. Although, who would I be? Horny? Or maybe we could have cool aliases like in "Reservoir Dogs." Although Mr. Pink (he wanted "Mr. Purple") and Mr. Brown ("That sounds too much like Mr. Shit.") found fault with that system, as I'm sure the rest of us would.

Okay, so I got teased a little when I was growing up, and I swear to God that I am not exaggerating when I say that around 80% of the people I meet call me "Dan" a couple of times before they finally get it right. Seriously though, what's in a name? It is nothing but a word we use to get someone's attention, or to make a reference to him or her. You certainly don't form your opinion on a person based on their name, so at least I can say that I most likely will never be confused with another Dana (largely because I don't know any). A search of the UMass directory says that there are 40 of us walking around campus, so as the only Dana with a column in the Collegian, allow me to tell the other 39 of you that your name really does kick ass.

Dana Oppedisano is a Collegian columnist.

Termi-Nader

BENJAMIN RIVARD-RAPOZA

Ralph Nader is an intelligent and often insightful politician. That's a claim that's hard to dispute. But it is Nader's title of "consumer advocate" that I believe is completely undeserved. On many of the most important issues of our day, Nader does not support the rights of consumers at all.

For health care, Nader supports a single payer system. Right away, this language should alarm any consumer. After all, whoever this single payer is will also end up being the single controller.

So who or what is this, "single payer"? Our federal government. Now there is certainly a huge debate about whether socialized medicine is the superior system its proponents claim it to be. But even if Nader happens to have devised the most economically efficient health-care system known to man, it will still be anti-consumer.

Under government healthcare, if a particular procedure is not covered, then the patient is pretty much out of luck. If the consumer dislikes his health care for any reason, long lines, high costs, poor services, he or she has no where to go.

Nader is right to say that a health care system is anti-consumer. But his alternative does not empower consumers, but instead, government like HMO's? Ralph Nader promises to give us one big mother of an HMO. And it doesn't end there. This is an HMO with a social policy and a political agenda. The mere sound of that is enough to make this consumer sick.

Social security is another example of governmental social service that denies consumers any freedom of choice. What does Nader think about Social Security? "Social Security is a tremendous success story," he says.

Now, before I explain how much of a consumer rip-off I think Social Security is I will qualify my comments by acknowledging that Social Security has helped many people. But that doesn't make it the best policy. If the government breaks someone's leg, you don't praise it for giving the person a crutch.

Dave Barry said it best when he described Social Security as a system, "wherein you add your name to the bottom of a list, then you send some money to the person at the top of the list." Social Security is a pyramid scheme, not a retirement fund. Our money is not saved, but rather given to those at the top of the pyramid, which is what makes this a "scheme" that is illegal for private companies to take part in.

Libertarian Party presidential candidate Harry Browne has the best solution: let people save and invest for their own retirement. Not only would that return be much better than Social Security, but people would enjoy the added security that comes with the legal right to their own retirement money, which would be inherited by the family when the person dies.

Ralph Nader has made some insightful criticisms of big business. But his alternative to big business, big government, isn't exactly an improvement.

Harry Browne would reform the Social Security and healthcare systems to allow consumers to purchase the services they want. I can hear the Nader, Gore and Bush people howling right now, "that's not a plan!" That's right. Harry Browne doesn't have any "master plan" which he thinks is perfect for everyone in the country, nor does he pretend that such a magical plan exists either.

As Harry Browne says, "I don't believe that I am capable of running your life. I believe only you best know how to run your life." As a crusader against big business, Nader compares himself with the colonial patriots who fought the tyrant King George III. Businesses may be powerful, but power pales in comparison to the control over our lives Nader wants to give the government.

Only Harry Browne resists the temptation to offer Americans what he thinks is the "perfect program" that will give anyone what they want. Browne wants to let consumers be the decision makers when it comes to what affects their lives.

Nader, on the other hand, is just the same as Bush and Gore--another man who would be king.

Benjamin Rivard-Rapoza is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor
Your Opinion: Recycling, political cartoons and the elections

To the editor:

The Office of Waste Management (OWM) very much appreciates the editorial you ran on recycling yesterday. It's the first such editorial in my nearly 4 years here. We've got our own theories (with a varying ability to sell their used books to other students at a reasonable price. I have tried the beloved fliers to try to get my books used and it was a hassle. Either the book was sold or it was extremely hard to get in contact with the person selling the book.

What I am putting out to the student body is an idea I have been slowly starting to work on this semester and that is a book swap. The book swap is a non-profit facility where students sell their used books to other students for a better price than they would get from the Annex. In turn this would provide opportunities for students to save money when they buy their books in the Spring because they would be cheaper then the Textbook Annex. The Book swap is not intending on taking business away from the textbook annex, it is just a facility for the students to make just a little extra money off the Sociology Book they will never use again. I feel it is a win-win situation.

Sarah Brumfield and Matt Bolus
UMass students

To the editor,

I am writing as a representative of the Jewish Student Union in response to the political cartoon in the October 18th edition of the Collegian. As a member of the Jewish community, I was outraged and disgusted by the inclusion of this, "cartoon." I felt that it was extremely inappropriate to be in a newspaper that is supposed to provide an accurate portrayal of current events.

Our interpretation of this is that it is an incorrect statement of Israel's involvement in the Middle East conflict. The picture of an Israeli soldier being characterized as a killer of kids cannot be interpreted any other way than as saying that Israel's force is cruel, unfair, unprovoked, and aimed at the vulnerable.

Not only is this picture inaccurate, but it is extremely offensive. It paints an intolerant and biased picture. I understand that it Is an opinion. However, this has only added to the erroneous, one-sided depiction of the conflict and added fuel to the fire.

I am in no way saying that every action Israel takes is right and deserved. However, I do feel there is another side to the story that is not being told. As long as this conflict continues, which will hopefully not be much longer, I would hope that the events will be examined from both points of view. And I expect that Israel and the Jewish community will no longer be the victims of inaccuracy or prejudice.

Rebecca Russell
Jewish Student Union

To the editor:

The Collegian has recently published some articles about the presidential elections; in particular, there have been a lot of pieces about not voting. One student wrote that she hated both Bush and Gore so she wasn't going to vote at all. A lot of young people say they dislike the system and refuse to conform to it with their vote. This isn't the way to change the system. Politicians are glad students don't vote because then they don't have to address the issues. As a Georgian Senator said, "Students don't vote. You expect me to come in here and kiss your ass?"

-It's okay if you don't want to vote for Bush or Gore. Vote for a third party candidate, Buchanan, Nader, or Browne. Your vote will mean more here than toward either Gore or Bush because you'll be showing the demand for an alternative. Or if you don't like any of them, that's okay too. Don't vote for president. But there are a lot of questions on this year's ballot that you need to make the student voice heard on. There's a proposed tax cut that would reduce social programs. There's a plan for universal healthcare in Massachusetts. Your vote does count because it's showing politicians that students are voting, they are paying attention, and they are acting.

-Our age group does the most volunteering and community service ever. We're doing awesome work. But if we don't vote who's going to stop polluters from destroying the rivers we have cleaned or the homeless we've fed? Whether or not you like the system, it runs your life, the only power we have over it is the vote.

-Go out and vote on Tuesday, Nov. 7. Voting is the only way we're going to get the system to recognize that young people exist.

Laura Kyser
UMass

To the Editor:

As we approach the November Presidential elections, chatter of who the better candidate is and the media attention both grow. All of a sudden, citizens of this country watch their TV to get the facts right about their top candidate and his opponent just so they have some information to use in their daily debates at work the next day. The past few weeks, I have seen quite a bit of political interest in students here at UMass, and I have also seen plenty of disinterest. I recently received a form to fill out to register to vote and I know that most other students are already registered or being asked to register through the mail. Although a lot of college students try to remember to register, many forget to complete the process and do so.

Those people that do vote are the minority. Less than 50% of 18-20 year old citizens register to vote. College-aged adults in our country do not vote, for the most part. Only 30% of 18-20 year olds vote in federal elections. This is the lowest of all age groups and it has been the same for many years. It will never change. This is due to the fact that apathy plays a major role in a students' decision of whether or not to vote. In the past weeks, amid the many debates and arguments, I have also heard of many people saying they will not vote. I asked some of these people what their reason was for not voting and I got mixed responses. About half said that they 'don't care' and the other half said that they had no business voting. At first, I did not know what they meant exactly, but after listening to a few political debates between peers, I realized that I had no reason to vote either. I have no reason to vote because I really don't know enough about the candidates to choose who I want to become our next President. The only thing I know about Al Gore is that he is a Democrat and is currently our Vice President. I also know very little about George W. Bush. His father was a President a few years back and he is a Republican.

Some people may argue with me and say that it is not just a right to vote in the United States, but a responsibility. Yes, they are right. I am supposed to vote, but why vote when I know that I just picked a name, or my friend told me to vote for a certain person for some stupid reason, just for the hell of saying that I voted? According to what I believe in, voting without being educated about the candidates would be more irresponsible than not voting at all. Being responsible would involve deciding whether or not the information you have is enough to decide which candidate is best for this country. I am definitely not saying young people shouldn't vote, because young people should vote for someone to represent them in their town, state, or country, but they shouldn't "guess" who they think would be the best representative. The only way someone should let themselves vote is if they have been well-informed through media (radio, television, and internet), official political debates between the candidates, and through informal discussions with peers and knowledgeable political enthusiasts.

One may ask why someone would not make an attempt to get informed to make a decision to vote. Well, college students, for the most part, are educated in politics, but some people who do not go to college, or the college students that are just too busy to follow politics (I fall into this category), tend to forget about the importance of our government. Maybe I won't vote this year, but if I get around to it next year, I will be totally informed of the issues and/or candidates and be casting my ballot.

Sebastian Leclerc
Northeast

What Is This Page?

Black Affairs has always been the most high-profile diversity page in The Collegian. With that, it is also the one that comes with the most controversy both in and out of the black community. Where some peeps give the page props others are very critical of the content and demand a better page. The feedback received so far this semester covers the whole spectrum and is always constructive. But many the main question people always ask is, what is the Black Affairs page?

First and foremost, this page is a forum where the African-Americans of UMass can speak about anything they want to. There is no other apparatus on campus for this to happen. We can talk about anything and everything that affects us. It does not even matter if those outside of our community understand or care about what we are saying But what about Ed/Op? Ed/Op does seek the black know's me has ever asked, "which Dana are you talking about?"

You know what would be cool, though? If people could just adopt whatever name they desire when they hit a certain age, say around 18. We could all select names that reflect our personalities, like the Seven Dwarfs did. Although, who would I be? Horny? Or maybe we could have cool aliases like in "Reservoir Dogs." Although Mr. Pink (he wanted "Mr. Purple") and Mr. Brown ("That sounds too much like Mr. Shit.") found fault with that system, as I'm sure the rest of us would.

Okay, so I got teased a little when I was growing up, and I swear to God that I am not exaggerating when I say that around 80% of the people I meet call me "Dan" a couple of times before they finally get it right. Seriously though, what's in a name? It is nothing but a word we use to get someone's attention, or to make a reference to him or her. You certainly don't form your opinion on a person based on their name, so at least I can say that I most likely will never be confused with another Dana (largely because I don't know any). A search of the UMass directory says that there are 40 of us walking around campus, so as the only Dana with a column in the Collegian, allow me to tell the other 39 of you that your name really does kick ass.

Dana Oppedisano is a Collegian columnist.

Dame Grease teams up with DMX

By Shon Bell
Priority Press

Some stars are born. Others are created. Either way, Dame Grease transforms potential into reality. The Harlem-raised producer worked with such artists as DMX, LOX and Noreaga while they were in their nascent stages, helping to make them the stars they are today.

On Grease's Live on Lenox Soundtrack, the first release from Grease's Vacant Lot Productions, DMX, Noreaga, Scarface, Memphis Bleek, Drag-On and others give back to the man whose mark on hip-hop had been significant and undeniable. But, as the case with Grease's distinct production, there's also a twist. He didn't want the artists to deliver the expected. "I didn't want them to do what they'd always done," Grease reveals. "I wanted to capture the raw part of each of the artists. I didn't concentrate on needing a single, because I wanted to concentrate on the raw talent of the artist. Each of the artists that's on there will make you think like you did the first time that you heard them."

COURTESY OF JONATHAN MANNION- PRIORITY RECORDS NYC

DMX, for example, rips "The Future" with the type of searing hunger and desire normally absent from multi-platinum stars, while Scarface literally drops lyrical bombs on the explosive "Nigga Haters." "Face is going crazy on 'Nigga Haters'," Grease observes. "Everybody that hears it says that he got a little frustration off on that song." But the album isn't all over-the -top adrenaline. Silkk the Shocker demonstrates a controlled, confident flow on the mid-tempo "Vacant Lot Gone No Limit," which features H.O.T. Ones and Imont Montane, two artists on Vacant Lot Productions.

Silkk opens the song with a pledge of unity to Vacant Lot, proving that he sounds like a star when rapping over New York production. "Everybody has told me that that's the best that Silkk the Shocker has ever sounded," Grease says. "Silkk killed it. He's a cool cat and he makes hot (music). When we first hookt up at Priority, I was telling him about my album and how I'd be happy to have him on it. He was with it, especially after he heard the track."

The same can be said with "I'm That Nigga," which features Vacant Lot signee, Meeno. Originally recorded for Meeno's forthcoming debut album, the song was a late edition to Live On Lenox. Grease felt the song's music fit the album's concept, while he was blown away by Meeno's powerful performance. "Meeno knows what he wants to do and that's what makes him tight," Grease says. "He's not just going to say anything, just to fill in the blank to make something sound hot. He's actually a lyricist who thinks before he writes, he actually thought about it. Plus, his shit is just powerful. His voice is mad demanding, in your ear. It's something that you'll never forget or mistake."

Another song that you'll never forget is the soul stirring "Never Thought", which features Tony Whit, Meeno, and Baby Mad Is On. Each rapper gives listeners a glimpse into their personal struggle to survive and succeed in life. "It's the most meaningful song on the album", Grease reveals of the cut, which is his favorite song from the album. "I call it a healing. It's almost like 2Pac's shit. When you throw it on, it will get you back on path."

Grease's vision enables the up-and coming artists to stand as equals with such veterans as Scarface and Silkk the Shocker on the album. There's no denying that Grease has as much confidence in these artists as he does any other million-selling artists featured on Live On Lenox. "I know what's hot and my dogs are fire," Grease says. "Each nigga that I've got on my album, you're never, ever going to hear anybody that spits like that. When I choose artists, I choose distinctive artists. My artists are straight original and I think it was good to my artists in mix with the big dogs. Niggas know how to rhyme."

Born in the Bronx and raised in Harlem, Grease grew up an soul people that knew how to rhyme. He also came of age among those who worship the streets. Even though New Yorkers known as "the city that never sleeps, Harlem can be considered the race track of the big Apple. It's the place where the streets raise children more than some parents do." Grease was one of these children. By the time he was thirteen, he was emerged in the way of the streets Before his teenage years passed, he had had only a cursory relationship hip-hop. That changed once he was exposed to artists who reflected the reality he was experiencing. "Before gangster rap, I never listened to music," explains Grease, who was drawn to the work of NWA and Ice Tea. "It never had any relation to me. I didn't start buying shit until I started hearing people talk about what people were doing on the streets." But Grease was also drawn to the chaotic sounds of such producers as the Bomb Squad, Dr. Dre and later Evil D. Grease craved the gutter sound and wanted to make his music a distinct version of hard core.

Like many other kids in Harlem Grease used to observe his neighborhood friends make music. But where others would simply watch, Grease studied. He formed the group NJB with some friends, with the goal of delivering better raps than those they heard in their community, as well as on the radio. His goals quickly changed, once he discovered production. "It just happened," he says of getting into beat making. "I did have a lust or a dream for music. It would be like if you were just sitting there one day and saw some scribbling and you scribbled out a picture of Mona Lisa. I just found out that music was just something that was a part of me."

Soon thereafter, he was producing DMX's "Let me fly," from DMX's triple-platinum debut album, 1998's It's Dark and All is Hot, the Lox's "will always love Big Poppa," from the group's platinum debut album, 1998's Money, Power & Respect; and Nas' "Some Of Us Have Angels" from the Queen's icon's second platinum album of 1999 Nastradamus. Grease also expanded his horizons in 1999 by recording "Juxtapose" with Tricky and Mugs.

Now, however, Grease is focused on making his Vacant Lot Productions into an industry powerhouse. In 2001, he will release albums from Meeno, H.O.T. Ones, and NJB Untouchables, as well as a Live On Lenox documentary that should make Vacant Lots one of hip-hop's hottest properties. "Vacant Lot is me coming back after I've been successful and finishing up what the whole shit was about," Grease says. "It's my view, my vision."

Top Tens

Hello everyone! As you all can see somebody done bumped their head and gave me a column, and I will take full advantage of it to voice my opinions on any subject I deem necessary. Sometimes it will be serious sometimes it won't So be prepared for whatever comes to my warped mind.

Top Ten Reasons Why I'm Mad: TENEKA MILLER

10. I'm mad that R. Kelly says, " Come on and braid my hair" repeatedly at the end of his new song "I Wish."

9. I'm mad that various rap artists have to continuously be let out on bail to attend their own album signings.

8. I'm mad that Ms. Cleo, the bootleg physic, is all over Tv making money with her fake ass Jamaican accent.

7. I'm mad that white girls are now rocking extensions like they are brand new without giving credit where credit is due.

6. I'm also mad that when black people discard their old styles, white people take them and act like it was all their idea. Ex. the name/plate/belt chain and earrings has made the jump form the ghetto to Hollywood and can be seen on everyone from Madonna to Sarah Jessica Parker on Sex and the City.

5. I'm mad at heads that stand on the corner and smoke and roll dice all day and then say that the white man is holding them down.

4. I'm mad at fake ass people that smile all up in your face and then talk about you like trash behind your back. Why smile? Be up front with your shadiness.

3. I'm mad that guys who have sex with hoes only consider the girls to be dirty. They weren't whoring by themselves you know.

2. I'm mad that people come here and act like somebody I've got to tell them they are now in college. This is the University of Massachusetts- not I'm Tuff High.

1. I'm mad at heads that know that they are truly wack at heart, yet come to Amherst and are suddenly transformed into Super Drugs. Knowing that when they go home they will be yanked by even the mailman.

Top Ten Things That Make You Say Wow

10. A 300-pound girl in spandex.....wwwww

9. A rimmed out 1987 Pinto.....wwwww

8. A Kia with a bangin' system.....wwwww

7. White Capri's in thirty-degree weather.....wwwww

6. People walking to the brats with no jackets on when it's like 20 degrees outside.....wwwww

5. People talking on cell phones while riding bicycles.....wwwww (I myself committed this act once).

4 19 year old guys with four kids from four different momma's that say they are still trying to find wife.....wwwww

3. 19 year old guys with four kids from four different momma's who get offended when you ask them if anyone ever instructed them on the proper use of a condom.....wwwww

2. A person, guy or girl, with an excessively large head and cornrows.....wwwww

1. A white dude who religiously rocks a wave cap.....wwwww

Teneka Miller is a Collegian columnist.

VOTE FOR THE BEST OF Y2G

Vote for you favorite

Song

TV Show

Movie

Album

At BlackAffairs @yahoo.com (results coming soon)

Be Part of the Revolution

Write for Black Affairs

Contact Lenny at BlackAffairs @yahoo.com

Rule's new album absolutely rules

Ja Rule
Rule 3:36
Murder Inc./Def Jam

Lenny Holston
Collegian Staff

To the uninitiated he sounds like DMX but to those who know what's up, he is better. Ja Rule do a superb job of dodging the sophomore jinks with his latest opus, the slightly uneven Rule 3:36. And while the album title may suggest something biblical, 3:36 is filled with sin from intro to outro. But unlike many rappers today, Ja makes all of the clichés of sex, drugs, and murder entertaining.

Unless you have been living under a rock (or western Massachusetts) for the past couple of months, you have heard the first single, the blazing "between Me and You." In this ode to infidelity, Ja's trademark sing-songy flow is hot to def in this his hottest joint yet. "Put It On Me" has Ja spitting with fellow murderer Vita. Though this is a blatant radio jam you cannot help but bob your head to this infectious ear candy.

But Mr. Rule gets serious in "Love Me, Hate Me" which he touches on a common theme to him-talking about his own death with lyrics like "I might O.D. off drugs/in a club like River Phoenix/ or get shot down like Big and Pac for my genius." In with the angry "6 Feet Underground" he tells us that he "be wearing guns tighter than gloves/ with special 38 slugs/ so we don't end up 6 feet underground." But on occasion, with all of its demon talk, this track could easily be mistaken for a DMX song.

There is more identity crises for The Rule in "I Cry" featuring Lil' Mo. Here we find our hero sounding like 2Pac. In what can only be called a worse sequel to "Keep Ya Head Up" than Pac's own posthumous "Keep Ya Head Up Part 2."

"Ecstasy" is very likely one of the most curious rap songs in a minute. Tah Murdah, Black Child, and Jayo Felony help Ja out in a track that can only be described as techno meets hip-hop meets disco. Whatever it is supposed to be, it comes off surprisingly well and will be remembered as one of the first rap tunes to celebrate the use of X in the hip-hop world. 3:36 hits us with another experiment in a the Joan Osborne-inspired "One of Us." This is a track that should fail but succeeds by having God living in the hood and busting slugs.

Rule 3:36 is a testament to producer Irv Gotti who has a hand on every track. Awkward at times, the album's highlights make you forgive the few bad points. Ja Rule's flow alone enthralls even when he drifts into played-out territory. Definitely cop this one, thou will enjoyth.

Lenny Holston is a Collegian staff member.

Is there a sense of Black community on campus?

Janelle Butler
Senior
Wheeler Hall
Education

"To me, the community seems strong through many RSO's available."

Justin Provencher
Freshman
Orchard Hill
History

"There's a lack of diversity in some areas on campus, especially Orchard Hill. All that you see is white people."

Akin Ogunsemore and Amy Zagami
Sophomores
Southwest
Biology and Political Science

"No, I find that a lot of blacks aren't very friendly. When I was freshman I was trying to be friendly and got negative and funny looks."

Michael Whitehouse
Junior
Commuter Economics

"I really wouldn't know. Orchard Hill isn't really diverse. I'm in the Honors College and I wish there were more minorities in it."

Stephane Paduy
Freshman
Orchard Hill
Computer Engineering

"Yes, we think everyone's friendly and friendly to us."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

Wednesday, October 25, 2000 6

Arts Editor •
Ryan Benharris
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Limp, Eminem take misogynist anger to boiling point

ANGER MANAGEMENT TOUR
Limp Bizkit, Eminem, Papa Roach and Xzibit
Worcester Centrum
Oct. 23

By Ryan Benharris and Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER – A proud young man raised amidst an anger induced coma for 15,000 members of his generation. While on his deathbed, the unidentified man muttered something he wanted. Was it whales? maybe. Or "End the Internet" perhaps. Instead, he just pulled down his pants and showed 15,000 members of his audience his penis. The crowd then laughed.

The Anger Management Tour brought one of the most recognizable hip-hop names in music with most noticeable Limp Bizkit and Eminem. Without even trying, Xzibit proved to be an outstanding example of the kinds of people who listen to this music and where this is coming from. The promoters of the tour did an excellent job, mixing rap and rock. It began with Xzibit and Papa Roach and culminated with Eminem and Limp Bizkit. All four acts played their own set. Even with headlining act Limp Bizkit there is a blurred line of participants when trying to figure out what kind of music they actually classify themselves as.

Though the show was filled with incredibly chauvinistic messages and sometimes-scary images and acts, there was no hiding the incredible stage performance by the two headlining acts.

Eminem entered the arena through the floor, wearing the hockey mask from the film Friday the 13th, fully equipped with a chainsaw. The stage was nothing short of spectacular. Not withholding anything, he brought the entire house pictured on the front of his new album.

Later on in his set, he took a ten-minute break to transform the house into an enormous castle. This time he arrived through the floor sitting on an electric chair. After acting out an execution of himself, he busted into "Criminal" from the new album. When he rose through the stage he ignited the already fueled audience who earlier absorbed the rhyme of Xzibit and the rock of Papa Roach.

Eminem pulled no punches performing songs from both the Slim Shady LP and the recently released Marshall Mathers LP. Refusing to sing "My Name Is," he asked the crowd "What's my name?" When they were positive that he was to play the first single that gained him recognition he surprised the crowd by playing "Marshall Mathers" instead. He played other songs from The Slim Shady LP including "Role Model," and "Don't Give A Fuck." Everything else came from his new album The Marshall Mathers LP. It was very noticeable that Eminem seemed to never finish a song. He stopped in the middle of "Stan," "The Way I Am," and several others to begin preaching about his pathetic life, or to start a new track.

Eminem delivered the kind of sass and disillusionment his fans have come to expect at the Worcester Centrum Monday night.

Song after song, Eminem continued to excite the crowd and introduced a group of rappers whom he put together called D12. Working toward the crowd, Slim not only told the audience how pissed off he was but also about one of his many court cases pending, much to their delight.

He had an entire skit where he claimed to be taking the drug Ecstasy, while chasing it with Bacardi. Though the army of fifteen year-olds in the crowd yelled "Slim's doing ecstasy," it was very apparent that Slim was doing nothing more than a tic-tac. He probably washed that down with the Adam Sandler special "Scotch and water. Hold the scotch." Most of the show concentrated on his plugs for himself, D12, and Xzibit. He left the audience of mostly college aged students and high school kids with their mothers smoldering but hot enough to combust when Limp Bizkit came out.

The predominantly male crowd in attendance for Limp Bizkit looked like they walked straight out of the video for "Nookie." Every single fan was identical. There were enough red hats to give a Spanish bull a heart attack. The stage was simply the most elaborate structure every built in the history of music. A sixty-foot robot, with laser firing eyes and rocket launching flame mechanisms of doom towered over lead singer Fred Durst and his band.

Like pouring high octane on a lit bonfire, Limp Bizkit appeared out of the chest of a sixty-foot anime styled robot. Starting with "Hot Dog" from Chocolate Starfish and the Hotdog Flavored Water, he "wasn't stopping till the sun came up." He performed "My Generation," "Rollin," "Take a Look Around," "Full Nelson." He also played "Get Your Groove On" with Xzibit. Limp gave electrifying performances of "Break Stuff" and "Nookie" from last year's extremely popular Significant Other.

Though it was musically excellent, Anger Management Tour had some very scary occurrences that could have easily resulted in riot or serious injury. The disgusting display of anti-woman misogyny was enough to make one sick. However, if you went to this show to be stunned by amazing performance and heart stopping energy you would be dead.

COURTESY MICHAEL STITCH

Pops goes UMass

Keith Lockhart brings the Boston Pops Orchestra to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Oct. 28 at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at 545-2511.

MTV's "Uncensored" absence of creativity

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

One of the problems with media organizations that have, at some point in their careers, done well is that they later have a tendency to pat themselves on the back for it. Perfect example: MTV's recent episode "Uncensored" about itself.

A supposedly news driven show, "Uncensored" deteriorated into a self-congratulatory pat on the back for MTV employees, an opportunity for Serena Altschul to spend two hours talking about all of the ways in which Music Television is positively amazing.

They have a wacky set of interns.

They have a really spiffy cafeteria.

They have a brand new set in downtown Manhattan.

They have a news division.

On and on and on, yet no real mention of the fact that the one key thing that MTV currently lacks is new and exciting programming. Instead of creating new hit-or-miss shows, they're producing miss shows and relying on recent USA import WWE Heat to improve its station. And that's just part of the problem: rather than create trends, which Altschul, Kurt Loder, John Norris and other MTV names and faces maintained that the station has done, they are now importing currently hip things. It's a matter of creativity.

And creativity is what the network is absolutely lacking.

Don't tell that to the people at MTV though; all viewers got from them is continued complimentary behavior from "Uncensored" where the following egregious claims were made.

Altschul claimed creative programming, pointing to the old-staple Liquid Television as an example of the radical kind of programming that MTV has. Wrong. They had radical programming like that, but then they canceled it; what could have been a great midnight to 2:00 a.m. Monday morning staple was, instead, canceled and now MTV relies on "Daria" to carry the animation torch for the network. "Daria" is a funny show; no doubt, but do they realize the irony that their primary animated character wouldn't even watch today's MTV?

Altschul also discussed "The Real World" and its importance and revolutionary design, ignoring the obvious fact that the show is no longer revolutionary — it's old and done and there's nothing left that makes it interesting. Ignoring the obvious fact that the show has nearly run out of cities (New York, Boston, London, Miami, New Orleans, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Hawaii) and has completely admitted that it lacks creativity. Rather than daring to try something new, (small town, mid-sized town, non-coastal town) the show will return to its roots in New York City for season 10. The shows are now all the same; people have the same problems, have the same fights, have the same pleasures, and film the same episodes, regardless of where the season takes place. And this is O.K. for programmers and network executives who refuse to think about what they're going to do to one of their franchise shows.

Meanwhile, the absolute franchise of the network, "Total Request Live," plays the same stale videos, features

Turn to MTV, page 7

All New. All Yours. All Free.
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T-shirt
Just another way in which MadAdz.com will hook you up.
No Brainer.
$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever, awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.
Live & Learn.
MadAdz.com hooked me up.
Your Classifieds Were Certainly Free.
No purchase necessary. Void where prohibited.

University of Massachusetts Department of Economics
presents
THE FIFTH PHILIP GAMBLE MEMORIAL LECTURE

Professor Barbara R. Bergmann
Senior Memeber, President Kennedy's Council of Economics Advisers
Professor Emerita of Economics at the University of Maryland and American University in Washington, DC
Author of The Economic Emergence of Women and Saving our Children From Poverty
The Future of Childcare
4:00 p.m. Thursday, October 26, 2000
Memorial Hall
Free and open to the public

The Campus Career Network,
UMass Alumni Association and the Sport Management Program present

The Annual Edwin M. Rossman Alumni Career Forum's

Sport Management
CAREER DAY PANEL

Wednesday, October 25, 2000
3:00-5:00pm
Campus Center, Room 174-76

Tim Hassett, MS '88
Assist.GM for Stadium Operations
New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority

Bob Flannery, BS' 90
General Manager
New Haven Ravens

Ellen Rennie, BS '96
Athlete Academic Advisor
University of Connecticut

Ann Reynolds, MS '96
Manager, Television Sales
ISL Sports Marketing

A (Breach) in the usual Pop

THE WALLFLOWERS
(Breach)
Interscope

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Wallflowers frontman and mastermind, Jakob Dylan does not merely embrace his organic rock influences on the band's third studio album, (Breach), he actually invites them to play on the record.

Elvis Costello, who contributes to "Murder 101," and Mike Campbell of Tom Petty's Heartbreakers both make appearances on the album. Borrowing from Costello's introspection and Tom Petty's sincerity, attention to detail in songwriting, and musical styling, Dylan arrives at something much more brooding and mellow than his previous efforts, including the pop masterpiece, 1996's quadruple platinum Bringing Down the Horse. He also arrives at arguably the best rock album of the year.

On the surface, the album's opening track, "Letters from the Wasteland," is another well-arranged Wallflower pop piece. However, listen to the urgency of the guitar hooks that drift in the background. Listen to how the verse/chorus arrangement suddenly becomes frenzied. Listen to how the chords become distorted. Most of all, listen to how Dylan sings about being alone and abandoned in a wasteland. "It may take two to tango/But boy, just one to let go." This is not your typical pop piece.

The album continues with "Hand Me Down," which uses an almost country-like guitar hook most bands would not dare experiment with. Dylan steps outside the mainstream here and tries things that other's simply would not. The result on this track is a particularly eerie ode to insecurity – almost a song of mourning.

(Breach) is intense and intimate: Dylan's attempt to find meaning in and extract it from small places. Even the title seems to indicate penetrating unexplored territory or making a breakthrough. It's great song writing with a musical maturity, sense of restraint and authenticity rarely seen by any band. Something simply rings true here.

The Wallflowers make a soulful return with (Breach).

COURTESY CHRISTOPHE RIBET

The rest of (Breach) is divided fairly evenly between the rock/pop anthems that fans have come to expect from the Wallflowers and more moody, acoustic efforts. One only has to look toward "Witness" ("Now lesson number one in homicide/Is emotional murder is no crime") and "Murder 101" to see that Dylan has abandoned simple love odes and childhood stories for weightier subject matter.

The bonus track "Babybird," captures the essence of Dylan's efforts perfectly as it drifts through open space like a fairy tale. It is charming and altogether halting, as if Dylan wants to rock you gently to sleep for the night. Still, the music-box like song is about overcoming isolation and disillusionment. Even here, Dylan searches for some place in the world.

"I've been Delivered," my favorite song on (Breach) follows a similar pattern. The song is simple enough, as an eight note synthetic effect runs through the background, but Dylan makes it a journey. The subtle percussions and good production add to the intricate tale. If it were possible to encapsulate experience in a song, Dylan has come remarkably close with a song worthy of his father.

The album's first single, "Sleepwalker," again combines a classic Dylan guitar hook with an energetic verse for another good clean pop song. At points of (Breach) such as this, where Dylan does not seem to have changed his musical styling much, his growth as a songwriter is quite evident.

He sings, "Maybe I could be the one they adored/That could be my reputation," and it's obvious that these are the things which have been occupying his mind. He has labored over these songs and crafted – I'm sure re-crafted them – until they have the right feel.

Compared to the last few tracks on the disc, "Some Flowers Bloom Dead," explodes with an unexpected charisma – unexpected because the lyrics don't merit the upbeat choruses. It seems like this is Dylan's attempt to prove he can still have fun with a song. This is not to say that I don't like the almost entirely acoustic "From Down Under"; on the contrary, I think the string-embellished tune is one of the more impressive, sincere and somber moments on the album. Dylan does not lose himself completely in introspection. He sees clearly where he has come from and (Breach) seems like his attempt to redefine both his music and his perspective.

In stepping back, becoming in a sense more traditional, he and the Wallflowers have admirably moved forward.

UMass volleyball prepares for battle; Rhody spikers host Maroon & White

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

It's a whole new ballgame.

The Massachusetts women's volleyball team hits the road to play the University of Rhode Island tonight, but it's not the same URI team they swept last month in their first home game of the season. It's a different Ram team and it's a better Ram team.

At the end of September, UMass hosted their first home match of the season against a struggling Rhode Island team that was lacking direction. Through the course of a month, the Rams filled their need for a leader on the court as freshman Britta Feldman stepped up her game. The setter from Germany has made an immediate impact on the court, recently being recognized as the Atlantic 10 rookie of the week for her 89 assists in a match up against Temple.

The URI/Temple game in earlier this month epitomizes how far the Rams have come this season. After being swept by the Minutewomen two weeks before, the Rams brought the 1st place undefeated Owls into a fifth set, and came a couple points shy of upsetting the A-10 volleyball world.

Tomorrow night's match-up will be another good test for a UMass squad that is contending for a spot in the coveted A-10 tourney.

"They're a whole different team", said Head Coach Bonnie Kenny. "We took the last scouting report and threw it out the window. Their starting setter [Feldman] is back from injury, which ups their assists from 8 to 14, which is a big difference."

UMass is going to have to stop the Rams' big guns, freshman Michelle Fulton and junior Yolanda Bogacz. Fulton nailed 15 kills for a remarkable .313 hitting percentage last weekend against Xavier while Bogacz scored 12 kills of her in own in the loss.

For the Minutewomen, senior do-it-all Rebecca Hasson and fellow co-captain Lymarie Hoset pace the offensive attack. Hasson led the Maroon and White in kills over the weekend with 38 combined against Xavier and Dayton. Hoset posted 27 kills through both matches while putting up double-double numbers in the Dayton match-up. On the defensive front senior Jenni Drennan and junior Janeen Demarie have been playing well as each registered 19 kills in the triumph over Dayton.

Rebecca Hasson

"I'm expecting a better distribution of the ball, so we'll be a much better hitting squad", said Hasson. "If we play our game, we can definitely sweep them, but all six players on the court have to play together."

The past week was a busy one for the Maroon and White. After going five sets last Monday in a win over out of conference rival UConn, they went another five sets on Friday in a hard-fought loss to Xavier. And on Saturday, they didn't disappoint any of the UMass faithful, going another five rounds in a dramatic win over Dayton.

If the Dayton game taught the Minutewomen anything, it's that they can't let up. UMass breezed through the first two sets on Saturday night but allowed the Flyers to get back into the game in the third, a game UMass was capable of winning. Dayton took the momentum to win the third and then dominated in the fourth and gave UMass a run for their money in the last stanza.

"We realized we can't take teams for granted," Hasson said. "Obviously, it was nice to see to pull together and win."

The Minutewomen hope to transcend the momentum of the win into a couple good practices and eventually onto the court against the underdog URI squad.

"We had a good practice last night, our attitude is good," Kenny said.

All six remaining games are in conference games, and UMass can't afford to let anyone slip past them with a win. The A-10 tourney is unto going to take the best of the best, and although the Minutewomen dismissed URI easily last time, they can't afford to take anyone lightly if they want a tournament berth.

"They're starting to play better," said the head coach. "I think it's going to be a lot tougher match."

Learn Some French
les enfants
l'autobus
The children are in the bus.
Les enfants sont dans l'autobus
Work for the PVTA
Drive a Bus !
Teach it French
"Le singe a le collegian."

Write for Arts & Living

www.guess4green.com
Blurry Picture = Clear Cash
www.guess4green.com

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
10-1am
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

Council Travel
America's Leader in Student Travel
SALE SALE SALE
Sale Dates: 10/24-10/28
LONDON $195
PARIS $245
MADRID $305
DUBLIN $255
AMSTERDAM $295
Other destinations available!
Shop extended hours–Tues-Fri: 9-7, Sat: 11-3
41 Main Street
413-256-1261

The Headache Experience
- A Nuisance Or A Warning Signal?
October 25, 2000
7:30 pm at the Campus Center, Rm 805-809
Ingeborg van Pelt, MD,
a headache specialist at the UMass Health Services, will give a presentation about headaches, particularly migraine and tension type headaches. She will elaborate on headache triggers, and will introduce self-healing and preventive strategies.
Learn to control your headache before it controls you!

UMass campus recreation
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
3-on-3 Basketball (M/W/C).....10/30
Holiday Basketball (M/W).....10/30
Spring Basketball (M/W/C).....10/30
MANDATORY CLINICS FOR SPRING BASKETBALL OFFICIALS ARE SCHEDULED IN TWO PARTS. CLINICS ARE SCHEDULED FOR JANUARY 29th & 30th AT 6pm AND FOR JANUARY 31st & FEBRUARY 1st AT 7pm. CALL FOR REQUIREMENTS AND LOCATIONS.
On the web: www.umass.edu/umim

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995

haircuts ★ colors ★ highlights
REGENCY HAIRSTYLISTS
189 N. Pleasant St
253-9526
perms ★ tanning ★ facial waxing

■ mtv
continued from page 6

the same stale guests and most important, is hosted by the absolutely inane Carson Daly. Sure, it's great that he's got a television face that makes the girls go ga-ga, but what happened to VJs with some amount of soulful creativity? What happened to late nights and "Headbangers' Ball" or "120 Minutes?" Late night shows that so few people watched anyway, why replace it with something else? Higher 2-4:00 a.m. ratings? Are they serious?

Altschul talks about their well-respected news division – then appears on a show that is blatantly lacking in both objectivity and fairness. No network critics took part; nobody with possible complaints and most importantly, nobody who seemed to have any vision for the network, dangerously indicating that the network is satisfied with its current position.

That's the main problem: the current network lacks one element that made it what it is today: music. There is such a mind-stopping, limited amount of actual music on the network that MTV just isn't anymore. T(een)TV perhaps, but Music Television, absolutely not.

What was once a creative force in American culture has now become a creative force in American pop culture; rather than influence music and style across the board, they influence the style of all the popular kids in school that nobody liked anyway. What was once a station for everybody has gradually become a station for the few.

No more are they a network with the ability to influence style and music and grace; it is a network of all the things that it started out not wanting to be. Popular with the cool kids, ignorant to everybody else, and the last place that anybody is going to look towards to play any music.

"Uncensored" was like a microscope on the bigger problem of MTV's quality, only Altschul and the rest of the producers of the segment don't understand that; they thought they were making a special about what now makes MTV special. Instead, they produced a special about what makes MTV awful.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Chevy Celebrity. 77k miles. Automatic, 4 door. Great condition. $800 or B.O. 413.665.9279

1987 Jeep Wrangler 4cyl. hard top. Many new parts $4100 or bo 665-3013

97 Honda Civic Ex. Low miles 35,000. Perfect condition, standard. $12,995 tan 546-0981

HONDA ACCORD LX. 1990. AT/PW/PL/AC, 140k miles, excellent condition. Contact evenings. 413.736.6161

Quality Autos For Sale 85 Dodge Caravan. 5speed, loaded $450. 90 Ford Ranger XLT. burgandy $1000. Call 413-286-0857

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

EMPLOYMENT

Attention!
Work form home - up to $25-$75/hr. PT/FT mailorder. 877-608-Rich

Voice Talent Needed
Internet/Radio start-up seeks fun + energetic person to be our VOICE!!! Radio/acting experience + interesting accent "particularly Jamican, W Indian" a plus. Call 617-598-1030 ext. 1230 for more information.

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

CHILDCARE

PAID MEDIA INTERNSHIP AVAILABLE
Are you looking for a way to combine an education in journalism or communication with social activism? Do you have an interest in grassroots organizing and want to learn how to use the media as a tool for political activism? If you have taken basic journalism or communication coursework, the Peace Development Fund has a paid internship position for you. Position begins immediately and runs until May/June 2001. Flexible schedule. For more information contact Rose Sackey-Milligan at 413-256-8306, ext. 227, or rose@peacefund.org. Send resume and cover letter to Media Internship at PDF, P.O. Box 1280, Amherst, MA 01004, or to rose@peacefund.org

Rao's Coffee is hiring. Apply only if you are serious about working hard

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today, 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Kitchen Help @ meal times. Nice place to work. Near campus. Meals + pay. 549-7719

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FOR SALE

Beerpong Tables for sale!! Custom made to order, 4x8. Free delivery to anywhere in Amherst. Call 549-5950 ASAP. Ask for Chad

MISCELLANEOUS

RAISE $1600-$7000 + GET FREE CAPS T-SHIRTS & PHONE CARDS!
This one week fundraiser requires no investment and small amount of time from you or your club. Qualified callers receive a free gift just for calling. Call today at 1-800-808-7442 x 80

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

3 girls need roommate for spring in Brandywine $228/mo call Nadiah 549-4907

SERVICES

Calculus Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.omc

2001 SPRING BREAK
GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

Need to Advertise??

Don't hesitate... Advertise to THOUSANDS of people!!

Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3	Hartford
4	CBS/4	Boston
5	ABC/5	Boston
6	PBS/57	Springfield
7	HSCN	Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20	Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61	Hartford
12	PBS/24	Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Govnt to Govnt
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 25, 2000

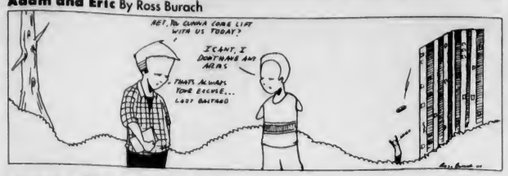
		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newsnour With Jim Lehrer		Positivly Com.	"Heat Senator	Masterpiece Theatre's American Collection "Cora Unashamed"				Independent Lens (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	1	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Betta (N)		Welcome-N.Y.	"One True Love" (2000, Drama)	David Hasselhoff, Terry Farrell,		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Betta (N)		Welcome-N.Y.	"One True Love" (2000, Drama)	David Hasselhoff, Terry Farrell,		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Spin City	Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity "Greeks and Geeks"		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Titans "Stormy Heather" (N)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Turntable Justice"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		6	7th Heaven "Truth or Dare"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	7 Days "Rhino" (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT		9	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Titans "Stormy Heather" (N)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Turntable Justice"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	World Series: Game 4 – Yankees or Mariners at Mets or Cardinals						News	Friends
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Titans "Stormy Heather" (N)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Turntable Justice"		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newsnour With Jim Lehrer		Alaska's Gold Rush Train		Masterpiece Theatre's American Collection "Cora Unashamed"				Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	11	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Spin City	Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WSBK	12		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	7 Days "Rhino" (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	22		Rosearnne	Rosearnne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	23		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Centurs"		Biography: Judge Judy		Behind Closed Doors		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Misconception"
CNN	25	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"Kissing a Fool" (1998, Comedy) David Schwimmer,				South Park	Battlebots	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	27		Wild Discovery: Zebra's World		Wild Discovery: Animal's World		On the Inside: Polar		Battlefield: Vietnam (N)				Justice Files "Parole"
ESPN	21		Sportscenter		Pete Rose Banned		Strongest Man	Strongest Man	Strongest Man	Japanese Sumo Wrestling (N)	Billiards			Sportscenter
LIFE	29		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"A Loss of Innocence" (1996, Drama) Jennie Garth, Rob Estes				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33		Direct Effect	Truth	Road Rules	Road Rules	All Stars (In Stereo)				Charlie's Ang.	Cribs	Truth (N)	Road Rules
NICK	34		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Told by Ginger	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	45		Sliders "The Exodus"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		 "Lord of Illusions" (1995, Horror) Scott Bakula, Kevin J. O'Connor,				(In Stereo)	Twilight Zone	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	37	26	How'd They Do That?		Clone Age		Super Structures of the World		Greatest Engineering Feat		Big Dig		Super Structures of the World
TNT	24		ER "Ground Zero" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Silence" (In Stereo)		Figure Skating Masters (In Stereo)						 "Eyes" (1998)
USA	32		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Webb of Lies" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Hot Prowler"		 "Dead Husbands" (1998, Suspense) Nicolleta Sheridan,				Strip Poker	Martin
HBO	20		 "Never Been Kissed" (1999) Drew Barrymore. 'PG-13'				 "Braveheart" (1995, Drama) Mel Gibson, Sophie Marceau. (In Stereo) 'R'						Chris Rock	"Eyes Wide"
MAX	43		(4:45)		 "Guilty as Sin" (1993) Rebecca De Mornay		 "Hard to Kill" (1990, Drama) Traci Lords. (In Stereo) 'NC-17'				 "When the Sky Falls" (2000, Drama) Joan Allen. 'NR'
SHOW	36		 "Alaska" (1996, Adventure) Thora Birch. (In Stereo) 'PG'				 "The Thomas Crown Affair" (1999) Pierce Brosnan. 'R'				Soul Food		Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)	"Killing Zoe" 'R'

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach



Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Have You noticed any changes on campus since the frats took control of the SGA?
Well, just one...
Now all the lecture halls have ratty old couches on their front lawns!

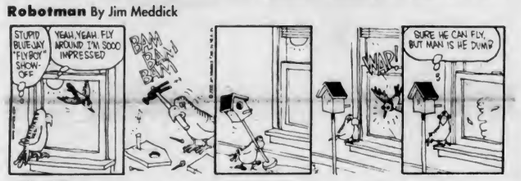
Dilbert By Scott Adams

THE EVIL H.R. DIRECTOR
WHAT NEW EVIL DO YOU BRING ME, UNION STEWARD STUART?
EMPLOYEES SHOULD NOT BE ALLOWED TO MOVE COMPANY COMPUTERS. THAT'S UNION WORK.
THAT'S OLD EVIL
IT'S NEW IF WE INCLUDE PDAS AND LAPTOPS.
I LIKE THE CUT OF YOUR GIBLETS
www.dilbert.com

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

SO DOES CHENEY GET A PASS ON PUBS, TOO?
BIG-TIME! AND HE TOLD THE WILDEST HOOK OF ALL - ABOUT BROOM HAS BEEN WITH OUT GOVERN MENT HELP!
HERE'S THE THING - THE REASON THAT NOBODY CARES IF YOU GET YOUR FACTS WRONG IS THAT JUST LIKE REAGAN, YOU SPEAK FROM A CORE OF LONG-HELD CONVICTIONS!
WOW! REALLY?
THAT'S RIGHT.
REAGANS CONVICTIONS AREN'T BACK, THIS TIME!
LONGER, EVEN.

Robotman By Jim Meddick



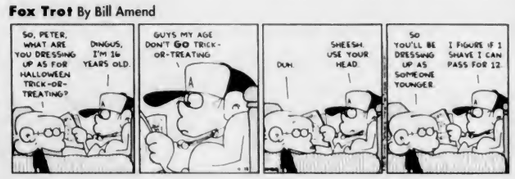
Buttercup Festival By Elliot Gar

BRUCE WILLIS PULLED ME OUT OF BED THIS MORNING AND KICKED MY ASS.
BETTER HIM THAN ME.
I KEEP A PICTURE OF MUSSOLINI ON MY DART BOARD. I FEEL SORT OF BAD ABOUT IT - I'VE NEVER EVEN MET THE GUY.
I TAPED A CARROT MASK TO A CHICKEN AND GAVE IT TO MY VEGAN FRIEND... HE ATE THE WHOLE THING IN MINUTES, PICKED HIS TEETH WITH THE BONES, AND SEEMED TO LIKE THE STICKY PINK OF HIS HANDS AND TEETH.

Sixteen Limabars By Barry Marherka

I WENT TO THE OLD NAVY AT THE MALL THE OTHER DAY.
OLD NAVY CLOSING
THE STORE HAD A THOUSAND EMPLOYEES
IT TOOK ALL ONE THOUSAND TO SELL ME THESE SNAZZY GLOVES.

Fox Trot By Bill Amend



SO, PETER, WHAT ARE YOU DRESSING UP AS FOR HALLOWEEN TRICK-OR-TREATING?
DINGUS, I'M 16 YEARS OLD.
GUYS MY AGE DON'T GO TRICK-OR-TREATING
DUH.
SHEESH. USE YOUR HEAD.
SO YOU'LL BE DRESSING UP AS SOMEONE YOUNGER.
I FIGURE IF I SHAVE I CAN PASS FOR 12

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

TIGER WOODS PUTS ON A GOLF CLINIC AT THE EL RANCHO CAMELOT CLUBHOUSE
C'MON, VERNE, HE'S A MORTAL...
HE CAN BE BEAT...
WAK!
PAK! TAK!
KLAK!
...WITH THAT KRYPTONITE I KEEP ON ME SOMEWHERE.

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – It's likely you will pay for a past mistake before this day is out. But when all is said and done, you will actually have scored big gains.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You can put your worries behind you today – provided you are willing to use the extra energy to address your concerns directly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You may be sending the wrong message. Get back in touch with your primary needs and desires, and focus on what is essential.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Now is no time for you – or anyone – to remain in the background.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Now is the time to improve your surroundings – and, perhaps, your appearance. You may have to concentrate more on the personal impact you make.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Someone is bound to make you an offer you cannot refuse – but you may have to take some time to consider the pros and cons.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You can avoid dramatic mood swings today. Steer clear of those who know how to press your buttons.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You must be neither hasty nor sluggish today. A balance in all things will serve you well as you negotiate a tricky personal path.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You must be willing and eager to keep up the pace today, lest the competition pass you by while you are resting on your laurels.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Your overestimation of your own talents may be the thing holding you back the most. It's time to learn a thing or two!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Honesty is the best policy, and it is best to avoid any negative feelings simply by admitting your own mistakes.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – How you proceed is more important today than how quickly you proceed.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 63 LOW: 41	HIGH: 64 LOW: 46	HIGH: 65 LOW: 46

Quote of the Day

"Everybody's trying to make us another century of fakers..."

–Belle and Sebastian

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Santa Fe Chicken Sandwich

Teriyaki Beef

Tofu with Snow Peas (vegan)

Vegetable Pot Pie (vegetarian)

Dinner

Roast Turkey

Fried Shrimp

Ratatouille Polenta Pie (vegan)

Cheese Ravioli (vegetarian)

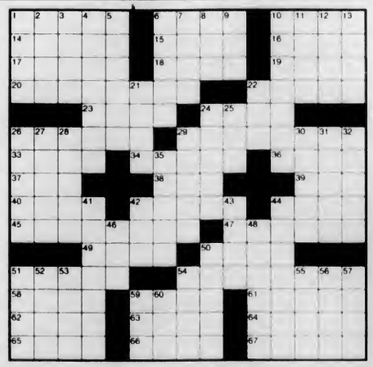
ACROSS
1 Window material
6 Linger
10 Toothy smile
14 Corroded
15 Form of exercise
16 Beak
17 Crosswise, on a ship
18 Cozy place
19 Sheiks' attire
20 High-school memento
22 Hunts for food
23 Shipment
24 Go with the wind
26 Pronoun
29 Storm lights
33 Grime
34 Berate
36 Singer Celine
37 Prince Valiant's son
38 Bartender's need
39 "The Gold Bug" author
40 With no guarantee
42 Jewelry fastener
44 Philosopher Descartes
45 Kind of party
47 Mechanic's tide-me-over
49 "Return of the Jedi" guru
50 Arrow
51 "Howdy!"
54 Animal with a pouch
58 Jai —
59 Orange skin
61 Molecule units
62 Simba, e.g.
63 Fashion magazine
64 Twangy
65 Alleviate
66 Elec. units
67 Shorthand

DOWN
1 Hagman's "Dallas" co-star
2 Garage job
3 On the briny
4 Hollywood newcomer
5 Sign
6 Bishops' council
7 Lifted
8 In the past
9 Gab
10 Knotty, as a tree
11 Judge's garment
12 Englishman's "Golly!"
13 Loch — monster
21 Lummoxes
22 Cherry seed
24 Red-tag events
25 Plus
26 Sci-fi writer Asimov
27 Body part
28 Kind of boom
29 Nearby
30 Get ready for harvest
31 Not a soul
32 Show scorn
35 Eyelashes
41 New York City feature
42 Boor
43 Blueprint
44 Drum sound
46 Overly
48 Church instruments
50 Valleys
51 Sound
52 Lamb's pen name
53 Thailand neighbor
54 Seaweed
55 "A — by any other name"
56 Muscat's country
57 Norwegian city
59 Type of jacket
60 Shade tree

11-17-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

M	A	T	A		D	O	D	O	S		A	L	M	S
O	P	A	L		A	M	I	N	O		B	E	A	U
D	E	L	I		M	I	N	T	Y		O	O	Z	E
E	X	C	A	V	A	T	E		B	I	A	S	E	D
		S	A	G		G	E	A	R
S	E	R	E	N	E		H	A	N	D	B	A	G
T	R	E	S	S		S	O	O	N		A	L	E
R	A	G		L	O	T	U	S		Y	O	N
U	S	A		I	N	T	L		S	T	O	N	E
M	E	L	T	I	N	G		S	H	R	U	G	S
			H	O	E	S		P	E	I
M	A	R	I	N	A		P	A	R	A	F	F	I	N
Y	U	A	N		G	R	O	V	E		L	O	R	I
N	E	I	L		E	E	R	I	E		E	R	I	C
A	L	L	Y		S	E	E	D	S		D	E	S	K



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Kristi Ceccarossi
Photo Technician	Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Brian McDermott
Production Staff	John Zawislak, Kara Stokes

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Trying to make the grade

UMass athletes looking for balance between school and sport

By Julie Robenhymer
Collegian Staff

Most college students walk away from their four year home with a degree in hand. It's no matter how many classes they took or how many internships they have completed, it's the student athlete who walk away with the most.

They are the ones who learn first hand the meaning of dedication and teamwork. They know how to work under pressure, and most importantly, how to succeed.

Many people assume that student-athletes have it easy and that most don't even go to class. But the fact of the matter is they attend the same classes as everyone else and take the same tests as everyone else. They are all working towards a degree while learning some of life's toughest lessons, such as the importance of priorities and accepting responsibility, just to name a few.

Mike Jenkins, an Associate Athletic Director and Director of Student Athletic Services at the University of Massachusetts stresses the importance of preparing for life after UMass to the student-athletes.

"We [student-athlete services] are here to maximize the academic experience of our athletes," he said. "Are they going to be successful when they leave UMass? That's the key element."

But so much of what student-athletes learn during their college careers is outside the classroom.

"There's so much that I've learned because of sports that I think I'll be well prepared for life after school," said Brian Smith, a senior accounting major and co-captain of the UMass football team.

The value of hard work, time management, dealing with different people, accepting responsibility, leadership skills and working well under pressure top Smith's list.

Luke Duplessis

Ebony Pegues, a sophomore accounting major and member of the UMass women's basketball team, said her experiences at UMass both academically and athletically have made her grow as a person.

"It helped me to know that I could handle more than I thought I could and has prepared me for life after college," she said. "The pressure pushes you so much, it teaches you to make better decisions."

The pressure that she is talking about comes from everyone including themselves and, at times, can overwhelm an athlete. They are not only expected to perform well athletically, but, just like other students, they have parents, classmates and professors pushing them to do their best academically.

In addition, the pressure the individuals place on themselves stems from the fact that they have to maintain their grades in order to play. Jenkins said an athlete becomes ineligible if their cumulative GPA falls below 2.25. Once that happens, they have a set amount of time to get back on track or lose their scholarship, or even worse, be kicked out of college.

"You have to accept that you're in college now and you gotta do what you gotta do to take care of business in the classroom," Smith said.

The toughest aspect of being a student-athlete is finding time to do schoolwork.

In some cases, these athletes get up at the crack of dawn to run or lift weights. From there, they attend classes and try to pay attention in order to pass. Then, they have afternoon practices and, afterwards, go home and study hopefully getting to bed by midnight.

Then, as Luke Duplessis, a member of the UMass hockey team and junior hotel, restaurant and travel administration (HRTA) major, said, "You get to come back the next morning and do it all over again."

We have it good because we're getting a free education," said Smith a scholarship athlete and Academic All-American. "But there's a lot of work that goes along with it."

Some people have this theory that athletes don't attend class and do just enough work to pass, but Duplessis and Smith have different opinions.

"Everyone sleeps in a few classes," laughed Duplessis. "But we don't miss class more than anyone else."

Smith added: "I do just as much work as anyone else. I know some guys who might just try and get by, but I don't think it's because they're athletes. There's always an exception, but most of us do the same amount of work as regular students. For some athletes, the only reason they're here is to play sports, but the majority are here to get an education."

Smith also said working on the road is difficult because the environment (planes, busses, hotel rooms) makes it harder to study. The other problem is that they miss classes and, on occasion, have to take tests early or even on the road.

"If you miss a couple lectures it's easy to fall behind, especially if you don't bring your books along with you," Duplessis said. "That's a bad move."

DAN GENTILE/COLLEGIAN
Senior co-captain and Academic All-American Brian Smith is walking proof that collegiate athletes are not stereotypical dumb jocks.

Ebony Pegues

Pegues commented: "That [traveling] is real hard on us because while other students are getting notes and listening to lectures, we don't. So we have to stay up on our studies."

Athletes also give up a social life when they dedicate themselves to their sport. Their weekend is consumed by games and allows little, if any, free time to go out or relax.

When asked how he fit in a social life, Duplessis responded, "That's a good question... wait 'til the spring. We're allowed to go out if the coach let's us but we prett much just hang out with each other."

Pegues said her coaches don't require the players to stay in on the weekends instead they let the athletes make the decision.

"The coaches put it to us this way," she said. "You've made a commitment and you know what's right and wrong."

The athletes also have to learn to stay focused on their schoolwork when their athletic performance is sub-par and vice versa.

"If you're having trouble on the court, it's going to affect your academics, but you try to stay as level as possible," Pegues said. "Same goes for academics, if you're struggling with your classes, your mind's not going to be on the court."

If an athlete is academically ineligible, they are allowed, by NCAA rules, to do everything with the team as they normally would do except compete. Duplessis, who took his freshman year off to concentrate on academics, did nothing with his teammates except lift weights. He had to find his own ice time and practice by himself.

His transition from high school sports to Division I college athletics was different from most other student-athletes because he took two years off in between to play junior hockey.

"I finally got here and it was kind of a shock that I had to balance so much school-work when I was used to sleeping in all the time," he said. "I put in zero effort in high school, so once I put in a little effort I did better."

Smith jumped right in to collegiate athletics for his first semester freshman year and felt the pressure immediately.

"I think it was real rough to go right into the season as a freshman because there was no adjustment period," he said. "It was a big difference from high school because back then you didn't spend so much time on sports as you do in college."

It all comes down to commitment and dedication. All three athletes agree that time management is a must if you want to succeed in both your athletic career and academic career. They also agree that participating in Division I sports is more difficult, or at least equal to, holding down a full time job as well as taking a full load of classes. But then, as an athlete, you get to travel and interact with the media and experience things that other students may not have.

It is for these reasons that athletes get more out of their college experience. And even though they have a reputation for being less than stellar in the classroom, these three athletes have proven this theory wrong through their dedication to both school and sport.

UMass makes a splash in season opener; Swim teams start year with wins at UNH

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Rumor by the pool is that Wildcats can't swim or dive. And judging by New Hampshire's performance against Massachusetts on Saturday, that rumor is true.

Both of the UMass swimming and diving teams were victorious at New Hampshire, with the men winning 180-110, and the women walking away with a 187.5-112.5 victory.

"I told the seniors that you guys came in as freshmen and won the conference and I want nothing less than for you to leave as champions," said men's coach Russ Yarworth before the season started.

The Minutemen have their sights set on their first Atlantic 10 title since 1998, a goal that Yarworth believes is well in reach.

"We have a lot of depth that you need to be a championship team," the coach also added when asked about his team's chances in this coming season.

UMass will look to seniors such as Chris Arsenault and Billy Brown for consistent victories as well as leadership in the quest for another conference title.

In Saturday's meet at New Hampshire, the Minutemen were nothing less than dominating against the Wildcats in the home opener. UMass won 12 of 16 overall events as the season kicked off in the Joseph R. Rogers Jr. pool.

Two seniors, Brown and Arsenault, won two events each, with the latter taking both the 200-meter butterfly and the 100-meter freestyle. Brown was the Breaststroke expert on two events of that type. Freshman standout Logan Alomar also won two diving events in helping the Minutemen to a landslide win over the Cats.

The Minutemonen were as dominant as the men in the pool on Saturday as four different women won two events each.

Coach Bob Newcomb said before the season, "The thing that stands out is the dedication as a team in an individual sport like swimming."

Newcomb made this comment as UMass looks to win its' first ever conference title in swimming and diving.

Junior Anne Dettloff won both the 200-meter as well as the 500-meter freestyle. Freshman Diana Alberti had an excellent opening meet winning the 100-meter and 200-meter butterfly. Another junior, Andrea Kazanjian, won the two shortest free style races, while second year diver Kate Allery won two of her diving events.

Overall the Minutewomen won 12 events on the day in a statement win over UNH. For the women it will be essential that underclassmen step up and perform, emulating the efforts of juniors such as Dettloff and Kazanjian.

Both the men and the women now look ahead to another home meet against Central Connecticut on November 4.

Both UMass swimming and diving teams made strong statements in a one-sided season opening performance. The rest of the Atlantic 10 should now be on notice that success rides on nothing less than a conference title for both teams.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO
Both the UMass men's and women's swim teams defeated New Hampshire in their season openers last weekend.

UMass is too big for Big Green: Overtime goal by Bruemmer for win

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Stage left – it's the usual game show scenario: three doors, an impending fate behind one of them. Stage right – the contestant: the Massachusetts field hockey team – lately, a group of athletes stuck inside a world of reoccurring deja vu.

This game is fixed though, because every time the Minutewomen participate, an overtime victory lies behind their chosen door. And yesterday, that same result spoke again for the fifth time this season, this time a 2-1 overtime victory over host Dartmouth College yesterday afternoon in Hanover, NH, thanks to junior Anke Bruemmer's overtime goal just 5:17 into the extra frame.

The win improved the Maroon and White's record to 14-3 on the season while the Big Green fall to 8-7.

"We've played in so many overtime games this semester," UMass goalie Zowie Tucker said. "So when it got to overtime today, it was basically put the ball in the net, get on the bus and go home."

Senior Lucy Koch said: "When we go into overtime we're not nervous, we're confident that we can finish and score a goal. We work well under pressure."

What the Maroon and White have learned during this 2000 campaign is that an overtime victory holds no less glamour than a 12-0 pouncing of the competition. And as Head Coach Patty Shea has emphasized after almost every game this season, a win is a win and she's going to take it, whether it be in penalty strokes, overtime or regulation play.

Yesterday on the turf of the new Scully-Fahey Field, the UMass win came from the reemergence of Bruemmer's terrorizing slap shot into its penalty corner scoring niche that had been somewhat lost during the middle of the schedule.

Bruemmer scored two goals on the afternoon, both coming off penalty corner opportunities. Koch and senior Patty Robinson assisted on both of the goals.

But both of Bruemmer's goals came after an early scare put forth by the women in green. Just over 12 minutes into the game, Dartmouth's freshman Rebekka Stucker snuck behind the UMass defense, who was caught out of position, and scored on Tucker to give the Big Green an early one-goal lead.

"We just didn't recover," Koch said. "That was a surprise goal. It was a wake-up call for us. And it made us play tighter defense."

Added Tucker: "When we came out we were very relaxed and nonchalant. Then we knew we had to score two goals to win and it was just fortunate that Anke found the net today."

On Bruemmer's first goal, she took the penalty corner set up and fired a straight shot under Big Green goalie Brittany D'Augustine and into the cage. That score, knotting the game at one apiece, was Bruemmer's first tally since her goal against UConn on September 30.

Her second score and game-winning tally came off of a redirection of a penalty corner, a blast to the far post past D'Augustine.

"Anke was awesome," Koch said. "She was really accurate today. As a whole, our offense is playing well. Its movement has been great."

Said Tucker: "In the beginning of the season we would score but they would be lucky goals. Now when we score they're good goals. And that just brings a lot of confidence to the team."

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN
The UMass field hockey team took a break from conference play yesterday to face regional rival Dartmouth.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Michael Myers and all of his friends get an Arts page to themselves today. Read about the rules that govern their lives inside.
ARTS p. 5

Admit it, you never pantied when you played Techmo Bowl. David Sanger did and now he's punting for UMass. Read about him in Sports.
SPORTS p. 14

Volume CVII Issue 36 www.dailycollegian.com Thursday, October 26, 2000

McCarthy to discuss environmental policy

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

Gina McCarthy, the Assistant Secretary for Pollution Prevention for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, will speak on environmental policy at the University of Massachusetts in 217 Stockbridge Hall at 4:00 p.m. today.

McCarthy, whose speech is titled "Public Information: The Foundation for Building an Environmental Constituency", will discuss the success of the Massachusetts' Toxics Use Reduction Act (TURA) in reducing industrial pollution through dissemination of information among the public.

"This program requires polluters to report in what way, and how much, they are polluting legally," said Craig Thomas Professor of Political Science at UMass. "We're not talking about reporting crimes, but reporting the levels of legal pollution.

McCarthy will contrast the traditional approach of state and federal government to environmental regulation, known as command and control, with "information regulation" which proposes informing the public about pollution levels - both legal and illegal.

"If you give people information they'll act, or they can act," Thomas said. "Furthermore, you're going to embarrass these people [polluters]."

The command and control method of environmental regulation, as run by the state and federal government, sets limits on how much pollution industry can produce without violating the law.

"Standards are set and enforced by government," Thomas said. "The federal government sets minimum standards and the states are free to add to them."

Information regulation requires both public and private sectors to disclose how much they're polluting above a certain threshold and the information is then passed on to the public. According to Thomas, TURA, and a similar program run by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) on the federal level, have had success in reducing the use of polluting chemicals by industry.

"Command and control can clean up the environment but we can do other things, set standards and require industry to report how they are polluting below the legal limit, and presenting the

Turn to SPEECH page 2

Two students assaulted; investigation continuing

Two UMass students were attacked on Tuesday morning when three unidentified males entered their dormitory room in John Adams Tower.

According to police reports, at approximately 11:00 a.m., the unarmed men broke into the dormitory room of the two roommates and held them down while they stole personal items from the room. The incident was listed according in the reports as a case of assault and battery, but also included components of robbery as well.

Both victims reported having minor injuries but declined medical attention.

Jim Lyons, the spokesman for the University of Massachusetts Police Department, said that there had been no Student Security working at the time because it was during the morning, but that the traditional security measures were in place at the time.

He explained, "The case is still under investigation."

The incident was reported at 11:30 a.m. and detectives are working with the victims to come up with physical descriptions of the alleged attackers. The UMPD asks that anyone in the area of John Adams Tower between 10:30 a.m. and 11:00 a.m. to contact the Detective Bureau at 545-0895.

-Melissa Hammel

Reverend, newsmaker and leader:

Sharpton discusses police brutality

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Staff

Jazz music filled the Campus Center Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts Amherst last night before the arrival of Pentecostal Reverend Al Sharpton, activist and mentor for African American people throughout the country.

Brought by the Black Student Union (BSU), Sharpton stood before a crowded audience of all different races and ages from the Five College Area, to give motivation and insight with his lecture, A Discourse on Police Brutality.

For over ten years, the BSU has been committed to supporting the issues and concerns of the people of the African Diaspora culture. Recently they have addressed the concerns of harptowomen and men through their One Time For Your Mind Series and have collaborated with the Jewish Student Union in presenting multi-cultural aspects stories of the Black and Jewish cultures. The group also funded presentations by other activists, such as Bobby Seal, a founder of the Black Panther Party, and Felipe Luciano, the co-founder of the Young Lords who brought insight on the past and the future of equality of people of color.

Born in Brooklyn, New York, Sharpton began his preaching career at the young age of four, and in 1964 at ten years old, he was ordained as a minister, and preached on tour with gospel music performer Mahalia Jackson. Although this was a stable aspect of his life, he was still exposed to struggle at an early age growing up in public welfare and housing projects in Brooklyn. Because of his experiences, he has dedicated most of his life to the improvement of life for people of color.

Many feel that Sharpton is merely out for the limelight and not a true activist, but, along with his gift for being a minister, he has shown his dedication through rallies, speeches, marches and the motivation for change. In 1969, Jesse Jackson appointed Sharpton as Youth Director for Operation Breadbasket, which boycotted against businesses that did not hire blacks, and in 1971 Sharpton started the National Youth Movement.

Time and time again, Sharpton has motivated movements around racial injustices such as the Howard Beach incident, where an African American man, Michael Griffith, was chased by whites, and hit by a car. He participated in protests following the shooting death of Yusuf Hawkins, an African American who was attacked by a mob of whites, and in 1991, Sharpton himself was attacked and stabbed shortly before he led a protest in Bensonhurst, NY. In 1993, he spent 45 days in jail for a protest held in 1987; in the same year, Sharpton continued his activism by starting the National Action Network (NAN), whose mission is to pursue economic justice and political empowerment, as well as pinpointing racial and civil rights violations as well as the education and registration for voters.

Nikan Hodjat, a UMass student, said that many of the issues that Al Sharpton presents in his speeches are very relevant to people of color here at UMass, and everywhere. "Al Sharpton is giving voice, and bringing to life issues that require and demand attention," said Hodjat. "Particularly in the community of color."

Most recently, Sharpton has been leading protests against the brutality of the New York City police department for the torture of Haitian immigrant, Abner Louima in 1997, and the

Turn to SHARPTON, page 2

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

SGA talks parking, money and politics

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

Michael Brennan, Director of Parking Services, isn't around "a lot." He pulled into last night's University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate meeting, though, where he answered questions regarding the University's parking problems.

Brennan asked the Senators to fill out a survey addressing parking fees, the allocation of parking permits and freshman parking. He explained to the SGA why Parking Services is not going to bring the survey to the larger student body.

"The SGA is a representative body of the student body," he said. "At this point we decided to start right here."

Central Area Governor Ken Campbell asked Brennan if further down the road he would consider allowing more students to merge into the dialogue around parking issues.

Brennan responded by saying he would be "interested in holding public forums in each living area."

Juliet Okafor, Secretary of Diversity, took a detour away from the pileup of critical, personal complaints brought

Turn to SGA, page 2

BRIAN MCDERMOTT/COLLEGIAN
Head of Parking Services speaks in front of the SGA last night.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO
UMass fans prior to their current lack of interest.

Athletes to fans: where's your spirit?

By David Rose
Collegian Staff

Imagine if you were a fan around 1996 when the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team was in the midst of a 35-2 season and a trip to the Final Four. The Mullins Center was sold out every game and the building was among the most dangerous places to play in the country.

Now turn the clock ahead to the year 2000 and some people are asking, "Where has the atmosphere gone?"

This season UMass has observed a decrease in the number of fans, in particular students, and are trying to bring back what was once the Minuteman fever.

The hockey season is underway and the men's and women's basketball season are about to begin, and one of the main goals for all three teams is to get the students back into the Mullins Center.

"Getting the students back would be big for us, but I also know that we can't think that they are going to come back," men's basketball coach James 'Bruiser' Flint said. "We've got to go get them, we've got to grab them by the hand and pull them in and that is what we're going to try to do this year."

First-year Assistant Hockey Coach Mark Dennehy agrees with Flint's philosophy.

"Part of it is reaching out to the students," he said. "I know that the basketball team has tables set up in the campus center on game days and we'll do the same. We're going to make ourselves that much more accessible this season."

Dennehy added that the Mullin's Center has moved home team benches over to the other side to be closer to the student section.

"We love the fact that the student body is behind our bench, banging the glass, getting involved and the team feels that energy from the fans," Dennehy said. "I know in between periods of the last game (Saturday against Colgate) there was a shopping cart race, so there are a number of different ways to get the crowd involved."

UMass will try to do their best this year to reverse a recent trend. In the 1999-2000 season, the average attendance for a UMass men's basketball home game was approximately 5,836. That statistic is down 3,657 per game from the 1995-96 season. That year the Minutemen sold out every home game. By the 1998-99 season, attendance had decreased 887 per game.

The UMass hockey team averaged 2,869 fans per game last year. The Minuteman hockey team saw a decrease in attendance by over 600 fans per game in the 95-96 season, but in the end they have averaged the same amount because attendance rose last year to combat for the fall two years prior.

The UMass women's basketball team average attendance was 1,137, down 500 from the 1995-96, a season where the Minutewomen made their first NCAA appearance.

Most students admit that they wouldn't hesitate going to an event that they have already paid for in their tuition fee, but many just aren't aware of when they're happening.

"If there was something that showed what was going on this weekend for sports, than maybe I would go, but I think it is also a preference on what sports you like," said Senior Nikki Belmonte.

The university is going to try and reme-

Turn to SPIRIT, page 2

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Puppeteering

[illegible] major rehearses with "Petey" yesterday afternoon.

Sharpton

continued from page 1

shooting of unarmed Ghanaian immigrant Amadou Diallo, by four New York City police men in 1999.

Last night Sharpton brought information to help UMass students, faculty and staff identify the problem of police brutality, ways to claim it and suggestions to help eliminate it. He stated that regardless of whether people agree or disagree with him, he simply came to express his view.

"It seems that society falls apart at its base when they can no longer trust those who are supposed to protect them," said Sharpton. "It's double the fear in the black community when you have to run from the cops and the robbers."

He referred to the cases of Louima and Diallo, where permanent damage and death were the result of police brutality. According to Sharpton, Louima, because of looking suspicious, was taken down to a police precinct in the Flat Bush area of New York City, where he was assaulted in the rectal area with a plunger within the precinct. According to Sharpton, he was then placed under arrest for the assault of the police officer who sodomized him, and hand cuffed to a hospital bed, while on the brink of losing his life. Diallo, also accused of looking suspicious, was shot at 40 times, 19 of which hit him directly, by New York City police, resulting in death.

"We have a problem with no regulation, and accountability," said Sharpton. "I think we have a problem with reckless police, and we need to take the steps to stop this."

Of the steps he mentioned, he started with the need to admit that there is a problem. In addition to this, he feels that there needs to be Federal laws mandating that police live in the county where they serve.

"Many police have the mentality that they have to go to the jungle and tame wild animals, instead of going to protect a community, and to uphold the law," said Sharpton.

He also suggested that there should be a civilian complaint review board, where civilians would review cases, and have the power to review police and police action, not be limited to the influence of the police department. Sharpton concluded with the prevention of racial profiling.

"Racial Profiling is nothing but a new version of segregation," said Sharpton. "This is the official strategy of those in charge. We are talking about a policy that is upheld by those in power. The law enforcement targets you for the color of your skin."

Many people in the audience clapped in agreement with the solutions Sharpton proposed, and Linda Accime, a UMass senior stated that his ideas offered some resolutions for her.

"I feel that if they were effectively implemented, it would work," said Accime. "This really hits home for me, as a woman of color."

Sharpton believes that the challenge of this generation is to deal with racial profiling, police brutality and racist practices because these issues will not come to an end until the people in power are pressured.

"It is possible for the community and police to work together to clean up crime, but we can not sweep all of this under the rug," said Sharpton. "No one is protected, until everyone is protected. This is the reality."

SGA

continued from page 1

before Brennan. She asked how students could apply for the scholarship that is funded by the money collected from parking tickets.

According to Brennan, the money accumulated from ticket fees goes into a "non-restricted pool" that is drawn from to make up small discrepancies between the grants and loans a student is awarded and the amount the student is able to pay.

"Most people who have some sort of financial aid probably receive some part of that money," Brennan stated.

Later in the meeting, money was brought up again but this time in relation to the University's distance learning project.

Senator Salwa Shamapande introduced a motion demanding student input in this multi-million dollar project.

Because this is such a large financial project, Shamapande said, how it is funded "is integral to the future of this university...It's a question of where the University wants to prioritize [and] they should involve us."

According to Shamapande, the Graduate Student Senate recently passed a similar motion, requesting to be part of the decision-making part of this project.

Shamapande made it clear that he was not opposing distance learning, but was opposing the University's apparent lack of interest in student opinion in this matter.

The motion, calling for "full involvement of the Campus community ...including student involvement," passed unanimously, reflecting the Senate's desire to be recognized as a powerful voice of the student body.

Jim Eltringham, Speaker of the Senate, may have been slightly injured when the chair he sat in collapsed while attendance was called.

He encouraged Senators that if "they are sitting next to a defective chair they might want to remind someone before they sit in it."

Eltringham was not the only student whose safety was brought to the Senate's attention at last night's meeting, however.

Senator Jennifer Teixeira announced that the Safety Walk will be held tonight. It will start at 7 p.m. on the speech

Turn to SGA page 3

[illegible]

spirit

continued from page 1

dy that problem this year.

"I tell everybody who has an e-mail account at the university, we are going to let you know when the games are happening," Flint said. "We are also going to do it through campus wide voice mails on the phone so we are going to let you know when the games are going to take place."

Though that may solve the problem of knowledge of games, there may still be more reasons why students don't attend athletic events.

Christopher Emery, a senior math major, expressed an opinion felt by many students.

"[During] freshman and sophomore year, I went all the time," Emery stated. "Part of the reason that I do not go is that the teams are not as good now as what they were back then."

The team's performance is undoubtedly one of the main determinants in whether or not the students go to the games.

"When you ask why certain schools, have certain traditions, they support their team no matter what their teams are doing on the fields and that's how you build traditions," Flint said. "You just don't come when your team is the best team in the world."

"It is a letdown when you see a half-filled building, I'm not going to lie about that, any athlete would say that to you," Flint said. "But if you see people coming out and supporting you, you're going to give your best effort every night. When you run out there and there is nobody out there to watch, you don't feel the same as you would if the stadium was packed."

Fan support is not only big in showing school spirit, but it also gets the players excited to be playing in the competitions that they are in.

"I think our players always feed off the crowd's excitement," said Jill Rooney, an assistant women's basketball coach. "When it's loud, and people are into the game and they're screaming, it raises our energy level and all they have to really concentrate on is executing instead of getting themselves pumped up for the game."

"Fan support is a big thing and there is nothing better than coming out in front of a big crowd and play a hockey game," sophomore hockey player Tim Turner said. "We do get good fans, but we don't get enough and

Turn to SPIRIT page 3

SAMSUNG DIGITall
everyone's invited
your college diploma
you
Your personal printer
Equip smart.
A laser printer for the price of an inkjet?
Cool. Just $199.
Now you can have your very own laser printer. At a breakthrough price.
Fast. Sharp. Clean. Compact. With a toner cartridge that should last you all year. And at a per page cost that's 70% less than inkjet. Plus a Toner Save button that extends the life another 30%.
Papers that stand out in a teacher's grading stack. Professional resumes. Articles fit to submit for publication. All for the price of a half-dozen inkjet cartridges.
Better think twice. Everyone in the dorm's gonna want to use it.
Grab one at your campus bookstore. Order online. Or by phone at 800-459-3272. Go to www.samsungusa.com/Xtreme for more information.
The Samsung ML-4500 Laser Printer. "16-pages-on-1" print feature and Last Page Reprint button. Microsoft 2000 and Linux compatible.
SAMSUNG
Score this $1199* flat-panel monitor.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SILVER SEASON
CELEBRATING 25 YEARS OF GREAT PERFORMANCES AND GREAT AUDIENCES
Stars, Stripes and the EAC Forever
THE BOSTON POPS
Keith Lockhart, conductor
It's a 25th Anniversary Celebration complete with an all-American program of Copeland, Bernstein, Loesser, Williams, Gershwin, and tributes to Elvis Presley and Paul Simon. Join the fun and catch the Boston Pops right in your own backyard
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28 AT 8PM, CONCERT HALL
A Treasure from Down Under
The Sydney Dance Company
Graeme Murphy, Artistic Director
Air and other Invisible Forces
Air is a mosaic of innovative movement, stunning stage design, diaphanous costumes, and haunting music performed by one of the most technically brilliant dance companies in the world. This work has riveted audiences, winning standing ovations, and great critical acclaim at every performance
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 14 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL
Heavenly Voices
ACCENTUS
Laurence Equilbey, artistic director
The rich repertoire of French a cappella is brought to life by Accentus, a professional choir of 32 singers. Under the direction of Swedish choirmaster Eric Ericson, the program will include choral works by Wolf, Poulenc, and Schönberg, among others
FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 17 AT 8PM
CONCERT HALL
Let the ovations continue!
www.fineartscenter.com
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for tickets
THE FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

N.C. early voting initiative leads to controversy

By James Herriott
The Chronicle (Duke U.)

(U-WIRE) DURHAM, N.C. – North Carolina's new early voting initiative has been heralded by local election boards and Democrats as a way to increase voter turnout, but some Republicans fear the program fails to comply with federal election laws and could lead to voter fraud.

The new system allows North Carolina voters to cast their ballots up to three weeks before the traditional Election Day, which is the first Tuesday in November.

"We still have concerns about early voting because of the manner in which voter registration records are kept in North Carolina," said Dan Gurley, political director for the state Republican Party, adding that a lack of a centralized, state-wide database of voter registrations creates new opportunities for voter fraud.

"I could be registered in five counties and I could start driving at eight in the morning and vote in all of them," he said, implying that the larger voting window allows people to vote more easily in multiple counties.

"If a county doesn't do proper list maintenance, you have problems like you had in Durham County where there were many registered voters than people eligible to vote in the county." Scott Falmlen, executive director of the state Democratic Party, believes the early voting system will be beneficial to the political process.

"I think it's going fairly well," he said. "Anytime you can expand the opportunity for people to cast their votes, it's a good thing." Johnnie McLean, deputy director of the state board of elections, said that after a few minor problems on Oct. 16, the first day of early voting, the process has been orderly, without any hitches.

On the morning of Oct. 16, the staff at the Durham Board of Elections early voting site were unable to power up the voting tabulator and then gave two ballots the same number. McLean said the press and the political parties were notified and invited to watch officials open the lock box and correct the situation. The other mishap in Durham County occurred at the Northern High School voting site, where the key to the vote tabulator did not fit.

"No voter was turned away... and by 9:20 (a.m.) they had all the problems taken care of in Durham," McLean said. Republicans have also claimed that the early voting locations may have been placed in typically Democratic areas because Democrats control the state election board.

"In a lot of counties if you look around the state you'll see (early polling sites) have been selected to favor the Democratic demographics," Gurley said.

However, he noted that the data he has collected shows about equal turnout from both Democrats and Republicans. Polling stations are located at every county's board of elections office, which is generally in the county seat. In addition, other sites are often placed in libraries, which McLean said are distributed geographically.

"My information tells me that is not a valid concern," McLean said. "For what it's worth, it seems there are more voters coming to the county office than the other one-stop sites."

Durham County's sites are located at its board of elections office near the Durham Athletic Park, at Northern High School and at North Carolina Central University. Two Guilford County voters, Maryjus Kindley and Darl Flower, were so concerned about the new early voting system that they contracted Greensboro attorney Marshall Hurley to file a U.S. District Court suit against the state Oct. 13.

"It's the simplest lawsuit I've ever been involved in," said Hurley. "The United States Congress decided over 100 years ago that the election for president and Congress should be on the first Tuesday of each November. We're supposed to have one national election day, and North Carolina created many, many additional days." Falmlen, on the other hand, does not think much of the suit.

"I can only quote the judge, who said it is probably meritless," he said. "In fact, it is meritless. Early voting has happened all over the States for more than 20 years."

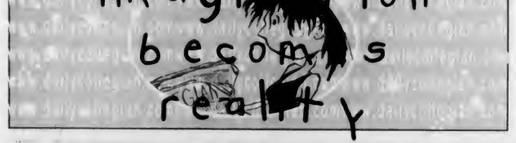
Hurley countered that litigation has targeted early voting programs in Tennessee and Texas. He also cited a case in which the U.S. Supreme Court struck down Louisiana's election process that chose members of Congress in October. Hurley's clients' main complaints are that there are not enough safeguards to prevent voter fraud and that the state government is ignoring federal law.

In court last Friday, the judge said he thought citizens were not allowed to file suit against the state, but gave Hurley until Oct. 23 to persuade him otherwise. The judge has not yet responded to Hurley's arguments.

Meanwhile, many voters who have taken advantage of the early voting opportunity said they appreciated the new system.

"I think it's great," said Chris Ferguson, who voted Tuesday at the Durham County Board of Elections site. "I knew (voting early) wouldn't take long and I didn't know what I'd be doing on the seventh of November – if I got in a wreck or something, I knew I'd be able to vote."

Edwin Bryson, Trinity '58, also voted Tuesday. He said he was not worried about any developments in the campaign that might happen between now and the election. "I've made up my mind," he said.



spirit

continued from page 2

nothing pumps you up more than 6,000 screaming fans to win a hockey game and I think that's very important. I think that we need a little more support from the students but again, we have to win games to get that support, too."

Support has not been a problem at some other highly recognized universities, such as the University of Connecticut. They have a loyal fan base and their students will go to any extent to get tickets to athletic events.

"Tickets for the basketball season went on sale last Saturday," said Tim Tolukan, assistant athletic director at the UConn. "Students pitched tents in the breezeway to the ticket office on Tuesday. Kids brought out coaches, chairs, televisions with antennas and hung out there until the day the tickets went on sale."

UConn students only have to pay five dollars to buy tickets, however with only 2,000 student tickets per game, it makes for a race to the ticket office. In fact, students purchasing tickets on Thursday for a weekend game may find themselves getting turned away from the ticket window.

Tolukan also thinks one of the reasons for the large turnout is the exposure that the men's and women's teams at the University both get.

"Every men's and women's game are going to be on live television," Tolukan said. "That will attract potential ticket buyers, who are watching the game on TV."

Another school that does not have a problem drawing crowds is Gonzaga University. Gonzaga is the home of Utah Jazz star and future Hall- of Famer John Stockton and all time great singer Bing Crosby. While they have not had the success as some schools, they still have had their 4,000-seat Spokane Arena filled to capacity.

The program is now on an upswing as the "Zags" have made the NCAA tournament in men's basketball the last two years and have had a following so crazy that most students admit they would pay money, even if they don't see the game.

When we (Gonzaga) have made the NCAA Tournament the last two seasons, people have called up our ticket office and paid for the right to acquire a ticket to a tournament game," said Oliver Pierce, associate athletic director. "As a result of our success, funding for the basketball program has gone up. We just had our biggest ever freshman class come into the university."

These schools are some of the many that have had a history of their sports being played and loyal followings that will not leave even if the times get rough. At Massachusetts, the hockey program has only been reinstated since 1995 and has started to gather a following of fans. This is a fact that keeps coach Dennehy optimistic.

"The students that come in to watch us are part of that history," Dennehy said. "There use to be one fan that use to come to the games called Afro-Man, and he showed some enthusiasm for the team and for the University and that is the chance everybody has is to play a part in your school's identity."

The "Afro-Man," Marcus Myrick, a graduate from UMass who now works at the University of Maryland, is disappointed at the lack of fan turnout over the last couple of years.

"I think we have a bunch of frontrunners," Myrick said. "Expectations run high and they don't understand that it takes time to build a program."

Myrick also feels that students are missing out on a golden opportunity at the University.

"You get to go for stuff from free," Myrick said. "Some of my fondest memories of college have been through UMass athletics whether it was the bus trip to Merrimack for a hockey game or the atmosphere at the Temple game last year, it's an experience that when you go, you just can't take that away."

Myrick also leaves a word of advice for the students that go to the university now.

"I just say go, because it's fun. it's a college campus and that is what you are there to do," he stated. "You are there to have fun and this is probably the last amount of free time that you are going to have. Be young and have fun because this is really the last that you are going to get."

The Mullins Center is where the coaches would like the students to be in the upcoming season and it is something they said is of major importance to the programs that they hold.

"We want you back to this stadium, we need you back in this stadium and we want you to come and be a sixth man and make the Mullins Center a tough place to play," Flint said.

"Your voice is felt and so is your silence and you guys have been silent for too long," Dennehy said. "It is time to step up and have an impact on the athletic program as only you can by coming and being as vocal as you can."

Bryan Smith contributed to this article.

SGA

continued from page 2

steps of the Student Union. Those gathered will then break up and walk through campus, taking note of possible safety concerns like inadequate lighting or the need for a callbox.

Teixeira said the Safety Walk began in the Spring of 1997 and has been a way for students to bring safety issues to the attention of University administrators.

In the past Chancellor Scott, Michael Brennan, and UMass Police Chief Jack Luippold have been among the many administrators who attend the walk.

"[They] are people who know how to do what you want done," said Flimgham, "and they'll tell you whether or not it can be done."

"All the recommendations that I've ever made since I've gone on the walk – they're all done now," Teixeira commented.

Urging students to take their collective voice seriously as a potential source of power, State Representative Terry Franklin addressed the SGA during the announcement period of the meeting.

Franklin recalled the referendum question of the deprioritization of marijuana on last Spring's Amherst town ballot. He linked the passing of the question to student participation in the campaign and encouraged students to continue being active and involved in politics.

"If students consistently vote," Franklin said, "they will have the chance of getting respect."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as 1890 as Index Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Berharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennie Gorlevsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Sendrovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trimble Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Mazenowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuma Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Shear Bliss Holistic Salon
413-253-2322
• Excellent Cuts & Colors
• Facials • Aveda/Alterna
• Body Sugaring & more
Bring in coupon
Get $5 off Haircolor or Perm

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
BEER WINE LIQUOR
Cigarettes • Lottery
Phone Cards
Convenient Location
EASY FREE PARKING
LOW, LOW PRICES!
THIS WEEK'S SPECIALS
Dinkel Acker
12 pack $9.99 + dep.
Magic Hat
9 pack $8.99 + dep.
Sauza Gold Tequila
$11.99 750 ml
Kendell-Jackson
Chardonnay $10.99 750 ml
6 University Drive • Amherst • 549-5758

YAMAHA HONDA DUCATI KTM Husqvarna
VALLEY MOTORSPORTS
M.V. Augusta Kawasaki CAGIVA bimota
State Inspection & Winter Storage
SUPERB, PROFESSIONAL SERVICE

Primordial Sound Meditation
A program developed by
Deepak Chopra, MD
Learn the Personal Mantra which makes Meditation Easy and Effective. Discover the Silence which develops Inner Peace and Activates the Power to Create the Life you Desire.
Classes now forming in Northampton
For information call
1-888-270-2031

Europe on Sale!
5 DAYS ONLY
Purchase Between October 24 - 28
All Major European Destinations
London Paris Amsterdam Dublin Lisbon Madrid Rome Glasgow Zurich Barcelona and Many More
student universe.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT.
800.272.9676
studentuniverse.com

Homecoming Festival 2000
HEY! MARK YOUR CALENDARS SO YOU DON'T MISS OUT!
Kick off the weekend with the BIG LUNCH!
Friday, November 3
11:30 a.m. Campus Center Lawn
Use your meal card, or spend just $4
Enjoy FREE ICE CREAM compliments of the UMass Alumni Association!
On Saturday, November 4 visit Homecoming Park from 10a.m. – Noon
Visit the tents and race your friends in the obstacle course or spin your heart out on the Gyro Scope!
Don't miss the GAME!
12 Noon
Help us cheer when we take on the Villanova Wildcats!
For more information, or a full list of the programs, please call the Alumni Relations Office at 545-2317.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianedtorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Playstation 2:
Dumbing Down America

Today's release by Sony of its Playstation II marks more than just the culmination of an insanely hyped ad campaign. The entertainment system's formal unveiling is a landmark occurrence in a process that has unfortunately become too prevalent in the technological sectors of this country.

Playstation II is a significant player in the dumbing down of America.

It may at first seem a little late to be blaming a video game system for the decline in America's techno-education and understanding; after all, the system's predecessor has been a humongous moneymaker for the company and has permeated millions of households across the globe. But while the old Playstation was nothing more than a game system, the new one is attempting to break dangerous new ground in terms of simplifying areas of technology where advancement has always been the goal.

The new system is designed to play not only Playstation II games, but also games from the original system. But it doesn't stop there; the system also plays DVD movies and audio CDs. So for around $300, consumers can now get a machine on which they can play games, watch movies and listen to music. A great deal, right?

Wrong.

All of these activities can be accomplished on – you guessed it – a personal computer. As a matter of fact, most gaming enthusiasts agree that PC games are far superior to their platform counterparts. So why such enthusiasm over a machine that can accomplish three of the thousands of tasks possible on a computer?

Because it's easy.

Americans want ease of use, period. Whereas developers have always tried to put forth the best technology available and let the consumers learn and utilize it, there is now this alarming trend toward simplification. Home computer use is at an all-time high; somehow, companies have determined that we need more basic "Internet Appliances" in homes anyway. They are essentially creating primitive computers designed solely to placate the Web-hungry masses, without giving these people the chance even to become comfortable with or, God forbid, knowledgeable about the capabilities of a computer.

But the PS II is much less expensive than a PC, right?

Wrong.

A mere $300 seems like a great value for such a versatile machine, but in actuality it is not. Consider that in order to even use your PS II, you need a TV. To get quality sound production out of your CD capabilities, add speakers. Suddenly, the whole package is looking more like $800 – $1,000 for the entire "experience."

Nowadays, an entry level PC can be purchased for that much, or less. With a monitor. With speakers. And with the capability to accomplish some pretty amazing things, especially to someone who has yet to fully tap this resource. Instead of having just an overachieving video game system, you instead have the one technological advancement that has influenced the life of modern man the most.

The consequences of faith

MATT DESPRES

"Organized religion destroys who we are or who we can be by inhibiting our actions and decisions out of fear of an intangible parent-figure who shakes a finger at us from thousands of years ago and says 'No, no!'" – Dogma

Last week I got to thinking about my own religious upbringing, those wondrous days of going to church and confessing all of my naughty little sins. As a child this was fine – a bit tedious, perhaps, but nothing that repulsed me in any manner.

How things have changed.

As I've matured and developed an identity that is more or less my own, I've grown wholly apathetic towards the system that operates under the guise of the Catholic Church. If the foundation of Catholic belief is love and forgiveness, then why are so many of its guidelines and ideas narrow-minded and laced with separation? How is it that an institution practicing acceptance, in theory at least, remains stubborn and unwilling to acknowledge that other avenues of living exist? And what kind of loving group promises an all-expenses paid eternity burning in hell for not acting exactly by the book? The late local artist Gregory Gillespie put it this way: "The philosophy [of the Catholic Church] is to take a little kid and scare the living shit out of them...To fill their mind with the worst possible kind of painful consequences: an eternity... burning... in Hell." This is harsh, but very true, that underneath the surface of the love and happiness that is preached lies a religion based on punishment. We're not living to rise above but simply hanging on and hoping not to fall through the cracks. No passing "Go," no 200 bucks. These are the rules, kids.

Growing up, I had to play by the rules. The rules, of course, were church (an activity that my family continues to practice in spurts only) and Sunday school, a riveting hour of religious education held each week in a high school classroom. They suppressed uniqueness and promoted conformity, a pitch I was hesitant to buy even at a young age. In all the years I attended those classes, until my confirmation in high school, the one and only thing I learned was how to make an hour pass more quickly.

It's not that I didn't want to learn. I figured that if I was there, I might as well try to soak in a little of the good word. In between the Lord's Prayer and Bible Bingo, however, there was little teaching going on, and certainly nothing that addressed the one area I found to be most important: diversity. As an "educated" Catholic, I grew up ignorant of other faiths. We never learned what other people believed in, and were never offered an explanation of why our own church operated the way it does. We were essentially handed a "to-do" list and expected to follow it.

When the chance to finally exercise my own thoughts arrived, I realized I was at odds with everything I had been taught. I was left to wipe clean a slate that for years had been collecting bits of useless information and start from the beginning. I have found that I do believe in some supreme being, something working on a higher level that does in fact have a hand in what we call life. Or, at least, I've grown fond of the idea that something is in fact there. Faith is a comforting thing, and I applaud anyone who can find something that they truly feel at home with. My problem is with those who take that certain something and make it exclusive, setting forth guidelines that for one reason or another exist to keep others away. The Catholic Church is the definition of this, and I would be a hypocrite to continue practicing in it in any formal manner.

For one, I support a women's right to an abortion, which is an instant check against me when the church is keeping score. Each situation is unique, of course, but ultimately the decision should be in the hands of the involved parties only. I'm not promoting a reckless love life either; should the situation present itself, though, the right to choose will be present without the shadow of damnation hanging over the couple. I know people that have had to make that decision, and they are among the most kind and good-hearted people I know. In no way do I view the choice as an evil act, or harbor ill-will towards those who go through with it. I save that for those, involved with the church or not, that feel a need to involve themselves in other people's lives. Mind your own damn business. Relentless crusading against perfect strangers is no act of any god.

The teachings of the church say that homosexuality is a sin, and again, I must disagree. Who are we to condemn a lifestyle simply because it's not something we choose for ourselves? The idea that some people truly believe gays are living in sin and should be eternally punished amazes me. This is an advanced society? This is part of a religion, something that is being preached to children as a good way to live? Who the hell buys into this? We need to wake up and think for ourselves, to ask questions rather than submit to these outrageous notions. Is it a loving god, church, or religion that blacklists people for personal decisions that affect nobody but themselves? Who you fall in love with is none of my business, nor should it be the business of the church. No argument exists that could convince me this is a legitimate line of thinking, and I refuse to sit in prayer with people that do.

If the Catholic Church is so open, then where our are women priests? I don't want to hear anything about tradition or the like; I want a concrete reason why a woman cannot serve as a priest in the Catholic Church. Boston comedian Jimmy Tingle said it best when he quipped, "I can be ordained a priest in the Catholic Church, but Mother Theresa cannot. Who would you go to for guidance?" What are we afraid of? Change? It seems so old and worn, the idea of women being unequal, but the church continues to practice it. They can serve us, sure, but they can't lead. If this is a world shaped by advance, I think we are doing ourselves quite a disservice by bowing to "rules" that were set forth centuries before.

I'm not here to tell you how to live. I have no interest in that. I have friends of many religions and have yet to let it mar a relationship in any way. People should be allowed to seek out what makes them happy on their own. It's when people become the church I get turned off, when they feel the need to convert the masses. I don't want to buy my beliefs off the television, the internet, or from you. I've simply found what I feel to be serious flaws in what I have been taught, and think they are points worthy of discussion, not ignorance.

Matthew J. Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

Dancing in their graves

ROB SCHULZE

This column is about how much I am bothered by people who jump around and smile and dance to the Papa Roach song "Last Resort." Just thought I'd give you fair warning.

I first heard the song last Spring Break when someone who'd went to the Powerman 5000 show at the Palladium had gotten a promo CD with that song on it. The very first time I heard it, I was blown away. I thought it was one of the coolest things I'd ever heard. My opinion quickly changed as I listened to the song more closely, got into it, realized what was being said. I then gained the respect that I currently have for "Last Resort" as one of the greatest songs of all time. The Papa Roach album didn't come out until months later, but I'd already gotten the song off Napster and memorized every note of it. My roommate at the time dug it too, the song basically came screaming out of our dorm room nonstop. At the time, however, my dorm room was basically the only place you could hear "Last Resort." The CD wasn't out, there was no video, there was no tour, there were no radio stations playing it.

That would change quickly.

As I'm sure everyone knows, the song exploded. It was on TRL. It was on every radio station nonstop. Papa Roach became a household name. "Last Resort" a big-time pop success. And then, finally, it came down to this:

I was at work at the DC, washing dishes, listening to the dishroom radio. The opening guitar riff of "Last Resort" starts booming out of the speakers. The two girls with whom I am washing dishes – happy, attractive, normal, party girls – instantly break into smiles. "All right!" one of them says, as they both smile. They jump up and down in place. They giggle. "I love this song!" one of them says to me, thinking that it would make me happy, saying as how they both knew this is my kind of music. It did not.

A couple weeks earlier I had been in my car with some people coming back from a Blockbuster run. "Last Resort" comes on the radio. One of the girls in the backseat says, "Oh, I love this song!" and starts singing it. I love this girl to death, but her favorite band is N'Sync and she occasionally refers to herself as quote: Britney.

This bothers me.

To put it bluntly, "Last Resort" is about kids killing themselves. I won't quote you the lyrics because I think you probably already know them, but they refer to despair, self-injury, suicide, broken homes, crying, and the feeling that no one cares. The song is about an absolutely horrible thing. Yeah, the chorus is catchy and the heavy, Iron Maiden-influenced riffs awesome, but it is still a song about suicide.

Call me crazy, but a song like this does not make me smile. It does not make me get up and shake my ass around. I love the song to death, but not for reasons like that. Not because it's on the radio.

Things like this always bother me. I saw ten-year-old kids accompanied by their parents singing along with "Faget" with big, broad smiles on their faces at a Korn show. There were girls on their boyfriends' shoulders flashing while Pantera played "Suicide Note Part II." ("Out of my mind, gun up to the mouth, no pretension, execution, live and learn, rape and turn, tortured history, addict of misery, this is for me" – perfect boob showing material, eh?) They played "Fade to Black" by Metallica at one of my high school dances, and couples used it as an excuse to get close and liplock.

I know that this is selfish of me and wrong, but I find it hard not to be aggravated by these people. I'm just very jealous about this music – it has very personal meaning for me, it is associated with memories and feelings which have never gone away; I consider it to be, in some intrinsic way, mine. And when people use my music in a way that belittles my experiences like that, I get upset.

I don't really get mad at the people themselves. I didn't break any dishes over the heads of the girls at the DC, nor did I kick the other girl out of the car. I know they don't mean any harm, that they just dig the song for the way it sounds, and I will readily acknowledge that it has a good beat. No, I don't get angry, just sad.

I'm actually a little envious of those innocent people who aren't so weighed down with baggage that they can enjoy songs like this for their ear-candy properties rather than because they identify with them. Be that as it may, however, people like me, metalheads and others, have exclusive rights to this song. If you've never felt really, really ugly, you can't have it.

I bear no animosity to the people referred to above, but the fact remains, however, that dancing and bouncing and smiling while listening to "Last Resort" is, to me, trivializing the kid who's in his room right now with the razor in front of him. And that's just wrong.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

Palestinians and Israelis:
Bigotry Preventing Progress

SAM WILKINSON

Every once in a while, the newspaper runs a piece of news that is offensive for varying reasons, to different parts of the campus. Sometimes we misquote somebody, sometimes we misrepresent something, but recently, the articles we've written that have seemed to cause the greatest offense have been ones that cause people to confuse their opinions with actual facts.

The most recent example has been the offense taken by parties with a vested interest in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict; as an interested party, I have heard both some off-base, the most anti-Israeli and just downright blind to reality statements in my life.

All of this started when one of our writers wrote an article last week about the Middle Eastern conflict, and a girl whose name I don't know tried to explain to me why it was wrong. She pointed out one mistake made internally (reference to Palestine as its own country) before she just free-styled some of the most anti-Israeli comments I'd ever heard. Truth told, I'm the friend of a guy at Brown who has a tendency to get anti-Palestinian at the drop of a hat, so I was used to hearing this biased bull, but this young woman just went crazy in the opposite direction.

I hadn't been aware that Yasser Arafat wasn't the leader of the Palestinian political movement, nor that he was a complete sellout to Palestinians, nor that he was Jewish. But here I stood, in the newsroom, as this young woman explained to me that the only group that truly represented Palestinians and cared for them was Hamas.

Now, I'd swear that Hamas was the group that had a habit of blowing people up without any real regard for who they were or what power they might have (as opposed to say, at least having the class to kill political leaders). But, according to her, Hamas was on the side of Joe Palestinian, and at the end of the day, he should thank Hamas for his freedom and well-being. Well, excuse me for failing to recognize all that Hamas has done for the Palestinians and Israelis. Apparently, the more or less universal agreement that terrorism isn't the best way to go and, if anything, Hamas has been more damaging to a peace than they've been beneficial just wasn't right to this young woman.

All of this neverminding her outlandish claims that Ariel Sharon, a right-wing Likud party leader, led thousands upon thousands of troops to the Temple Mount. Sharon was, no doubt, the catalyst for all of the recent violence; in the same breath however, he didn't lead thousands upon thousands of troops anywhere, much less the Temple Mount.

Oh, but silly me, I had forgotten that Sharon wasn't actually the catalyst, at least according to somebody else whose interests were strictly Israeli, and particularly pro-Jewish. According to this person, Sharon visited the Temple Mount, but the Palestinians had planned these riots months in advance; Sharon's visit just sort of accidentally happened right before massive rioting and killing occurred. Accidentally. Coincidentally.

And then I heard from someone who was mad about a political cartoon that they saw with an Israeli soldier throwing a boomerang on which was written "killing kids" about to hit him in the back of the head. We were being unfair, one-sided and not telling the full and accurate truth about the Israeli conflict. Those poor soldiers were provoked and too often we don't represent Israel as they should be represented; as victims of the cruel Palestinians.

Maybe that's true, but don't tell me about it; explain it to 13-year-old "cruel" Palestinian boy who is currently critically injured, or perhaps, at this point, dead, because he took a rubber-coated metal bullet in the head. He had been throwing rocks at the Israeli soldiers whose only obvious means of response was apparently to shoot back. The boy threw rocks at soldiers and they shot him. What about that doesn't compute with people?

What about a dead child doesn't compute with these heartless people?

He's a kid who was throwing rocks at people who have said the following: "Every house from which there will be firing will simply be destroyed. Every vehicle from which there will be firing will be destroyed." (Courtesy Reuters) How is that comment not supposed to elicit some sort of response? It is an out and out threat on people's homes and lives and personal belongings.

Never mind the threats; denying that the Israeli army has shot children is just a plain lie. There is a well documented history of dead children – the crying mothers, seething fathers, and broken brothers and sisters can attest to that, as can the photographs, taken too many times, of Palestinian children laying dead or dying. Which isn't to say there aren't dead Israeli children on their backs in boxes under the earth because of similar atrocities from the other side.

There are children dying and the most that people can say is "Well, we didn't do it. Blame somebody else." No. Absolutely not. That there are people who are ignorant enough to approach this issue without thinking critically is disheartening; that they would patently ignore Israeli aggression or demean the opposing side for religious reasons and then demand others think exactly like them is downright unacceptable.

Then there are people who claim that this newspaper isn't presenting the full story. Why not write bad stuff about the Arabs they ask? How many times have we ever actually read about the pain inflicted on Palestinians by Israelis? Especially when compared to that of Islamic terrorist groups and the pain they've inflicted on Israelis? Hardly to rarely ever, and yet now I have to hear criticism after daring to criticize a military that I'm supposed to believe is infallible?

Ridiculous. Too often, people on this campus care so much about their own point of view that the opposition point of view just doesn't matter. And many times, opposition points of view don't matter. They're points of view. But facts? How can people dare to oppose written and documented fact?

How can people claim that Hamas has somehow not hurt Palestinians and simultaneously suggest that Arafat is so pro-Israeli, he's Jewish?

And likewise, what of the Israelis who dare to look the other way in the face of the obvious brutality used at times by their own military?

What evidence is needed? Aren't photos of dead children, destroyed families and a peace process that, while once being filled with such hope, now leads to the deaths of hundreds and just isn't enough anymore enough for these people? It doesn't seem that any facts are enough anymore. Nobody even cares about what is really happening, they're so busy being frantically involved in their own points of view even to care about reality.

Take those points of view out on my ears or this newspaper if they will, but it is their own ignorance that is causing problems, not articles in our newspaper. It is their own beliefs that undermine Israeli-Palestinian relations, not articles in a newspaper. And it is their ego-driven ignorance that will prevent any long-term solutions from ever being found.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

Write For Ed-Op

Collegian Arts and Living

Slashers and Zombies:
Halloween is near...

"New horror movies don't follow the rules."

Urban Legends: Final Cut, step right up because you're the sacrificial lamb that must be sacrificed to illustrate the sad fact that slasher films in the past few years have been a lifeless shell imitating their former self. Alaq no one should feel bad that the second round of the offensively bad Urban Legends series was singled out, since it is easily one of the most jobless, exploitative films in recent memory. Tame nudity, tame gore, and a cast of characters and plot that wouldn't make the cut for a World Championship Wrestling taping; it's not hard to see why many yearn for the good old days of slasher films.

Editor's Note: Mike, let me get this straight, a slasher film is only good if it has naked women and lots of unnecessarily explicit gore?

Exactly. The rules of good taste are officially thrown out the window when the entire drive behind crafting a film is based upon the frequency of coeds flashing skin and being murdered; therefore there is absolutely no reason to attempt make a "classy" slasher because one will end up shooting one's self in the foot.

However, despite the obvious reasons not to publish this sub-genre, modern slashers have assisted upon draining all of the life out of this once enormously entertaining group of films. Such a development begs the question: why? Joe Lieberman? John McCain? No doubt pressures from right-assed moral-crusaders such as these politicians have had a direct effect on the beloved slasher. No filmmaker wants to put months of time and effort into a film only to have it murdered in the editing room so as not to offend the higher powers.

But it really is giving too much credit to current Hollywood to refer to as "filmmakers" some of these directors that are just plunked down on the latest milk money crappy modern slasher sequel to bore audiences right out of the theater.

Editor's Note: Sigh. Mike, how can you make fun of current exploitative

Turn to SLASHER, page 7

"But what are the rules?"

As a character in Scream once expressed in a ridiculous and overacted fashion, there are rules in a horror movie. Rules indeed.

Some would suggest that both slasher and zombie films have no rules, no laws overseeing their creation and later progression. Those people are so wrong, so uneducated that it is absolutely disturbing.

But what are the rules?

There are five basic ones that govern every horror film, or at least every theoretically good one.

-Innocence: the characters involved, generally teenagers, have absolutely no idea what in the hell is going on around them. No clue that they're headed to a "spoooooooky" place, no idea they're headed to a "haunted" mansion, no clue that there is a unstoppable serial killer potentially on the loose.

These are not kids who have any idea; they're young, they're hip, they're fun loving, they're nubile, they're horny, they're anxious for drugs, they represent at least three major ethnic or religious groups and above all, they're stupid.

Of course they'll take a walk in the dark forest alone. Why wouldn't they?

Lights suddenly go out? Sure, they'll walk to the basement to switch the breaker despite the fact that there's no real reason for the light to go out.

Somebody missing? That crazy kid, he's probably out taking a walk or fixing the breaker or having sex.

Giant pool of blood on the floor? Somebody must have cut him or herself shaving – what a loser!

-Creativity on the behalf of the killer. There's no point in having a

Turn to RULES, page 7

Stories by Mike Delano and Sam Wilkinson

Cover Design By Sam Wilkinson

THE SOURCE

This Week's Highlights:

DiFranco
Ani DiFranco, part folk, part funk, part rock, part punk, will play the Mullins Center Saturday night at 8 p.m. Famous for her passionate lyrics and unique acoustic arrangements, DiFranco and her guitars are no stranger to the area. Tickets are available by phone at 413-733-2500 or on-line at www.ticketmaster.com.

Boston Pops
At the same time Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops will till the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall with their orchestral arrangements ranging from Gershwin to Paul Simon. Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center box office or by calling 545-2511.

ART

Black (Red), Sound Installation: thru Oct. 28
Work by German artist Rolf Julius
University Gallery

Abstract Notions: thru Oct. 28
Work from University Gallery's Permanent Collection
University Gallery

Earthbound: thru Nov. 6
Hampden Gallery

People I've Never Seen: thru Nov. 9
Central Gallery

Memory: Personal and Social Testimonies: thru Nov. 21
Augusta Savage Gallery

MUSIC

A Cross-Cultural Celebration: Paulina Stark and Horace Clarence Boyer
Oct. 26, 8 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium

Superdrag
Plus American Hi-Fi and Seventeen
Oct. 27, 8 p.m.
Skybox

Ani DiFranco
With Sara Lee
Oct. 28, 8 p.m.
Mullins Center
The Boston Pops
With Keith Lockhart
Oct. 28, 7:30 p.m.
Concert Hall

Guest Faculty Recital
Michelle LaCourse and Nadine Shank
Oct. 29, 8 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

THEATRE/DANCE

The Food Chain
Oct. 25-28, 8 p.m.
Theater 14, Smith College

Beyond Therapy
Oct. 26-28, 8 p.m.
Mainstage, Dickinson Hall, Hampshire College

FILM

AMC Mountain Farms 4
Call for listings: (413) 584-9153
Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters
Call for listings: (413) 586-0555
Northampton

Academy of Music
Call for listings: (413) 584-8435
Northampton

Tower Theaters
Call for listings (413) 533-3456
South Hadley

OTHER

Thursday Night Dance Party
Oct. 26, 9 p.m.
Skybox

Beit Café/Israel Open Mic
Oct. 26, 7:30 p.m.
Bangs Community Center, Rm. 101

Rocky Horror Picture Show
Oct. 31, 8 & 11 p.m.
Campus Center Auditorium

ATTENTION:

The Source wants YOUR events. Got a performance or a club meeting you want advertised for FREE? Bring it down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement or email us at sourcesubmissions@hotmail.com.

World Series dominates television

Well, for the most part television is officially back. It's a late start, thanks to not only the late running of the summer Olympics (damn the southern hemisphere and the laws of science) but also the presidential debates and the impending election (damn the democratic system), and now, as things are starting to calm down and the election draws closer and the jokes of Al Gore being a titanium rod and the comments on the stupidity of George W. Bush become more and more repetitious and unfunny, we begin to settle back into the groove that comes every fall and spring.

There's just one thing that has belated the complete metamorphoses from the summer to fall. And that one thing would be the World Series. Now normally we are watching two teams from usually two different areas of the country battle for the title for the best team in major league baseball. But this year it's different. In 1989 we had the battle of the bay in which the Oakland Athletics played the San Francisco Giants in which one team had to cross the Golden Gate Bridge to play at the other's field. This marked the first time that this event happened in California, but not the first time it ever happened. There was a time early in the twentieth century in which it was not that uncommon for the two teams in the New York City to battle for the right to call themselves the best team in the world. However, for the last fifty-four years it hadn't occurred.

But history has come around and repeated itself, to a degree. In 1955 and 1956 the Yankees and the Brooklyn Dodgers did battle in the Empire State. In the year 2000 The Bronx Bombers are doing battle with pride of Queens, the New York Mets. What does this have to do with television you ask? Well up here in the north and in Boston Red Sox country (where our motto is "We're not Mets fans because we like the Mets; we are Mets fans because we hate the Yankees"), we acknowledge that these are the best two teams in baseball and that it is a historic occurrence. Up here we see Letterman, Conan and Jon Stewart make jokes about the players, coaches and their fans. But in the lower part of New York where the fans are serious and one of the two stadiums are less than a two hour drive (without traffic) from any one of the five boroughs, there is a non-stop hype for the most anticipated competition since decathletes Dan and Dave.

Every story on the five, six, ten and eleven o'clock news that follows politics, rated in the colors and memorabilia of one particular team including the teddy bear in the window of a house which is the artistic combination of white, navy blue, royal blue, black, and bright orange (possibly the ugliest combination of colors ever). The shots from the highway of clever license plates that say things like "MTS4EVA", "YNKs3NRO", "JTrRULZ", "MTZn7" and "I (heart) CRSN"... oh wait, that's MTV. When I was down in Long Island (where the majority is Mets fans) there are at least three separate cable channels that are dedicated to New York Sports and they couldn't be happier that these two teams are doing battle. There are countless interviews with Joe Torre, Bobby Valentine, Derek Jeter, Mike Piazza, and Turk Wendell, and it seems that for each player, including the pine riders, there is a music video.

But soon that is going to be done and the winner will be celebraed for a week and then forgotten. And when that finally occurs FOX will be that last network to air a majority of their new episodes of shows. Scheduled for a week from today the latest "Simpson's Halloween Special" will air, and then that upcoming Sunday "The Simpson's" will begin a new season with special guests The Who. On that particular date "Futurama," "King of the Hill," and "Malcolm in the Middle" will air and there will be something to watch on Sunday after football.

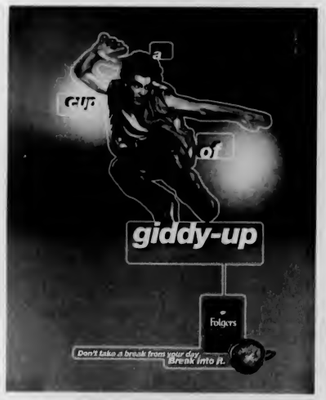
Tonight after "Friends" NBC will air a new series starring Steven Weber and Chris Elliot called "Cursed". According to the commercial and the promos it's a comedy about Steven Weber who is cursed. Doesn't sound too promising, but Chris Elliot is a good enough reason as any to watch it.

FOX premiered David E. Kelley's new show "Boston Public" last Monday, and although it's no "Ally McBeal" or "The Practice" it is an interesting show nonetheless. Zachary Ty Bryan (from "Home Improvement" fame) stars as one of the inner city schools bullies. Nicky Catt from this springs Boiler Room also stars in the show. The characters are much like those in Kelley's first and second television series "Northern Exposure" and "Piket Fences," outrageous and exaggerated. Keep an eye out on this show, which precedes the Emmy winning "Ally McBeal" on FOX.

"Frasier" premiered its new season this past Tuesday and picked up right where it left off with Niles and Daphne dying into a much-anticipated romance. "Frasier" is one of the best comedies on NBC and without a doubt one of the most popular and the largest moneymaker. Also, "The Michael Richards Show" premiered, and despite the fact that I am a Michael Richards and Tim Meadows fan I have mixed feelings about this show. It's no "Seinfeld" (obviously) because it focuses on Richard's physical comedy routine, which is funny, but it's not really stand up. I think though, that if it is given a chance it will be popular.

What To Watch
Of course I'll give my usual plug for "ER" and "Gideon's Crossing" but even I will be switching from those shows and others while watching the World Series.

Nick Pizzolato is a Collegian Columnist.



Massachusetts School of Law
AT ANDOVER
CLASSES START IN JANUARY
• LSAT NOT REQUIRED
• DAY AND EVENING PROGRAMS
• AFFORDABLE TUITION PLANS - 1/2 THE MEDIAN LAW SCHOOL TUITION IN NEW ENGLAND
• OUR PRACTICAL/THEORETICAL PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR THE PRACTICE OF LAW AS WELL AS NUMEROUS OTHER PROFESSIONS
THE LEADER OF REFORM IN LEGAL EDUCATION
500 FEDERAL STREET, ANDOVER, MA 01810
Phone: (978) 681-0800 • email: pcolby@mslaw.edu
www.mslaw.edu
CONTACT US NOW FOR YOUR COPY OF FEDERAL REPORTS 600+ THINGS YOU CAN DO WITH A LAW DEGREE

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS
A great place to get contact lenses
Convenient hours and location
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Special Offer: $25 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

Frederick H. Boom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

FOR THE RECORD
104 NORTH PLEASANT ST., AMHERST
MIDNIGHT SALE
OCTOBER 30 → 31

U2
CDs
$13.99
EACH

GODSMACK
AND DON'T FORGET! BRAND-NEW
PJ HARVEY, JAY-Z
INSANE CLOWN POSSE, AND MORE!

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
NEW YORK STYLE ATMOSPHERE IN DOWNTOWN AMHERST
WEEKLY ENTERTAINMENT SCHEDULE
THURSDAY - The Monkey Bar presents ELEMENT featuring DJ Fooz spinning the best in progressive house, trance, & Top 40 dance
No cover before 10:00
FRIDAY - The best in Top 40, hip-hop, r+b, & house spun by DJ Uneek
SATURDAY - The Monkey Bar Presents Halloween Havoc
$100 CASH PRIZE for Best Costume
FREE CD's to the first 25 people in costume
Monkey Bar is still Available for a private party on Halloween Night
Register to win at 10:30PM
LOCATED @ 63 N. PLEASANT ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST 250-1000

slasher

continued from page 5

sequels when in the heyday of slashers they veered ridiculously close to double digits and became progressively worse with every attempt?

Fully recognized is the hypocrisy of the situation with one important difference: slasher films of the past were actually fun. This is purely a matter of opinion, as is my opinion that said films didn't get progressively worse but instead more endearing, but anyone that will argue that this new breed of Disney slasher can compete with the classics has overdosed on TRL and Maxim magazine. Witness the brilliant progression of the Friday the 13th series, opening with four strong entries, lapsing before the series climax at VI: Jason Lives!, and settling comfortably for the final four entries, with more on the way. And who can forget the cinematic arc of the Sleepaway Camp trilogy, starting from a one-shock vehicle and evolving into a loving, intelligent tribute to slasher campiness?

Compare such cinematic Mack trucks to the cinematic speed bump that is Final Cut. Sure, you can get together with a bunch of friends and poke fun at the atrocity, but its like squeezing water out of a rock. the film's just not giving you any help. The lack of nudity or even sufficient sexual tension and suitable gore levels don't serve to make this a more socially acceptable film, since slashers are laughed at and ridiculed no matter the quality. So in this misguided attempt for acceptance just cheapens the experience for the slasher fans that are pained to see their favorite type of film kicked in the shin. Slasher fans need to unite and educate the youth that flock to these crappy films and let them know that they don't have to settle for this crap; there has been better and can be better. We don't want slashers to go away, we just want crap like Final Cut out of the mainstream, or else the return of the truly enjoyable slasher will face an insurmountable pile of watered down dreck to climb over.

The Saw is Family
Gunnar Hansen plays the demonic Leatherface in Texas Chainsaw Massacre.

rules

continued from page 5

slasher or a zombie film with a killer/s that simply stab people with a butcher knife. That's so played.

Who can forget Crispin of Nazareth, a scene in Friday the 13th Part 4 in which Crispin Glover, after being attached to a door frame by his hands and feet, is split in half by an oncoming Jason Voorhees! Oh the hilarity.

And what of that wacky Freddy Krueger, who once cleverly disguised himself as a totally rocking motorcycle that somebody decided to ride before being destroyed by the same bike.

Let's not even talk about the singular spike scene in Halloween 6. That poor nurse, how was she to know that the only giant spike on the mile long wall behind her would eventually support her body weight as she was attached to it via the giant hole in her neck.

How about the Santa Claus killer in much-maligned Silent Night/Deadly Night and how he stuck a half naked coed to taxidermied buck horns. Absolutely brilliant. Think, if nothing else, of the message: there she was, half naked, about it get it on and then she got stuck, except in getting stuck, she was killed. Very subtle message, but no doubt there: sex is dangerous so don't have it.

The reporter in Sleepaway Camp 3 died because she smiled some "white powder" given to her by the killer. What was that "white powder" really? Who knows, but it killed her almost instantly. A good show by an underrepresented gender in the slasher film genre: women. Too often, good possible killers (and no, Rebecca Gayheart in Urban Legend does not count) are not women. Unfortunate.

And of course, back to Jason Voorhees and his impossible to ignore punch-out scene with random character on top of a building in Friday the 15th 8. Character: punch, punch, punch, punch, punch, punch, punch, punch, punch, punch, punch, then, "Go ahead Jason, now you try," or some clever Sylvester Stallone-like comment. What happens? Jason: punch, character beheaded, head falls off building then rolls around into a garbage can. There's no denying that.

But there are sub-rules for clever deaths: must specifically, nobody can die via the gun or explosion. Both are absolutely cheap ways to kill off characters and do not involve slashing – it is for this reason that Screams 2 and 3 just do not count as good slasher films. But what about where the killer kills?

Camps, sure, that's been done, but a mall? Let's talk about Dawn of the Dead, George Romero's brilliant follow-up to Night of the Living Dead. What about a boat like in Friday the 13th 8? A lesbian witch coven in Silent Night/Deadly Night 4? In dreams with Nightmare on Elm Streets?

Brilliant planning by writers. Rather than stick to basics, camps or abandoned farmhouses, these are movies trying to communicate that you better watch your ass no matter where you are.

The most important of all slasher films – gratuitous T and A. There's no doubting that a naked woman makes a good movie better, at least theoretically. Sometimes, the T and A is downright skanky but there are occasionally satisfying "nekkid" people.

And then? While killers are killing, while teens are screwing, somebody goes and screws everything up and discovers a body. Then, the panic sets in. Then, the fear sets in.

Who's doing all of this killing?

Who's committing these horrible crimes?

Which one of the co-eds is going to scream, say something stupid or just be all around ignorant sun of a gun?

Probably all but one or two of them. Somebody's going to walk into the dark and never come back. Somebody's going to arm themselves beyond all reason and be killed from behind. Somebody's going to get slaughtered while trying to drive away in the car without gasoline. These are the things that happen when people finally realize that has happened.

There's a killer getting his (or occasionally her) groove on and people are dying. Of course, somebody's going to get their kill or stop on too, and they're going to oppose the bad guy. And what happens?

Finally, after roughly 88 minutes of pure killing action, it's the final scene, and guaranteed to be an absolute doozy. The killer's going to be killed at least 1,000 times before being actually stopped. The killer will be stabbed, burned, torched, poked, prodded, shot, injured, wounded, pained, hanged, disemboweled, immolated, skinned (alive or otherwise), profoundly discombobulated, and at the end, it'll still take an act of absolute God to actually kill him. An act of absolute God.

Jason had to be hung and it didn't kill him, chained up underwater and it didn't kill him, turned into a little kid and it didn't stop him and finally, blown up, which kind of stopped him in the last movie but it didn't stop the worm in his heart that turned other people, when eating the worm, into killers.

Michael Myers from Halloween had to be pushed out a window, it didn't kill him; thrown down a mine shaft, didn't kill him; controlled by druids, didn't stop him, and finally beheaded, which may or may not stop him.

(And this is the other reason the Scream movies just do not count—the killers were always, actually, killed at the end of the damn films. Always. Talk about absolutely ridiculous, eh?)

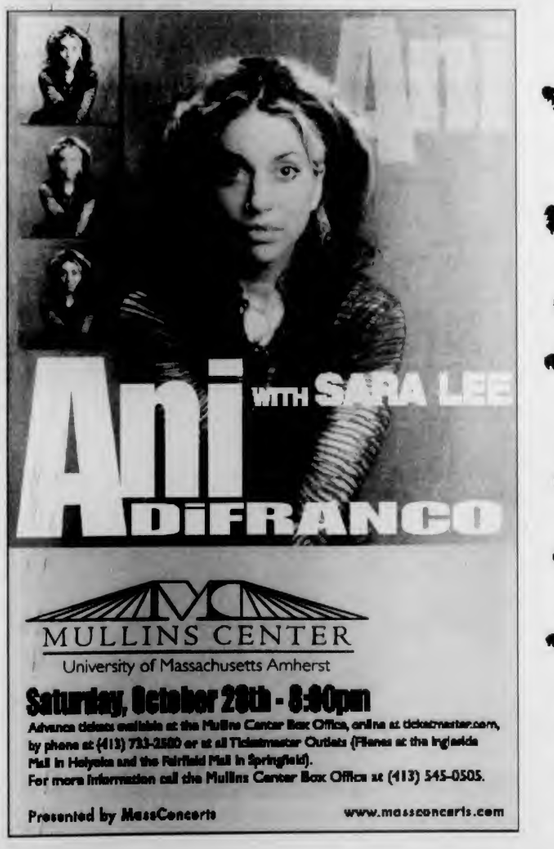
Freddy Krueger had to be stopped in any number of insane ways and yet, if you saw Friday the 13th 8, he's still alive and kicking it in hell.

Those five basic rules (stupid characters, clever deaths, nudity, panic and an ending) are what make a good horror movie. There are other, as mentioned before, lesser rules, including a time requirement for these movies (more than 93 minutes and the movie has taken far too long).

Not agreeing to or following these rules is almost definite slasher or zombie film suicide. That said, zombie films have different rules, most importantly that all deaths must come from wounds to the head and that they always involve some unexplained phenomenon that turns the dead into deadmakers (like a killer, only one who makes death).

Editor's Note: There are only so many ways to say killer. Dead-maker is one of those ways.

After reading this, one can only hope that the rules have been explained clearly enough so that you can understand what it is that you're watching. Not understanding is risking slasher movie ignorance, a state that nobody should have to live in.



MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Saturday, October 28th - 8:00pm
Advance tickets available at the Mullins Center Box Office, online at ticketmaster.com, by phone at (413) 733-2500 or at all Ticketmaster Outlets (Filenes at the Ingleside Mall in Holyoke and the Fairfield Mall in Springfield).
For more information call the Mullins Center Box Office at (413) 545-0505.
Presented by MassConcerts www.massconcerts.com

SCARED YOU WON'T FIND A CO-OP OR INTERNSHIP FOR THIS SPRING?
Take the first step!
Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session!

Mondays		Wednesdays
1:30 - 2:10pm	114 Stockbridge	2 - 2:40pm	1322 Lederle GRT
3 - 3:40pm	103 South College	3 - 3:40pm	13 Isenberg SOM
		4 - 4:40pm	274 Bartlett
Tuesdays		Thursdays
10 - 10:40am	1334 Lederle GRT	11:15 - 11:55am	274 Bartlett
1 - 1:40pm	114 Stockbridge	3 - 3:40pm	103 South College
2 - 2:40pm	8 Isenberg SOM	3:35 - 4:15pm	211 Marston
4 - 4:40pm	15 Marston

Check out these SUPERNATURAL opportunities!
Center for Women's Policy Studies: Spring internship, seeking WOST, ENG and GOVT majors
EF Education: Spring co-op, seeking ENG and LANG majors
Fairview Machine: Spring co-op, seeking MKTG and RES ECON majors
Fidelity Investments: Spring internship, seeking ECON, SOM, and RES ECON majors
Smithsonian: Spring internships and co-ops, seeking ART, ART HIST, HIST, ENG, ANTHR and NATIVE AMERICAN STUDIES majors
State Street Bank: Spring internship, seeking ECON, SOM, and RES ECON majors
United Technologies: Spring co-op, seeking ACCTG and FINANCE majors

For more information, call the Field Experience Office at 545-6265 or see our website www-cen.acad.umass.edu

ARTIST PROFILE

Making a film, a company, and an improvement to Pee-Wee Herman

By Bryan McAllister
Collegian Staff

Do you want to make movies at your age? If it seems impossible, think again: two MA residents have already written two feature-length screenplays and been in a screenwriting competition. Jay Burns and Jay Petrella will shoot their screenplay, Once Upon a Town, this spring on digital video with their production company, Pug Eye. The Collegian talked with them about their filmmaking and writing experiences.

COLLEGIAN: How did you get into movie-making?

BURNS: Back in 1998, Jay and I both had a general interest in film, and we wrote our first script called The Deans List.

PETRELLA: We were at the hot dog stand one time, and we said, "Let's make a movie."

COLLEGIAN: Who are your idols and inspirations in film?

BURNS: With this film, Once Upon a Town, we wanted to give it an 80's feel – One Crazy Summer, Ferris Bueller, the movies of Randy Savage; the feedback so far is that.

PETRELLA: We wanted to make Pee Wee Herman, but even funnier.

BURNS: Just like Pee Wee, we've been known to touch ourselves a few times.

COLLEGIAN: How did you think of the idea for the screenplay?

BURNS: The screenplay is loosely based on our lives, growing up on stories we've heard and told from our group of friends.

PETRELLA: It's basically stuff that happened in our lives that we made funny.

BURNS: The general story is of two townie has-beens who are going nowhere fast, and to find love they have to take on an old enemy from childhood, who's left and come back looking for a piece of their ass.

PETRELLA: How we wrote the movie is we just took fortune cookies, and strung them along to make sentences.

BURNS: Luckily by doing that, we were able to learn Chinese.

COLLEGIAN: Describe how the movie is similar or different to other coming-of-age stories.

BURNS: It definitely isn't coming of age at all! When I describe this to other people, pretty much everything that goes into festivals is coming of age stories. Nobody's coming of any ages in here.

COLLEGIAN: What's the best teen movie ever made?

BURNS: The New Kids on the Block "Hanging Tough" video. I LOVE those boys. I'm serious about that.

PETRELLA: I actually met Joey Mackentire once. All I did was ask him why he had such a strong Boston accent, and he flipped me off. I would say I don't even think of this film as a teen movie, so this one doesn't even compare.

COLLEGIAN: How long did it take to write the screenplay? And how long is the movie?

BURNS: Usually it's an average of a minute per page, and it's like 112 pages, so it will be between 100-112 minutes. The screenplay took about a month to write.

PETRELLA: We tried to write on a Monday or Tuesday. My sister was always home so I was able to hang out with her a lot.

COLLEGIAN: What was the hardest part about writing the screenplay? The easiest?

PETRELLA: The easiest part was we already had the story and knew what we wanted to say. We just had to put it into words.

BURNS: We learned from the first screenplay that we needed to have the story mapped out. It's a lot easier when you've got 2 people and they can bump off each other.

COLLEGIAN: Did you have certain scenes in mind from the beginning that you absolutely had to use?

BURNS: There's an oral sex scene with a banana that cost us an actor that would have taken the part otherwise. But we said that we actually had to keep it in.

PETRELLA: A lot of the stuff in the movie was stuff that happened to us, so we wanted to keep it in there.

BURNS: You'll find that once the movie comes out, we'll have no friends. But after that we'll be able to pay them better.

COLLEGIAN: How will you shoot the film? Where will you shoot it?

BURNS: The locations are going to be a lot of schoolyards in Massachusetts. Our big climactic scene is in a schoolyard. A lot of the stuff other than that is tough, like we have to simulate the Boston Marathon. We're shooting on digital video. That's what Spike Lee shot Bamboozled on. Digital is cheaper, and cost effective. You can pretty much get close to film quality and have a final product. We'll have a whole crew.

PETRELLA: We can edit ourselves.

COLLEGIAN: UMass doesn't have a film major and only has a film certificate. Do you think we need more film on campus?

BURNS: I think education in film is important for all involved. Now it's becoming a huge medium for people to study in. The most support has come from each other, supporting each other. We've had great support by people working for free. Neither Jay nor I have gone to school for film.

PETRELLA: All our family and friends have helped us out. You can't teach creativity. They can teach you how to use the equipment but not creativity.

COLLEGIAN: What's your favorite movie?

BURNS: My favorite comedy is Bottle Rocket.

PETRELLA: Tough question. The Adventures of Baron Muenchausen. I actually don't mind that movie.

COLLEGIAN: Would you ever make a porno film, if you really needed the money?

BURNS: I would STAR in a porno. Did you say "Would we" or "Have we?"

PETELLA: I would not think twice.

COLLEGIAN: What's the best advice you can give to aspiring screenwriters?

BURNS: If you want the job to get done well and quickly, get a writing partner. Especially if writing comedy. When we wrote The Deans List, there were killing scenes we actually acted out.

PETELLA: Just go for broke. Don't close a window before opening another one.

COLLEGIAN: What's Pug Eye, your production company, mean?

PETELLA: When a pug gets really nervous, its eye pops out of its head, and you have to push it back in. Pug Eye is just us. We're a partnership. We're a business.

COLLEGIAN: Any upcoming projects?

PETELLA: On Nov. 28th, at the Providence Comedy Connection, our production company Pug Eye Productions will be holding a night of comedy called "Insane Institutionalized and Incarcerated." It's $6 at the door at 6:30 p.m. to raise money and awareness for the film. We have some of the best comedians. On Nov. 30th, at URI Auditorium, Pug Eye will be sponsoring an event with the RI International Film Festival called "If Pauly Shore can do it, why can't I? Making a living the Hollywood way." That's actors answering Q&A for anyone with an interest in Hollywood. It's free for all.

COURTESY NICK PESCHIERA / Editor-in-Chief

Jason Burns and Jason Petrella have combined wits to come up with a full length motion picture.

Tranquil transitions black metal to goth Mystikal gets ready to "Jump" Master P

DARK TRANQUILITY
Haven
Century Media

Dark Tranquillity started out as a blackened death metal band, grew into one of the key examples of the Gothenburg melodic-death sound, and then mellowed out into almost a regular progmetal band. The band seems to love making a statement of change with each album it puts out – so what statement does Haven make?

It makes a few: 1) Dark Tranquillity is one of the best modern metal bands in the world, 2) they never forgot how to be brutal, and 3) that they still haven't stopped growing.

Projector, DT's last album, was greeted with a deafening round of ambivalence by fans. It was good, sure, that couldn't be denied – but where was the heaviness? Where were the break-your-face punches amongst the melodies? There were doubts as to whether DT still had it. They do.

Haven is solid. From the brilliant and heavy "The Wonders at your Feet" and (my personal favorite) "Feast of Burden," to slower and more poignant tracks like "Indifferent Suns" and "Fabric," the Swedes show their full range more than ever before. Vocalist Mikael Stanne's voice has developed to the point where he can use his broken-glass death voice almost to croon with the melodies – a rare treat. Stanne has become a totally unique singer in the black/death/thrash group, no rare feat in such confining and exclusive genres. The other key ingredient in the mix is Martin Brandstrom's electronics – his keyboards and programming give DT a texture and layer unique in this variety of music.

DT's trademark has always been to evolve and not keep pace with the other bands they're grouped with. In Flames have become more involved with hooks and catchy choruses, The Haunted have gone for straight-ahead brutality, and At The Gates broke up. Following none of these paths, DT have instead become unique – they follow no trends, but instead make them. With Haven, the mixture of black, goth, thrash, melody, death, and any other number of other subcategories have created something truly unique and beautiful. Another step in the progression of Dark Tranquillity, Haven is a worthy addition to any hardcore metal fan's library, and perhaps even accessible and polished enough to make some new converts. Simply great music. (Rob Schulze)

MYSTIKAL
Let's Get Ready live

Master P is probably kicking himself and yelling "ughh-no" for letting the vocally acrobatic Mystikal get away. The former No Limit soldier rises to the occasion with Let's Get Ready. This is an album in which Mystikal finally has the production to compliment his eccentric flow. For so long, the one-dimensional muzak of P's Beats By The Pound hindered the braided wonder from becoming the superstar that this opus will surely make him.

Let's Get Ready is a stylistic detour in the right direction. Even the CD's cover is a welcome relief from his former label's trademark use of Pen & Pixel. On the inside there are no No Limit soldiers on Mystikal's musical battlefield. Whether it's the refreshing cameos (Da Brat, Nivea, and Outkast) or an inspired coalition of producers (Bink!, The Neptunes, among others) this is not the same old Newlins native.

significant others

You may have heard the self-explanatory "Shake Ya Ass" gyrating up the Hot 100, but "Mystikal Fever" pays some homage to that other female body part fellas cannot seem to get enough of. This time out Mystikal is insistent on getting us on that dance floor. And if the bouncy "Jump" or the bonus track, last year's summer jam "Neck Uv Da Woods," doesn't persuade you, then the infinitely jiggy "Danger (Been So Long)" will. "Danger" has enough honey-coated R&B flavor to give you diabetes.

When you are done shaking what your momma gave ya, the braided one flips it with socially commentary in the us-against-the-world "Ain't Gonna See Tomorrow." The track is surprisingly insightful in explaining the crisis of black families. Lyrics like "we ain't married/ so we can't get divorced/ so the only thing left is for men to violent" make you ponder.

Let's Get Ready represents a big step forward for Mystikal. He may alienate some northerners with country fare like "Big Truck Boys" and piss off rap purists with the Destiny's Child-sounding "Family." In the end, however, Mystikal is getting ready for the next level with potential that truly seems, for the first time in his career, to have no limit. (Lenny Holston)

Big weekend for jamming

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

If you are into the jazz or the jamband scene, this is certainly a great week for you to be in the vicintty of Northampton. For the next five days, Northampton will be the landing pad for a very eclectic group of performers.

This overwhelming weekend begins on Thursday night, when you must think deeply and make an important decision. Do you want to listen to jazz or jamband tonight? This decision is made even more difficult by the caliber and road-record of both performers. In the jazz corner is the famed Charlie Hunter with his amazing eight-string guitar/bass. In the jamband corner, we have Virginia-based The Agents of Good Roots. The Agents of Good Roots are a very solid jam/funk band who put on one hell of a show. They have opened for the Dave Matthews Band many times and are most certainly worth the $7 admission charge at the Iron Horse beginning at 10 p.m. Personally, I will be attending Charlie Hunter at the Pearl Street Clubroom. I have never seen him, but what I have heard knocks my socks off. Hunter plays an amazing eight-string guitar that has five strings plugged into a guitar amp and the remaining three plugged into a bass amp. From what I have heard, Charlie Hunter is a one-man soloing machine, being able to jam out the solo guitar riffs while at the same time playing the bass line. I cannot wait to see this guy in his element. His performance begins at 8:30 p.m. at Pearl Street.

Friday brings the unique sound of The Slip to the Iron Horse Music Hall. The Slip bring an assortment of music styles, ranging from free-form jazz instrumentals to funked-up grooves. They are known for their very interesting and different use of time signatures, speeding up and slowing down tempos throughout their performances. This group has filled many big houses including the, Wetlands Preserve in New York. They have been known to drop down a couple of marathon shows. One New Year's Eve show, they played for a continuous seven and a half hours. Do not miss them on Friday night at 10 p.m. at the Iron Horse.

Luckily, we are given a little breather on Saturday, as we will need it for the grand finale: String Cheese Incident. String Cheese Incident is one of the nation's growing jambands, as many people have picked them to fill the void while Phish is on hiatus for the next year. Personally, I would not be surprised to see these guys from Colorado skyrocket to near-Phish levels of acclaim. They bring a very jazzy, bluegrass feel, but can also lay down a pretty mean jam. Their lead soloist Michael Kang is amazing as he switches between electric guitar, mandolin and violin. String Cheese headlined the Berkshire Music Festival this summer, playing all three days. They are beginning to make a name for themselves here in the Northeast, as they have already conquered the West. Be sure to check them out Sunday night at 8 p.m. at the beautiful Calvin Theater in Northampton.

COURTESY IAN KALEY

The Slip joins the jam band festivities this weekend in Northampton.

Burns' dismissal the latest travesty for B's

Pat Burns knew his time in Boston was all but gone.

"When do you think it'll be my turn?" he asked in the opening week of the season, acknowledging that popular opinion had him pegged as the first coach to be let go this year. "I guess we're fooling everybody by winning like this. We'll see."

With the firing of Burns yesterday morning, the Boston Bruins are fooling no one but themselves.

Pat Burns arrived in Beantown three years ago with nothing to lose. As one of the most successful coaches in league history, Burns was handed the reigns of a young, struggling club and was expected to turn things around. He had done it before, in Toronto, taking the 1992 Leafs to the conference finals after 13 years of sub-.500 hockey. His arrival in Boston yielded similar results, as the Bruins improved by 30 points and climbed back into the playoff race. Although a first round exit that year put an end to the near-Cinderella story, the Bruins had again established a strong foothold in the league.

Or so it seemed.

Three years later, that foothold has deteriorated. Plagued by injuries, contract disputes, inexperience and poor management, the Bruins have hit rock bottom. In any sport, this overwhelming lack of success is attributed to the head coach, the ringleader, the one who rallies the troops. It's a job few have done better than Burns; his tenacity, desire, and true love of the game have been unrivaled during his tenure in the league. What ultimately bought him his ticket out of town yesterday afternoon was a lack of talent, a bench "full of potential" that was simply not ready for action in the Big Show. No artist can work without his tools; Burns had been given none.

Consider the Stanley Cup champions of the past year. The New Jersey Devils have housed a superstar at every position, have maintained a superb balance of young talent and veteran experience, and have protected their net with the best goaltender in the league. During their championship run this past spring, the Devils changed head coaches without missing a beat. The coach is there to guide, to direct, but it is ultimately the players who put the puck in the net. It is the players who utilize each shift to dictate the tempo of the game. The Devils, with John Doe behind the bench, are still a force on the ice. That much talent in one place has a tendency to coach itself. The Boston Bruins, however, are the polar opposite, skating John Doe at every position while pointing fingers at the one man getting the job done.

At the end of last season, the status of Burns dominated the Boston sports scene. In the end, GM Harry Sinden decided to retain the coach for at least another year. His motivations at the time were clear: the team had just traded away Raymond Bourque and missed the playoffs for the second time in four years. They needed something to bring the fans back, and decided that, for the time being, fan favorite Burns would be the bait. As a 3-0-1 start to this season gave way to an ugly 0-4 slump on the road, however, management decided the time had finally come to throw Burns back. Sinden had his excuse, and acted.

Like any team that fires a head coach during the season, the Bruins are trying to shake things up, to send a message that losing is unacceptable. While the timing is absurd (only eight games into the season), the desire to spark some emotion in this team is understandable. If only Boston had a management smart enough to shake up the right areas. Consider this quote from Sinden, Boston's own man behind the curtain. "We believe that the players on this team have the talent to be a contending playoff club, but have not played up to that potential. I felt a coaching change was necessary at this time for us to move forward."

Please, Harry. We've heard it before. This team is nowhere near being a playoff contender. Too many holes, too many excuses.

With Burns having exited stage right, the hot seat in Boston now belongs to Mike Keenan. The Bruins are Keenan's sixth team since 1984, a 16-year period that has earned the coach both accolades and the ire of players and fans alike. While his past successes, which include a Jack Adams award and a Stanley Cup in 1994 with the New York Rangers, are impressive, the decision to bring him to Boston at this point in time is quite unclear. His aggressive approach to coaching closely mirrors the style of Burns, leading fans to wonder why the team is taking such a small step away from a problem they considered to be so severe.

Mike Keenan will do no better in Boston than Pat Burns did. Perhaps the team will respond positively to the change for a short period of time, but that solves no long-term problems. The team still lacks a marquee player, an even balance of youth and experience, and consistency in net. It lacks an upper management that truly desires success. As long as the team makes a buck, that's good enough for them.

For the fans, however, it's not. Just making the playoffs is not an achievement in Boston. When the post-season rolls around, we expect our teams to be there and have success. Pat Burns, with the right tools, could have taken us there.

Let's go Avalanche.

Matt Despres is a Collegian Columnist

All over the sporting map

It's the third "dritte und vierzig acht über den Zuständen" (better known to English speakers as "Third and Forty-Eight Across the Nation"). And yes, all quotes are valid, genuine, legitimate, blah, blah.

Punkin' Chunkin'

It's a bird. No, it's a plane. No, it's a five-pound pumpkin!

That's right folks, it's that time of year again when pumpkins are being launched from engineered machines over distances of 300 feet. It's the 2000 Dutchess Community College's Punkin' Chunkin' Competition that takes place annually on Sunday, October 29th, at Secor's Farm in LeGrange, NY.

"It's very exhilarating for the students," DCC's Punkin' Chunkin' Competition coordinator Tony Zito said. "When their machines actually work, the students are almost shocked and they jump up and down, hooting and hollering – they almost look like guys in the early movies when they find out that their airplane is going to fly."

At DCC, Punkin' Chunkin' is defined as teams of students in opposition, who launch pumpkins as far and as accurate as possible from machines that they have been working on for over two months.

"It gives them experience in engineering design," Zito said. "In order to win machines have to be accurate and powerful."

Zito also said that the machines must be sturdy and proficient enough to be rebuilt on location wherever the competition is held. Students start building their contraptions in the fall. When the competition commences on Sunday at 11 A.M., each team will be entitled to five shots (the pumpkin must meet or exceed five pounds). And for each shot, you multiply the weight of the pumpkin by the distance it travels to total the team's points. The best four shots are combined to tally the team's final score. And the winning team in each division will carry away the 2000 championship trophy and Punkin' Chunkin' t-shirts for all team members. Hooray! An award will also be awarded for the longest single shot.

Dritte und Vierzig Acht über den Zuständen
(THIRD AND FORTY-EIGHT ACROSS THE NATION)

The long shot record, established in 1998, is 341 feet. Damn.

"It's just an overall positive experience," Zito said. "We had about 500-600 fans last year and when the first pumpkin was launched, they were stunned. Oohs and Aahs were heard everywhere and they all talked about was how remarkable it was."

It's extremely difficult to capture the essence of pumpkin catapulting. But what's even more captivating is the fact that Punkin' Chunkin' has to take place before Old Hallow's Eve, because after the spooky holiday, the orange fruits are of the lacking.

"It's amazing how quickly pumpkins disappear after Halloween," Zito said.

The competition is free and open to the public. Spectators should bring lawn chairs or blankets and ponchos for pumpkin seed protection. Refreshments will be available.

College Rodeo

Between June 11-17 this past year, every child's fantasy became a reality for four women at Hill College. Not only did they have the opportunity to compete in the National Finals Rodeo, but they were named the number one women's college rodeo team in the Southern Region.

The Southern Region is made up of rodeo powerhouses like Wharton County Jr. College and North Central Texas College. Though the conference appears intimidating to the average rodeo junkie, Michelle Alley, Kristin Looper, Tina Alverez, and Josey Stubblefield, the four local heroes for Hill College were not in the least bit afraid.

These four women excelled in every aspect of college rodeo. Stubblefield and Alverez may have conquered the world of breakaway roping, but neither expected Alley to finish ninth in the country. Her remarkable roping was only a cheap appetizer to her teammate Looper's

Turn to HORN, page 10

Going on an alphabetical journey

BRYAN SMITH

I know, we are all college students and hopefully do not need a lesson in our ABCs. I am going to profess one to you anyway, but mine will have a special twist. A twist of Maroon and White.

A: Anton McKenzie, a sophomore defensive back for the football team, had two sacks against AIC. He also downed a punt inside the Yellow Jackets one yard line.

B: Bruiser Flint and the men's basketball team open their season with an exhibition game versus the California All-Stars on Nov. 3.

C: Cross Country, men's and women's, will compete in the Atlantic 10 Championships this weekend.

D: Dunks... we'll see a lot of them this season out of freshman Jameel Pugh.

E: Every attempt should be made by students to attend all UMass home games. We'll start there. Once we combat that we will talk about road games.

F: Field Hockey played in its fifth overtime game of the season on Tuesday, a 2-1 victory over Dartmouth.

G: Goalie Bryan O'Quinn of the men's soccer team is two shutouts away from the Minuteman career record.

H: Hockey tied No. 12 Colgate in dramatic fashion on Oct. 21 with two goals in the game's final moments.

I: Injuries, a staple of sport, has hit the wide receiving core of the football team hard this season.

J: Jafra Depontes of the women's tennis team hails from Kaliua-Kona, HI.

K: Kathy Coyner will captain the women's basketball team for the second consecutive season.

L: Lymarie Llovet, you cannot beat the double-l. Do not change anything.

M: Martin Milkjo scored two goals in his return to the ice after a 10-month layoff due to a knee injury.

N: No mercy. The enemy (UMass opponents) receive none. Minutemen and Minutewomen give less.

O: Oh, by the way President Bulger, are there any talks of new athletic facilities being built on campus? Just wondering.

P: Peaking! What the men's water polo team tends to do as the post-season approaches.

Q: Quinlan, one half of the two-headed monster that causes headaches for opposing run defenses, scored UMass' first two touchdowns against AIC.

R: Rebecca Hasson has played in all 58 of the volleyball team's games this season. This is not a mistake, there is a maximum of five games in a volleyball match.

S: Sarah Jones represented the United States and Sarah Lauritzen rowed for Denmark in the Sydney Olympics. Both are former rowers for the women's crew team.

T: Teamwork. All UMass athletes are proficient in this idea. It leads to winning teams. We have a lot. Be a fan of all sports, not just the ones that bring in revenue.

U: UConn. Everyone on this campus should have hatred for our arch-rival. Southwest, cheer "Huskies suck, Huskies suck" rather than "Yankees suck, Yankees suck."

V: Victories. Six in a row. Men's tennis. Undefeated. Good job by them.

W: Women's soccer needs to earn two points to clinch a spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

X: Xylophones rang at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium for Band Day. Thanks to George Parks for organizing a day for the high school bands to showcase what they can do. George, as always it was another good showing for the "Power and Class of UMass."

Y: Yummy is the only word to describe the clam chowder in the press box at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium. If you write for the Collegian you might be able to get a bowl.

Z: Zowie Tucker has eight shutouts for the field hockey team this year.

Bryan Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Seniors preparing for last call Ciocca, Green leave their legacy

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Kara Ciocca and Kara Green, the lone seniors on the Massachusetts women's soccer team, have taken two distinctly different paths to reach the present point in time.

The former attended Springfield Technical Community College for her first two years, earning National Junior College Athletic Association All-American honors in 1998 before enrolling at UMass for her junior year. The latter has been a mainstay on offensive mainstay for the Minutewomen since stepping onto the pitch as a freshman three years ago, receiving All-Atlantic 10 Conference honors each season.

But even though each arrived at UMass via dissimilar routes, they share one common bond that seems to have arrived too fast – the end of their collegiate playing days. On Sunday, the pair will suit up against La Salle for what will be the final home contest of their careers.

Little woman, big heart

A native of nearby Wilbraham, Ciocca enjoyed a solid playing career at Minnechaug High in which she earned All-Western Massachusetts laurels twice. However, she elected to matriculate at STCC for her first two seasons at the post-secondary level.

But all the while, UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy was keeping tabs on the speedy forward. Finally, Ciocca committed to the Minutewomen prior to her junior season.

Things didn't exactly work out according to plan for the rookie in her junior season. She managed only one goal in 15 games, that coming in the season opener against Albany.

"When Kara came in here, she came in cold turkey," Rudy said. "There's a big difference between STCC and UMass. Here, we train six days a week, so that was a big adjustment for her. And not only were we asking her to train more, but tactically, we told her that she couldn't just be the fast kid on the field. She would also have to make decisions. You can't just get in, run, and go to the goal."

Said Ciocca: "I came in here last year a little less confident than I did this year. I was unsure about what my place on the team was going to be, and I think that that reflected itself on the field."

However, the senior was determined to reset her sights on making her final collegiate season one to remember. With a season of Division I experience under her belt, there seemed to be nowhere to go but up for Ciocca.

This season, the diminutive frontrunner has been one of the most consistent offensive threats for the Minutewomen. She leads the club in goals with seven and is tied for second place in points (15) with Green.

More importantly, Ciocca has improved her all-around play on the field. Over the course of the season, she has proved that while speed may be the defining skill that she possesses, there is much more in her arsenal than simply trying to outrun opposing defenders.

"Over the summer, I had a lot of time to think about it [her senior year]," Ciocca said. "With this being my last year playing soccer at this level, I just threw everything else out the window and decided to play like I knew how. This year, I'm a lot more comfortable with the team because I've allowed myself to keep the style that I have instead of conforming to how everyone else thought I played."

Added Rudy: "It's interesting in that she's improved her technique. She's now hitting balls at the goal and wasn't just using her right foot only at least until she injured her left ankle. She's improved her targeting and is connecting with other players, while also setting herself up to get return balls. A lot of people view her as the fast little kid but I see a lot more than that."

One of the few questions that remain for Ciocca is a query of curiosity. What if she had been given an opportunity to don the Maroon and White for four years as opposed to just two? Unfortunately, Ciocca will never know the answer to that question.

"She could have been a brilliant player here [if she had played for four years]," Rudy said. "It's harder to come out of junior college and have an impact right away than it is when you come from high school. [As a freshman], you're not as old and you don't have a comfort zone from doing things your own way [for a longer period of time]. I wish she had come here [as a freshman], and I always get that feeling when transfers come in."

Added Ciocca: "I've been working hard for two years and have put in a lot just to get here. But I'll always be a little curious to see what kind of player I could have been if I had another two years. Still, I'm happy with the overall picture and the way I did things."

Leaving a legendary mark behind

Coming into the 2000 season, Green seemed to have a legitimate shot of eclipsing Emma Kuruwski's career point total of 124. After averag-

Turn to SENIORS page 10

BOTH PHOTOS COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Seniors Kara Ciocca (left) and Kara Green(right) will play their final home games this weekend when UMass faces Fordham and LaSalle.

Oklahoma -vs- Nebraska: sure to be a college football classic

MATTHEW F. SACCO

When Bob Stoops took over Oklahoma football last season, he knew that success would come "Sooner" rather than later; but he probably didn't think it would come this soon, and in the form of a #2 BCS ranking.

Unlike the Barry Switzer teams of old, this years Sooner gridiron squad is getting the job done with one of the most potent passing attacks in the college football. Oklahoma's aerial arsenal will have to be in full effect this Saturday as Nebraska invades Norman for another titanic clash.

The rivalry has changed since Tom Osborne and Barry Switzer were manning the sidelines of their respective teams. Nebraska is now beginning to thrive with Frank Solich at the helm, while OU is peaking only a year after Stoops took over the reins with a notion to rebuild.

Oklahoma and Nebraska will play drastically different styles of play this weekend when they take the field in a game that will most likely decide which of these two Big 12 teams will play for the National Title.

The Sooners will rely heavily on their fourth ranked passing offense to keep the Husker defense on their toes. The running attack has been relatively non-existent compared to the rest of the nation, ranking 96th with only 145.5 rushing yards per game. Without a dominating running attack, Oklahoma is laying claim to new territory.

In fact, this offensive approach for Oklahoma is so novel that it prompted former coach Switzer to ask, "How the hell do you win a game with seven yards rushing?" Switzer pondered this question with ESPN.com after the Sooners put up 41 points against Kansas State in a victory earlier this year.

The OU pass attack is far from inactive, with over 327 yards per game. The general of Stoops' offense is Josh Heupel, who ranks fifth in the nation in passing efficiency. Heupel differs from former Sooner quarterbacks in that he is more of a pocket passer. He doesn't necessarily have the athleticism of OU alums Tommy Lott or a Danny Bradley, but he has the edge in accuracy.

If Heupel has time in the pocket he will find his receivers. Beware Huskers fans, the more time Heupel has, the more lethal he becomes.

Nebraska, on the other hand, comes in with the top rushing offense in the country, averaging almost 380 yards a game. Coach Solich would probably have to look up "pass offense" in a dictionary if he were asked about his team's vertical passing efficiency. No worries for the Cornhuskers however, as Heisman hopeful Eric Crouch could run the option in his sleep and still find the end zone. In fact, Nebraska has three players in the top 50 in the nation in rushing yards per game, one of which is Crouch who averages just over 82 yards a game on the ground. Dan Alexander and Corell Buckhalter carry the rest of the rushing load for Crouch, rushing for 111 and 79 yards per contest respectively.

Nebraska's passing stats look anemic with a 109 national ranking, which can happen when a team has only 107 passing attempts on the year. Crouch isn't forced to pass that often and he won't ever be unless a team proves that they can consistently stuff the Husker's potent ground game.

Oklahoma's place at 19 in rushing defense will be seriously threatened this weekend against Nebraska. Not only will the Sooners have to contend with the fleet of foot quarterback, who along with Michael Vick is the only person at his position in the top 50 in rushing, but OU will also have to be aware of two very talented running backs that are also among the nations best on the ground.

Nebraska will also have its hands full, and heads up, as sniper in the pocket Heupel will look to dissect a team that has allowed over 190 yards per game in the air. The Husker front four will be hard pressed by Solich to get to Heupel and punish him for holding the ball too long. He is a dangerous passer, but eating grass every time a play caller drops back can rattle even the best quarterback. If the defense pressures Heupel, then Stoops could see his offense sputter playing right into Nebraska's ball control game plan.

If Crouch is able to execute in the manner he has all year, by running the option to perfection, then the Huskers can control the ball and keep the quick strike Sooner offense off the field. If however, and this is a big "if", OU is able to somehow derail the red and white steam engine, then the Sooners will have the advantage. If Heupel has the ball then he is more than capable of putting points on the board and leading his team to victory on their home turf.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

horn

continued from page 9

[illegible] at rodeos in the Amherst area, the most [illegible] is obviously adult video. When asked what [illegible] between rodeo and adult videos is, a repre[illegible] from Adults Only Video on Route 9 in Hadley said, "Well, it's the same because in both cases you've got a horse riding another. It's like going to a carnival. You get something like a hot dog, but it's over right [illegible]. He went on to say, "Who gives a damn about [illegible] falling off a horse anyway? No one wants to see [illegible] that only lasts eight or nine seconds."

He made more of a correlation between rodeo and [illegible] stating that his store sold wrestling videos. He [illegible] that while some adults may enjoy it, rodeo is [illegible] for children. "It's kind of like a car race, he said. "You go to a car race to watch a thirteen car pile up and [illegible] hurt, but you just don't want to be involved. [illegible] sport crammed in it - the complete opposite."

Inner Tube Alcohol Consumption

Once a contributing river cell of Louisiana's Lake [illegible] Bottom floats the Tulane University Inner Tube [illegible] Consumption Club Team. Their ultimate goal: to [illegible] a whole floating an inner tubes.

"Sometimes just float down naked and jump around," [illegible] member Adam Tankanow said. "This place is awe[illegible]. Everyone gets intoxicated, they flip people over and [illegible] from a grand old time. And because you're sitting out [illegible] the weather, you get drunk pretty fast."

The three 20 inner tubes, however, problems do arise [illegible] everyone's distant. There was a shortage on alcohol the [illegible] the team competed.

"Last Tankanow. "Let's just say 10 cases are not enough [illegible] be back out there pretty soon."

Synchronized Swimming

What happens when people stop swimming and start getting synchronized? They contact United States Synchronized Swimming.

Lynn Atteberry, the Education Coordinator for USSS, described synchronized swimming as a unique sport. The NCAA describes it as an "emerging" sport.

"We need forty programs to be considered a varsity sport and right now, we've got over thirty programs around the country," Atteberry said. According to former Richmond Spider, while the teams consist of both varsity and clubs, but that they compete against one another. Just this year, three teams were created at University of Rhode Island, Slippery Rock University and athletic powerhouse, the Savannah School of Art and Design. Atteberry said recognition can be difficult.

"If a rare instance where a program is added as varsity right away." Atteberry said, although she did say that the president of the University of Alabama-Birmingham added the program as a varsity immediately upon realizing that the school needed another varsity sport.

The sport has an annual championship event, held at and won last year at Ohio State University. Another big contender is Stanford, who won two championships before OSU did. The Buckeyes won at least 10 titles before Stanford. Also a strong team is UAB, a team that finished forth last year.

Atteberry said that the continued expansion of the USSS program will involve, hopefully, Big Ten schools.

"We keep our coaches talking with friends and we keep our ears to the ground to see who might be adding the sport. We're listening to what people want and need. Sometimes the money talks as in Division 1 athletics. In D-3, that kind of thing doesn't matter. We can adapt to the needs of programs." Atteberry said.

To interested students, the USSS thinks you should both contact them. The website excitedly exclaims asks. "You say the school you want to attend doesn't offer synchro? You can help start a program at your college!"

So true. So true.

Sam Wilkinson, Eric Soderstrom and Ryan Beharris are Collegian columnists.

seniors

continued from page 9

ing just under 32 points a season in her first three years as a Minutewomen, a standard season offensively would move her past Kurowski to the top of the chart.

But this season has been anything but normal for the Poughkeepsie, NY product. A right quadriceps injury has plagued Green since the pre-season, and she has not been close to 100 percent at any point during the year. Yet game in and game out, she is out there trying to make any sort of contribution that will help the team emerge victorious.

"I want to see the team succeed rather than break a [personal] record," Green said. "It [the mark] did cross my mind, but I have not been healthy this year. I'm playing in pain. I think that if I didn't have the leg injury, I would have been able to reach that goal."

In an ideal setting, Green would have been at full strength for her senior season and topped Kurowski's mark. Unfortunately, things don't always work out in real life in the same way that they are visualized beforehand. As a result, the senior forward has had to deal with adversity, and the reality that there will be one individual goal that eluded her grasp.

"This isn't how I pictured it to be, but I think that I've dealt with it pretty well," Green said. "In a way, it's made me a better player because I've learned that I'm not going to be able to do everything on the field. I have to play simpler. Dealing with this problem has also made me a better person."

Among those who admire the gritty effort of the former Spackenhill High standout is Rudy. In an age where most professional athletes would rather take a day off – or in this case, maybe even up to a full season – to return to full strength, Green has elected to gut it out in order to make the most out of her final season at UMass.

"The injury has been one of those good and bad things," he said. "It's bad because it's her senior year and she wants to do well. But it's good because in having to battle adversity in the year that matters the most, she wants to get the most out of it. Right now, there's no tomorrow, and that's the worst thing for a senior athlete to face. Either you finish up injured or you quit. I admire Kara immensely for her courage and for playing through the pain."

"She has to basically play one-legged," added Rudy. "What professional athlete would do that if you asked them to? It's like asking Nomar Garciaparra to play having to bat only left-handed for the rest of the year. How many pro athletes would say that they were not going to play [with such an injury]? But this kid decided that she was going to play even if it was just with her bad [weaker, left] foot. I think that a lot of kids would have quit at this point, and if she did, I would have forgiven her for it."

Green has scored a remarkable 110 points in her four-year career with at least two games remaining. At press time, she was also third all-time in the goal-scoring department with 37 and already holds the record for assists in a career with 36.

Over the past four years, No. 7 has been the same dominating offensive force as she was at Spackenhill, when she amassed an astounding 175 goals and 437 points during her high school days. Green is a two-time first-team All A-10 pick and made the A-10 second team last year.

Yet, her hard work and dedication is also evident off the field as well. Green will leave UMass as the only original member of her freshman class to graduate in four years. Two other players from her year left the team, while teammates Brooke Bartlett and Kat Machamer will remain for one more season in 2001 after redshirting from injuries.

However, what Rudy finds most satisfying is the fact that Green has made a strong commitment to not only soccer, but academics as well.

"What Kara has done in the classroom is the exciting part for me," he said. "We weren't even sure if she was going to come in here [as a freshman] academically eligible. I called her every second week for six months to see how her grades were, and the kid became the most improved student in her school. That's something of great value for me."

"Some coaches out there just want to hear about production and goals, but those are coaches who are interested in their own agenda," added Rudy. "The answer for me comes in what have these kids done for UMass and what have they done for themselves. Kara is going to be another one of those legends at UMass in many ways."

Listen to "MUMMY"... Our Savings are SPOOKTACULAR!
LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive
EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS COORS, COORS LIGHT $39.99
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MIC MILLER, MIC MILLER LIGHT, BUSCHWEISER, LIGHT $45.99
1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $37.99
1/2 KEGS COMPETITIVE PRICING ON ALL BRANDS $82.99
Budweiser / Bud Light 16OZ. CASE $17.99
HIGH LIFE, MICHELOB, MICHELOB LIGHT 30 PACK $12.99
MILWAUKEE'S BEST 30 PACK $9.99 12 PACK ALL TYPES $9.99
MAGIC HAT NATURAL LIGHT & ICE 6 PACK ALL TYPES $5.99
Corona EXTRA & CORONA LIGHT CASE $18.99
CIDER JACK HARD CIDER 6 PACK $4.99
WINES OF THE MONTH
BUENA VISTA CALIFORNIA WINES $7.99
FRANZIA $6.99
CAVIT PINOT GRIGIO $9.49
WOODBRIDGE WINES $11.99
BLACKSTONE MERLOT $8.99
Beringer WHITE ZINFANDEL $3.99
SKYY VODKA $19.99
BEEFEATER GIN $24.99
FLEISCHMANN'S PREFERRED WHISKEY $17.99
JACK DANIEL'S $15.99
CLAN MACGREGOR SCOTCH $12.99
BACARDI LIMON RUM $19.99
RUBINOFF VODKA $8.99
Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor Ask For Details
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 10 26 00 THRU WEDS. 11 01 00

www.alltrue.com
watch search collect send score.
Alltrue
Watch thousands of killer video clips at www.alltrue.com
adelphia
made you look

WRITE for Sports!

Attention: Science Majors
Explore a career in Alternative Healthcare
College of Chiropractic (Doctor of Chiropractic)
- ► First University-based Chiropractic College in the United States
- ► Accelerated Science Pre-requisite Program Available
- ► Only Chiropractic College located in New England and the greater New York metropolitan area

College of Naturopathic Medicine (Naturopathic Physician)
- ► Only College of Naturopathic Medicine that is part of a major University
- ► Clinical Experience and Integrative Care Setting
- ► Only college on East Coast and one of only four in the United States offering this degree

For more information and an application:
- ► College of Chiropractic
  1-888-UB-CHIRO
  e-mail: chiro@bridgeport.edu
  www.bridgeport.edu/chiro
- ► College of Naturopathic Medicine
  (203) 576-4108
  e-mail: natmed@bridgeport.edu
  www.bridgeport.edu/naturopathy

UNIVERSITY OF BRIDGEPORT

UMass Alumni Association
"Leaders in the Making" Scholarships
Applicants must be full-time junior undergraduate students to be eligible. Applications may be picked up Monday through Friday at the Alumni Relations Office in Memorial Hall from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. They must be completed and returned to Jason Germain in the Alumni Office no later than December 1, 2000. Winners will receive up to $2,000.00 and will be recognized at a ceremony in April.
For more information, please contact Jason Germain at 545-2317 or jag@admin.umass.edu
UMASS Alumni Association®
University of Massachusetts Amherst

COMPLETE AUTO BODY REPAIRS
ALL MAKES AND MODELS
DANA AUTOMOTIVE Chevrolet Volkswagen
COLLISION REPAIR • GLASS INSTALLATION
Authorized GM/VW Body Shop
Frame & Unibody Straightening
24 HR HOTLINE 586-7250 | FREE LOANERS! | 968 Bridge Road NORTHAMPTON RS# 2427

SPORTS SPOTLIGHT

Rebecca Hasson

Rebecca Hasson

Class: Senior
Major: Exercise Science
DOB: 2-27-79
Age: 21
Zodiac Sign: Pisces
Hometown: Riverside, CA
Favorite Food: Chicken Tortellini
Favorite Junk Food: French Fries, Ice Cream
Favorite TV Show: ER
Favorite Movie: The Sandlot, Beetlejuice
Favorite Vacation Spot: Waikiki, HI
Favorite Class: Exercise Physiology
Favorite Professor: Dr. Patty Freedso
Favorite Music: R&B
What would you save in a fire: My Bible and my photo album
Are you a righty or a lefty: Righty
Describe a funny experience at UMass: Myself along with several of my teammates dressed up in crazy uniforms and played in Haigis Hoopla.
Career Ambition: I want to work in Houston, TX at NASA in their exercise physiology lab; working with the astronauts.
Sports Rituals: I pray before every game; I can't shave my legs on Fridays, it's bad luck, but I have to before Saturday's game; I wear glitter under my knee pads

Rebecca Hasson, a native of California, began playing volleyball in eighth grade as part of her physical education class and fell in love with the sport. She decided to tryout for her high school team and it became part of her life.

"It started to become fun and I ended up being good at it," she said. "Then I began playing year round on club teams."

Hasson was so sure that she wanted to play volleyball in college that she did not apply to any. She counted on staying healthy and relied only on the schools that recruited her.

She originally planned to go to Fresno State, but signed to play at UMass as soon as she saw the campus and met the team.

"When I came out here and saw how friendly the team was and met the coaches and saw campus life, I knew this is where I wanted to be," she said.

She left her family, including her twin sister Rian, and California's warm weather for the bitter cold of the northeast. She did say one good thing came out of it. "I got a new wardrobe."

Hasson can often be seen watching other University of Massachusetts sports, especially soccer because her roommate is a member of the team. She also enjoys field hockey, lacrosse, water polo and football.

As far as professional sports go, football is her favorite. When asked what team she cheered for, she replied, "Patriots, only because I'm in Massachusetts and L.A. doesn't have a team at the moment."

When she graduates in the spring, she plans on going to graduate school, maybe even here at UMass because she likes the exercise science department. Hasson wants to work for NASA in their physiology lab.

"I like the aspect of the astronauts having an exercise program so their muscles don't degenerate when they're in sub-gravity levels," she said.

Speaking of subs... Hasson loves Pinocchio's steak and cheese and orders it every chance she gets. So the next time you order a Blue Zone, remember the captain of the UMass volleyball team.

– Julie Robenhymer

UMass campus recreation
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
3-on-3 Basketball (M/W/C).....10/30
Holiday Basketball (M/W).....10/30
Corrected Date
Spring Basketball (M/W/C).....12/04
MANDATORY CLINICS FOR SPRING BASKETBALL OFFICIALS ARE SCHEDULED IN TWO PARTS. CLINICS ARE SCHEDULED FOR JANUARY 29th & 30th AT 6pm AND FOR JANUARY 31st & FEBRUARY 1st AT 7pm. CALL FOR REQUIREMENTS AND LOCATIONS.
On the web: www.umass.edu/umim

The Sports Section ALWAYS has the best fills.
Word.

www.dailycollegian.com...
coming soon...

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00
The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 7, Sun 12-5
800-729-8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com

Europe ON Sale!
5 DAYS ONLY
Purchase Between October 24 - 28
All Major European Destinations
London Milan Paris Amsterdam Dublin Frankfurt Brussels Lisbon Madrid Rome Glasgow Manchester Birmingham Dusseldorf Shannon Zurich Tel Aviv Barcelona Malaga Santiago de Compostella Alicante Bilbao Palma de Majorca student universe.com IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT 800.272.9676
studentuniverse.com

NEW ENGLAND SCHOOL OF LAW
Law School Can Fit Into Your Future
- JD/MBA program with the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth
- JD/BA (3+3) program with the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth
- Flexible full-time or part-time programs
- Attend day or evening
- Fall and Spring entering classes
- Scholarships available
- Practical legal skills training
- Conveniently located off Rt. I-195 in North Dartmouth, MA

Open House
November 2, 6:30 pm
November 4, 10:00 am
SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND SCHOOL of LAW
For more information call (508) 998-9400 or 1 (800) 213-0060 or visit our web site at www.snesl.edu
333 Faunce Corner Road, North Dartmouth, MA 02747-1252

Boot Camp.
ZANNA
Amherst
Northampton
Williamstown

Buena Vista Social Club
AN EXCLUSIVE ENGAGEMENT AT THE UMASS FINE ARTS CENTER
Rubén González & Ibrahim Ferrer y su Grupo with Omara Portuondo
ONE OF ONLY EIGHT U.S. SHOWS THIS YEAR!
Wednesday, January 3 at 8pm
FINE ARTS CENTER CONCERT HALL, UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
These musicians have played to sold-out houses the world over and set the stage and audiences on fire with their passionate music.
TICKETS GO ON SALE WEDNESDAY NOVEMBER 1 AT 10AM
CALL 1-800-999-UMAS OR 413-545-2511
Tickets: $55, $50 and $40 (Special Event, No Discounts)
Advocate

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

89 Dodge Van Best offer 586-0879

1990 Honda Accord EX 140k, moonroof, CD, great condition $3800 O/B/O 546-2568

1989 Chevy Celebrity. 77k miles. Automatic, 4 door Great condition. $800 or B/O 413-665-9279

1987 Jeep Wrangler 4cyl, hard top. Many new parts $4100 or bo 665-3013

97 Honda Civic Ex. Low miles 35,000. Perfect condition, standard. $12,995 Ian 546-0981

HONDA ACCORD LX, 1990, AT/PW/PL/AC, 140k miles, excellent condition. Contact evenings, 413-736-6161

EMPLOYMENT

Attention! Work form home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

EMPLOYMENT

FREELANCE SPORTS WRITERS! All sports, health and fitness issues, and events for the physically challenged. Target audience ages 14-24. To be published on the internet. Digital photos preferred, not required. $15 for articles of 200-300 words if accepted. Reference # umass required on all submissions to: articles@islandoaks.com

Kitchen Help @ meal times. Nice place to work. Near campus. Meals + pay. 549-7719

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today; 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Rao's Coffee is hiring. Apply only if you are serious about working hard.

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

Beerpong Tables for sale!! Custom made to order, 4x8. Free delivery to anywhere in Amherst. Call 549-5950 ASAP Ask for Chad

HOUSE FOR RENT

Fully furnished lovely house for rent Nov. + Dec. only. Car optional. $1200 Nego. 548-7008

Your Ad Could Be Right Here!!

Think of the Possibilities

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities* Clubs * Student Groups* Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

3 girls need roommate for spring in Brandywine $228/mo call Nadiah 549-4907

SERVICES

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained.Free! www.calc101.com

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Volunteer in Central America/Africa! Work in community development projects - lead health campaigns, organize teaching seminars, develop micro-enterprises. Institute for International Cooperation and Development. Call/e-mail for a free brochure. (413) 458-9828, iicd@berkshire.net

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

EMPLOYMENT

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@sun coastvacations.com

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash-tours.com

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreak direct.com

Time is running out!

Need to sell your car?

Need a roommate?

Advertise TODAY!!

Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1- UMASS Bulletin Board
2- CBS 3 Boston
3- ABC 40 Springfield
4- PBS 57 Springfield
5- Adelphia Movie Channel
6- ESPN 2 Bristol
7- UMASS Sex Movie Channel
8- NBC 30 New Britain
9- Fox 61 Hartford
10- UPN 18 Hartford
11- NBC 22 Springfield
12- Information/Ad Channel
13- UMATV (Academic Channel)
14- WB 56 New Haven
15- ESPN
16- ESPN2
17- LIVE TV (Student Channel)
18- Weather Channel
19- Cartoon Cable
20- A Space
21- CNN
22- CNN Headline News
23- Entertainment Television
24- USA
25- TBS
26- TNT
27- MTV
28- VH1
29- Nickelodeon
30- Showtime
31- Discovery
32- Nostalgia
33- Cartoon Network
34- Arts & Sports
35- TV Land
36- Comedy Central
37- BET
38- Lifetime
39- Bloomberg Financial Network
40- College TV Network
41- MTV
42- MTV2
43- VH1
44- The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 26, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH (2)	10	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Scenic Rail Journeys		Mystery! Hetty Wainthropp		Being Served	Keeping Up	Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB (3)	3	News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	48 Hours: Grandmother's		City of Angels (N) (In Stereo)		Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WBZ (4)	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours: Grandmother's		City of Angels (N) (In Stereo)		Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WCVB (5)	5	News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WLVI (6)		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless (N)	Friends (N)	Nanny (N)	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Charmed "All Hallwell's Eve" (N)		News		Friends (N)	Sudden-Susan
WHDH (7)		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Friends (N) (N)	Cursed (N) (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Mers Attacks" (In Stereo) (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven (In Stereo) (N)		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) (N)		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Mers Attacks" (In Stereo) (N)		News	Tonight Show
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N) (N)	Hollywood	Friends (N) (N)	Cursed (N) (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Mers Attacks" (In Stereo) (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC (8)	11	Simpsons (N)	Frasier (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Friends (N)	World Series: Game 5 -- Yankees or Mariners at Mets or Cardinals						News	Friends (N)
WWLP (9)	22	News (N)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Friends (N) (N)	Cursed (N) (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Mers Attacks" (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Tonight Show
WGBY (10)	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		This Old Hse.	Drs. on Call	Mystery!: Hetty Wainthropp		Grafters (In Stereo) (N)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N)
WGGB (40)	20	News (N)	ABC News	Seinfeld (N)	Frasier (N)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		News	Nightline (N)
WSBK (38)		Judge Judy (N)	Judge Judy (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Frasier (N)	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) (N)				Frasier (N)	Med Alt. You	Spin City (N)	Spin City (N)
WTBS (72)		Roseanne (N)	Roseanne (N)	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★ "Mortal Kombat:Annihilation" (1997, Adventure) Robin Shou,				★★ "Mortal Kombat" (1995, Adventure) Robin Shou, Linden Ashby,
A&E (51)		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Sanctuary" (N)		Biography: Sally Hemings		Murder One "Chapter Seven"		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order (N)
CNN (52)	23	Worldview (N)	Moneyline	Newshour (N) (N)		Crossfire (N)		World Today (N)		Larry King Live (N)		Sports	Moneyline (N)
COM (53)	28	Saturday Night Live (N)		Daily Show (N)	Stein's Money	Saturday Night Live		Saturday Night Live		Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (N)	Stein's Money
DISC (72)		Wild Discovery: Siberian		Wild Discovery: Jurassic		On the Inside: Haunted Houses		Hospital (N)		Beyond Bizarre (N)		Justice Files "Vigilantes" (N)
ESPN (31)		Sportscenter (N)		2-Minute Drill	Coll. Football	College Football: Wyoming at Brigham Young. (Live) (N)						Sportscenter (N)
LIFE (54)		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: Kim Cattrall		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo) (N)		★★ "Sleep, Baby, Sleep" (1995, Drama) Tracey Gold, (N)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV (35)		Direct Effect	Making-Video	Diary	Truth	Celebrity	Celebrity	Jackass	Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Truth (N)	Choose
NICK (55)		Pelswick	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! (N)	Rugrats (N)	Spongeb	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI (56)		Sliders "Sole Survivors" (N)		Babylon 5 "Chrysalis" (N)		★★★ "Back to the Future Part III" (1990, Adventure) Michael J. Fox, (In Stereo) (N)				Crypt Tales		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC (57)	26	How'd They Do That?		Understanding the Power		Paramedics "Critical Care" (N)		Scotland Yard: Tales From		Scotland Yard: Tales From		Paramedics "Critical Care"
TNT (58)		ER "Fathers and Sons" (N)		Pretender "Crash" (In Stereo)		NBA Preseason Basketball: Detroit Pistons at Minnesota Timberwolves. (N)						NBA Preseason Basketball: Lakers at Suns
USA (59)		Welker, Texas Ranger (N)		JAG "Rivers Run" (In Stereo) (N)		Nash Bridges "Overdrive" (N)		★★ "Dirty Just Want to Have Fun" (1987) Sarah Jessica Parker,				Strip Poker	Martin (N)
HBO (301)		(4:30)		★★ "The Experts" (1989) John Travolta. PG-13				Inside the NFL (N) (N)				"Blackstone" (2000, Suspense) Lochlyn Munro. "NR"	Men of Honor
MAX (321)		(4:15)		★★ "Darkman III: Die Darkman Die" (1996) "R" (N)				★ "Wild Wild West" (1999, Western) Will Smith. "PG-13" (N)				★½ "Leprechaun in the Hood" (2000, Horror) "R"	"Universal"
SHOW (340)		★★★ "Strange Justice" (1999, Drama) Delroy Lindo (In Stereo) (N)				★★★ "What's Love Got to Do With It" (1993) Angela Bassett. "R"						Rude Awaken.	"Nigor Calls: The Movie" (1997) Jill Ashton. "NR"

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

OK CLASS, TODAY IN WOMENS STUDIES WE WILL BE STUDYING LESBIANISM SO I BROUGHT IN A VIDEO THAT I'D MADE AT HOME
SO ENJOY, AND LEARN.
SO, WHAT DID YOU GUYS THINK ERIC DO YOU HAVE A QUESTION?
CAN I GET A COPY OF THAT TAPE FOR MY EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES?
DO YOU HAVE ANY FRIENDS?

Dilbert By Scott Adams

OUR NEW OFFICE BUILDING WILL BE AN ARCHITECTURAL MASTERPIECE!
THE VOICES IN MY HEAD ARE SHOUTING "NO STORAGE SPACE! NO STORAGE SPACE!"
WHAT IS HAPPENING TO ME?
IT'S CALLED EXPERIENCE
www.dilbert.com scottadams@aol.com
© 2000 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

GOVERNOR, YOUR ACCUSATION THAT RUSSIA'S FORMER PRIME MINISTER HAD LOBBIED THE IMF HAS BEEN DENIED BY THE IMF AND BEHIND THIS THREAT OF A SLANDER LAWSUIT...
HOW DO YOUR PREVARICATIONS DIFFER FROM MR. GORE'S, APART FROM THE FACT THAT YOURS HAVE ALREADY CREATED AN INTERNATIONAL INCIDENT?
W.
UH, SAMPLE?
UH, OH. ARMS CONTROL. ON HIS VOCAB LIST?
MINE ARE MORE PERVERSE! MORE MANLY!
GUESS NOT.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

COME ON, SATCHEL, THE SOONER YOU START YOUR BATH, THE SOONER YOU FINISH IT!
ONE DOLLAR KEEPS YOUR LOCATION SECRET. NO DOLLAR AND I SQUEAL LIKE A PUPPY.
BUT THAT'S THAT'S BLACKMAIL!

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

SAMMY, I'VE DECIDED THAT IT'S OKAY THAT I DON'T UNDERSTAND YOU...
CRUNCH!
IT'S OKAY THAT I'LL NEVER GET TO THE BOTTOM OF WHAT MAKES YOU BE...
CRUNCH!
...YOU.
NOW DON'T YOU FEEL BETTER?
CRUNCH!
GOOD NUT.
IS CERTAINLY IS.
CRUNCH

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) – Maybe you should trap Bluebird at it's your food with garlic salt. Dating prospects will improve immediately. Mars is in your house this month so expect to turn red and twitten with only vague and inculpulsive tracks of life.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) – Keep your mouth shut! Assumptions will end up getting you in trouble with friends when people misinterpret your words. And remember to say you're sorry.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) – Don't let large people get in your way on the sidewalk today, walk right past them, changing directions temporarily if necessary.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) – Perhaps this is the day you will take up a new instrument. But don't make it something wussy like the violin or the flute or classical guitar. Go buy a tuba.

PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) – Take an extra cartridge of web fluid with you today, and be watchful this Hobgoblin is about. Oh wait, that's a bonus cape for Spiderman.

ARIES (March 21 – April 19) – Hundreds will make their home in the bowels of some supervillain fortress. Your mismanged beautiful information has just been acquired by a massive TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) – Remains a pervading question? Did you know that many bumpers around the world have no bosses' preferences on best bumper manners?

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) – You will find yourself irresistable to women this morning, whether or not you are a guy. Likewise, you will find yourself attracted to dolphins, porpoises, and all other manner mammals, whether or not you are a mature mammal.

CANCER (June 21 – July 22) – Don't be that guy in the DC who thinks that the Lewis Belezman fortress of hip talks louder. Everyone hates that guy.

LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) – Tom Cruise will knock softly on your door early this morning, offering free trial in-home cruise. What's that? You already have? Pity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) – Try not to sit for too long, because your surface will thicken unappealingly and you're will separate out. Looking around you. Oh wait, that's a horoscope for a bowl of Jello.

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 67 LOW: 47	HIGH: 66 LOW: 43	HIGH: 60 LOW: 32

Robotman By Jim Meddick

OH MAN, THIS BUS IS TOTALLY JAMMED!
EXCUSE ME
PARDON ME
EXCUSE
OWWW!
OOOF!
OOOF!
WHAT THE HECK'S IN YOUR POCKET?
OH, UM, SORRY. I MUST BE SOME OF THE STUFF I BOUGHT
I GUESS I PICKED A BAD DAY TO STOCK UP ON STAPLES, THUMBTACKS AND FONDUE STICKS.
COR.

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

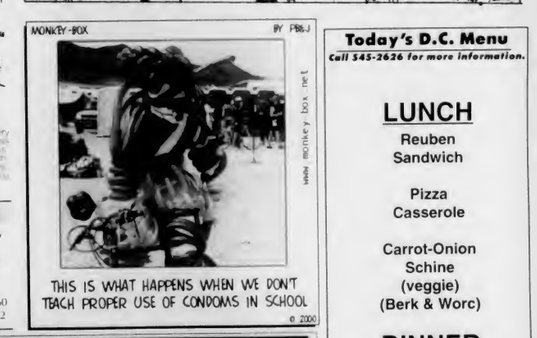
YOU KNOW WHAT I LOVE ABOUT AUTUMN?
I CAN'T IMAGINE WHY DON'T YOU TELL ME WHAT YOU LOVE ABOUT THIS GOD-FORSAKEN SEASON, WHICH IS JUST A PREVIEW OF THE COLD, DEATH SOON TO OVERTAKE NEW ENGLAND?
IT'S THEIR ANNUAL TOY DRIVE.
AWW... MAYBE THEY'RE IT'S COOL.

Spunky By Mike LaRiccia

Up the Hill Backwards By Andrea Mangini

HEY ANDREA, DID YOU COLOR YOUR HAIR?
NO, ACTUALLY SEGMENTS OF MY HAIR TURN BRIGHT RED IN THE FALL
AND COME NOVEMBER I'LL BE COMPLETELY BALD

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ



Quote of the Day

"As a musician and a guitar player the side effects scare me."

- Schumer

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Reuben Sandwich

Pizza Casserole

Carrot-Onion Schine (veggie) (Berk & Worc)

DINNER

Sicilian Stuffed Shells (veggie)

Pork Chops with Caribbean Sauce

Baked Teriyaki Tofu (vegan)

Halloween Treats

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Brian McDermott
Copy Editor	David Troupes
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Jasmine Trabelsi, Sarah Wingardner

Have a Safe and Happy Halloween

ACROSS
1 Gymnast Korbut
5 — maid
10 Pals
14 Droop
15 Dodge adroitly
16 Harm
17 Radiate
18 Jam in tightly
19 Pepsi rival
20 Argues
22 Pushed aside
24 Cow's "second course"
25 Gloomy
26 Correct
29 Pale
32 Dog owner's purchase
36 Succulent plant
37 Boat cranes
39 New: prefix
40 Those who "Rock together"
43 Sack
44 Women's clothing size
45 Electric fish
46 Perfect
48 Tricky
49 Dipper
50 Pen point
52 "That was delicious!"
53 Continuous
57 Train and
61 Take — be recognized
62 Whirlybird blade
64 Armbone
65 Fine!
66 "Remember the —!"
67 Chic
68 Caribou or elk
69 Inert gas
70 Scramble them!

DOWN
1 Was obligated to
2 Bar fruit
3 Smooth-talking
4 Joined
5 Cried like a kitten
6 Nights before holidays
7 Young boy
8 Perimeter
9 Staggers
10 Crack, as a spy's message
11 Confess
12 Two-wheeler
13 Winter vehicle
21 Famed pharaoh
23 Light wood
26 Temple head
27 Homeric epic
28 Canyon
29 Blows gently
30 Be of use to
31 Super
33 Felt bad
34 Jinx
35 Bronco, e.g.
37 Female rabbit
38 Casual top
41 Cheerleader's feat
42 Where to drink Earl Grey
47 Solution
49 Hunting dog, for short
51 Water softener
52 Tori's dad
53 Precious ointment
54 Stage sward
55 Alaskan city
56 Ski gear
57 "It's impossible" crooner
58 Designer Cassini
59 Obstacle
60 All — attentive
63 Neutral color

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass digs win over Rhode Island's Rams

Team shines in triumph

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

In the ever-competitive Atlantic 10, no game is too small, no opponent too weak to overlook. Going up against the University of Rhode Island, a team sporting a 4-14 overall record and a 3-8 count in the conference, the danger of overconfidence was ever-present for the Massachusetts volleyball team.

But the Minutewomen (10-11 overall, 6-5 Atlantic 10) showed that they meant nothing but business as they trotted into Kingston, RI last night. UMass ran away with a 3-1 victory (15-0, 12-15, 15-9, 15-12) over the Rams (4-16, 3-8 A-10). The shutout victory in the game one was the first by the Maroon and White since last season when they blanked Virginia Tech in the second game of their home match on Nov. 19.

The Maroon and White cruised through the first game, but seemed to have a bit more trouble with the Rams afterward. But the killer instinct was present this evening for the Minutewomen.

Up 2-1 in the match, UMass found itself on the short end of a 10-6 score in Game Four. But they closed the margin to 12-9, and, after getting the serve they rallied for six consecutive points to take the match by a score of 15-12. Had the Minutewomen gone to five games, it would have been their fourth match in just over a week doing so. Last week they triumphed over UConn and Dayton in five, but fell to Xavier in the same fashion.

The usual suspects were at it again for UMass, with co-captains Rebecca Hasson and Lymarie Llovet leading the way for the Maroon and White. Both posted double-doubles in the match, with senior Hasson putting home 19 kills and saving 10 digs. Llovet had an equally impressive outing, nailing down 19 kills of her own, and pulling up a team leading 14 digs for the Minutewomen.

Stepping up for the Maroon and White was freshman Lindsey Bailey, who tallied 17 kills but only had three errors in her 28 total attempts, good for a remarkable .500 hitting percentage. The freshman from North Vancouver, BC has been getting more playing time as of late, and made the most of it last night, posting her highest kill total of the season.

Senior Jenni Drennan was also impressive for the Minutewomen, both setting up the offense and helping out the defense. She set up UMass attackers for 63 kills in the match, and dug out 11 balls on the defensive side.

For the Rams, it was freshman Mary-Kate Reardon paving the way. She notched 14 kills and brought up 10 digs while posting a duly impressive .429 kill percentage. Also strong for URI was senior Cheri Melson, with 21 kills and 15 digs, and junior Yolanda Bogacz had 16 kills and 15 digs of her own.

The win was key for the Minutewomen, as it kept them within striking distance of the Dayton Flyers in the race for the fourth spot in the A-10. Dayton is currently 6-4 in the conference, just one-half game ahead of the Maroon and White.

The Minutewomen are in action twice this weekend, including matches tomorrow night against Fordham and Saturday night against George Washington. Both games are at 7 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage.

Three-and-Outstanding

Sophomore Sanger makes fourth down his time to shine

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

He's one of the best players, skill-wise, that the Massachusetts football team has. He is physically blessed, and his mechanics are nearly flawless. He saves the team time and again when its back is against the wall with seemingly no escape.

And the fans can't stand the sight of him. It's not that sophomore David Sanger is anything short of masterful when it comes to doing his job – punting the football. He entered his second season at UMass with an average of 40.5 yards per punt, tops in school history. It's just that his entrance into a game usually signals a lack of effectiveness by the Maroon and White offense, making the Florida native something less than a crowd-pleaser.

"People get kind of upset when they see me come onto the field," Sanger said. "It's just a part of the game that nobody likes. So I try to come in, do the dirty work and get us good field position; hopefully, that will make people happy."

The 6-foot 2, 225 pound Sanger seems at first glance like an awfully large individual to just be kicking the ball. In fact, his pigskin career at Merritt Island High began with him tearing up the turf as a defensive end. But when he finally got a chance to crack the starting lineup of Coach Gerald Hodgin's squad, the team wasn't looking for a pass rusher.

"I started punting in high school, because it was the only way I could make the varsity team," Sanger said. "Then Greg Hinley, one of the college recruiters for the state of Florida, saw me and told me to keep it up. He said I had potential to make it to the next level as a punter."

Sanger's impact as a punter wouldn't have to wait until the next level; he became an absolute weapon for the Mustangs on fourth down. During his senior year, 16 of his 25 punts were downed inside his opponents' 20-yard line. Five of his punts went for more than 50 yards, and his long was a staggering 71 yarder. But his biggest dividends for the team came when he didn't kick the ball away on fourth down.

"We used to fake and go for it all the time," Sanger said. "Because of my size, I would just catch the ball and go for the first down. And I made it – every time."

Sanger has yet to get the call for a sneak play for UMass, though he has had a chance to show off his impromptu rushing ability. Against Northeastern in Week Five, Sanger was lined up to kick it away when he sensed an impending block by an outstanding Husky rush. He nimbly side-stepped his attackers and sprinted upfield for the first down, only to have the play nullified by a holding call on one of his teammates.

"At first, when that play got called back, I was mad," Sanger said. "But what can you do? It's part of the game; you just line up, kick it away and hope for a little payback by pinning them down."

That perfection of punting, the skill of leaving your foes with their backs to the endzone and nowhere to go, is one that Sanger has worked incessantly at perfecting. He has taken so many practice snaps from his father, Sheldon, that he sometimes pictures the rhythm of the Sanger – Sanger connection during tough game situations.

"But luckily for me, J-Cain [long snapper Jeremy Cain] is awesome at what he does," Sanger said.

The elder Sanger has also aided his son in studying some of the game's best punters, in particular one stellar leg from his native Sunshine State.

"I'm a big Florida State fan, and my dad has season tickets," Sanger said. "So I'm a huge fan of Sean Liss. He was amazing at placement, at pinning opponents deep."

Sanger himself is no slouch at the art of the "coffin corner." He has had 11 punts downed inside the 20-yard line so far this season, including a beauty this past Saturday against American International that teammate Anton McKenzie stopped a yard short of AIC's goal line. Of the 90 footballs Sanger has punted away in his UMass career, a startling one-third have been downed inside the 20.

"David is probably the best coffin corner kicker I have ever coached," Head Coach Mark Whipple said.

That unique skill has garnered the attention of more than just collegiate punt returners; Sanger got a chance to work out with one the sport's elite this past summer when he volunteered to be a ball boy for the New England Patriots. In addition to slagging footballs for Foxboro's finest, Sanger got to showcase his own talents and benefit from 16 years of NFL experience from Patriot punter Lee Johnson.

"Working with Lee was incredible," Sanger said. "He taught me so much about how every part of punting is about consecutive movements, and about walking through my punt motion instead of running. That one lesson has helped me out more than I could have imagined."

Sanger's work with the Patriots has fueled aspirations that he may someday kick away footballs for ineffective NFL offenses. His numbers so far this year certainly reflect a potential for pro employment: on the year, he has averaged 39.7 yards per punt, helping UMass to a conference-best net average of 37.4 yards per punt. Over the course of his UMass career, Sanger has now punted 90 times for 3,626 yards.

But even if a pro career isn't in the cards, Sanger feels that his Sport Management degree will be a good tool in possibly landing him another job within the ranks of pro pigskin.

"If I can't kick in the pros, I don't care what I do," Sanger said. "I'll do anything. And there's always the XFL."

But for now, Sanger is intent on living up to the high preseason expectations brought on by his breakout first year. Whipple said before the 2000 campaign that he expected Sanger "to be one of the top punters in the conference," and he has certainly been worth the hype so far; his numbers currently rank him third in the Atlantic 10 behind Maine's Todd Jagoutz and Chris Birch of Villanova. But Sanger is quick to point out that he has more important things on his mind than his A-10 standing.

"I'm third in the conference, but I don't really care about that," Sanger said. "I wish I was first, but at the same time I'm more concerned with doing what it takes to help the team win. I'd rather concentrate on pinning my opponents deep than putting up the top numbers in the A-10."

But along the way, a guy who once made his living by the blitz must certainly pine for his days as a defensive terror, right?

"Of course I miss playing D, but I'm realistic," Sanger said. "I'm too small to play defense at the Division I level. But my roommate is T. Brower, so we talk about defense all the time. He used to punt in high school, so we razz each other back and forth a lot. And of course you can't kick all practice long, so occasionally I watch the defense and wish I was out there."

Sanger now recognizes that the difference between good and great punting is repetition. He likens it to shooting free throws in basketball; the less extra action per punt, the better and more consistent the results. He spends literally hour after hour working on his mechanics, going through the simple steps of the punt in order to reduce the motion to actual second nature.

He punts in his dreams. He even, believe it or not, punts in video games.

"I play games like NCAA 2001 and NFL Gameday, and I'm the only one I know who ever punts," Sanger said. "Everybody else goes for it on fourth down, and I get teased a lot, but I punt all the time."

The Maroon and White's special teams guru, Coach Keith Dudzinski, is one of those fourth down daredevils.

"I never punt," Dudzinski said. "Why would you? I just go for it and if I don't make it, I reset the game."

But in real life, there is no reset button; that's why teams have punters. And that's why UMass is lucky to have the services of David Sanger.

Even if the fans don't appreciate him.

Please note:

Issue no. 36 & 37
Are combined.

October 26 & 27 2000

UMass MINUTEMEN
HOCKEY PREVIEW 2000-2001

There's a new boss behind the bench

Cahoon returns home looking to rejuvenate hockey program

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Don Cahoon had a monumental task ahead of him when he took over the reins of the Princeton hockey program prior to the 1991-92 season.

When the Bay State native first stepped behind the Tigers bench, he inherited a team that hadn't posted a winning record since the 1967-68 season. And to make matters worse, he faced the challenge of rebuilding a program that does not offer athletic scholarships.

In his eight seasons in New Jersey, Cahoon led the Tigers to four 18-win seasons, an Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference tournament title and a NCAA tournament berth.

Now, as Cahoon enters his first season as the coach of the UMass hockey team, he is hoping that lightning will strike twice.

Fortunately for the new UMass coach, he has a lot more to work with in Amherst. This time around, Cahoon enters a situation where he has a veteran club, scholarships and one of the finest college hockey facilities in the nation at his disposal.

But even with all of those things on his side, building a program to the level of national prominence is a feat that won't happen overnight. Nevertheless, it's still important to have a successful campaign in year one of Cahoon's regime.

"We're going to try to move forward on a day by day basis," Cahoon said. "The challenge is to make sure that we are a much better team at the end of the year than we were at the beginning. More than any other program, we're going to take this day by day and look to go forward."

Since officially taking over in April, Cahoon has been hard at work on practically every aspect surrounding the program, spanning areas from recruiting to publicity.

At times, it has been a tiresome process, but it has been well worth it according to Cahoon.

"I'm looking forward to the challenge. I've come back home to Massachusetts, a place where I was born and raised," he said. "I've been entrenched and steeped in the tradition of Massachusetts hockey, so this is a real thrill for me."

However, most of that work has been completed with the element of transformation in mind. There have been lots of changes in the six months since Cahoon was hired.

Gone are the old uniforms with the pennant on the chest – they have been replaced by new sweaters that feature the more traditional UMass logo. The benches have also been changed around, as the Minutemen will now sit directly in front of the student section.

"College coaches in general try to focus on these things," Cahoon said. "We're trying to create a culture around the team that is sometimes affected by the littlest things. There's a lot of reasons why we're doing this things. One is just to do things differently; the other is to create a fan base with the student body. We need them to be working for us, and not necessarily just against the other team."

But most importantly, some of the biggest changes will take place on the ice. In recent years, the Minutemen have been a defensive-minded team that utilized the neutral zone trap in an attempt to shut down the opposition. Although Cahoon plans on using the trap at times, it will not dominate the overall scheme as it has in years' past.

"We're going to try to develop skill in relation to the people that we have in our program...and maybe open it up a little bit," Cahoon said. "Last year this team showed the ability to play close games against some very good teams, and in some cases, they had success against them [in the form of a victory]. Some of that success was in part to a strong commitment from the trap, but we're going to try to use a little bit of both schemes."

Added senior captain Jeff Turner: "We're learning about Coach as much as Coach is learning about us. He's trying to make practice enjoyable and upbeat. One of the good things was that he came in and started off slow. He didn't throw too much at us and he didn't overwhelm us with the systems right away."

In the early going, the changes on the ice have been more than just physical transformations. Cahoon has also put a strong emphasis on the mental aspect of the game, specifically winning and losing.

"He's brought in a mindset, he's trying to erase the possibility of losing and of other teams coming back...even the thought process, he's erasing that from our minds, it's not even an option," Turner said. "He's making us believe in ourselves and in what we can accomplish. It's a culture that he's changing around here."

Despite the fact that Cahoon has patrolled the ECAC circuit for the past nine years, he is no stranger to Hockey East. Prior to his tenure at Princeton, Cahoon was an assistant coach under Jack Parker at his alma mater, Boston University, on three separate occasions. He also served as an assistant at UMass-Lowell in the mid-1980's.

"I think it's fabulous for the league to have him in the league, and I think that it's great for me to have a close friend in the league," Parker said. "But I think it works out best for UMass, because they're going to see a revival of their program."

And a turn-around is precisely what Cahoon is hoping for. Although there is reason to believe that it might take a few years, as it did at Princeton, the current Minutemen are hoping for a shot a glory sooner rather than later.

"We've got to be able to compete with Boston College, Boston University, New Hampshire and Maine on a regular basis," Cahoon said. "Those are four of the top 10 teams in the country, and I think that we can achieve parity with them. But it's going to take a commitment by the players to buy into our system."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Don 'Toot' Cahoon inherited an experinced UMass hockey team when he replaced Joe Mallen as the head coach of the Minutemen.

Senior captain looks to go out on top; Versatile Turner leads UMass attack

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Playing in a conference with flashy goal scorers such as Brian Gionta of Boston College and Darren Haydar of New Hampshire can often cause the casual observer to overlook the play of UMass forward Jeff Turner.

However, in Hockey East circles, Turner is one of the most respected players around. A solid all-around center, the senior is a silent killer of sorts.

But it's not his ability to create offensive chances or finish that separates Turner from some of the other marquee players in the league. After all, his key contribution on any given night may not come in the form of a game-winning goal. Instead, it could take the shape of a ferocious penalty kill or a hit in the corner that springs loose a line mate for a scoring opportunity.

So, as a result of his leadership and stellar play on the ice, Turner is the captain of the 2000-01 Massachusetts hockey team.

"It's always an honor to be named captain of a team," he said. "It's something that has to be taken seriously. Whether it's a matter or trying to keep guys on the same page, or leading by example, I have to make myself accountable for all of my actions."

Turn to CAPTAIN, page 3

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Jeff Turner, captain of this year's UMass hockey team, is one of the best kept secrets in Hockey East. The senior posted a team-high 34 points last season and will be looking to improve his production.

Rookies have knack for net

Newcomers looking to spark Minuteman offense

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Balanced point production. This was a problem for the Massachusetts hockey team last year.

Not any more. New Head Coach Don Cahoon has loaded the forward position with four exceptional newcomers. Enter Jimmy Callahan, Scott Horvath, Thomas Pöck and Mike Warner.

These players were brought to Amherst to play... they will. Each brings to the table their own unique blend of hockey. This uniqueness will allow for them to have an opportunity to showcase their skills at crucial points in games.

"We've got four kids up front who are definitely going to contribute," Cahoon said.

Callahan, a sophomore that sat out last year because of a problem with the NCAA Clearing House, will see his first game action this season. The native of Lexington, MA was able to practice last season with the team and because of this his skills sharpened.

"For freshmen it's hard coming in and getting used to college," Callahan said. "The other guys (veterans) are used to that, but we do have a new coach and that makes it easier for me."

But on the ice the development has been outstanding. Callahan was a two-time Eastern Junior Hockey League All-Star as a member of the Tyngsboro Huskies. He was named Most Valuable Player in 1997 when he led the league in scoring. Also in 1997 he was awarded Junior Player of the Year at Hockey Night in Boston.

Horvath brings a big body to the mix, something the Minutemen have lacked in years past. His 6-foot-3 frame will allow him to bang home rebounds. This will be an integral part of UMass' success because a great deal of the Maroon and White's shots come from the blue line.

"[Scott] committed to UMass but waivered a bit [during the coaching change]," Cahoon said. "Finally he decided to come."

The West Redding, CT native does not feel that the transition to college hockey will be that difficult because of the situation that he is coming into.

"It's a little easier for us coming in as freshman because we have a new coach," Horvath said. "Everyone is learning new schemes this year and that makes it easier for us."

Horvath has also had success at Hockey Night in Boston. He was selected as the 2000 co-MVP of the All-Scholastic tournament and the Offensive MVP of Connecticut prep schools. As a member of Avon Old Farms, he totaled 77 points in three seasons and helped that team capture the 2000 New England Prep School championship.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Jimmy Callahan

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Scott Horvath

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Thomas Pock

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Mike Warner

Pöck comes to UMass all the way from Klangenfurt, Austria. He is a polished player with great hands and scoring touch. Last year Pöck played for the Klangenfurt Athletic Club where he scored five goals and added 21 assists. For his performance he was named the league's Rookie of the Year.

"Bill [Gilligan] played a coached with [Pöck's] dad. He's going to take a regular shift. He's a solid center-ice man with a great hockey sense."

On top of his skills as a player, the forward brings a positive attitude that should help start in a winning tradition.

"I'm looking to get the team bigger and play with the team and to reach our goals," Pöck said. "For me, the goal is to get in the playoffs and maybe reach the semifinals or finals. I think that with the quality of this team and the new coaching style we can make that. I'm just trying to give my part to the team.

"It's [very] different, the game is way faster. Our ice is the same size, but other teams have small ice and that's a big difference because there are way more hits. It's not as skilled as in Europe, but I like to play hard and I want to go on one more step. Every hockey player's dream is to play in the show one time, so that's what I want to do in a few years," Pöck continued.

Warner, a native of Arlington, MA is the first of what hopes to be many players that come to Amherst as a result of Cahoon being a local guy. Warner was a teammate of Horvath's at Avon Old Farms where he totaled 12 goals and 12 assists. Like Callahan and Horvath, Warner has also had his share of successes at Hockey Night in Boston. He was a member of HNIB's All-Scholastic teams in both 1999 and 2000. He represented the Massachusetts Senior All-Stars at the Chicago showcase in 1998 and 1999.

"It was a real surprise that [Warner] was available to us. He's doing a great job for us. He'll be a role player on this team."

He is what you might call a little big man. Warner stands only 5-foot-11, but he can do it all and is a proven scorer and he feels that he will be able to do this if he stays focused.

"You just have to play within yourself," Warner said. "You can't try to do something that you know you can't do."

All four players should benefit from Cahoon's new offensive approach to UMass hockey.

"It's the style of play that everyone likes," Horvath said. "You try your best to put the puck in the net and if it comes it comes. Hard work is going get you somewhere."

"It creates more scoring opportunities," Callahan said. "You're not sitting back and waiting for the other team to give up the puck, you're forcing them to give up the puck."

Hungry Minutemen looking to light the lamp

Mix of old and new forwards should spell success for UMass hockey

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

It is a common and simple notion in any sport that points must be put on the board to win games. In hockey, this duty generally falls upon the shoulders of those players who spend most of their time in the offensive zone: the forwards.

For the Massachusetts hockey team, the forwards represent the only area where some of the faces on this year's squad were not on the team last year. And hopefully, the new blood up front will be just the spark that the Minutemen need to get their offense running on all cylinders.

"We want to develop players that are here in our program now," UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon said. "We have kids that are going to be here for two, three or four years. So that definitely affects the way we are recruiting."

The big names from last year are certainly the Turner brothers. Senior captain Jeff Turner was last year's scoring leader, totaling 34 points on 15 goals and 19 assists. But his scoring is far outweighed by his leadership ability and overall level-headedness on the ice.

His younger brother, sophomore Tim Turner, had a breakout freshman year for the Maroon and White last year, leading the team with 21 assists and finishing third in overall scoring with 26 points. Tim played most of last year on a line centered by his older brother and this year should, in all probability be, a breakout year for the budding star.

This year, it will be sophomore Jimmy Callahan on the left side of the first line. Callahan did not see any game action last year, but the team is looking to him to fill the void that comes from Jeff Blanchard's graduation.

"[Callahan's] done great, he was comfortable right off the bat," said the elder Turner. "He compensates both me and Tim well, he's the grit part of our line, but he also puts the puck in net and finds us."

Locker room leadership is far from lacking for the offensive unit, as seniors Jay Shaw, R.J. Gates and Kris Wallis are all back for their fourth years. Shaw, playing the role of assistant captain, is a tough leader who led the forwards in penalty minutes last year. Though he only tallied three goals last season, he made them count, with two of them proving to be game-winners, including one in overtime against Frozen Four participant Saint Lawrence.

"I just want to do whatever I can to help the team win, whether it's scoring or blocking a shot or killing a penalty," Shaw said.

Gates has been a consistent performer throughout his UMass career, and can be counted on to come up big in the clutch situations. He posted points in both of the team's two games in the Hockey East quarterfinals last year.

Wallis is a quiet leader who goes about his business and does his job. In his fourth year with the team, Wallis is the leader in career games played among current Minutemen, playing in every game for UMass each of the past two years and registering 31 in his rookie season.

Wallis tallied 14 points last year, and led the Maroon and White in power play goals, a role he hopefully will continue to play this season.

Possibly the most interesting line combination for the Minutemen this year is that centered by Austrian Thomas Pock. The freshman from Klagenfurt, Austria was named the best forward for the Under-20 World Championship, tallying four goals and seven assists in the seven games he played.

Pock is flanked on the left side by fellow frosh Mike Warner. Warner, a center for the majority of his career, has been moved to the left side to accommodate his linemates. The Waltham, MA native looks to be another sparkplug in coach Cahoon's system, hopefully adding to the potent Maroon and White offense.

The third piece to the puzzle on this line is junior Martin Miljko. He missed the majority of last season with a serious knee injury that necessitated surgery on both knees. But expectations were high for Miljko, as in his limited action last season, he posted five goals in the 11 games he played, and gained a reputation as a bit of a sniper. Assuming his injury does not slow him, he should play a monumental role this season.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Jedd Crumb

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Martin Miljko

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Tim Turner

Juniors Darcy King and Jedd Crumb are no strangers to the Minuteman system, as both have played pivotal roles up front for the team in previous years. Crumb was quite impressive last year, totaling 18 points while finding the back of the net eight times, good enough for third on the team. Doubtlessly, the veteran up front will be counted on to provide offense that comes from outside of the first line.

King played in all 36 games for the Maroon and White last year, netting seven goals in those games. In UMass' two game series in the arctic zone surrounding Orono, Maine, he put up two goals and an assist against the Black Bears. He is expected to continue to play alongside last year's linemate Gates, and the team looks for him to continue to put points on the board.

Sophomore Brad Niswantowski was rather impressive in his limited time last year. Though he only played in 16 games and tallied only one goal and one assist, his presence over the second half of the season last year earned him a solid role on this year's squad.

"After last year, I'm definitely more comfortable than I was last year and I know what to expect," Niswantowski said.

Sophomore J.R. Zavisza only played in six games last year, and though he didn't register a point, he seemed to pick up the play of everyone around him.

"J.R. Zavisza is a kid who has really caught my attention," said coach Cahoon. "With a fresh look, people like J.R. have a chance to play to their full potential."

Sophomores Chris Thornton and Anthony Scaparotti have barely scratched the surface in their careers, but look to make this season one in which they see more time.

Scott Horvath joins this year's squad as a freshman straight out of Avon Old Farms, where he was a teammate of fellow first-year player Mike Warner. People tend to look up to the mammoth 6'3", 228 pounder out of West Redding, CT, and he looks to play a large role in the UMass offense.

But regardless of individual performance, the players up front all stress their emphasis on working as a team.

"I think we all get along very well, our team chemistry is excellent right now, we're all seeming to gel together on the ice which is going to be a great attribution for the rest of the season," Shaw said."

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN
Seniors Kris Wallis [left] and Jay Shaw [right] will provide veteran leadership and scoring punch for the UMass hockey team this season

Out with the old and in with a new scheme

Cahoon brings aggressive style of defense to UMass hockey program

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

There is an age old adage that "offense wins games but defense wins championships." If this holds true, then the Massachusetts hockey team will be hoisting a national championship banner at the Pepsi Arena in Albany, N.Y. in April. The reason – experience.

If you look up and down the UMass lineup, you will see a great deal of upperclassmen. This is highlighted by the defensemen. The Minutemen have eight blueliners (Toni Soderholm, Samuli Jalkanen, Joey Culgin, Randy Drohan, Luke Duplessis, Kelly Sickavish, Justin Shaw and Nick Stephens) listed on the roster and all have played in at least 50 collegiate games.

Even with the experience the Maroon and White have to undergo change. No longer will "the trap" be the only defensive scheme. This season a more aggressive style of forechecking will be played in hopes that pressure will result in turnovers and eventually goals.

"Last year we used the trap all the time," Jalkanen said. "Now we'll use the trap and we'll also fore check a lot harder."

Now UMass will be able to create more of a flow to the game with an aggressive style of play that everyone is buying into.

"The game is played more on instincts," Culgin said. "[The defensemen] all like to play more aggressive rather than sitting back."

"It will be a little more instinctive," Soderholm said. "In the trap there was a certain job that you have to pull off. No matter what system you play there will be a certain responsibility that you have to do, but the new system leaves a little more room for you to attack them and play more on instincts."

Of course with any change there is the feeling out stage and this is as drastic a change as there could possibly be. The trap was more of a sit back and cover your area defense, whereas the forechecking style makes players skate and help each other out more.

"There is some adjusting to get used to," Culgin said. "The other team comes at us a lot quicker and we have to be able to adjust to that."

As the teams come quicker the hits get harder and this is one of two things, more scoring chances is the other, that will be the result of the new scheme.

"We'll hit more when he have the chance to forecheck," Soderholm said. "I think we'll drive the body more then before."

This will bring more excitement to the crowd and should make the Mullins Center a more hostile environment for opposing teams.

Aside from the hits the increased scoring chances that will be an integral change to the Minuteman style of play. Last year the Maroon and White posted 2.39 goals per game, last year and this scheme was implemented to combat the ineptitude of the offense to score on a consistent basis.

"The whole defensive scheme is going to be more offensive oriented," Soderholm said. "We're not going to set up in the trap as much as we used to, but we'll still be using it. Now it won't be the only thing we do."

With the trap not being the only thing that UMass does opposing teams will have a much tougher time in preparing for the Minutemen. Before they knew what was going to be thrown at, but with two defensive schemes offensives will have to make quicker decisions. Making other offenses make quicker decisions should create the necessary turnover that will lead to odd-man rushes and more goals.

The style also relies heavily on the forwards to play more of a defensive role when it comes to being smart hockey players. They have to know when to forecheck and know when not to. If poor decisions are made on the forwards the defensemen could see themselves in odd-man situations a great deal.

But a change was necessary. No time is better than the present to do so. There is a competent group of blue liners and they already know the trap as well as anybody. Enter Head Coach Don Cahoon.

New coach, new ideas ... that is what he has brought to Amherst. Cahoon feels as though the veteran defensive core has two standout players that will play a large role in the success of the Maroon and White defense, Soderholm and Jalkanen.

"We got a couple of kids back there who I think that we are confident in – Toni Soderholm and Sami Jalkanen," Cahoon said. "They both have exceptional skills, are great competitors and have the level of confidence needed to play that position."

The confidence that Cahoon has in his two main men will need to be carried over to Nick Stephens. Stephens, a senior, has spent his first three years as a forward. Now, for his final campaign, he has been moved to defense. This move is another way of getting more offense from the defensemen.

"Nick [Stephens] has come along great," Culgin said. "The thing with him is that he has to use his head. He has all the tools. He has the speed to bring it up the ice by himself. That makes it easier for the rest of us."

Cahoon is also confident in the remainder of the defensive core.

"The other guys back there all have experience," Cahoon said. "Hopefully we can get them to play within themselves and do a respectable job. We don't want them to play out of themselves."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Junior defenseman Toni Soderholm is the top returning scorer on the blueline for the UMass hockey team.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
The veteran of the UMass defensive corps, senior Joey Culgin brings a wealth of experience to the ice for the Minutemen.

This Friday in Arts Moby visits the Northeast and Limp Bizkit sinks in the Hot Dog Flavored Water. Collegian Arts: we haven't been "Rollin'" since the operation.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

UMass tennis teams plan to continue their winning ways this weekend. The women's team is 4-1, while the men's team remains undefeated at 6-0.

SPORTS p. 6

Volume CVII Issue 37 www.dailycollegian.com Friday, October 27, 2000

Annual scarefest delights children

By Karen Madsen
Collegian Correspondent

Yesterday, the Northeast Residential Area hosted their traditional children's Halloween Festival. Activities included a pizza party, a haunted house created by University of Massachusetts students and trick-or-treating through dorms.

The Festival was conceived by Residential Assistants (RAs) six years ago as a service program for Residential Life. The program started with one community center, and now attracts approximately 150 children from three community centers in both Holyoke and Springfield.

The purpose, according to Northeast RA Amanda Wallace, is to provide a safe environment for trick-or-treating. She expressed concern about the dangers children might encounter in their own neighborhoods, such as darkness, traffic and candy that has been tampered with.

UMass student Cassara Skuba, who had spent the previous two hours decorating her floor for the event, also pointed out that exposing children from low-income neighborhoods to the college campus might make them more likely to go to college later on in life.

"It gives them something to aspire to," she explained. She ascribed the popularity of the festival among UMass students to the chance it presents them to give back to the community, saying, "It lets us remember what it was like to be a little kid."

Skuba said that she and the other residents of her dorm felt very enthusiastic about the festival and that the different floors were competing to see which would be the best decorated.

Wiluelia Melendez, who works for the local YMCA, helped escort the children to the pizza party yesterday afternoon.

"It's good for the children," she said. "After the festival they say they want to go to school here."

Twelve-year-old Sarah Smalley, who arrived dressed as a "Devil's messenger," said she likes the event because it was different from what she usually does for Halloween.

"It's phat," she said, "it's cool."

However important safety may be, the real incentive for going to the festival, at least according to the kids, is the candy.

"It's my favorite part," said nine-year-old Jules Garcia, who came dressed in white and black prison stripes. This ambitious young woman also planned to go trick-or-treating again in the neighborhoods next Tuesday, Halloween night.

The event was completely free for children, with transportation being made available by local community centers. Financing for the program was provided by generous donations from students, local businesses and active fundraising.

ANNA WEISFELER/COLLEGIAN
Children from Holyoke and Springfield gathered in the Northeast and Sylvan Residential Areas for a pre-Halloween (trick or) treat.

Former Death Row inmate speaks

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

After a 21-year wrongful imprisonment and near execution, former Arizona death row inmate Paris Carrigan addressed students at the University of Massachusetts on the dangers of the death penalty.

With an air of quiet reservation, Carrigan addressed a crowd of over 150 in the Campus Center yesterday about his own personal experiences on death row.

"This is the only therapy that I have. This is the only thing that I can do to justify the last 21 years," Carrigan said, explaining that he did not care whether the response he got has positive or negative effects. "I will talk until I cannot talk anymore."

He explained that he was accused in March of 1978 of the murder of a jewelry store clerk by the name of Robert Gibson Shaw. He was arrested based on a confession from his friend Robert Dunbar, a man who later recanted his testimony admitting that he had committed the murder himself.

"He [Dunbar] said that if the police would give him immunity for all of the things that he had been doing lately that he would be more than willing to testify against me," Carrigan said. "This was my friend."

According to Carrigan, he was tried by the state of Arizona by a lawyer that prevented him from having a fair trial. He explained to his audience that if they were to go on trial and have a lawyer that was provided by the state, then they run the risk of having a lawyer like his.

"The state will probably appoint you an attorney that looked much like mine did; he was a drunk," he said. "This man was so lame that he admitted during the appeals process that he had spent about a total of three hours on my case."

Carrigan was convicted of murder and sentenced to the gas chamber. While he was on death row, he explained to the audience, he became sure that many others that were locked up were innocent of the crimes that they were accused of as well.

"We know who is guilty and who is innocent on death row. There are no secrets. When you hear someone crying at two o'clock in the morning, you know who it is," he said. "I would say that half of the people there are absolutely, without a doubt, innocent."

In addition to telling his personal story, Carrigan also explained to the audience his personal feelings on the judicial bias that allows those that are wealthy to get away with more crime.

"It is true that in the American justice system that you can have as good a defense as you can pay for, and it doesn't come cheap," he said. "It is not the rich people that are doing time for murder, at least not on death row."

Vehemently speaking out against the death penalty, Carrigan explained that there were better and less expensive ways to deal with prisoners than to kill them. He suggested

Turn to CARRIGAN, page 2

Semi-annual Safety Walk brightens campus pathways

ANNA WEISFELER/COLLEGIAN
SGA Senator Jen Texiera leads the semi-annual Campus Safety Walk at the Student Union last night.

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

It was dark. People were skulking around the steps of the Student Union. Then they split up to cover more territory. Not a corner of campus was left unwalked.

Last night about 50 students and administrators from the University of Massachusetts participated in the semi-annual safety walk. The first walk was held in the Spring of 1997 at the suggestion of a student committee on safety.

This unique opportunity for administrators to walk the campus at night offers them a different perspective on campus safety issues.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Javier Cevallos said that this was his fifth safety walk.

"It's a different world when you go through the campus at night," Cevallos commented.

The safety concerns raised by last night's walkers will be given to Deputy Chief Larry Holmes, who then compiles a list of recommendations for the physical plant.

"We see what we can do with existing and future [circumstances]," Holmes said.

Campus Security, the physical plant and the Office of Information Technologies (OIT) then work together to make changes that will improve campus safety.

OIT has room in its budget to install five call boxes per year. The recommendations that come from the safety walk help determine where those call boxes are placed.

"The first five [emergency phones] were installed in 1980," mentioned Holmes. "Now there are 92."

Holmes also said that when the emergency button on a call box is pressed, the number and location of that call box automatically appears on the computer screen where the call is received.

On previous safety walks, students have suggested installing call boxes in remote parking lots.

Holmes said that when those call boxes are installed, "We usually put extra conduit so we can put in future phones and lights."

In addition to installing additional lights or call boxes, safety walkers point out areas trees or bushes that are potential safety concerns. Where a tree or bush creates a dark, shadowy place, it is often trimmed.

There is a beautification committee on campus, though, that ensures that the trimming done is aesthetically pleasing.

Richard Kula, Safety Officer for the Physical Plant, said he has never received any complaints regarding the cutting back of shrubbery.

Kula said the pruning is done very conservatively, and "the kind of plant or bush is taken into account when pruning or trimming."

Most everyone who has participated in the walk in the past agrees that it is one of the most effective vehicles for change at UMass.

"One of the nice things about these walks," said Cevallos, "is that you see the results."

At the recommendation of last fall's safety walkers, a new call box and several lights have been put up around the campus pond. The effectiveness of those lights was noted by Deputy Chief Holmes, who commented on one student reading a book under the bright lights.

Breast Cancer discussed over past month

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Correspondent

Breast cancer can develop in both women and men of different ages and only through a conscious awareness and understanding can people identify and seek treatment for this potentially fatal disease.

For fifteen years now, National Breast Cancer Awareness Month has sponsored a nationwide educational campaign geared toward women of all ages and races.

The campaign began in October of 1985 with a weeklong event in which the founding members dispersed brochures, spoke with reporters and testified before a U.S. Congressional committee about the crucial need for widespread access to mammography. Since this mass action, October has remained the official month for breast cancer awareness, and the campaign continues today.

Community Health & Patient Educator at University Health Services Amanda L. Collings, M.D., said that the UMass health staff holds educational workshops for breast and testicular cancers in order to further create awareness in young people.

"Since there is no testicular cancer awareness month and we [University health staff] believe this type of disease to be just as important as breast cancer, we combine education on the two types of cancers as one, massive campaign in October and a second one in February," Collings explained.

During October's campaign, Health Services informed students about factors that put people at higher risk for developing breast cancer and the things that people can do to take care of themselves.

Display models enabled Health Service educators to demonstrate how to conduct self-examinations on one's breasts, Collings noted. "This helps people to see what it feels like to touch a breast that has developed a lump, so they can better understand what they feel when examining their own breasts."

In conjunction with Health Services, Peer Health Educators (PHE), consisting of University students, conducted breast and testicular cancer workshops in their residence halls, demonstrating breast self-examinations on models, and giving out the traditional pink ribbons that signify breast cancer awareness.

Every Tuesday and Wednesday in October, PHE also handed out shower cards, mammogram bookmarkers and information pamphlets from a table set up in the Campus Center.

In November, PHE will continue to give out health information from the table. However, the topics will vary and periodically change, Collings said.

Resident Advisers, sorority leaders and official student organizations can also request Health Services' models and information pamphlets to conduct their own breast cancer information workshops.

According to Collings, if a student does suspect that they have an abnormal lump on their breast, Health Services will exam it and take the necessary action if need be, such as giving a referral for a biopsy. Then students would receive any related physical treatment at Health Services; they are encouraged by physicians to perform self-examinations on their breasts and are informed about the workshops.

"I understand that it takes time for such examinations to become habit forming. I usually tell women to conduct their exams right after their period ends, so that event will trigger their memory. The shower cards that we [University Health staff] hand out do the same thing. If people see the card in their shower everyday, they will be reminded to examine their breasts," said Collings.

She added that people who are in relationships with women, whether they are male or female, should also know how to examine breasts for lumps. That way, their partners can also be on the lookout for abnormalities, and those women have a better chance of finding something wrong if it occurs.

As indicated by the M.D. Anderson Cancer Center at the University of Texas in Houston, in nearly 80 to 90 percent of all breast cancer cases, individuals discovered their cancer themselves through regular breast self-examinations.

Collings explained "Although most young women do not develop breast cancer, our theory is that pre-

Turn to CANCER, page 3

■ Carrigan

continued from page 1

SCOTT ELDREDGE/COLLEGIAN

Former death row inmate Paris Conniger spoke to students and faculty in the Campus Center last night.

that dangerous prisoners simply be locked away from society, adding that no individual has the right to end the life of a human being.

"The subject of justice stands alone. Justice in this country means different things to different people. This is not an excuse for vengeance and this is not an excuse for unbridled passion," he said. "You do not have the right to vote someone's life away."

Environmentalist McCarthy decries company toxin abuse

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Yesterday, Gina McCarthy, the Assistant Secretary for Pollution Prevention, spoke at the University of Massachusetts.

She spoke on many environmental topics directly related to the state of Massachusetts. One specific topic that came into discussion was the idea of getting information out to the public so that changes can be made.

"Information is really the key to moving forward. Public access to reliable data is what is going to get people where they want to go," said McCarthy.

Much of the evening's events focused on the work done by TURA, Toxics Use Reduction Act, which passed in 1989 by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The act focuses on reducing the use of toxic chemicals by improving and designing products as well as the ways in which these products are being produced.

"Between 1990-98, TURA collected data on various aspects of industry throughout the state. The total reduction by large industries over the past nine years was 33%, with 277 million lbs. of chemicals that did not need to be used," said McCarthy.

She went on to explain that Byproducts had a 48 percent reduction and Tri On-site releases had an 83% reduction of toxins, this being releases out into the air and water.

McCarthy further explained how TURA is putting together a new law that will allow developing businesses that can provide documentation that they are reducing and keeping environmental hazards down to have more freedom.

"We want to put in a new law for developing companies that are doing well. [We want to] get out of the one size fits all [mindset, and] allow them flexibility, give them financial and tax incentives," said McCarthy.

ANNA WEISFELER/COLLEGIAN

Gina McCarthy, assistant secretary for pollution prevention spoke to environmentalists in Stockbridge Hall yesterday.

TURA has a web sight that displays all aspects of environmental statistics for every area in Massachusetts, allowing people to see what the environmental hazards or additional benefits it may hold.

"Information is the key, publicly accessible, transparent reliable data that is what is going to get us where we need to go. Into the hands of the public. Into the hands of the students. Into the hands of the Universities and into the hands of policy makers and towns business. That is really what is going to be the common thread that builds the kind of momentum that is going to get us to the next level of environmental changes," said McCarthy.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benbarris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hummel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Sarnawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiula Assistant Business Manager
Kane Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Where are the best people and technology headed?
Analog Devices.

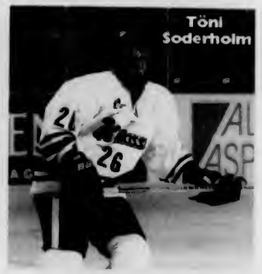
Analog Devices is a world leader in digital and analog systems. Come meet us face-to-face!

Find out about our Engineering Careers through Umass Amherst Career Services.
Info. Sessioin: October 26th, 6:00 pm,
Recruiting Session: October 27th.

If you miss us on campus, come visit us to explore our many opportunities at:
www.analog.com
We are an equal opportunity employer.

ANALOG DEVICES

COME SEE
THE MASS ATTACK
ON HOCKEY EAST



UMass
VS
MERRIMACK
WARRIORS

FRIDAY NIGHT
OCTOBER 27 • 7 PM
WILLIAM D. MULLINS CENTER

STUDENT TICKETS FREE
FOR UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS WITH UMASS STUDENT ID

GET YOUR UMASS HOCKEY DESKTOP WALLPAPER AT WWW.UMASSATHLETICS.COM

■ cancer

continued from page 1

ple develop their health habits early in life. It's important that they start becoming familiar with their breasts while they're young, so that when they do become older and should be looking for lumps, they will not have to waste time learning the procedure."

Professor of Microbiology Albey M. Reiner, who teaches a course about the biology of cancer and AIDS in which he spends six to eight classes discussing breast cancer, commented, "It is extremely rare for women under 30 to develop breast cancer and very rare for women under 35 to develop it. However, young women should develop awareness for this disease. They just not necessarily worry about getting it because the chances are very small."

The National Breast Cancer Awareness Association printed pamphlets explaining the following facts: women, who are over age 50, have a family history of breast cancer, have given birth to their first child after age 30, have never given birth, are more than 40 percent overweight or consume an average of two or more alcoholic drinks each day, are at the highest risk of developing the cancer.

Even though the chances are small, other types of people can develop breast cancer. The Young Survival Coalition (YSC) provides information for and about young women in their struggles with the cancer.

The organization's official website pointed out, "Our numbers are small, but our battle is real. Any young woman diagnosed with breast cancer is faced with the fact that she is a minority."

"Outside of the breast cancer community, she is a young woman battling a potentially fatal disease that otherwise healthy young women can't begin to comprehend. Inside of the breast cancer community, she is the minority and most of her needs are not the same as her older fellow survivors," YSC explained.

YSC also reported, the majority of breast cancer research is concentrated around women over the age of 45, and legislation around mammograms is focused on women who have Medicare as their primary insurance provider.

"Young women are a silent minority, overlooked by the breast cancer community. We wish to give a louder voice to our cause," said YSC.

On Sunday, Oct. 29, YSC will host the Race for the Cure-NJ. Taking place in Princeton, NJ, this annual walk will raise money for a breast cancer cure.

The National Breast Cancer Awareness Month organization noted that women between the ages of 20 and 39 should get a clinical breast examination done at least every three years. However, a routine mammography is not recommended in this age group or younger.

Although it is not spoken about as commonly as women's breast cancer, men's breast cancer can potentially occur because men also have breast tissue in their chests. However, according Professor Reiner, only one percent of men develop the cancer.

Department Head of Surgery at the University of Iowa Hospitals & Clinics, Professor Carol Scott-Conner, M.D., Ph.D. agreed. "For every 100 women who develop breast cancer in the US, one male is diagnosed with the equivalent disease. Male breast cancer is rare but afflicts approximately 1000 men per year in the U.S. Most men with breast cancer are in their sixties, but the disease can strike younger or older men."

Throughout October's awareness campaigns, Health Services did mention men's chances for developing breast cancer. Collings pointed out that people, such as breast cancer survivor Richard Browntree, gave lectures on male breast cancer to make people aware that the chance is there.

Collings commented, "I believe that some people may have a stigma when dealing with male breast cancer, thinking that men don't really have breasts and therefore are not at any risk of getting the disease, which is not true."

For more information about breast cancer, visit the Health Education Department on the second floor of Health Services or www.nbcam.com on the web.

The Dance

Vlad and Liz of the UMass ballroom dance team salsa danced at Wentworth Institute of Technology

Happy Birthday, Eric!

You're really old now.
Word.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Just a Reminder:

The first ever
Collegian Savings Guide will be distributed on Wednesday November 1
* With the money you save,
you can spend more time uptown.

INDEPENDENT

"It says something about individuals, and institutions. As the only law school in Boston not affiliated with a university, New England School of Law is able to focus all of its resources on your legal education. Located in the heart of Boston's legal community, the school offers innovative programs including the War Crimes Prosecution Project, opportunities for overseas study, a business law center and coursework on Internet Law. The results speak for themselves—91% of 1999 graduates were employed within nine months. Don't follow. New England School of Law will help you lead."

Lisa Michaud, Class of 1999
Associate
Nutter, McClennen & Fish, LLP

New England School of Law
154 Stuart Street
Boston, MA 02116
(617) 422-7210
admit@admin.nesl.edu
www.nesl.edu

ABA-accredited Member of the Association of American Law Schools

Another valuable lesson learned from Hollywood: 38 of 74

If you're braless in a white t-shirt, it will rain.

Introducing Nibblebox.com. Tomorrow's entertainment today.
Log on for original episodic shows, interactive entertainment, and the best of college radio created by college students with help from people like Bruce Kirschbaum (producer/writer, Seinfeld), Steve Golin (producer, Being John Malkovich), and Michael Curtis (producer/writer, Friends). Because while it's fun making cynical comments about entertainment clichés, it's more fun to see what students are actually doing about it

nibblebox.com
digital entertainment in short, tasty bytes.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Environmentalism: Still unnoticed

Too often, the American conscience is only involved in the issue of the moment. While environmentalism has continued to be an ongoing an issue in American politics, it has lost the flavor and flair that it used to have.

In short, environmentalism just isn't media savvy.

Why?

A good question that we don't have the answer for.

Our guesses would obviously include changes made in the American approach to environmentalism, including the implementation of recycling programs, and the elimination of many types of fuels, or at least their dirty usage. Ironically, the improvement and defense of the American environment has made people lax in their approach to our environment.

The release of a report yesterday again saying that our world's average temperature is continuing to increase should be enough to shake us out of our lackadaisical attitude towards our environment, but unfortunately, it probably won't. While many feel that the Earth's continually increasing temperatures are reasons to be worried, not enough care enough to change things.

Because haven't they done enough?

Already, they are willing to recycle the cans and bottles and gallons of milk that threaten to further pollute filled landfills.

Already they are willing to wear sunscreen at the beach to defend themselves against the burning sun.

They try to drive less, try to walk more and try to waste less.

They clean up litter every once in a while or pick up a cup on the side of the road.

And they think that they have completed their responsibilities. But they haven't. There's more to environmentalism than recycling a little bit or cleaning up litter on the side of the road. It takes much more of that.

The weather has been in the mid-60s over the past few days, in the middle of October. There is a coal burning plant on this campus. And while there are recycling bins around campus, are they working? These are the kinds of things that people need to be concerned about if they're going to be able to make a difference.

It takes a connection with some of the continuing problems of our environment to make a difference. Realizing that the temperature is still warm enough for shorts should be an acknowledgement of just how poor our environment has gotten.

So recycling isn't enough.

Neither is the occasional litter cleanup.

It takes more than that, a willingness to champion causes, to buy products made at safer factories, to drive still less and walk still more, among all of the other things that you can do to make this environment of ours better.

We can only hope that you're willing to do those things.

ed/op ed/op ed/op ed/op

What IS peace, anyway?

On last Thursday evening, October 19, a vigil was held outside the Student Union focusing on the recent clashes between Israelis and Palestinians. The organizers advertised it and presented it as a "non-partisan" vigil, one that simply expressed support for "peace" between all people in the Middle East. Commentary and prayer were combined with silence to express sadness at the loss of life that has occurred over the past three weeks. Many accepted the vigil at face value, promoting the idea that support for peace between Palestinians and Israelis is capable of being a non-partisan act. It must be added that integral to the organizers ideas was the assumption that support for "peace" is identical with support for the Oslo "Peace Process."

The problem with the vigil (which I did attend) was its very premise. To discuss peace between Israel and the Palestinian people is itself a partisan act. Why? Because Israel is a military occupier of Palestinian land, an occupation that has lasted some 33 years ignoring the problematic issue of the size and extent of Israel compared to the area granted it by the United Nations in 1948), in total disregard for established international law and in direct violation of numerous international treaties to which Israel itself is a signatory. The existence of the military occupation is itself a form of violence.

This means that the recent street demonstrations and uprisings and rock throwing by Palestinians are not violent actions, they are re-actions to a long history and continuation of Israeli violence. They are an expression of the fact that the Oslo "Peace Process" is not in actuality a process of establishing peace, it is a process designed to promote a mere cease-fire. It is a process that allows Israel to achieve victory over the Palestinian people through negotiations (backed at all times by military force) rather than exclusively through such military force.

Basic to the Oslo process is the idea that Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip is something that can be made legitimate and which can be negotiated over, rather than renounced and rectified, as international law and basic justice demand.

When Yasser Arafat agreed to the Oslo process on behalf of the Palestinian people, he was declaring defeat for their aspirations towards independence and liberty.

JONATHAN ELSBERG

The Oslo process has existed hand-in-hand for seven years with continued Israeli subjugation of the Palestinian people. During the time of the Oslo process, Israel has doubled the size of its illegal colonial settler population to approximately 350,000 and created hundreds of new settlements by seizing tens of thousands of acres of land from Palestinian farmers and villagers. During the Oslo process, Israel has demolished hundreds of Palestinian homes with bulldozers to build and expand these settlements and to create a road system that is for exclusive use by the settlers. During the Oslo process, Israel has continued to use systematic torture in its prisons to instill terror in those Palestinians who oppose their occupation. These are acts of violence, acts of terrorism, committed on a civilian population as a matter of course.

The goal of the Oslo process is a negotiated settlement in which Palestinians will achieve self-determination in a portion of the Occupied Territories and Israel will be allowed to incorporated a large portion of those territories into its internationally recognized, legal self. This will happen despite the fact that numerous U.N. resolutions have insisted that the territories are not open to negotiation – that Israel has total responsibility to withdraw without equivocation.

If the Oslo process is continued and succeeds in its goals, it will create a situation in which an entire population will be stripped of all hope of justice for a violent crime that has continued unabated for over 33 years. This population will be left with a scattered patchwork of land, less than 20% of the land that originally made up their homeland. This "Bantustan" system may be called a Palestinian "State," but it would be incapable of real Independence from Israel because, among other things, travel between each part would be subject to Israeli control at any time. More than that, it would be incapable of absorbing any significant portion of the four million Palestinian refugees who continue to languish in camps in neighboring Arab countries, many of whom have been there for over 50 years.

What this means is that even if the Oslo "Peace Process" is revived and pushed through to its conclusions, the Palestinians will still be suffering under a de facto subjugation. In other words, the structure of Israeli violence towards Palestinians will be rearranged and redesigned, but it will not be dismantled.

That is why support for the Oslo process is in fact opposition to real peace. That is why the organizers of Thursday's vigil were themselves creating a partisan event simply by asking that it be imagined as "non-partisan." I have no doubts at all that they are well meaning and have peaceful desires in their hearts. But I fear that they suffer from shortsightedness regarding the recent clashes in the Middle East. They believe that those clashes are specific events out of the ordinary from regular life. In fact, they are merely a slight exaggeration of what normal life is for Palestinians.

An article about the vigil ends with a quote from UMass student (and Jewish-Israeli) Dan Yagudin. He told the vigil crowd that, "We're not meant to fight. We're meant to play soccer," something he sometimes did as a child with Arab kids from a nearby town. When he said this I was reminded of an experience I had in Israel a couple years ago. I spent the summer in the West Bank, living in Ramallah and attending a Palestinian university. Although I am Jewish myself, the students there were welcoming and friendly and a group of them invited me to join them in a trip to the beaches of the Sea of Galilee. This was a risky trip for them, because it would involve illegally sneaking into Israel, but it was a risk they were willing to take.

When we were there, one of my Palestinian friends attempted to enter a water park near the beach. He was refused admittance because he is Arab (they did not find out that he was a West Bank Arab, or else he would have been arrested). Later that day, a group of the Palestinians started up a soccer game at the beach with a group of off-duty Israeli soldiers. It was a friendly match and it lifted my heart to see it. Nonetheless, I could not get out of my mind the fact that this soccer game was perfectly consistent in the minds of the Israelis with the apartheid system that my friend had experienced only hours earlier. If my friend had made a fuss at the gates of the water park, these same soccer-playing soldiers would have helped to arrest him. This is the contradiction that the vigil organizers must understand.

Peace does not mean that people smile and play soccer; peace means that people do not oppress one another.

Jonathon Elsberg is a UMass student.

Think before you do

EMILY VACANTI

This column is about everyone's favorite form of exercise. You guessed it, sex. I've decided to write about this because the vast majority of college students are sexually active, and so it pertains to them. Many college students that I have met seem to project an attitude of ignorance when it comes to this physical act. A lot of people do not honestly know what they're getting themselves into. What sex is to them is a pleasure filled animal act that has no bearing on love.

I'm also writing this because so many people have approached me on this that it's almost funny. A good number of people assume that I know everything about sex, so when I don't I give them all the same run down, which will be the main body of this column. I've gotten sick of repeating this over and over.

I'm hoping that everyone who is reading this now won't go to a professional to learn about sex.

What should be the most important thing about sex (but is clearly not) is where love factors in. I honestly believe that you should know, care about (even love the person that you are having sex with. I know what you're thinking: "One night stands aren't a bad thing." To many people, one night stands are not a bad thing; honestly, some of the guys that I've dated and put up with for a few months would have been better as one night, sexless hookups! But being Catholic, it has been beaten into my head that sex is only something that should be shared by two people who are in love. Blah, blah, blah. Catholicism also states that you shouldn't have premarital sex, but that almost is too much to ask today.

The first and most basic precaution of sex is to use some protection. I've talked to so many guys who go to great lengths to keep condoms where they live based on the fact that their girlfriends have each been on the pill. Many women I know have also made this statement: Why should we use condoms? We've been together for more than a month and I'm on the pill." I've got some bad news for you, ladies. Just because he hasn't cheated on you doesn't mean that he doesn't have a nasty little infection below the waist. That one chick that he hooked up with six months ago (I know, most people hook up every weekend. I'm being nice.) could have had something nasty. I stand by the pill for the reason that I'm on it (regulation) and for birth control, but he should wear a condom. If not because of STI's (sexually transmitted infections), then because of pregnancy. I know several women who got pregnant while being on the pill and using nothing else. Some women just forget to take it. Some take it and drink heavily (lowers the effectiveness). Antibiotics lower the effectiveness. What should seem difficult to believe is that certain other over the counter and prescription drugs lower the effectiveness. So you have to be really careful. If you decide to drink heavily for a few days (weekend starts on Thursday!), take it really early one night (say before you go out), then forget to take it the next night (take it a couple of hours late), and repeat this cycle consistently, then you have to be extremely careful. You don't want an unexpected surprise due to stupidity. So if you're on the pill, be extra careful.

"I've got some bad news for you, ladies. Just because he hasn't cheated on you doesn't mean that he doesn't have a nasty little infection below the waist. That one chick that he hooked up with six months ago could have had something nasty."

Now comes the fun part for most guys. Condoms! Everyone is different and every male has a different personal preference when it comes to rubbers. I honestly don't know much of anything about them except that if you are going to engage in sexual activity, you should wear a latex condom lubricated with nonoxyl-9 (kills the little guys). I'm not going to describe how to use them. That would be a little too blunt for me. If you have the problem of it slipping off, then you are not fully erect (learned that during "My Body, My Health"). If it breaks, put on a new one. If it's getting dry, use extra lubricant. This is not hard (no pun intended) to figure out. And don't try using any of these problems as excuses to get out of wearing one. They shouldn't work. If you have questions about condoms, ask a CVS pharmacist. They have a little counter over to the side where you can ask embarrassing questions. If you have an excellent doctor, ask him/her. Don't let any questions about condoms go unanswered.

The aforementioned are the two forms of protection that I know most about. A few of the other forms of birth control (condoms are the only method that protects against almost all STI's) are a diaphragm, cervical cap, the female condom (I've been told that it feels like saran wrap between your legs), and the shot.

What I know about the diaphragm and cervical cap is that they are both used and that you fill with spermicide. One fits snugly over the cervix while one covers a little more area. They are not nearly as effective as the pill and condoms.

The female condom will scare the hell out of your partner if he doesn't know what to expect when he first sees it. These are not quite as effective as the male condom, but they are pretty reliable. The one problem that I've been told about is that you have to make sure that when you start having sex, he goes inside of the condom. I've been told that it's actually quite easy to miss it completely. I've been told that it's not easy to insert, but you get used to it.

The one friend that I have that got the shot said that it was a huge mistake. Yes, it is reliable birth control, but it screws up your period immensely. She didn't have luck with it.

That ends my sexual lecture. I just want people to know that there are several forms of protection available and that a couple of them are quite reliable. The reason that I stress use of condoms so much is the same reason that most people do the "two" rule (the number that your lover says that they've been with is half the actual number). Don't just trust anyone. Be careful.

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian columnist.

You too can fill this page with your mind's ramblings.

Write for Ed/Op.

Murder in the purrst

There's a scene in Trainspotting, Scottish director Danny Boyle's 1996 film adaptation of Irvine Welsh's novel, that depicts a conversation between two friends at the funeral of a third friend named Tommy. Their conversation focuses on the horrific details of Tommy's death from AIDS-related complications of toxoplasmosis, a disease he acquires from living with a kitten he bought for his ex-girlfriend. While the two friends discuss the disturbing fact that Tommy's death occurs long before his body is found, the audience views a flashback of the kitten mewing helplessly as it stands near Tommy's body. The film cuts back to the funeral and one friend says to the other, "The kitten's fine." At this concluding statement, the audience breathes a collective sigh of relief. The film makes us prioritize what happens to the kitten, and the tragic circumstances of Tommy's death are obscured by our concern for the animal.

LAURA WRIGHT

Clearly this scene satirizes our devotion and obsessive concern about animals by making us scrutinize our seeming indifference to human well-being. But it is reductive to conclude that the link between animal and human welfare isn't valid. We care about what happens to animals precisely because we care about what happens to human beings. When we are kind to animals, we're at our best; when we're cruel to them, we're at our worst, providing a microcosmic gauge of our cultural and social ability to victimize vulnerable members of our own species. According to philosopher Albert Schweitzer in The Philosophy of Civilization, "Until he extends the circle of his compassion to all living things, man will not himself find peace."

After reading the Collegian's coverage of the Sept. 10 incident involving a guy who threw a kitten at a pizza delivery driver's car (article appeared Tuesday, Oct. 10) behind Washington Residence Hall, several things went through my mind. First, I tried to make excuses in order to make myself feel better about an act I can't really comprehend. The cat's okay, I told myself. It was ultimately reunited with its owner, Rachael Carney, and the picture of the two in the paper portrayed a happy reunion. The UMass police, according to court officer Phil Cavanaugh, took the kitten into their custody, bought it food and litter, and played with it until its owner was located. Furthermore, the pizza delivery driver took action and called the police.

But none of this information, despite the fact that it illustrates a clear ethical victory, made me feel any better. First, I wonder if maybe the guy who threw the cat is or has ever been a student of mine, a thought that unsettles me to no end. Second, I wonder why, if this act of cruelty was a response to the abuser's own feelings of powerlessness and inadequacy – a common underlying factor in animal abuse cases – he didn't use the power of his position, as a male, as a college student, to rage in a way that's productive. Or maybe I'm too much of idealist and the motivations for this action aren't that complex; maybe he just wanted to shock his friends.

I thought about writing an article to this guy, even though I don't know who he is and neither do the campus police who reviewed the surveillance video from a recently installed camera in the Southwest residence hall cluster. I thought that as a writer, maybe I could be inspirational enough to encourage productive anger, to encourage this guy to write or speak, to do anything other than victimize. But I realize that it's pompous of me to attempt such a task, and really arrogant of me to assume that he'd listen if I did.

"Animal cruelty is a foreshadowing clue to other forms of violent behavior, and after last year's rapes, we know that this campus is not immune to acts of violence directed at humans. So this plea isn't to the guy who threw the cat. It's to the rest of us."

So instead I've decided to write to everyone else who might know this guy, who might be exposed to this individual or to anyone else who perpetrates acts of violence against animals. I can't presume to know why a college student would hurl an animal at a car or how anyone could be so cowardly as to abuse something as helpless as a kitten. But I do know that animal abuse is a warning sign, "an early indicator of violence that may escalate in range and severity against other victims," according to Frank R. Ascione and Phil Arkow in their book Child Abuse, Domestic Violence, and Animal Abuse. The link between animal abuse and other violent crimes including child or spousal abuse and murder has been clearly documented, and the attention to and awareness of this link has increased exponentially over the past two decades.

In 1994, the American Psychiatric Association included animal cruelty into its diagnostic criteria for Conduct Disorder, according to Randall Lockwood in his article, "Animal Cruelty and Societal Violence: A Brief Look from the Front." A 1996 survey of 1000 US households showed that 81% of people surveyed favored strengthening laws against animal cruelty, and 71% favored making some forms of animal cruelty a felony offense. The reason for these statistics is a growing awareness of the link between abuse of animals and abuse of humans. In fact, 80% of those surveyed favored having social workers, animal welfare workers, and law enforcement officials share information on cases of animal abuse to help identify potential child abusers, according to Lockwood. So as far as I can tell, the individual who threw the cat is displaying all sorts of indications of escalating future (or current) abusive behavior and is crying for help whether he realizes it or not.

Phil Cavanaugh of the UMass campus police did his best to reassure me when I spoke to him about the incident. He told me that the perpetrator would "get his someday." The thing that's most worrisome about such reassurance is the notion of "someday." If animal cruelty is a result of a pervasive "social toxicity" in American culture, and if "attention to animal cruelty offers possible tools for the early identification of victims and perpetrators," as Lockwood says, then "someday" might be too late. The happy ending of this particular incident is an anomaly, and "someday" is an ominous prediction of things to come; the notion that this guy will be a repeat offender is already a foregone conclusion. Animal cruelty is a foreshadowing clue to other forms of violent behavior, and after last year's rapes, we know that this campus is not immune to acts of violence directed at humans. So this plea isn't to the guy who threw the cat. It's to the rest of us. It's a call to be proactive and not to dismiss warning signs like cruelty to animals, no matter how happy the outcome. That guy is still out there, and there are people on this campus that know who he is. He's a potential time bomb, and next time his victim might have two legs instead of four.

Laura Wright is a UMass graduate student.

Moby in the Northeast: Run on or revival?

Moby in Worcester: fun but familiar

MOBY
Worcester Palladium
Oct. 24

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER - 1999's Play established what is now common knowledge: Moby is one of the best musicians in the world. The experience and feelings that Play emanates are simply inexplicable. The sound is intense and the tracks are diverse. From "Honey," the first song on the album, to "My Weakness," the last, you never can fully absorb everything the record has to offer. You can only try to understand it.

So how does Moby transfer into a live show? For one thing, you can be sure that there will be a variety of rave-esque lights and unusual dance styles. People will jam themselves into a tiny, but packed, floor to get their groove on. There will be smoke, fog, young fans, old fans and pretty much anything else that you can think of to go along with the techno-music scene.

As someone who has seen him twice before, I can honestly say that, if you've seen one Moby show, you've seen them all. Monday night's concert in Worcester was no exception. All three times he has opened with "Machete." Each time he teased the crowd with a piece of the first verse of "Sweet Home Alabama." He made the same joke about how terrible the James Bond film Tomorrow Never Dies is, before playing its theme. He took his shirt off, responded to the audience's screaming, said, "Thank you, thank you, thank you, thank you" over and over again. I'm not saying it's bad, I'm just saying that for me, it has become old.

Since almost everyone in attendance was mostly familiar with his most recent album, the set was heavily dominated by selections from it. There certainly is nothing wrong with that.

Right away, Moby appeared to be much more pretentious than he needed to be by making the crowd wait until about three minutes into "My Weakness" before he graced us with his presence.

The previous two times I have seen Moby (once in Providence, and once on television), he was not the headlining act. His forty-five minute set was filled with excellent displays of acoustic and electric guitars, turn tables and drums. Moby always had an instrument in his hand. Unfortunately, as a top draw, he does not fair well at all. He very rarely played anything but the guitars, and did a lot of useless jumping around.

For whatever unknown reason, Moby felt the need to play much longer than he had to. There were unnecessary additions to his set such as an acoustic version of "Porcelain." Most of the sounds were identical to that on his album, and much of the time it appeared that someone had just put Play in the Palladium's stereo system and pressed, well, play.

Though much of the show seemed a bit hackneyed, there is certainly no need to deny that Moby is incredibly talented. He preformed a wonderful rendition of "That's When I Reach for My Revolver," from Animal Rights, which he said only seems to play in the Boston area. There were relatively few selections from his previous albums, but he played some of the more notable ones such as "Go" from The Story So Far, and "Feeling So Real" from Everything is Wrong.

When he spoke to the crowd, fans responded as though he was speaking Gospel. "I didn't shave today," he said. "So I'm sorry if I look like a scum-bag." Fans went crazy.

Perhaps the highlight of the show was when he actually did speak Gospel. "Run On," a track from Play, proved to be his best performance of the evening. The lyrics of the song were taken from old Gospel lyrics.

It seemed as if everyone in attendance had an excellent time until about an hour into the show. People began to become sluggish and tired. The crowd really died down. Moby had already played "Porcelain," "Why Does My Heart Feel So Bad," "James Bond," "Find My Baby," and calmness filled the air. He revived the show a bit by playing his most famous song to date, "Body Rock," but soon after that, the tempo dropped again.

At the end of his second encore, claiming that it was tradition, Moby told the rest of his cohorts to leave the stage, so he could be by himself. He needed the time alone to exhibit one of the most inane displays of egotism I have ever seen. He closed with "Thousand," which he bragged is the "fastest song ever recorded." Instead of playing the song, he just let a pre-recorded version run through the speakers while he stood shirtless on a platform doing absolutely nothing. At the end of the song, he extended his arms to each side, I'm still wondering why he didn't go the full nine-yards and nail himself to a cross. It would've got the point across in a much less subtle way.

When all was said and done, Moby had embraced the stage of the Worcester Palladium for no less than two hours and twenty minutes. That's an hour and twenty minutes too long. It is really unfortunate, because this incredible musician who released one of, if not the best, albums in recent history should certainly know his limits.

DAVE TROUPES / COLLEGIAN

Moby is still touring away for his latest and most successful release, Play.

The Valley got a taste of Moby's soulful electronica earlier this week.

Moby in Valley: Everything is Right

MOBY
Chapin Auditorium
Oct. 25

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

MOUNT HOLYOKE - Seas of students, families and the older generation alike flocked to Mount Holyoke College on Wednesday night to see Moby – the man, not the whale.

The sold-out show that took place at Chapin Hall brought a funk beat to Holyoke, as they have never heard before. The recent radio popularity of Moby has attracted an array of listeners of all age groups and music genres, and the opportunity to see him live came to the Valley this week.

The long line forming outside the hall began early in the evening, anticipating the doors to open at 7 p.m. As soon as the flood gates were opened, people rushed through the door single file in order to get a spot on the open floor of Chapin. General admittance to the venue made for stiff competition for stage side spaces. The college students filled every possible spot down below, while families and people of the Woodstock era found comfort in the balconies above, the only seating area. Before the start of the show, youngsters grappled for Moby concert memorabilia and parents set in their earplugs.

While liquid dancers prepped their glow sticks, a DJ took to the stage for early entertainment. His main concept was to just spin records and get the audience psyched up for the 8 p.m. start time. His most surprising performance was a dance beat put to the famous speech of Martin Luther King, "I Have a Dream". With eagerness, the crowd pumped their fists and screamed for Moby to come out as the time came near – only to be greeted by the opening act, Hybrid.

Hybrid had a beat that didn't stop. The fifty-minute performance gave something to dance to and move your head. They definitely warmed the crowd up with each different change of beat. Hybrid worked the audience with music and movement of themselves. Their sound was very similar to Play, but in the latter moments of the set the listeners became restless with the monotonous sound. Hybrid left the stage, and the MIA-inspired DJ came back in full effect. Before long, the roadies finished their preparation and the hook finally got the DJ off stage. The lights dimmed and "My Weakness" hushed the crowd.

Moby and his self-proclaimed holiness took to stage, raising his arms high to the sky. The crowd had been eagerly chanting for him to come out. He took to the stage – entourage in tuit. A bassist, a man to spin the beats, a drummer and the infamous female vocalist who walks her way through Play followed him. Moby opened up to the crowd with "Machete" and his punker bassist wailed away. Her bass was overbearing within the small venue causing many of the older crowd to wince at the body rattling music. Eventually the song came to a close and Moby spoke to the crowd as if they were long time friends.

The recent radio hit "Porcelain" put the crowd in full effect. Before Moby began the song, he said that he wanted to give everyone some sweetness to listen to. The live performance of "Porcelain" was surprisingly less thrilling than was to be expected. The band planned to hold. The music couldn't reach its full potential in the acoustics of an old hall. The light show put on cannot be forgotten, as it made a large part of the performance. Both Hybrid and Moby had lights that could put a laser show to shame. Moby put on a great performance for his crowd, and made them laugh when he told of his image of seeing the crowd in their birthday suits. He put his all into the show. Moby definitely "rocked the party that rocked the body."

Two hours after he first came out, Moby left the stage and the fans went nuts. He came back out after five minutes of chanting and picked up his acoustic once more. He apologized for playing it again, as he strummed the first few lines to "Porcelain." This time the song was far better without the power of the bass. Shortly after, the crowd began to thin out as two and a half hours is a long time to listen to any one performance.

Moby at Mount Holyoke was an excellent show; however, the venue was too small for the capacity they had planned to hold. The music couldn't reach its full potential in the acoustics of an old hall. The light show put on cannot be forgotten, as it made a large part of the performance. Both Hybrid and Moby had lights that could put a laser show to shame. Moby put on a great performance for his crowd, and made them laugh when he told of his image of seeing the crowd in their birthday suits. He put his all into the show. Moby definitely "rocked the party that rocked the body."

New Bizkit Limp: Fred keeps on Rollin' towards poppy blandness

LIMP BIZKIT
Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water
Interscope

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

"Hey kid, take my advice, you don't wanna step into a big pile of shit," whines the sagely Fred Durst on the anti-something "My Generation." Social-commentary has rarely been so eloquent.

I am fully in tune with the fact that a major part of Limp Bizkit is their humor, an aspect of their music I enjoyed on their previous two albums, 1997's Three Dollar Bill, Yall$ and 1999's Significant Other. But now Durst's megalomaniacal quest for pop significance has dragged the band down into creating the most inoffensive blandness suitable for mass consumption. By choosing this route, Durst has humorously brought his band that much closer to the crap produced by his rival-of-the-moment, Scott Stapp of Creed. Pathetically blah and generic riffs, meaningless lyrics and the stifling of creativity seem to be the hallmarks of Limp Bizkit 2000. Wes Borland has previously admitted in Revlover magazine that he has no intentions of exploring his musical boundaries in LB, opting for a side project to fill that need.

While this choice can be seen as a noble move toward preserving the integrity of the band, as Bizkit falls deeper into the abyss of predictability and homogeneity, it can only turn out negative.

Unlike many of Bizkit's haters, I firmly believe that they were a good band for their last two albums. Yall$ had some great riffs, creative song structures and experimentation ("Stalemate"), and even opened the album with a rally against censorship ("Pollution"). Other was their big commercial success, and deservedly so; it had the feel of a full album, even if it did stray into mainstream acceptance a little too easily. It had a handful of misses ("No Sex," "Break Stuff,"), but the quick fun of "Nookie" and "N 2Gether Now" stayed strong even through the most trying times of overplayedness.

Their continued mutation into pop friendliness has been almost too much for a fan such as myself to bear. "Take a Look Around" was a fine, if unexceptional song for the summer, though it started the disturbing trend that continues on Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water of Fred basing an entire song on yelling at people who have made fun of him. It's interesting and, as Eminem knows, perfect for present headlines, but it in no way translates into long-term listenable or memorable music. Fred dancing with Christina Aguilera and performing dance steps in the video for "Rollin" was just about the end for me, and of course, as planned, the beginning for the remaining untapped portion of the TRL audience.

And so LB throughout the new album continues the Tao of Dumbing Down, insulting intelligent fans, but somehow catering to the masses that feel this new reduced level of talent is just right. The first song on the album, after the disposable intro, is "Hot Dog." Many artists see the first song of an album as a fertile ground for establishing the mood of the work as well as the spot for one of the stronger songs that will no doubt be heard the most, as patience wears thin quickly for many listeners.

Limp Bizkit certainly establishes the mood of the album with "Hot Dog," namely dumb and dumber; and instead of a song that withstands repeated listens, one is treated to a four minute rant resembling a sixth grader's interpretation of societal problems, bookended by a chorus that makes fun of Trent Reznor. Yup, just like Pet Sounds or The Stone Roses, we know early on that we're in for one hell of a ride.

"The One" is a hack-job remake of "Rearranged." Think the Smashing Pumpkins "1979" and "Perfect" connected, only worse. "Getcha Groove On" teams Fred with Xzibit in an attempt to recreate the success of the Significant Other Method Man collaboration, but fails. The loser in the background is boring, the guest effortlessly upstages Fred again, and the nonsensical fun of the previous song is replaced with ridiculous boasts. The lack of anything as solid and female-buyer-luring as "Rearranged" inspires LB to shoot more misdirected arrows at that target. "It'll Be OK," "Boiler," and "Hold On" drag and bore so fully that one is tempted to cry, "come back 'Rollin,' all is forgiven."

Limp Bizkit's most enduring ability, perhaps the only one that shines through in this dismal record, is the way they write a damn catchy song. No matter how silly or how dumb, you can't help but bounce with "Rollin" or "My Generation" or "Full Nelson," while at the same time admiring the extreme simplicity of them, the marvel of the "hey, I could have written that" chorus.

That said, placing this record in the company of their previous two, or anywhere besides the cutout bin, is simply a misguided way to justify a flat-out bad album, one that hopefully is a fluke and not the precursor to the future sound of Limp Bizkit.

P.S. The outro is an absolutely priceless commentary on Limp Bizkit by the hilarious Ben Stiller, don't miss it.

COURTESY OF KRISTEN CALLAHAN

Fred Durst and the boys from Limp Bizkit fall flat with their latest release, Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water.

UMass plays the part of big Atlantic 10 bully hoping to use Explorers, Rams as examples

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Elephant fodder, bodily excretions, cellar dwellers, straphangers, baggage cars, subway junkies, toilet bugs and sewer rats. These are all phrases to describe teams who struggle to climb out of the basement and into respectability. Now, add two more: Fordham and LaSalle.

Massachusetts travels to the Bronx, NY and Philadelphia, PA to take on the whipping boys of the Atlantic 10 in the Fordham Rams and the LaSalle Explorers.

On Friday, the Minutemen take the pitch in the Bronx, a place where baseball is thought of first and Fordham is well just not thought of.

The Rams can attribute their relative obscurity to a 6-9 record and eighth place in the conference.

Despite Fordham's lack of success in the win column, UMass will have to concern itself with two of the A-10's top offensive producers. Brian Bothello is sixth and David Earle places seventh in scoring with 17 and 15 points, respectively.

The Rams two lethal forwards will have to contend with a defense that could have them sleeping with a night light for a week. John Linton will likely shadow one of Fordham's two scorers as Coach Koch calls him "our best man marker." J.R. Pounces will have to play as consistently as he has all year leading the defense.

Junior goalie Bryan O'Quinn, who was recently named WHMP/UMass athlete of the week, will be expected to continue the stellar play that finds him second in the conference in goaltending.

Obviously the key will be to stunt the somewhat potent Ram attack, if this is accomplished then UMass will have the chances to score and to win.

The Minutemen go from bad to worse as they hop on Interstate 95 to Philadelphia for a battle with the Explorers. LaSalle has perennially been overshadowed in athletics by other major teams in the area. In basketball its Temple, in football its Villanova, but in soccer they have no equal.

They are undoubtedly the undisputed worst team in the A-10.

LaSalle has exactly zero forwards among the league leaders in scoring, in fact it enter the weekend trying to find ways to hide its meager 2-11 overall record.

Despite the fact that the Explorers are looking up at the best of the conference, the Maroon and White will look to prove that it can beat a team that it should beat. Besides, a three game winning streak going into the A-10 tournament can't be a bad thing.

LaSalle's anemic offense as well as its feeble defense should pose no threat to the second place Minutemen. Leading scorers Jeff Deren and Yuri Morales, who have combined for nine goals and 23 points this season, will have a chance to pad their stats against a pair of meager opponents this weekend.

If UMass is able to pick up two wins this weekend it will finish the season with an 8-1-1 conference record. If Dayton should happen to lose one of its final games then the Minutemen will take the title and the first seed in the tournament.

DAN SANTELLA - COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts men's soccer team stands in second place in the Atlantic 10 standings with just two games (both taking place this weekend) to go.

Some more mêlée in New York

By Glen Straub
Collegian Correspondent

Contrary to popular belief, there are other sporting events being played out in New York City besides the Subway Series. One of those events is a duel between the Massachusetts women's tennis team and Ivy League foe, Columbia University, in the Big Apple today.

Coming off one the biggest victories in school history against Dartmouth University – when they beat the Big Green 7-2 for the first time ever – the Maroon and White take a 4-1 record in today's match versus the Lady Lions.

The Columbia squad, which consists of Columbia and Barnard College students, is 5-0 so far this fall. They are coming off a 5-2 win over Army in West Point, NY. The Lady Lions will provide a challenge for the streaking UMass team.

Freshman sensation Francesca Mancini looks to continue her personal winning streak today as well. The native of Milan, Italy has not lost a set in singles play all year. With a win against probable opponent, Lions' number one player, sophomore Laila Shetty, Mancini will improve her record to 10-0 on the season in singles play.

One cause for concern for the Minutewomen is the extra-long layoff they have had between contests. They last played a competitive match on October 11th against Dartmouth.

The team was on a roll before the break, and the stoppage in play may have hurt its momentum. But the team will attempt to overcome the rustiness. Whatever the result is today, however, the ladies will have no time to reminisce as they face long-time rival, the University of Connecticut, on Saturday in Storrs, CT. Massachusetts had their way with UConn last year, defeating the Huskies 8-1 in Amherst.

Minutemen look to remain unbreakable

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

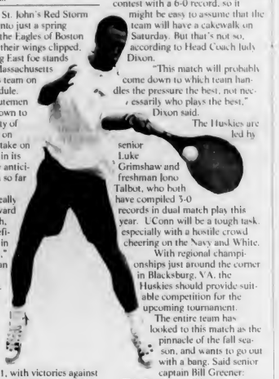
After the St. John's Red Storm was turned into just a spring shower and the Eagles of Boston College had their wings clipped, one more Big East foe stands before the Massachusetts men's tennis team on the fall schedule.

The Minutemen will travel down to the University of Connecticut on Saturday to take on the Huskies in its most heavily anticipated match so far this season.

"We're really looking forward to this match, but we're definitely going in there to win," said freshman sensation Brent Davis.

The Huskies come into this weekend's battle with a dual match record of 2-1, with victories against the University of Hartford and URI and a loss to Boston College. The Maroon and White defeated all of those three teams and come into the contest with a 6-0 record, so it might be easy to assume that the team will have a cakewalk on Saturday. But that's not so, according to Head Coach Judy Dixon.

"This match will probably come down to which team handles the pressure the best, not necessarily who plays the best," Dixon said.



The Huskies are led by senior Luke Grimshaw and freshman Iono Talbot, who both have compiled 5-0 records in dual match play this season. UConn will be a tough task, especially with a hostile crowd cheering on the Navy and White.

With regional championships just around the corner in Blacksburg, VA, the Huskies should provide suitable competition for the upcoming tournament.

The entire team has looked to this match as the pinnacle of the fall season, and wants to go out with a bang. Said senior captain Bill Greener: "This Saturday will be huge for our program."

Everyone's out to get UMass; Women's XC ventures to PA

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

In the distance it is visible – through the trees and the early morning fog, it is spotted. It's the Massachusetts women's cross-country team, and the view is of the rest of the Atlantic 10 battles before the championships this weekend.

Trying to follow five championships with a sixth, the Minutewomen will look to put themselves out of view and run themselves out of reach of the potential heel biters.

Super sophomore Kristin Ciswoski leads the Minutewoman fleet of foot into Pittsburgh this weekend as they look to defend their five straight titles. Ciswoski won the individual title in 1998 with a time of 18:24.

UMass has been more than dominant in this event, winning the tournament by an average of 21.2 points in the last five years. The most dangerous foes for the Minutewomen will most likely be LaSalle and St. Josephs who are currently in a tie for second in A-10 standings.

The Race is 5,000 meters long and it will begin at 10 a.m., basically the beginning of the end for the rest of the A-10 hopefuls. UMass has been very prevailing, thanks to its depth and not just its individual prowess.

Ciswoski will most likely lead the team but she will not be alone at the front of the line. Katherine Blais and Melissa Henderson have also run well all year, complimenting their teammate on the way to the top of the conference.

The Minutewomen are coming off a fifth place finish against the region's best in the New England Championships. Ciswoski was the top Maroon and White finisher in the race with a time of 18:07, but the positives did not stop there.

Coach Julie LaFreniere can take pride in the fact that she had runners step up big time in Boston, a good forerunner to the A-10's. Senior Megan McCormick and freshman Molly Ketschek finished third and fourth on the team respectively as they stepped up and gave a strong effort for the team.

A good team effort will be essential this weekend as every runner wearing the maroon and white will also be sporting a nice big bull's eye.

V-ball sets for big Cage matches

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Two more. That's all the Massachusetts volleyball team has left until it heads back on the road in its conquest for the goal its had since before the season started – a spot in the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Excluding Wednesday's road game against Rhode Island, a measly two hours away, the Minutewomen have been at home since Oct. 7, a span of eight games including this weekend's home matches against A-10 foes George Washington and Fordham.

They will look to improve on their already impressive home record of 5-2 overall and 4-2 in A-10 contests. With the Maroon and White smack in the middle of the conference at 6-5, it will look to vault past the Dayton Flyers who lay just ahead at 6-4 in conference play. Only the top four teams make the Atlantic 10 tourney.

The Minutewomen have received good contributions from nearly every member of the squad. Co-captains Rebecca Hasson and Lymarie Llovet lead the way for the Maroon and White. Llovet had a tremendous outing at Rhode Island, notching 19 kills and 14 digs, while Hasson threw down 19 kills of her own and pulled up 10 digs.

Freshman Lindsey Bailey has been impressive as of late, and against Rhode Island she posted a killing percentage of .500 with 17 kills. Bailey, a native of North Vancouver, British Columbia, has made her impression felt on the team in her first year.

Fordham will invade the Curry Hicks Cage tonight at 7 p.m. The Rams post a 2-8 conference record and a 5-17 overall tally. They are led by the tandem of Melissa Jagmenn and Kelly Herlmeyer, who average 3.11 and 2.96 kills per match, respectively. The Rams are coming off of a 3-0 loss to GW this past Saturday.

On Saturday night, it is the Colonials who will attempt to invade Amherst. GW stands at second place in the A-10 at 8-1 in conference, its only loss coming to first-place Temple. The two teams last squared off on the 29th of September in Washington, D.C., with the Colonials sweeping the Maroon and White, 3-0. Tracee Brown led GW with 25 kills, much as she has led them all year. Brown is averaging 4.78 kills per match on a .343 kill percentage.

Including this weekend's contests, the Minutewomen have six matches remaining on their regular season slate, with all but a home match against Fairfield being vital Atlantic 10 contests. With the fourth slot now seemingly down to UMass and Dayton and just a few games remaining on each team's schedules, each in-conference match-up is just that much more important.

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life =
Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration - 11am
in the Jones Library Conference Room
MERCYhouse
www.knowmercy.org
43 Amity Street
Downtown Amherst
It's a Church!
374-7532

SOUPer BOWL
Grand Opening
Clam Chowder Special every Friday
• 10-12 Different soups daily
Including chilis and stews
• Bread bowls
• Fresh bread
• All made fresh daily
• also a limited selection of salads
96 N. Pleasant St. (Next to CVS) 253-1855

www.guess4green.com
Blurry Picture = Clear Cash
www.guess4green.com
Live Music
10 - 1 am
Sunday October 29
McMurphy's
Uptown Tavern
No Cover
Positive ID Required

Primordial Sound Meditation
A program developed by
Deepak Chopra, MD
Learn the Personal Mantra which makes Meditation Easy and Effective.
Discover the Silence which develops Inner Peace and Activates the Power to Create the Life you Desire.
Classes now forming in Northampton
For information call
1-888-270-2031

radical worship
real teaching, real praise- for real life
Agape Community Church
47 East Street, Hadley
10-noon ~ Sundays
413-268-7073 • www.churchmorningstar

TEACH
Thinking about a career in teaching?
Teacher Certification Information Session
Wednesday, November 1 at 5:30
Room 1033 Grad Tower
University of Massachusetts
Come for a general information session on how to become certified to teach K-12 math or science.
Refreshments provided
Questions: Contact the STEMTEC Student Services office at (413) 545-0626 or wtyler@k12s.phast.UMass.edu
STEMTEC

NFL Week 9 Note: Picks are by writer/columnist pun- intended only	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkinson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
Last Week	(Overall)	5-8-1 (47-48-4)	8-5-1(50-48-4)	6-7-1 (52-43-4)	5-8-1(46-49-4)	6-7-1 (46-49-4)
NY Jets @ Buffalo	Buffalo by 3 1/2	NY Jets	Buffalo	NY Jets	Buffalo	NY Jets
Green Bay @ Miami	Miami by 4 1/2	Miami	Miami	Miami	Miami	Miami
Carolina @ Atlanta	Carolina by 3	Carolina	Carolina	Carolina	Carolina	Atlanta
Detroit @ Indianapolis	Indianapolis by 7	Indianapolis	Detroit	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Indianapolis
Minnesota @ Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay by 3	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota
Cincinnati @ Cleveland	Cincinnati by 3	Cincinnati	Cleveland	Cleveland	Cincinnati	Cincinnati
Pittsburgh @ Baltimore	Baltimore by 4 1/2	Baltimore	Pittsburgh	Baltimore	Pittsburgh	Baltimore
New Orleans @ Arizona	New Orleans by 6	New Orleans	New Orleans	Arizona	New Orleans	New Orleans
St. Louis @ San Francisco	St. Louis by 6 1/2	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis	San Francisco
Philadelphia @ NY Giants	NY Giants by 3 1/2	Philadelphia	NY Giants	NY Giants	NY Giants	Philadelphia
Jacksonville @ Dallas	Dallas by 3 1/2	Jacksonville	Jacksonville	Jacksonville	Jacksonville	Dallas
Kansas City @ Seattle	Kansas City by 3 1/2	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City
Oakland @ San Diego	Oakland by 7	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland
Tennessee @ Washington	Washington by 3 1/2	Tennessee	Tennessee	Washington	Tennessee	Washington

TRASH TALK

It's this week's Trash Talk and oh hell yeah, there's a new sheriff in town. After getting some serious disrespect from people in their little columns, it's time, it's time, it's time for a little Wilkinsonian revenge.

But who to skewer?

Should it be Mr. White, who's absolutely sucked these past few weeks? Perhaps because he's too busy at the American Association of Retired Persons meetings to study what picks should be made. They tend to play shuffleboard and canasta for hours on end at those meetings so I suppose I can understand why, if he's been consistently awful in his picks after starting oh so strong. Milk is good for bones, and his aging bones (oh, hell, aging isn't even the word for, just plain decaying — no, not deceasing, how's about ancient) could use a lot of it if he's going to get that strength back.

I'd feel so guilty if I did though. At night I'd wake up and feel bad because I'd mucked the big bad Editor in Chief of the Collegian simply because his knowledge of football is so woefully atrocious. And he's the former Sports Editor. Not an all around good sign for that department.

Speaking of that vaunted Sports Department, where's Smitty at? Oh sure, he's got that "clever" ABCs column that he's fairly sure is the best thing ever written, but I offer the following:

A, awful, that's what Smitty's picks were this past week. If he can't beat me, that's an absolute embarrassment.

B, is for bad, like the reasons above and also including stupid ABC columns which are so overdone. He can do so much better.

C, is for cute which Smitty is. Unfortunately, it takes more than being a cutey to the ladies to make good football picks.

Better luck this week.

Going through life thin (you only weigh 80 pounds soaking wet), drunk and stupid about football is no way to go through life son." Smitty, like White, should be a heavyweight at this whole thing. No dice for either of you; Smitty might be ahead while White lags behind, but thus both haven't run away with this can only be attributed to one thing.

Being brought down by the rest of us, most specifically, Rose.

I don't want to do ABC columns all day long, which leaves the flower of love, Rose. Love perhaps, but taking Jacksonville is just plain sad. You, Mista Rose, write the longest sheets columns in this paper and know the most about sports, neither of which explains your atrocious record of picks in this paper. That you haven't beaten us all is downright embarrassing.

Which leaves only Martignetti, better known to all of us as the Scarecrow, a name little nickname that only works because Obsessively Infatuated with Katie Holmes" is far too long. You're up Dawson's Mining creek without a paddle after last week Adam. Just plain bad. You're favorite actor James Vanderbeek once said, "I don't want your life."

So true James, so true. "I don't want your life." Adam because if I had it I surely wouldn't be in second place in the picks. So, what about this week's games?

Who's gonna win and who's gonna lose?

Give me Minnesota, Tennessee, Buffalo, Oakland and Pittsburgh.

Will I win this week? Nope, and I can accept that. I'm not even supposed to be winning this; it's supposed to be the "knowledgeable" sports guys. Sucks for them.

Scott Wilkinson

soccer

continued from page 10

"This time, we're playing a Fordham team that has given people crazy fits at the end of the year," Rudy said. "A year ago, they beat Dayton at the end of the year. My good friend, [head coach] Ness Selmani has great tactical plans and knows the game well. His teams always seem to play us tough no matter what the records are."

Sophomore forward Kirstin Gellath, a transfer from the University of Pittsburgh, is the leading scorer for the Rams with 18 points.

La Salle has been one of surprise teams in the A-10 this season. The Explorers have a 12-4 record overall, 3-3 in the Atlantic 10, and can make the conference tournament with a strong weekend.

La Salle visits Totman Field on Sunday at 1 p.m. on Senior Day. Prior to the game, the Minutewomen will honor seniors Kara Green and Kara Ciocca for their contributions to the program.

Two of the reasons for the team's success have been the offensive duo of Amy Schneider and Krista Lee. Schneider is second in the conference with 31 points, while Lee has chipped in 10 goals for the Philadelphia school this year. Goalkeeper Kaitlin Glass also had 11 wins and a 1.04 goals against average.

Junior forward Brooke Bartlett continues to lead the UMass offense on the season, as evidenced by her team-leading 18 points. Ciocca and Green have each contributed 15 points, while freshman Amy Mink has 13 points.

In good health, Minutemen poised

By Kevin Stone
Collegian Correspondent

Twelve Massachusetts men's cross country runners travel to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania for the Atlantic-Ten Cross Country Championship tomorrow, Saturday, October 28. And according to the coach's pool, the squad is predicted to finish within the top four.

"The meet with roughly 100-125 competing, isn't that large compared to over 300 at the New England's," explained Coach O'Brien. "We're basically looking at La Salle, St. Joseph's, Duquesne and UMass for [the top four places].

According to the coach's pole, St Joe's and La Salle have first and second with Duquesne and UMass competing for third and fourth.

Said O'Brien: "I feel, if we have our best day, we could beat [St. Joseph's and La Salle]. We have not yet had our best day."

This follows a disappointing fourteenth place finish at the New England Championship meet on Friday, October 13 in which O'Brien hoped to finish in the top twelve.

"This was a poor meet for us over all," O'Brien said. "We made some good improvements going into the race and (we) really anticipated a significantly better performance."

Prior to the New England Championship, the squad competed with at least one of its top seven runners injured or otherwise not in full health. While some runners were still not in top condition for the New England Championship, it appears that the twelve competing at the Atlantic 10 Championship will be the team's twelve fastest runners at their full health.

"We've had top runners coming in and out with injuries," explained O'Brien. "(Senior) Kevin Somers was hurting for the New England meet. I'm knocking on wood as I say this, but we do appear to be in good health for the 28th. I'm certainly hoping to put it together this week. The team felt the same way and hopes to do significantly better this week."

Finishing in the top five at the New England's, juniors Ryan Corbett, Kevin Curtin, Sal Nastasi, Mike Pieck and Brendan Sullivan will compete tomorrow with freshman John Jacobson, Dave Mullert and five other runners to be determined.

No. 14 water polo looks to defend ECAC's

Justin Pearson
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's water polo team begins its quest to defend its ECAC Championship from last season as they open postseason play this weekend in Princeton. The Minutemen (18-8, 8-2 CWPA North), who dropped two spots to No. 14 in this week's national rankings, head to New Jersey on a two game losing streak.

The Minutemen took their first two games last weekend against Connecticut College and Fordham rather easily before running into trouble against St. Francis College and Queens College, two nationally ranked teams.

The road to the NCAA Championships in Malibu does not get any easier for UMass as they open up round robin play on Saturday morning against No. 12 St. Francis. Last Saturday night in front of a large pro-UMass crowd at Amherst College, the Terriers (25-2, 10-0 CWPA North) jumped out to an early 7-2 lead on the Minutemen before holding on for a 10-8 victory. Juniors Adam Moore and Mike Foley led the way for the Minutemen that night with each collecting a hat trick in the loss.

"Unfortunately the first start absolutely took our momentum killed the crowd, but they [the crowd] did their best to get us back into it," said junior Greg Traver, who scored in the loss.

The Maroon and White head right back into the pool following the St. Francis game to take on No. 15 Navy. These two have met twice already this season with the Midshipmen (16-8, 7-1 CWPA South) taking both games in dramatic fashion. Back on September 3, Navy pulled out a 5-2 victory over the Minutemen in the semi-finals of the Navy Invitational despite a strong six save performance from junior co-captain J.R. Vanderwall. The Minutemen and Midshipmen met once again at the end of September with Navy once again coming out on top with an 8-6 triumph in double overtime. Junior Carlos Ramos scored one of his team-leading 44 goals in the loss and Vanderwall was outstanding once again, making nine saves in the UMass net.

If the Minutemen finish in the top two of their group in Princeton they will then move on to the semi-finals to take on either the hosts Princeton, Queens College, or Bucknell on Sunday morning with the Championship game to follow later in the afternoon. UMass is 2-1 against these three teams this season. Back on September 30 the Minutemen defeated Bucknell 13-11 before knocking off Princeton the very next day 10-4. Ramos scored six times in these two matches while Adam Moore had a pair against the Tigers. The Minutemen's only loss against their potential semi-final opponents came this past Saturday when they dropped a heart-breaking 10-9 decision to the Queens College Knights. UMass led 8-6 going into the fourth quarter but could not hold on despite 12 saves from Vanderwall and a hat trick from Moore the team's second leading scorer.

The road to Malibu starts on Saturday and if the Minutemen want to make a splash at the NCAA Championship this year, then they have to start with a strong showing this weekend at Princeton.

field hockey

continued from page 10

comparison, has a 0.71 GAA and seven shutouts.

On Sunday, Kelley Saxman (5 goals, 2 assists) will be the main goal-scoring threat for the Explorers, while Iami Wilus is the leading assist woman on the team.

"They are going to come in here fired up because they are also trying to get into the conference tourney," Shea said. "It's going to be a real dog fight."

Recently, the Minutewomen have shown signs of waking up from their mid-season scoring drought, although their streak of nine consecutive one-goal games is alive and well. Last Wednesday, Anke Bruemmer was able to reclaim her position as the top goal scorer on the team when she knocked a pair of slap-shots into the back of the Dartmouth cage on two separate penalty corners. She now has nine goals and two assists on the season – good enough for 20 points.

Kristen Schmidt (8 goals), Lindsay Abbott (6 goals, 3 assists), Lucy Koch (5 goals, 10 assists) and Patty Robinson (1 goal, 11 assists) have also begun to peak at the right time of the year for a playoff run.

If the offense comes to play, and the defense continues to shine, then UMass has a quality chance of running the table in the A-10.

"It's always a goal," said Shea. "[Going undefeated] is the only way to win the conference regular season title, but we can't even think about that until after we take care of West Chester."

YOU ARE PROBABLY SICK OF THESE ADS BUT...
THE WAIT IS ALMOST OVER!
AROUND THE FIRST WEEK OF NOVEMBER, WE AT THE COLLEGIAN WILL CHANGE YOUR LIFE.
IT'S ALMOST HERE!! JUST WAIT A LITTLE LONGER!!

It's Cozy Time.
ZANNI
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

GOT SOUL?
Twelve pounds of chemicals and a bunch of water.
Is that all we are?
FRIDAY, OCTOBER 27 AT 7PM
165 CAMPUS CENTER REAL LIFE
sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ

Man-made vs. God-made.
Computer.
Computer Operating System.
The human brain has the ability to simultaneously process thoughts, breathing, speech, color... skills, and memories...all at an astounding one million messages per second. It's an incredible mechanism the result of random chance? It's possible that we've been thoughtfully and precisely... God, God who's much more than a value, power, life force...
To see some inspiring... writings of a loving Creator whom you can have a personal... call 1-800-236-9233 or email Article@EveryStudent.com
There's a God, you should know.
REAL LIFE 7PM FRIDAY 165CC
www.EveryStudent.com
SPONSORED BY CAMPUS CRUSADE FOR CHRIST

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for people to join new RSO! Latin American Club. For more info, call (413) 549-5177

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

89 Dodge Van Best offer 586-0879

1990 Honda Accord EX 140k, moonroof, CD, great condition. $3800 O/B/O 546-2568

1989 Chevy Celebrity, 77k miles. Automatic, 4 door. Great condition. $800 or B/O 413-665-9279

1987 Jeep Wrangler 4cyl, hard top. Many new parts. $4100 or bo 665-3013

EMPLOYMENT

Survive Spring Break 2001! Hottest destinations/hotels! Campus sales representatives and student organizations wanted! Visit inter-campus.com or call 1-800-327-6013

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

EMPLOYMENT

Voice Talent Needed Internet/Radio start-up seeks fun + energetic person to be our VOICE!!! Radio/acting experience + interesting accent "particularly Jamican, W Indian" a plus. Call 617-598-1030 ext. 1230 for more information.

Attention! Work form home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder. 877-608-Rich

Kitchen Help @ meal times. Nice place to work. Near campus. Meals + pay. 549-7719

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today; 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FOR SALE

Used Furniture Sale! Couches, recliners, etc. Sat Oct.28. 9am-5pm 50 Russell St. (Rte 9) Hadley 586-2221

Beerpong Tables for sale!! Custom made to order, 4x8. Free delivery to anywhere in Amherst. Call 549-5950 ASAP Ask for Chad

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities* Clubs * Student Groups* Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Need Spring Housing? Studious female seeks the same to fill 2nd bedroom in Colonial Vge. Apt. Call 256-1232 for more info

3 girls need roommate for spring in Brandywine $228/mo call Nadiah 549-4907

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1-2 females to share 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Montreal College Party Weekends Nov. 24 + Dec. 30. From $119. Includes round trip motorcoach. 3 days 2 nights Hotel Downtown full Breakfast + Dinner. Departs Boston, Springfield, + Hartford. Call 1-617-567-0062 Global Tours

Volunteer in Central America/Africa! Work in community development projects - lead health campaigns, organize teaching seminars, develop micro-enterprises. Institute for International Cooperation and Development. Call/e-mail for a free brochure. (413) 458-9828, iicd@berkshire.net

SPRING BREAK

Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

What are you waiting for??

Need to Advertise?

We reach THOUSANDS of STUDENTS!!

Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CSS-3 Hartford
4 CSS-4 Boston
5 ABC/40 Springfield
6 CBS-3 Springfield
7 HSCN-More Channel
8 CSS-30 Hartford
9 HSCN-New Norse Digital
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox-61 Hartford
12 CSS-21 Hartford
13 NBC/30 Springfield
14 Entertainment Channel
15 UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 MLB/26 New Haven
17 ESPN
18 ESPN2
19 UVC-TV (Student Channel)
20 Weather Channel
21 Guest to Guest
22 C-Span
23 CNN
24 CNN Headline News
25 Lifetime
26 USA
27 TBS
28 TNT
29 SciFi
30 Discovery
31 Nickelodeon
32 Cartoon Network
33 Nick at Nite
34 TV Land
35 Comedy Central
36 BET
37 Univision
38 Bloomberg Financial Network
39 College TV Network
41 MTV
42 VH1
43 VH1
44 The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 27, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℠		Travel & Leisure Auction						Auction Continues
WFSB	3	3 News ℠	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Fugitive "Fer From Home" ℠		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Nash Bridges (In Stereo) ℠		News ℠	Late Show ℠
WBZ	4	4 News ℠	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Fugitive "Fer From Home" ℠		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Nash Bridges (In Stereo) ℠		News ℠	Late Show ℠
WCVB	5	5 News ℠	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ℠	Two Guys-Girl | Trouble With		Norm (N) ℠	Madigan Men	20/20 (N) ℠		News ℠	Nightline ℠
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless ℠	Friends ℠	Nanny ℠	Sabrina-Witch	Grosse Pointe	Sabrina-Witch	Nikki ℠	News ℠		Friends ℠	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℠	Providence "Trick or Treat" ℠		Dateline (In Stereo) ℠		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven (In Stereo) ℠		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Freedom "Alpha Dogs" (N) ℠		Level 9 "Plot" (N) ℠		Law & Order: Special Victims		Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	9	10 News	NBC News	Extra (N) ℠	Hollywood	Providence "Trick or Treat" ℠		Dateline (In Stereo) ℠		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11 Simpsons ℠	Frasier ℠	Seinfeld ℠	Friends ℠	Police Videos (In Stereo) (PA)		Freestyleska (N) (In Stereo) ℠		News		Friends ℠	Frasier ℠
WWLP	9	22 News ℠	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℠	Providence "Trick or Treat" ℠		Dateline (In Stereo) ℠		Law & Order: Special Victims		News ℠	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	6 Great Vacation Auction						Great Vacation Auction Continues
WGGB	23	40 News ℠	ABC News	Seinfeld ℠	Frasier ℠	Two Guys-Girl | Trouble With		Norm (N) ℠	Madigan Men	20/20 (N) ℠		News ℠	Nightline ℠
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ℠	Judge Judy ℠	Seinfeld ℠	Frasier ℠	Freedom "Alpha Dogs" (N) ℠		Level 9 "Plot" (N) ℠		Frasier ℠	Mad Abt. You	Spin City ℠	Spin City ℠
WTBS	72	Roseanne ℠	Roseanne ℠	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	⇔⇔ "Christine" (1983, Horror) Keith Gordon, John Stockwell.						⇔⇔ "Dracula: Dead and Loving It" (1995)
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order 'Deadbeat' ℠		Biography "Edith Head" (N) ℠		Point ℠		Investigative Reports ℠		Law & Order ℠
CNN	53	23 Worldview ℠	Moneyline Newshour (N) ℠		Crossfire ℠	World Today ℠		Larry King Live ℠		Newsstand ℠		Sports	Moneyline ℠
COM	29	26 Saturday Night Live ℠		Daily Show ℠	Stein's Money	Saturday Night Live ℠		Toothbrush	Whose Line?	⇔ "How to Be a Player" (1997, Comedy) Bill Bellamy.
DISC	49	Wild Discovery: Frozen		Wild Discovery: Forest		On the Inside. Grand Coulee		News	Explore Our	Storm Warning! (N)		Justice Files "Young Guns"
ESPN	43	Sportscenter ℠		Home Run Derby		NHL Hockey: Pittsburgh Penguins at New York Rangers. (Live)						Sportscenter ℠
LIFE	69	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Her Last Chance" (1996, Drama) Kellie Martin, Perti LuPone. ℠				Once and Again (In Stereo) ℠
MTV	61	Real World III	Diary	Cribs	Jackass	Fear (In Stereo)		Road Rules ℠	Road Rules ℠	Making-Video	Undressed ℠	Undressed ℠	Undressed ℠
NICK	25	Total by Ginger | Thornberrys		Hey Arnold! ℠	Rugrats ℠	U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons		Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	35	Sliders "The Breeder" ℠		Babylon 5 "Points of Departure"		Invisible Man (In Stereo) ℠		"Universal Soldier III: Unfinished Business" (1998) Matt Battaglia.				Invisible Man (In Stereo) ℠
TLC	63	28 How'd They Do That?		What's Up Doc? ℠		Police, Camera, Action!		Hauntings Across America ℠		Bigfoot		Police, Camera, Action!
TNT	27	ER "Freak Show" (In Stereo) ℠		Pretender "Red Rock Jaror" ℠		⇔ "I Know What You Did Last Summer" (1997, Horror)				⇔ "I Know What You Did Last Summer" (1997, Horror)
USA	59	Walker, Texas Ranger ℠		JAG "Silent Service" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges (In Stereo) ℠		⇔⇔ "Headless" (1998, Comedy) Winona Ryder. (In Stereo)				"Sister's School for Girls" (2000)
HBO	91	(5:00) ⇔ "Lulu on the Bridge"		Inside the NFL ℠		⇔ "The Haunting" (1999, Horror) Liam Neeson. PG-13 ℠				⇔⇔ "Three Kings" (1999, Comedy-Drama) George Clooney. ℠
MAX	66	(4:45) "Guilty"	⇔ "Home Fries" (1998) Drew Barrymore. ℠			⇔⇔ "Coming to America" (1988, Comedy) Eddie Murphy. ℠		⇔⇔ "Color of Night" (1994, Suspense) Bruce Willis. ℠
SHOW	65	⇔⇔ "She-Thing Insurrection" (1999) Pellick Stewart. ℠				⇔⇔ "Stigmata" (1999, Horror) Patricia Arquette. (In Stereo) ℠				Boxing (In Stereo) ℠		Resurrection	Baggers

Dilbert By Scott Adams

DOGBERT CONSULTS
YOU NEED TO REORGANIZE BY CUSTOMER TYPE.
ONE DIVISION WOULD FOCUS ON SELLING TO FEEBLE-MINDED PEOPLE.
ARE YOU GESTURING AT ME BECAUSE I WOULD WORK IN THAT DIVISION?
WHAT'S YOUR SECOND GUESS?

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

SIR, DO YOU REGRET SPARKING AN INTERNATIONAL INCIDENT BY CALLING PERSIAN PRIME MINISTER CHERNOMYRDIN A DWEEB?
NOT AT ALL! IT SHOWS I'M A FEARLESS, THAT MY COMMENTS ARE TAKEN SERIOUSLY ABROAD!
EVEN IF THEY'RE WRONG?
AND CARDS? HE'S JUST SOME JAMES BURBAN!
BUT WASN'T IT YOUR CAMPAIGN THAT WAS SO CON-CERNED ABOUT LIES?
MINE DON'T COUNT! CHECK THE SCRIPT, DAMMIT!
OH. RIGHT. THANKS.

Buttercup Festival By Elliot Garbauskas

HEY, RODNEY THE SECOND-GRADE T-BALL JOCKEY. HOW'S IT GOING?
I CAN SEE INTO YOUR FUTURE AND IT LOOKS LIKE A T-BALL ASS-KICKING.
YOUR SOUL IS A CAN OF BEEF GRAVY WITH ONIONS FROM WHICH ALL OF THE ONIONS HAVE BEEN REMOVED MY MOM SAYS I WAS BORN IN A MORGUE

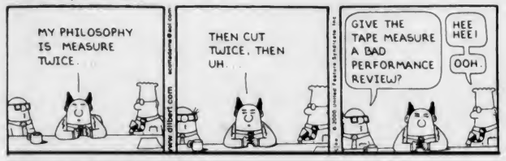
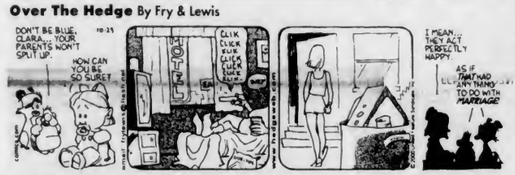
Dilbert By Scott Adams



Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

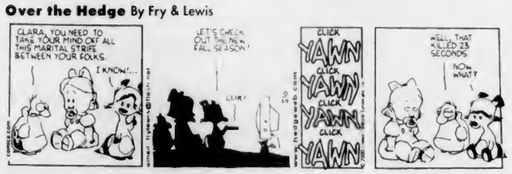


DON'T BE BLUE, CLARA... YOUR PARENTS WON'T SPLIT UP.
HOW CAN YOU BE SO SURE?
CLICK CLICK CLICK CLICK CLICK CLICK
I MEAN, THEY ACT PERFECTLY HAPPY.
AS IF THAT HAD ANYTHING TO DO WITH MARRIAGE

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Sixteen Limabars By Barry Marhefka

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Robotman By Jim Meddick

THIS IS SO AWKWARD! BEING THRUST TOGETHER WITH AN EX-GIRLFRIEND LIKE THIS.
WELL, I'M NOT GOING TO BE THE ONE TO MAKE NICE. I'M JUST GONNA PLAY IT COOL AND READ THE BIG BOS
LONELY? NEED A DATE? CALL 555-LUVMAN!
OR IF YOU CAN'T AFFORD IT, CALL 555-LUVMAN!
OR MAYBE THE BIG ADS WE RENT A GOOD IDEA.

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — There is a line Hendrix line: "Email my heart and say our love will never die." Email her heart. Say your love will never die. Include picture of you and description. "20/M/UMass."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — It's time for a comeback. But we don't mean a stinging comeback. You suck!! Try basket-weaving. I know what you're thinking. Not one likes a girl who can basket-weave. But seriously, even guys need baskets sometimes, to carry their things in.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — The great Leonardo Di Vinci once said, "Mom, there are no meatballs in this spaghetti." Mama Di Vinci was very offended. She said, "Next time make your own fucki meatballs.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Hey, my Aquarius pals, have you had Arizona's recently? It's really losing its taste. I think they are going downhill, like a wheelbarrow. Too bad there's no other good pizza around, no? Too bad. I don't know, of any others. My friends tell me of this one place though, near Durham Downs. They say to me, it has good sauce, no? In it. Sincerely, Papa John.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — This is a good day to try a new look - or a new pattern of behavior, no matter how self-conscious it may make you feel at first. It is also a good day to stop talking about your penis.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — This may prove a memorable day — because you actually get out of bed. Seriously, all you do is sleep! Stop! And then you come to the Campus Center, and sleep some more! P.S. This is not your roommate. It is just a concerned individual. And I didn't steal your Popsicles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Wow, has anyone noticed that Parking Services isn't that good? I just noticed this. I think I noticed because a lot of people were about it. It's so good that they write about it so much, because I don't think I would realize otherwise. Also, the DC food isn't that good, either.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — A chance encounter is sure to spark numerous memoirs today — and they may well inspire you to new heights in more ways than one. Mmmmmm, we're talking about love here, the kind of love that involves some bias and a tractor. Roar!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You're tired of dumb people who can't think of their own ideas, so they get copy yours, but since they're more charismatic they get all the credit. It makes you want to live in the woods and get a heiress like Henry David Thourough, in his book, Walden, which is this really cool book about a river in Maine and a kid named Huckleberry.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Is anyone else scared that George Bush is going to win? This is serious, folks, soon our country will be run by a monkey. And I for one will not be eating the bananas. I say we move to Guam and make The Blue Lagoon 3. How about it, Brooke?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Today will be one of those days that just makes you go, "Wow, I haven't had sex like that in a while." And then tomorrow will be the day where you go, "I haven't had sex like that since yesterday." And then Sunday you'll eat some Honey Smacks.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Oh Libra, you are the sun, the moon, the stars and the universe. You are the gravity of my ever-changing world. Tender souls will meet at strong oak trees, thinking each other and making love under the milky Milky Way, and saying, "You are me. I am you. Together we are beautiful, separate, we are stars that look very far away."

Amherst Weather

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 69 LOW: 52	HIGH: 53 LOW: 30	HIGH: 51 LOW: 31

Quote of the Day

"There is fiction in the space between you and me."

—Tracy Chapman

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Fried Clams

Jamaican Caribbean Pork Sanwich

Savory Rice & Spinach Bake (vegetarian) (Berkshire & Worcester)

Caribbean Jerk Tofu (vegan)

Dinner

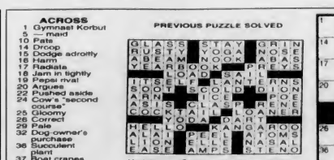
Chicken Fingers

Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

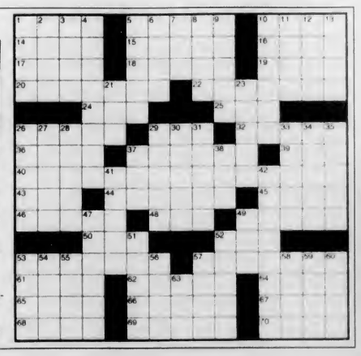
Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

ACROSS
1 Gymnast Korbut
5 — maid
10 Pals
14 Droop
15 Dodge adroitly
16 Harm
17 Radiata
18 Jam in tightly
19 Pepsi rival
20 Argues
22 Pushed aside
24 Each second course
25 Gloomy
26 Correct
29 Pale
32 Dog owner's purchase
36 Succulent plant
37 Boat cranes
39 Nav. rank
40 Those who "flock together"
43 Sack
44 Women's clothing size
45 Extinct fish
46 Parties
48 Tricky
49 Dipper
50 Pen point
52 "That was delicious!"
53 Continuous
57 Train and
61 Take — be recognized
62 Whirlybird blade
64 Armbone
65 Frost
66 "Remember the —!"
67 Chas.
68 Caribou or elk
69 Inert gas
70 Scramble them!

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



DOWN
1 Was obligated to
2 Bar fruit
3 Smooth-talking
4 Joined
5 Cried like a kitten
6 Bests before holidays
7 Young boy
8 Perimeter
9 Staggers
10 Crack, as a spy's message
11 Confess
12 Two-wheeler
13 Winter vehicle
21 Famed pharaoh
23 Light wood
26 Temple head
27 Homeric epic
28 Canyon
29 Blows gently
30 Be of use to
31 Super
33 Felt bad
34 Jinx
35 Bronco, e.g.
37 Female rabbit
38 Casual top
41 Cheerleader's word
42 Willing to drink
47 Solution
49 Hunting dog, for short
51 Water softener
52 Tom's dad
53 Precious ornament
54 Stage award
55 Alaskan city
56 Ski gear
57 "It's impossible" crooner
58 Designer Cassini
59 Obstacle
60 All — attentive
63 Neutral color



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Mortignetti
Photo Technician	Anna Weisfeiler
Copy Editor	Bryan McAllister
Production Supervisor	Roberto Delgado
Production Staff	Elana Premack, Shimauli Dave

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass revs up for shot at fourth-straight win

JANET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Jeff Howard and the Massachusetts football team are looking to extend their winning streak to four tomorrow against the University of New Hampshire.

Logjam to clear up in weekend A-10 clashes

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 football race is beginning to look like a demolition derby. And this weekend in New Hampshire, surging Massachusetts will look to deliver a knockout crunch to the stumbling Wildcats.

The Minutemen (5-2, 3-1 A-10) have won three-straight and now find themselves in a four-way tie with James Madison, Richmond and Villanova behind conference leader Delaware. UNH has dropped three in a row to fall to 4-3, 2-3 A-10.

"We're second in the league, and this is a big week certainly in the A-10," Head Coach Mark Whipple said. "The top six teams play each other. We're in the hunt, kind of scratching at the door a little bit; I don't know if we can smell the food yet."

This mysterious food may still elude the Maroon and White, but fantastic defense certainly hasn't. Tri-captain Kole Ayi posted a team-high dozen tackles this past weekend against American International to push his season total to 67. His 9.6 sticks per game rank him sixth in the conference, and he needs only seven more unassisted stops to break the school record in that category.

But not everyone on the UMass roster came up so big against AIC. The offense played with little emotion and even less effectiveness, failing to find the end zone in its first two quarters against the Division II Yellow Jackets. By the time the teams surrendered the field at a scoreless halftime to the band for Band Day, the faithful in attendance weren't sure if UMass had shown up at all.

"I'm just glad that the people got their money's worth to see the bands," Whipple said. "They didn't see much of the UMass offense. It was a nice beautiful day here, and the foliage was nice, but the football wasn't that good."

A big second half, keyed by the return of benched field general Richard Lucero, finally brought the Minutemen to life. Though the fans and media raised a collective eyebrow at the closer than expected 21-0 win, Whipple responded that a win is still a win and that some may look for a bit too much in regards to UMass fireworks at every game.

"The expectations are a lot different now," Whipple said. "When we first came here, if the ball was in the air, [the fans] were happy. That kind of goes with the territory, but I think our guys expect more from themselves. That's what's important, that our guys know they haven't played that top level of football."

That top-flight game may be necessary to beat the Wildcats in often-hostile Cowell Stadium. UNH features 21 Bay State natives on its roster, including five on its starting defense, giving the squad a little added incentive to upset the invading Minutemen.

But incentive or not, UMass heads into Durham with its eyes on a fourth-straight win. And according to Whipple, how the team wins is much less important than adding another notch to that coveted left-hand column.

"I think we're past the point here where style is important," Whipple said. "Style was important that first year, but it's not now. It's about finding a way to win in a tough league."

No on-ice pillow time for UMass

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

There is no rest for the weary when the Massachusetts hockey team takes to the ice this weekend to face Merrimack and No. 2 ranked Boston College.

In its first three games of the season, the Minutemen have faced No. 1 Wisconsin twice and No. 12 Colgate. From that opening triad of games, UMass has come away with an 0-2-1 mark, most recently tying the Red Raiders on Saturday night at the William D. Mullins Center.

Now, the Maroon and White will look to capture its first win of the season against an upstart Merrimack squad and the perennial powerhouse in BC. The Warriors will visit Amherst tonight at 7 p.m., while the Minutemen will make the trek east to Chestnut Hill for a matchup with the Eagles at the same time on Sunday night.

"The significance of Friday's game is that it's our first Hockey East matchup, and obviously gives us an opportunity to get started on two fronts," UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon said. "It's our first home Hockey East game and it's critical that we have success in our own building."

"It also allows us to get off on a positive foot within the league against a team that is clearly defined as being a real competitive team for us," added Cahoon. "They [Merrimack] are a team that we want to stay above in the standings, and we're going to have to work diligently to stay ahead of them all year long."

For a team who was picked to finish last in the pre-season coaches' poll, Merrimack has stormed out of the gates with a vengeance. After dropping a hard-fought 4-2 decision against No. 3 Michigan in their season opener, the Warriors bounced back to tie No. 5 Michigan State the next night.

Last weekend, coach Chris Serino's crew swept a pair of games from Connecticut to improve to 2-1-1 on the season.

"That's why we made the trip [to Alaska] to face the Michigan schools, to get a couple of games against tough opponents in a tough atmosphere," Merrimack hockey coach Chris Serino said. "Hockey East is a tough league, you play the top teams in the country night in and night out. On any given night, we dress as many as six freshmen in our lineup, so I think that we came back more experienced."

Senior defenseman Steven Moon leads his club in scoring with five points through the first four games of the year. Four other players are right on his heels with four points. However, senior netminder Tom Welby has been the star in the early going, posting a 1-1-1 mark with a 2.06 goals against average.

"We're looking to get off to a good start in the league," Serino said. "I know UMass is coming off a great game against Colgate, and they also played pretty well out in Wisconsin. We're just hoping to go in and play well."

Meanwhile, over in the Heights, the Eagles are off to a 4-0 start thanks to a pair of wins over Denver and one each over Notre Dame and Nebraska-Omaha.

"As far as Sunday's contest goes, we're playing against one of the great teams in the country," Cahoon said.

"They're a team that has been in the Final Four three consecutive years and has come close to winning a National Championship. They're a star-studded type of program."

However, the Eagles will first have their sights set on tonight's home contest with the top-ranked Badgers. Nevertheless, any thought of a letdown against the Minutemen, win or lose against Wisconsin, can probably be dismissed. That is because the last time these two teams faced each other on Feb. 26, the Minutemen walked into Conte Forum and dominated BC in a 5-1 victory.

With the help of that win, UMass gained the momentum it needed to tie New Hampshire the following weekend and secure a berth in the Hockey East playoffs.

As always, the Eagles will look towards senior All-American Brian Gionta to shoulder the load offensively. The Empire State native has five points in his first four games. Teammates Krys Kolanos and Mike Lephart have also equaled that output in the early going.

Boston College is also fortunate to have one of the top goal tending tandems in the nation in senior Scott Clemmensen and sophomore Tim Kelleher. The former has posted a 3-0 mark and a 1.33 GAA in three starts, while Kelleher won his only start of the season.

The Minutemen have been paced offensively by the play of the Turner brothers. Tim Turner leads the club with six points in the first three games, while Jeff has added four points.

The UMass attack also received a boost last weekend with the return of sniper Martin Milijko, who jumped right back into the mix with a pair of goals against Colgate.

Women's soccer one win away from A-10's

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

It all comes down to this for the Massachusetts women's soccer team – one win this weekend over either Fordham or La Salle assures the Minutewomen of a berth in next weekend's Atlantic 10 tournament in Cincinnati.

With two games to go in the regular season, UMass currently sits all alone in third place, one point ahead of the fourth place Explorers and three ahead of Rhode Island. However, if the Minutewomen falter and drop both games, there is a chance that their season could be over after Sunday.

But don't expect that to happen. UMass has been playing some of its best soccer in the final month of the season, even with several key players hampered with injuries. In order to allow some recuperation to set in, UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy gave his team two days off following Sunday's tie with Xavier.

As a result, the Minutewomen should be refocused and reenergized when they take the pitch for today's contest with Fordham. Game time is 3 p.m. at Totman field.

"This weekend is huge for us," Rudy said. "What I've been telling the players every game is that this game is the most important one of the season. This time, against Fordham, it is once again."

Needless to say, UMass (9-6-1, 5-2-1 in the A-10) would like to have some momentum heading into the A-10 tournament. In the final weekend of the regular season last year, the Minutewomen stumbled through a 1-0 win over Duquesne, and then fell to St. Bonaventure in the regular season finale. The next time out, Xavier crushed UMass, 5-1, in the first round of the conference tourney to end its season.

"I would like us to end last year better than we did last year," Rudy said. "Last year, we were very casual and that loss to St. Bonaventure set us up for the loss in the A-10's. We don't want that to happen again."

"If our players don't remember it, then they should," added Rudy. "It's a humbling memory. Personally, I don't intend to go out that way again, but I'm only the coach. You won't see me kicking at ball out there at any point during the weekend. They're the ones who have to go out and play."

Fordham enters the weekend with a 6-9-2 record, 2-5-1 in the A-10. Since the inception of the conference, the Minutewomen have never lost to the Rams, but that doesn't mean that they can take the New York school lightly. In fact, URI broke a 12-game losing streak against UMass back in mid-September to earn its first win ever against the Bay State school.

Turn to SOCCER, page7

At full force: Field hockey surging

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

They might enjoy better pretzels and cheese steak than the Massachusetts field hockey team, but that won't mean anything when the two Pennsylvanian schools of LaSalle and West Chester invade Richard F. Garber field this weekend.

In the last two regular season games for the Minutewomen, they host the Golden Rams on Friday night at 7:00 p.m., and then play an afternoon contest on Sunday at noon against the Explorers. If all goes well for UMass, then its players will be celebrating their second consecutive undefeated season in conference play; but two losses could be disastrous for the Maroon and White.

"These are two very important conference games," said Massachusetts Head Coach Patty Shea. "If we slip up we could be out of the conference tournament all together."

However, that scenario is unlikely considering the fact that Minutewomen are 14-3 (3-0 A-10) on the year, and are riding a streak in which they have won nine of their last 10 games. West Chester, on the other hand, is 9-9 (2-1 A-10) and is in third place in the conference, while Lasalle is 5-12 (1-2 A-10) and is stuck in fifth place in the A-10. The top four teams qualify for the Atlantic 10 tournament on Nov. 4-5, hosted by the Maroon and White.

Against West Chester, UMass will have to be very wary of Kim Rochon, who leads the offense with seven goals and two assists. Joelle Maguire patrols the cage for the Golden Rams, and has an outstanding 1.42 goals against average to go along with two shutouts. Statistically, she is the second best goalie in the conference to UMass' own Zowie Tucker. Tucker in

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY, page 7

JANET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Trinidad & Tobago product Kerry Ann Jaggassar leads a strong UMass defense into this weekend's match ups against A-10 rivals West Chester and LaSalle.

UMass boasts solid tandem between the pipes

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

There are some men who consider it exhilarating to throw themselves in front of hard rubber traveling at speeds in excess of 80 miles per hour. These men get a rush from simply putting on their equipment, the aroma in their helmets jumpstarting them into activity. There is no place in the world that they would rather be than sprawled on a sheet of ice, being the only means of stopping their opponent. These men of steel are the backbone of every hockey team – the goalies.

Any hockey goaltender will admit that they are at least slightly insane. They have to be in order to subject themselves to the kind of abuse that netminders often do. But no one really cares about their sanity, so long as they stop the puck.

The Massachusetts hockey squad is blessed with a pair of quality backstops on their squad. Between starter Markus Helanen and backup Mike Johnson, opponents of the Maroon and White will have trouble denting the twine this season.

Helanen is one of the most highly respected goaltenders in Hockey East, posting a 2.83 goals against average and a .902 save percentage overall last season, and he remained strong in HE contests, with a 2.86 GAA and a .903 save percentage. These numbers placed him seventh in Hockey East in GAA.

"Markus is a pivotal player in our program," UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon said. "He is going to have every opportunity to be the go-to-guy, but it is clear that both of them are going to play."

When Helanen came to UMass for the 1997-98 season, he quietly accepted the role sitting behind incumbent starter and fan favorite Brian Regan. Helanen played in eight games that season, starting five, and though he posted a shaky 4.46 GAA, he was impressive in several stints, including

His second season, he exploded onto the scene, starting in 30 and appearing in 31 out of the team's 35 games. He quickly became a fan favorite, with his acrobatic saves becoming a staple of the Maroon and White's contests.

He faced an absurd number of shots that season, 985 in total, but he rose to the challenge. His 885 saves that season eclipsed Brian Regan's school record by 65.

He was tremendous in two games against the then-No. 4 ranked University of Maine, facing a total of 87 shots in the two contests and leading the Minutemen to a win and a tie, a performance that earned him Hockey East Player of the Week honors.

For Johnson, playing second-string is nothing new. But it is something he doesn't seem to mind. Last season, he started eight games in lieu of Helanen and allowed 2.98 goals per contest. His role in a double shutout against Merrimack in January had him making 35 saves, a career high for the junior

"I'm used to being in the secondary," he said. "The last team I played for, I was the backup. I know the role and what it entails, but I've got to be ready at all times for anything that's thrown at me."

But Johnson is in no way settling for his fate to be as a second-stringer. Of course, whatever roles the two netminders play, they put the success of the team first and foremost.

"Personally, I think Markus and I both have an ability to stop the puck when we need to for the team," Johnson said. "Obviously, he's had a couple of good years and he's a great goalie, but I think I can play up to his level, and any time I can take away from him will hopefully help the team or make us better as a pair."

The two goaltenders have a good amount of competitiveness between them, and see each of their roles as being pivotal to the team's play.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Darren Yopyk

"We learn from each other," Johnson said. "We have a healthy competition going all the time and just try to adjust to our game."

Coach Cahoon sees it similarly: "It's very important for a team to know that it can succeed with either goalie in net. We're going to try to develop both goalies."

Cahoon knows that Johnson's play will be a key to the Minutemen's success.

"He'll play as much of a role as he earns," he added. "I think Markus is clearly a player of note and he's going to be a central figure on this team and Mike is going to be called upon to make a real solid contribution in conjunction with Markus' performance."

This season, the Minutemen will start off the season playing less of a trap defense than the club used under the tenure of Joe Mallen, and a more risky offense means that the goaltenders will have to face more shots from the center of the ice.

"I think the goaltending in either case will be solid," Cahoon said. "In the past we've trapped, which might reduce the number of quality shots on goal, but obviously it also reduces scoring chances we create."

Both goaltenders are excited about the prospects of playing in a more offensively geared system.

"I don't know if it's going to effect me so much," Helanen said. "I really like the style, we're going to get to play a little more offense and we're going to trap if we have to. I'm just going to focus in on my game, so it doesn't matter what style we use."

Johnson expressed similar views.

"Obviously we're going to be a little more attacking in the offensive zone, which can lead to both more help on defense and less help on defense," he said. "Our D and forwards do a great job protecting the front of the net so it doesn't really have a bearing on what I'm trying to do. I just have to stop the puck."

But regardless of what style the team plays, the goaltending must play up to the expectations set for them in order for the team to go to the next level. Whether it's Mike Johnson in front of the cage or Markus Helanen, the Minutemen will know they have someone behind the defense that they can count on.

IVAN SANTILLI/COLLEGIAN

Senior All-Hockey East candidate Markus Helanen will be the main man between the pipes for the UMass hockey team this year.

Assistant coaches lend helping hand to UMass

Gilligan returns, Dennehy and Yopyk arrive on scene with best intentions

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

With the most obvious change being the addition of a new head coach, the assistant coaches for the Massachusetts hockey team seem very prepared for the upcoming season. Mark Dennehy and Bill Gilligan are the two assistant coaches, while Darren Yopyk will work as this year's technical assistant.

Dennehy, a new coach for the team, spent three years under new head coach Don Cahoon at Princeton. Last season, he was the head coach at Fairfield University, but elected to reunite with both Cahoon and the Pioneer Valley this season. The former Boston College standout served as a volunteer coach for UMass in 1994 and brings a lot of experience about the Hockey East conference from his playing and coaching days.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Mark Dennehy

The second assistant coach is Bill Gilligan, the lone returning member from last year's staff. He is the all-time leading scorer and assists leader at Brown University.

Gilligan claims that the major asset that he brings to the team, is his knowledge of what has gone on in the past.

"I know important information about the players, and especially about the opponents," he said.

When asked about any changes in his role from last year, Gilligan said that he hasn't had to change too much. He noted that Cahoon has really let him do the same things he did last year.

"I've gotten to know him quite well," he said. "I don't want to make any comparisons to last year, but change is the only constant in life, and sometimes it's healthy for all of us. He's great in letting me help out in all the aspects of coaching. He's been great to work with and for."

Cahoon also feels fortunate to have a veteran hockey mind such as Gilligan on his staff this year.

"It's great to have him on our staff," Cahoon said. "The fact that he's familiar with the players and the team plays a major consideration into our thinking and preparation. He's a terrific hockey guy."

Gilligan says that he has high expectations for the team, but acknowledges that the year will be filled with a difficult schedule.

"It's a Hockey East) a very competitive league with four very strong teams; Boston College, Boston University, Maine and New Hampshire," he said. "It's going to be a battle for that fourth spot."

The third-year UMass assistant also said that the base of the team will be its good young freshman, a group that has the potential to do well.

Yopyk, a Princeton graduate is working on his Masters Degree here at UMass. And while he is completing his education, he seems to be excited about continuing his relationship with Cahoon.

"He brings a lot of energy to the team," said Yopyk of Cahoon. "It's a really exciting time for all of us, and we're just getting started."

If there's one thing to be said about all of the assistant coaches, it's that they seem extremely positive and eager to make a solid run at post-season play.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Assistant Coach Bill Gilligan is the only returning member of the UMass coaching staff.

■ captain

continued from page 1

Turner enters this season as the leading scorer from last year's club that finished eighth in Hockey East and was eliminated by Boston University in the quarterfinal round of the conference playoffs. A season ago, he was the top goal scorer on the team (15) and finished second in assists (19).

But even with the knowledge that he will be the go-to-guy this season, No. 14 is just taking it all in stride.

"I'm not putting any extra pressure on myself," Turner said. "All of the guys need to step up. If we do that, then we'll be fine."

Said UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon: "I think that we all walked into this situation knowing that the Turner brothers were going to be pivotal to the program, especially Jeff with his experience."

The burden on Turner's shoulders will likely be eased a bit his line mates. Jeff's younger brother, Tim, is once again paired with his sibling, while newcomer Jimmy Callahan was slotted in the left wing position in the season-opening series at Wisconsin. The trio seemed to click well right from the start, as they combined for 11 points in the two-game set against the No. 2 ranked Badgers.

"Tim and I feed off each other," Turner said. "When he goes into the corner and is physical, that energy feeds into me, and I want to get open for him. That's the reason that we play at a high energy level."

"He [Callahan] fit right in. He compensates both me and Tim well," added Turner. "He's a little mix of the gritty part of our line, but he also puts the puck in the net and finds us."

All in all, the Saginaw, MI native has made great strides since first stepping onto the campus as a freshman. The transition from junior hockey to the college ranks was delayed when he fractured his left fibula during preseason practice. Eventually, he made his way into the UMass lineup midway through his inaugural season and has never looked back since.

"That was an important moment for me," said Turner of the injury. "I learned a lot about myself and about perseverance and hard work. I took as much as a could out of it."

As a sophomore, Turner enjoyed a solid sophomore season in which he was second on the club with 22 points. Last season, that production increased once again, but the Minutemen were ousted in the first round of the Hockey East tournament.

Now, for his fourth and final season, the UMass captain wants to go out on top. But as always, the Minutemen face one of the toughest schedules in the nation in the toughest conference in the land.

"It's going to be tough from top to bottom," said Turner regarding the conference. "And it just seems like it gets stronger and stronger every year. There's really no way of predicting who is going to finish where because there's so much parity between the teams."

Said Tim Turner: "It's Jeff's last year here so we want to make it a good one and we want to go out on top."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

UMass Hockey Preview

Sports Editors — Bryan Smith, Michael Kobylanski
Photo Technicians — Dan Santella, Jaret Barr
Staff Writers — Matt Brady, Ryan Benharris
Production Supervisor — Alan Basque
Production Staff — Sarah Wingardner

Stoneham: Team leader behind the scenes

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

While the Massachusetts men's hockey team begins preparation for a new season, one of their most dedicated assistants has returned for another energetic filled round.

Pete Stoneham, the team's equipment manager, has seen the team endure a transition before, and because of that, players really look up to him for leadership and support.

Stoneham acknowledges that the changes in the coaching staff, especially the addition of new head coach Don Cahoon, will be a major factor in the team's evolution.

"It's an extremely exciting time for players, for myself and for the University," he said. "Everybody's extremely optimistic. The energy level that Don brings has definitely affected everyone on the team."

Stoneham showed quite a bit of disappointment for last year's squad, but he feels strongly about the caliber of this year's club.

"The team is ready for a change and is working hard," he said. "We're all here to do one thing. That's to win and have fun."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Pete Stoneham

The game of hockey has been an integral part of Stoneham's life since his youth. He served as the captain of the Amherst High hockey team in 1980 before moving on to a successful playing career with the University of Colorado's club team.

From there, he went on to coach the Buffaloes program for five years, including a seventh place finish in the 1989 club national championship. But eventually, "Stoney" returned back to Amherst and became involved with the emerging UMass program.

As a whole, Stoneham's relationship with the players differs from that of the other coaches.

"Every player is different," he said. "I have a different relationship with each player. Some players are pretty high maintenance and some are pretty low maintenance, but if a player is having a problem, he knows he can come talk to me about it. But, I think some players at some point have enough people telling them what to do so they don't want to hear from a fourth or fifth person on what their beliefs are."

Experienced Minutemen return

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Better things are to be expected from the Massachusetts men's hockey team during the course of the 2000-01 season. This may sound obvious, but it easier said than done, especially when you're a member of the nation's best conference, Hockey East.

The Minutemen clawed their way into the Hockey East playoffs last year as a No. 8 seed and as a result had to face a Boston University squad that was poised to make another run at a national championship. The end result – a two game sweep by the Terriers.

But since that day in early March there has been a drastic change in the face of the Maroon and White. A new coach, new uniforms and most importantly a new attitude has been brought to the Mullins Center and it is ready to make its assault on Hockey East. It is known as the "Mass Attack."

With all the changes that have occurred one thing remained the same, the core of players that will lead the charge to greatness.

Forwards

UMass is led by the brothers Turner.

Senior left returns to Amherst looking to pick up where he left off last season. The captain of this year's squad posted a team-high 34 points last year. The native of Saginaw, MI played his best when the Minutemen needed it most with his most celebrated goal coming on a penalty shot in the final minute of a game against Lowell. The goal earned the Maroon and White an always-important point within the conference and is arguably the point that kept Lowell from taking on BU.

Tim takes the ice this season with hopes of making Hockey East realize that made a mistake by when they kept him off the All-Rookie Team last year. The sophomore posted 26 points in his freshman campaign.

The brothers played on the same line last year and they are set to do it again this year, but there's a major difference that transpired in the off-season. The difference, a more team game.

"We played a lot of one-on-one hockey last year," Jeff Turner said.

"We're getting more into cycling and supporting each other down low and trying to use all three guys together. It's going to result in a lot better scoring chances. We're going to mix the trap in there a little bit, we're going to try and throw some different things at other teams."

Jedd Crumb returns to the ice as UMass' third leading returning scorer after a season in which he posted eight goals. The junior will be looked upon to do much of the same as he has done in his first two years for the Maroon and White, but better production from him will constitute more ice time in tight games, something that he has not seen before.

Martin Miljko will make his return to the UMass lineup after a major knee injury that sidelined him for much of last season. Miljko was off to a torrid start for the Minutemen last year when he posted five goals and two assists in 11 games before the injury. His return should add some much needed offense to the mix.

Kris Wallis was put at the point on the power play in a midseason move last year, and the move paid dividends because once the Agassiz, BC native took control the power play clicked. He will be looked upon for his senior leadership to bring along the newcomers as quickly as possible.

But the unsung man at the position is assistant captain Jay Shaw. He does all the little things that coaches love from a player. He plays down low when he needs to. He bangs in the corner. He causes headaches for opposing defensemen with his aggressive forechecking style. What he contributes might go unnoticed on the score sheet, but it does not with the coaches and fans. Shaw also is one of the most positive players ever to take the ice in a Minuteman uniform.

"I want to go out winning," Shaw said. "Being the first team in four years to go out with a winning record to do something positive and carry it over for the future of the program. If we end up top four, or if we just get a winning record and make some noise in the playoffs.

"I think every team, night in, night out is capable of being beat," he added. "If we put our "A" game together and come out and work hard, we can beat anyone."

Defense

Here is where experience sets in. UMass has all of its defensemen from last year's team back and they are ready to wreck havoc on opposing offenses. This is not an easy task when players like Boston College's Brian Gionta and New Hampshire's Darren Haydar have to be seen three times a year, but if anyone can do it, then it is this group.

Toni Soderholm returns as UMass' leading scorer at the blue line. He is one of the smartest defensive players in Hockey East and is very rarely beat in one-on-one situations.

Samuli Jalkanen will make his return to the lineup after a broken wrist kept him out of UMass' final six games of last season. He is one-third of the UMass trio that hail from Finland and he is poised to make a mark this season.

"We got a couple of kids back there who I think that we are confident in – Toni Soderholm and Sami Jalkanen," Cahoon said. "They both have exceptional skills, are great competitors and have the level of confidence needed to play that position."

Joey Culgin, Kelly Sickavish, Luke Duplessis, Justin Shaw, Randy Drohan and Nick Stephens make up the rest of the solid blue line core.

All have played the position as a Minuteman for a full season before with the exception of Stephens. Stephens will be making the move from the forward to defense at season's onset.

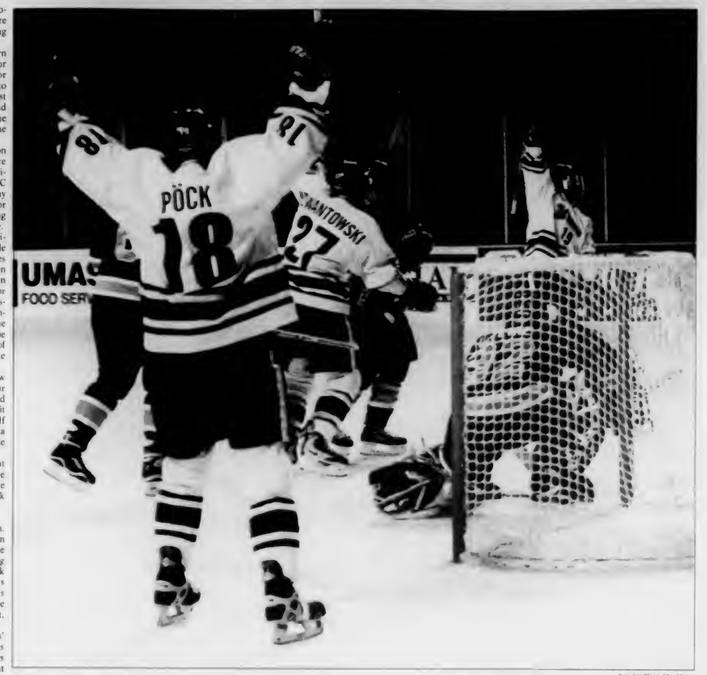
"The other guys back there all have experience," Cahoon said. "Hopefully we can get them to play within themselves and do a respectable job. We don't want them to play out of themselves."

Aside from defense, they will have to contribute on the offensive end. They will have many opportunities to fire shots with the idea of the forwards putting back the rebounds.

Goalies

The dynamic duo of Markus Helanen and Mike Johnson return the ice this season as one of the top tandems in Hockey East. Helanen is an All-Hockey East candidate and Johnson is more than a formidable backup.

Helanen posted a 2.83 goals against average last year and Johnson shut out Merrimack at the Volpe Complex last year when he made a career-high 35 saves in a 0-0 tie.



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Head Coach Don 'Toot' Cahoon has implemented a new, aggressive forechecking style to the UMass program. The new scheme should allow for Minuteman goals.

Boston College Eagles

Location: Chestnut Hill
Home Rink: Silvio O. Conte Forum (7,884)
1999-2000 Record/HE Finish: 29-12-1(15-8-1, lost in HE Finals, NCAA runner-up)
Coach/Years at BC: Jerry York (eleventh season)
Top Returnees: Brian Gionta, F (33-25-56), Mike Lephart, F (14-19-33), Bobby Allen, D (4-23-27), Scott Clemmenson, G (19-7, 2.20 GAA)
Outlook: For the third straight season, the league's coaches have tabbed BC as the team to beat. Even though the school graduated Hobey Baker Award winner Mike Mottau and high-flying forwards Jeff Farkas and Blake Bellefuille, there are still plenty of talented players left in the Heights. Gionta, a three-time All-American, will have to shoulder the load offensively, but he will need help from players such as Lephart. Clemmensen and backup Tim Kelleher form arguably the best goaltending pair in the conference.

Boston University Terriers

Location: Boston
Home Rink: Walter Brown Arena (3,806)
1999-2000 Record/HE Finish: 25-10-7 (15-3-6, HE regular season champs, lost in NCAA Eastern Regional)
Coach/Years at BU: Jack Parker (twenty-eighth season)
Top returnees: Carl Corazzini, F (22-20-42), Dan Cavanaugh, F (9-25-34), Jack Baker, F (13-19-32), Chris Dyment, D (1-20-31)
Outlook: The Terriers lost their top two scorers from a year ago in Tommi Degerman and Chris Heron, as well as All-Hockey East goaltender Ricky DiPietro, who was taken first overall in the NHL Draft by the New York Islanders. However, BU does boast a talented junior class that includes Cavanaugh, Baker and Dyment. Offense shouldn't be a problem, but the reigning regular season champs will need goaltenders Jason Tapp and Sean Fields to live up to their potential if they want to repeat the same feat again this season.

Maine Black Bears

Location: Orono, ME
Home Rink: Alfond Arena (5,641)
1999-2000 Record/HE Finish: 27-8-5 (13-7-4, HE Tournament champs, lost in NCAA Eastern Regional)
Coach/Years at Maine: Shawn Walsh (seventeenth season)
Top returnees: Niko Dimitrakos, F (16-20-22), Martin Kariya, F (8-17-25), Doug Janik, D (6-14-20), Matt Yeo, F (12-8-20), 2.60 GAA)
Outlook: The major concern on coach Walsh's mind in Black Bear country is the health of Walsh, who is battling bladder cancer. The Maine coach has undergone extensive treatment in the past few months, and is targeting early November for his return behind the bench. Meanwhile, the Black Bears must deal with more adversity as Dimitrakos will miss the first month of the season with a broken wrist. But one thing is for sure – don't count Maine out just yet – the boys from the north always seem to find a way to win.

UMass-Amherst Minutemen

Location: Amherst
Home Rink: William D. Mullins Center (8,389)
1999-2000 Record/HE Finish: 11-20-5 (5-15-4)
Coach/Years at UMass: Don Cahoon (first season)
Top returnees: Jeff Turner, F (15-19-34), Tim Turner, F (5-21-26), Jedd Crumb, F (8-10-18), Toni Soderholm, D (3-12-15), Markus Helanen, G (10-16-3, 2.83 GAA)
Outlook: The Minutemen have the capability to be the dark horse of the conference this year. Cahoon steps into the job behind the bench after helping to restore the program at Princeton. The Bay State native now hopes to turn the same trick at UMass. The Turner brothers have proven that they are the top guns for the Minutemen, while Helanen is one of the league's top goaltenders.

UMass-Lowell River Hawks

Location: Lowell
Home Rink: Paul E. Tsongas Arena (6,496)
1999-2000 Record/HE Finish: 9-22-3 (5-16-3)
Head Coach/Years at Lowell: Tim Whitehead (fourth season)
Top returnees: Ron Hainsey, D (3-8-11), Ed McGrane, F (10-12-22), Yorick Treille, F (10-12-22)
Outlook: Whitehead's crew will surely look to improve upon last season's woeful last place finish in the conference. That task may be easier said than done, though. The River Hawks will need breakout years offensively from players such as McGrane and Treille to keep pace with the rest of the league. Hainsey passed up a pro contract with the Montreal Canadiens after the Habs picked him in the first round of last June's draft, so his return does provide a boost to the Lowell defensive core.

Merrimack Warriors

Location: North Andover
Home Rink: Volpe Complex (3,617)
1999-2000 Record/HE Finish: 11-19-6 (6-12-6)
Head Coach/Years at Merrimack: Chris Serino (third season)
Top Returnees: Anthony Aquino, F (15-14-29), John Pyliotis, F (6-20-26), Vincent Clevenger, F (10-14-24)
Outlook: Not only did the Warriors lose No. 1 goaltender Cris Classen to graduation, but they were also dealt a blow when sophomore (and leading scorer) Greg Classen jumped ship for a pro contract with the Nashville Predators. As a result, Aquino and a host of other supporting players must take over offensively. Senior Tom Welby seems to be the likely starter in goal, but he has been inconsistent in his first three years in North Andover. That must change quickly if the Warriors want to be competitive this season.

New Hampshire Wildcats

Location: Durham, NH
Home Rink: Towse Rink at the Whittemore Center (6,226)
1999-2000 Record/HE Finish: 23-9-6 (13-5-6, lost in NCAA Western Regional)
Head Coach/Years at UNH: Dick Umile (eleventh season)
Top returnees: Darren Haydar, F (22-19-41), Ty Conklin, G (22-6-6, 2.51 GAA), Matt Swain, D (6-16-22), Mark White, D (4-10-14)
Outlook: It will be the same old story for the Wildcats again this year – they will go only as far as Conklin takes them. The Hockey East Co-Player of the Year in 1999-2000 will need to be on the top of his game night in and night out. Haydar is one of the most exciting forwards in the league, but he is now the main man after the graduation of Mike Souza. Expect UNH to finish in the top four as usual.

Northeastern Huskies

Location: Boston
Home Rink: Matthews Arena (6,000)
1999-2000 Record/HE Finish: 12-19-5 (8-11-5)
Head Coach/Years at NU: Bruce Crowder (ninth season)
Top returnees: Craig Mischler, F (9-13-22), Willie Levesque, F (9-13-22), Roger Holeczy, F (5-17-22), Mike Ballard, G (10-10-20), Jim Fahey, D (3-17-20)
Outlook: The Huskies will keep forwards and experienced defensive unit that is led by Fahey, the team's senior captain, in close games this season. Offense is a concern of Crowder's but he hopes that a mix of old and new faces will result in increased production. Northeastern also returns both of its goalies in junior Jason Braun and sophomore Mike Gilooly.

Providence Friars

Location: Providence, RI
Home Rink: Schneider Arena (3,030)
1999-2000 Record/HE Finish: 18-18-2 (10-13-1)
Head Coach/Years at PC: Paul Pooley (seventh season)
Top Returnees: Peter Fregoe, F (14-15-29), Jon DiSalvatore, F (15-12-27), Drew Omicioli, F (11-12-23), Boyd Ballard, G (12-13-1, 3.02 GAA)
Outlook: The Friars have one of the youngest defensive units in the conference, so that won't bode well for defenders Ballard and Nolan Schaefer. The trio of DiSalvatore, Omicioli and Fregoe should provide most of the offensive punch for PC, but it will also need balanced scoring from some of the underclassmen in order to be successful.

Blair Witch 2: Book of Shadows brings the legend back to the big screen. See David Troupes' review. Also, Shauna Billings helps you pick out a last-minute Halloween costume today in Arts.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Even a season-high 17 sticks from tri-captain Kole Ayi (right) couldn't lift UMass football to victory in New Hampshire

SPORTS p. 8

Volume CVII Issue 38 www.dailycollegian.com Monday, October 30, 2000

Census figures and districting at center of debate

By Jason Spears and Chris Spring
Collegian Correspondents

This year's state elections include eight ballot questions dealing with eight separate issues. This is the first installment in an eight-part series explaining each of the questions and how they affect Massachusetts' voters.

Question No. 1 proposes earlier redistricting for state legislators and governor's councillors based on the 2000 Census data. The question would amend the state constitution to require that district boundaries take effect before the 2002 election. Under the current system, the 2002 election would use districting data that is outdated by over a dozen years.

State Ballot Question One

According to State Representative and Assistant Majority Whip Thomas M. Petrolati (D- Ludlow), if the measure is not passed, a court challenge will most likely rule that the current version violates the Equal Protection Clause of the Federal Constitution.

Maryanne Calia, director of the staff of the Special Committee on Redistricting and Reappointment, reaffirms that court action by the Federal government would follow a "no" vote. The costs of such legal actions would be borne by the taxpayers of Massachusetts, according to Calia.

There are currently no organized groups opposing the amendment. As to why there is no opposition, Calia said, "I couldn't see where it would be necessary to use old data, not new, to redraw the lines."

"If the amendment passes, the Census 2000 figures will be used for the 2002 election," said Petrolati in his official argument supporting the amendment. "If this amendment is not adopted, we will be using redistricting data which will be up to 14 years out of date."

According to state law, any petition to amend the state constitution has to be voted on by the Joint Session. If it is approved of by at least 25 percent of the legislators, the petition has to be held until the next elected legislature for another vote. If the petition passes, it goes to the voters for final approval. Question 1 was first voted on June 9, 1998 and then passed on June 28th of this year.

The primary purpose of the U.S. Census is to count the number of residents in the United States for purposes of representation. The highest priority of the Census Bureau is to provide data for redistricting. The Bureau must provide basic data to the states within one year of the Census, which will be April 1, 2001.

The task of redrawing fair boundaries falls on the Special Committee on Redistricting and Reappointment. According to Calia, the committee will use Census data including ethnicity, race and economic factors in determining fair districts. The Committee is made up of one Republican and eight Democrats, and is proportioned to reflect percentages of Democrats and Republicans in the State House. The new boundaries decided on by the committee must then pass through state legislature.

The process is an attempt to prevent gerrymandering. Gerrymandering is the process of modifying congressional districts to benefit the party in power. The term is derived from former Massachusetts Governor Elbridge Gerry. In 1812, Gerry signed a bill that redistricted the state to overwhelmingly benefit his party, the Republican Party. One congressional district was shaped very strangely, causing a Federalist Party member to say that it resembled a salamander. Another Federalist labeled the shape a gerrymander.

Despite the use of computers and Geographic Information Systems to make redistricting as fair as possible, politics can still interfere. Many redistricting plans are challenged in the courts, keeping alive the accusations of gerrymandering.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Little Plastic Mullins

Ani DiFranco poured her heart and soul into her Saturday night show at the William D. Mullins Center. Check out tomorrow's Collegian for a full review.

Inmates' voting rights in question as election looms

By Mikkel Roer and Melody Zagami
Collegian Correspondents

Question No. 2 on this year's state ballot is a proposed constitutional amendment that would prohibit felons who are incarcerated in a correctional facility from voting in specific elections.

A "Yes" vote would amend the constitution to limit the voting rights of incarcerated felons. A "No" vote would make no change to the current voting rights of incarcerated felons.

Supporters of the amendment say that the right to vote ought to be taken away from felons as a part of their punishment. They argue that the amendment would not affect anyone who has completed his or her sentence, or who is on probation or parole. They also say that Massachusetts is one of only three states that allow prisoners to vote. Only Massachusetts, Maine and Vermont do not impose restrictions on inmates or former prisoners. The question's sponsor, State Representative Francis J. Marini (R-Hanson), said, "This change discriminates against no one except jailed criminals. A 'yes' vote will protect democracy's greatest gift – the right to vote, by reserving it for the law abiding." Governor Paul Cellucci supports the amendment along with all 27 members of the Republican caucus.

State Ballot Question Two

In a recent column in the Boston Herald, columnist Joe Sciacca quotes

Turn to BALLOT page 2

Lazio visits Syracuse, blasts Palestinian leader for Mideast violence

By Dave Levinthal
Daily Orange (Syracuse U.)

(U-WIRE) SYRACUSE, N.Y. - In touting a foreign policy plan similar to George W. Bush's, U.S. Senate candidate Rick Lazio on Thursday denounced Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat for having "planned and orchestrated" recent violence in Israel.

These anti-Palestinian Liberation Organization comments, made at Syracuse University's Eggers Hall to defense and military officials in the university's National Security Studies program, were some of the strongest made by any U.S. official, experts in attendance said.

"If there was ever evidence that Arafat is not interested in peace, the blood in the streets of Jerusalem is it," said Lazio, a four-term Republican congressman from Long Island. "The peace process is dying, for the time being at least, and responsibility for this lies squarely with Yasser Arafat."

The SU visit marked Lazio's first to the university and sixth to greater Syracuse in as many weeks, as he struggles to bolster support in Upstate New York. The speech, however, was closed to students and the public.

During the speech, Lazio also demanded the following U.S. foreign policy stances regarding the Middle East:

* Jerusalem must remain undivided and the capital of Israel.
* The United States must stop being an "honest broker," and throw support behind Israel.
* The United States must not recognize a unilaterally declared Palestine.
* Arafat should never receive U.S. aid if he creates a Palestinian state.

"There is no question Lazio was extremely critical of the chairman of the PLO," said Sean O'Keefe, an SU professor and director of the National Security Studies program. O'Keefe also served under President George Bush as secretary of the Navy. "He definitely was more critical than most politicians have been."

The congressman also criticized the Clinton administration for diplomatic overtures to so-called "states of concern," including Iran, Syria and North Korea. Top U.S. officials, for example, have recently visited some of these states.

Lazio told the security studies students that the United States must isolate these countries, diplomatically and economically, and "punish" state-sponsored terrorist acts.

"When it comes to dealing with rogue states, New York needs a senator who will hold the White House's feet to the fire – somebody who has the convictions and the courage to stand up for them," Lazio said.

While Lazio also advocated strong support for U.S. military forces -- he echoed Texas Gov. Bush's call for engaging only in clearly defined, well-planned military missions -- he also wavered slightly. In response to a question from SU professor and former ambassador Melvyn Levitsky, Lazio said he would consider supporting a "consolidation" of military bases.

But his otherwise hard-line stance on military and Middle East affairs comes at a time when Lazio is trailing first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, a Democrat, by several percentage points in most statewide polls.

Lazio's frequent trips to Syracuse and other upstate destinations, one polling expert said, are clear indications of one thing.

"Panic," said Maurice Carroll, director of the Quinnipiac University Polling Institute. "It's a reaction to the fact that Mrs. Clinton almost took residence up there. What he's trying to do is catch up. Her numbers upstate are better than they should be."

Despite his frequent trips upstate, some SU students were disappointed that Lazio did not address student-related issues, or even speak to undergraduate or graduate students at all.

Lazio declined to answer questions after the speech. But his campaign spokesman, Patrick McCarthy, said Lazio is concerned about student issues, such as education and tuition relief. Not speaking to a larger crowd -- about 75 people attended his presentation Thursday -- was simply a matter of time.

"There's hundreds of events you'd like to do but can't," McCarthy said. "We will be back in Syracuse several more times before Election Day."

Clinton, in contrast, spoke in February at Goldstein Auditorium to an audience of more than 1,200. She declined, however, to accept an offer from the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Policy to speak to the same group of security studies students, said Robert McClure, associate dean of Maxwell.

"Lazio could have chosen to speak to the university as a whole," said Sarah Chapman, an SU graduate student and a former Lazio staff member who received a big hug from the congressman following his speech.

"But on the whole, and given the topic upon which he was speaking, I think the venue was a good decision."

Lazio's student support base in Onondaga County is active and strong, and is not dissuaded by him declining to speak to students, said Chris Ryan, chairman of the SU College Republicans and a junior public relations and political science major. Ryan himself is running for office – SU Student Association president.

About 50 students joined Ryan to watch Lazio's speech on closed-circuit television, and briefly mingled with him afterward.

"This is a credit to the university and the students of SU," Ryan said. "He does rely on the support right here to win."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Did you bring my barrel?

A couple enjoys the breathtaking view from atop Niagara Falls.

■ ballot

...continued from page 1

New Hampshire Supreme Court Judge John Broderick as saying. "When one breaks the law one also abandons the right to participate in voting for those who create and enforce laws."

Critics of the proposed amendment include civil rights organizations, civil libertarians and inmates' rights groups that say it would infringe on the rights of the people. They say that Massachusetts prisoners have voted since before the Revolution with no danger to the Commonwealth. They also say that whenever this right has been called into question, it has been re-affirmed by the Supreme Judicial Court. They argue that since less than five percent of prisoners exercise their right to vote, prison voting has never had an appreciable impact on an election. Opponents say that since 97 percent of prisoners return to their communities, it is important not to further alienate and isolate them as a whole.

"The cradle of liberty is about to sully its reputation, and do what it has never done before: amend the state constitution to curtail the rights of its citizenry," said John Roberts, executive director of the ACLU of Massachusetts in a press release. "It is in our interest that [felons] return fully prepared to participate in community life as productive, responsible citizens. Our prisoners should not only punish, they should rehabilitate. Denying rights of citizenship to prisoners is counterproductive and will stigmatize our reputation as the cradle of liberty."

One little-examined detail within the fine print on the ballot question reveals that if Question #2 passes, it will limit, not prohibit, prisoners from voting. If the question passes, prisoners will retain their right to vote for offices ranging from president and vice president to county sheriff and selectman.

Opponents also argue that, since a large number of felons in Massachusetts prisons are minorities, taking the vote away would dilute the power of minority communities.

Former congressman and Georgetown University law professor Reverend Robert F. Drinan points out, "There are a number of political anachronisms in the United States. Excluding former prisoners from the ballot box is surely one of them. One of the worst consequences is that on election day every seventh African American man is, by law, ineligible to vote."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic calendar. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Index. In 1906, the College Signal. In 1961, the Weekly Collegian. In 1914 and then the Massachusetts Collegian in 1938. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January, 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500. Week days between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Blinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Taber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benbarris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holsten Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jarel Burr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Simanski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargantz Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

www.alltrue.com
watch search collect send score.
Alltrue
Watch thousands of killer video clips at www.alltrue.com
made you look

WHERE DO WE GO TONIGHT?
CLUB 21
21 PLUS TRIVIA / DANCE PARTY
WITH
D.J. MATT Filmore
Every Monday Night
9:30-Closing
DRINK SPECIALS
GIVEAWAYS
CONTESTS
ALL NIGHT MENU
5 TVs
CLUB 21 ROUTE 21 BELCHERTOWN, MA. 323-4117

"I Bet You Will": daring students, Internet game show invade Boston

By Damita Chambers
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON - Wearing only a white thong, a bra, a black hat and sneakers, Kim Edington, of Boston, galloped along Newbury Street yesterday with a stuffed horse between her legs on a dare for the new Internet game show "I Bet You Will."

The New York-based game show broadcasts film footage on the Internet of passers-by doing outrageous dares for money. Boston is IBYW's first stop in a sweep of several east-coast cities that will expand into a national tour.

Interactive Consortium, IBYW's production company, produces an interactive Web site that encourages users to suggest new challenges and participate in contests. Since the company launched the first show on June 21, the Web site has received over 8 million hits, said founder and host Morgan Spurlock.

As many as 50 people gathered at one time on Newbury Street and cheered for Edington and the other risk-takers. Other passers-by lingered long enough to figure out why the crowd had formed and walked away groaning and shaking their heads. Duck Tours tourists gawked and took pictures as passed by.

"You've got to at least give her a better horse," shouted Noreen Simmons from Saugus, Mass., as Edington struggled to hold up the horse's head and tail.

Edington said that people hung out of windows and doors of the buildings along the street as she raced by.

She said afterwards that her experience was "definitely worth it." Before the challenge, she raised the reward to $200 from $100 in cash. She also received the thong that Spurlock gave to her before the challenge and a trademark gray T-shirt that read, "Stupidity Pays."

"I don't have a job, and $200 seemed pretty nice," said Edington, who just moved to Boston a month ago. "It's the easiest 200 bucks you can get."

Wearing orange jump suits, the IBYW crew filmed Edington's ride and crowd reactions.

Spurlock also challenged Tiana Clark, of Hawaii, to chug 26.5 shots of cod liver oil in what he called the "Boston Marathon."

The crowd counted each shot as Clark threw back her head to gulp each one. After about 10 shots, Clark began vomiting in a pail almost once after every two shots. Through many grimaces and sighs, she finished the shots and earned $270 in cash with cheers from the crowd.

Why did she do it?

"I am a poor college student, and I need the money," Clark said.

Kelly Conlon from Quincy, Mass., said she heard about the show on the radio earlier in the day.

"It's true what they're doing," she said.

"They'll do anything. Anything. Even on Newbury Street."

The first project was a success, said Chief Executive Officer Dave Paderson, who plans to the show to the major television networks. He declined, however, to reveal any further details.

Passenger shortage?
Despite a shortage of drivers and an abbreviated schedule, the PVTA is still up and running. Here, one lucky student has a white chariot all to himself for his daily commute.

The Daily Collegian.....
It does a body goooooooood.

Why Not... Do Something Cool?! getthatgig.com

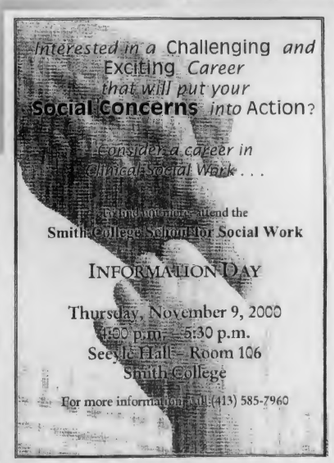
We're giving away 5,000,000 shares of our start-up stock!
(What the hell. It's only money.)
Visit our website for the scoop.
SonicSave.com

Massachusetts School of Law
AT ANDOVER
CLASSES START IN JANUARY
• LSAT NOT REQUIRED
• DAY AND EVENING PROGRAMS
• AFFORDABLE TUITION PLANS - 1/2 THE MEDIAN LAW SCHOOL TUITION IN NEW ENGLAND
• OUR PRACTICAL/THEORETICAL PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR THE PRACTICE OF LAW AS WELL AS NUMEROUS OTHER PROFESSIONS
THE LEADER OF REFORM IN LEGAL EDUCATION
500 FEDERAL STREET, ANDOVER, MA 01810
Phone: (978) 681-0800 • email: pcolby@mslaw.edu
www.mslaw.edu
CONTACT US NOW FOR YOUR COPY OF FEDERAL REPORTS 600+ THINGS YOU CAN DO WITH A LAW DEGREE



Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?
Consider a career in Clinical Social Work . . .
Consider graduate study at the Smith College School for Social Work
INFORMATION DAY
Thursday, November 9, 2000
4:00 p.m. - 5:30 p.m.
Seelye Hall - Room 106
Smith College
For more information call (413) 585-7960

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Stonewall incident: coming to grips with hate

When a brick was thrown through a window at the Stonewall Center this past week, it brought shock, outrage and a sense of sadness.

There are, however, a few things we can do to maybe see this act of violence in a better light.

The Stonewall Center is, of course, located in Southwest, Southwest, where there have been two separate riots within the past week. Southwest, the infamous land of drinking, partying and mindless destruction. Every weekend in Southwest things are broken, thrown around, urinated on and generally defaced. In a culture where ripping the sinks off the wall is a recognized method of passing the weekend, a window is a legitimate target.

It is possible that the people who threw this brick were simply idiots causing some destruction – and that they did not know it was the Stonewall Center they were attacking. They may have simply had a brick and seen a window, and figured that since one plus one equals two they may as well go for it. There is that chance, however slim, that this crime was one of general malice and vandalism and not a purposeful hate crime, and that is a chance that we may comfort ourselves with.

Of course, the odds are that this was not a random act of the typical brand of Southwest mayhem. The odds are that this was a hate crime, that the Stonewall Center was targeted for what it is – a safe place for GLBT students, a resource for information and an activist voice for the GLBT population of UMass.

But what sort of a hate crime?

Once again, we can all hope that this was a rash, spur-of-the-moment thing. The people saw a brick lying conveniently close, they saw the Stonewall Center within easy reach, they glanced around and realized that there was nobody around to witness their cowardice and so they picked up the projectile, did the deed, and ran like mad. Perhaps they bragged to their friends, perhaps they felt guilty as they went to sleep, perhaps they simply put the incident out of their mind. Whatever their reaction, in this scenario, it was a one-shot, hit-and-run incident.

What these explanations do is try to take our minds off the harshest, most unpalatable option: that this was a planned, premeditated assault on a beneficial campus organization that may well happen again. That is the one possibility that no one wants to face as a reality, but it may well be just that.

In the end, no one can explain this incident without entering into the mind of the perpetrator, something that none of us are able to do. We can only live with our uneasiness and the sense that something terribly wrong has happened.

What we can do is roundly condemn this attack and hope and act so that it does not happen again. We here at the Daily Collegian deplore this attack on the Stonewall Center and condemn the perpetrator, whoever he is and whatever his motivation. This is the sort of action that mars this campus and tarnished its good name, and we can all simply hope that an incident of this kind never occurs again.

Dreams of ambition undone

BOO DOWNS

Have you ever had the ambition to be great? Have you planned to catch a rocket to the stars? Would you sacrifice everything in order to achieve your dreams? Like most people, I cannot escape the candy-coated dreams that were presented to me.

This dream, born out of our collective consciousness, provides the desire of recognition in its many forms. The forms include family, friends, enjoyable employment, sex and of course, fame and fortune. T.V. preaches the dream, the American Dream demands it and society requires it. This need for recognition generates the desire for greatness. This desire for greatness motivated brilliant leaders, inspirational athletes and successful businesspeople. Celebrated members of society are not George the plumber, but rather George Lucas the multi-billionaire filmmaker/CEO of Lucasfilm. While lifestyles on every social and economic level are required in our society, few people or professions are celebrated. In this spirit of ambition, I've decided to become a filmmaker.

At the age of 21, I've made the most out of my college education. I'm taking only three and a half years to graduate. I've risen into positions of leadership in numerous organizations. I've created projects that are amazing by University standards. I've been to Disney and back, with hopes to return in the spring. My ambitions have carried me far beyond what I had imagined, and I hope my path to greatness is paved with yellow bricks. Alas, as I look at the fading light of my college experiences, I feel something is missing.

Have I done enough to ensure that I stand out?

Sure.

Will I rise to the top of my profession?

It's only a matter of time.

However, I've only lived a small fraction of my life, and I already feel like a 90-year-old who missed out on his life. I rationalize this emptiness as a minor setback that will be paid back with interest when I'm great. After all, the emptiness provides the motivation to keep me climbing the proverbial ladder. If I had everything I wanted, I'd have no reason to make something of myself. Who needs to be famous when they're already the most popular person around? In contrast, the people who've become great often were quiet, shy or antisocial people who just didn't fit in. The popular, superficially successful people had already achieved the dream in one sense or another. The dream dictates that being great in social situations is an acceptable fate. You need to look to further than "Friends," or the late "90210" for the dream. However, for those who were caught out of the social loop, the dream is taken to a more literal level. Instead of being liked or respected by one's friends, they seek to be loved and respected by thousands. I suppose it's this version of the dream that inspires me.

Of course, fame and fortune never guarantee happiness for anybody. In fact, they tend to magnify the problems the person is facing. Take Steve Clark, for example. He was the celebrated guitarist from the band Def Leppard. When Def Leppard was on the top of the world, Steve was on the bottom. He had all the luxuries of a rock star, including women, money and fame. However, that did nothing to keep him from overdosing on alcohol and painkillers in a fatal orgy of depression.

> "This desire for greatness motivated brilliant leaders, inspirational athletes and successful business people. Celebrated members of society are not George the plumber but rather George Lucas the multi-billionaire filmmaker/CEO of Lucasfilm."

When I first came to college, I was ready to take over the world. Finding few people with ambition, I hung out with a struggling sports writer from the Collegian. He eventually took over the newspaper, as I rose to the top of the campus T.V. station. With the world at my feet, I refused to see the value of simple relationships. I failed miserably in a handful of romantic relationships. I felt that I had little use for parties and other social gatherings. In fact, I went so far as to look down at party animals. I was convinced that they were blowing their four years on alcohol, sex and more alcohol. Now being a virgin who's never been drunk quickly put me on a moral high horse. I laughed at the people who stumbled around looking so completely pathetic. I found the party scene to be extremely insincere, and meaningless hookups proved to me this overall complete lack of respect and control. Instead of socializing, I locked myself in my proverbial laboratory on my personal quest to be the best.

Now, with a month and a half of college left, I've emerged the best. At the same time, I've also become the worst, as my carefree college life slipped through my fingers. I have everything to show for my professional endeavors, but nothing to show for myself. My self worth was completely defined by what I did, rather than who I was. I built my self worth on my grandiose experiences, leaving my confidence outside the realm of the professional fragile. I could save the world, but I could never save face during a party. Only now have I finally realized what I've sacrificed to my all-consuming ambition.

My sister came to UMass, and became a top student. She managed to keep a 3.7 GPA while playing in the marching band, playing club hockey, and balance a course load of up to 21 credits a semester. She matched her enormous workload with a magnificent ability to party just as hard. Now, three years after graduation, she works diligently at a job that pays far less than a starting job for a crack computer-science student. At the same time, she has a very healthy social life, and is living life to the fullest. She may not be a CEO of a company, or make $100,000 a year, but she is having the time of her life.

Some people choose to go with the flow, and enjoy things the way they are. Some people completely shut themselves off from the world, and fight to become great. However, fame and fortune is worth nothing if you don't have anyone to share yourself with. And when the day comes that my dream comes true, I want to share it with those who I care for. I dream a dream where I am 90 years old, and I can look back on a life that meant something. Now that's something to be ambitious about.

This desire of greatness motivated brilliant leaders, inspirational athletes, and successful business-people. Celebrated members of society are not George the plumber, but rather George Lucas the multi-billionaire filmmaker/CEO of Lucasfilm."

Boo Downs is a Collegian Columnist

I'm on a highway to…

Ever wonder why that Italian kid on your floor is so loud? Well, I am here to tell you. God bless the Italians, with voices so loud that no one's opinion is left unheard at dinner. If your family is of Italian heritage and you get together for dinner every once in a while, you know what I mean. Many people have wondered why Italians argue at dinner, and I have come to realize that it has a lot to do with anger management. For the sake of my argument we will call it "rage management."

Those who know me will tell you that I am not an angry person. I can tell you that, under normal circumstances, this is because I have dinner with my parents and all the frustrations of a day are played out in a lovely dinnertime debate / argument. This has to be the most constructive way to manage your anger; people rarely come to blows and you come away feeling refreshed. I do, at least. The problem is, my family isn't up at school with me, and what about all those poor enraged people who aren't Italian? I have several solutions for all of you.

Now, why in God's name should I write this column? I mean, who cares about rage management anyway? For one thing, I absolutely hate almost being killed by irate drivers on my way back from class. There are all these angry people driving SUVs at exorbitant speeds aiming for pedestrians just trying to get to Franklin Dining Hall. Not only that, but they seem to follow me to the Mass Pike and cut me off continually on my way home. For the sake of those freshmen that have not yet fully developed their car dodging skills, and my parents who would hate for me to be killed on the journey back from Amherst, I will attempt to help the enraged masses with some learned advice.

PATRICK J. COLVARIO

For those of you who lack Italian heritage or are temporarily isolated from your family, here are a few tips. My defensive line coach in high school said nothing, except to throw on some pads and run into miscellaneous objects. Tough to do if you're a college student, but if you have access to pads, we have an abundance of trees here at UMass that would suffice. Boxing is always fun. I tried this one year in a lounge on my friend Jeff. I got too excited and injured him (Sorry Jeff). Weightlifting is a great way to relieve all that built up rage. I partake on a weekly basis with a bunch of friends, but often find it lacking in a certain way. You usually need a buddy, and they are not always forthcoming.

Salvation! So now you can imagine the situation. I am tearing down the Mass Pike at 85 miles per hour, wind in my hair and sunglasses on, AC/DC blaring on the radio, in my 1990 Dodge Minivan. What an experience! I arrived home 20 minutes early, feeling refreshed. Strangely enough, at dinner that night I felt no need to argue. This is indeed strange as my parents noticed that I was quiet, and I myself was perplexed. Could this experience really substitute for a good argument? Well not really, but it came close.

The best part of the whole thing is that you don't need to be of Italian descent to listen to AC/DC or own a minivan. It's great isn't it? Well, it doesn't compare with nunchuck wielding lesbians or the monkey, but it came damn near to being an epiphany.

Seriously though, guys and gals, don't drive with rage. We all have rage, and we all deal with it every day of our lives. Just find a way to curb your anger in some way. I believe that I have, even when AC/DC and that long "Highway to Hell" aren't available, I lift weights and listen to loud music. Be courteous to pedestrians, and especially the freshmen. At the very least slow down and give them a fighting chance.

Patrick J. Colvario is a UMass student

inx
Sexual Harassment in the office

You're pretty smart, huh college kid? Think you've got it all figured out?
Well, guess what? YOU DON'T.
Now just try and prove us wrong! Write for Ed/Op!

The amazing credit card Barbie

SETH KOENIG

The original Barbie doll taught young girls that they're useless unless impossibly proportioned, and it snowballed from there. When Barbie got Ken, it became evident to young girls that their self worth should be based not on how intelligent or accomplished they are, but rather what guy they're hanging out with.

Barbie then got a couple female friends and relatives created, like Skipper, who are also so unbelievably built that they would not be able to remain upright if actually alive, thus reiterating the social worthlessness of normally-shaped girls.

Then Barbie got a shiny pink car and roughly 40 billion different outfits, teaching young girls that it's never about who you are, but what you own. Barbie followed that by getting colorful hair extensions, the psychological damage of which far outweighs the fact that kids shouldn't be putting that crap in their hair at that young an age.

And now the icing on the cake: the All New Fantastic Super Ultra Mega Barbie Toy Credit Card!

If this newest development isn't appalling to you, you aren't reading it correctly. Let me try again: the All New Fantastic Super Ultra Mega Barbie Toy Credit Card.

A toy credit card, people.

I was sitting in the living room on one of the extremely few occasions wherein I flip through the channels, and on came the commercial. Over a hip Britney Spears-like song that seemed to be all about being a grown-up, there were wonderfully enticing – and nauseatingly pink – shots of little girls "shopping," and putting tons of expensive and frivolous knick-knacks on their toy credit card.

This was heartbreaking for me to see. It has taken years for me – a 21-year old who grew up pretending to be Joe Montana and was never allowed to even pretend to buy things unless I could afford it on my two dollars-a-week of allowance – to realize that there's more to life than striving to get a bigger collection of "stuff."

> "There is no toy bill that comes three weeks later, and certainly no toy collection agency that threatens to take your house. There are no toy VISA representatives that call your apartment on 15 minute intervals to make sure you have your check in the mail."

Even with a healthy diet of family camping trips and wrestling with my dog, Tom (who did not have a single advertisement posted on him, amazingly), I felt that the meaning of life was to get a high-paying job so that I could continue to buy more and bigger "things" until the day that I die.

I wanted things that I didn't need, and when I hit the age that I could get a credit card, it was extremely easy for me to dig myself into debt. I still do buy things I don't need – it's a tougher habit to break than smoking. At least cigarettes come with helpful Surgeon General Warnings that say encouraging things like: "This pack of cigarettes will kill you in a matter of seconds! How does it feel to know that your next of kin won't remember you?!?"

Have you ever seen an issue of Maxim magazine with a label that says: "You don't really need this, do you? The only reason you're buying this is because you don't want anybody to see you buying Playboy!"

And so if I, who have fiscally responsible parents as role models and have not spent my entire life being subliminally pummeled into thinking that I'm inferior by a constant barrage of things like Barbie dolls, have a hard time dealing with a credit card, how are seven-year old girls going to deal with it?

As a seven-year old, you get all the neat stuff you want by swiping a toy card – you don't need money, just the toy card. There is no toy bill that comes three weeks later, and certainly no toy collection agency that threatens to take your house. There are no toy VISA representatives that call your apartment on 15-minute intervals to make sure you have your check in the mail.

None of that, just the toy card. No risk. No responsibility. Just buy stuff.

And so Mattel has now engaged in quite possibly the most loathsome marketing gimmick since the advent of Joe Camel. The idea is to get them hooked at a young age. The idea is to get them to take charging things for granted – so imbedded in the popular psyche so that by the time the kids reach the age of 14, they have no idea what a dollar bill looks like.

For the record, the dollar bill is that green thing with George Washington's picture on it that your workplace pretends to give your bank every other week so that you have something in your account to use to write checks to your credit card company.

If it weren't for ATM's, nobody would remember cash.

Now, I'm about to make a big call to action here. I propose that nobody buy this Barbie Credit Card. I realize that my reading population is probably not the ones that will be buying this thing to begin with, but tell your parents and aunts and uncles and older siblings. Hurt Mattel in their pocketbooks and get them to pull it from the shelves.

Listen to me getting serious and everything…

"There is no toy bill that comes three weeks later, and certainly no toy collection agency that threatens to take your house. There are no toy VISA representatives that call your apartment on 15 minute intervals to make sure you have your check in the mail."

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

Sequel ruins Blair's creativity

BOOK OF SHADOWS: BLAIR WITCH 2 directed by Joe Berlinger with Jeffrey Donovan, Tristine Skyler playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

The Blair Witch Project was a great movie for a number of reasons, but most of all because it was scary. It was, to those in the audience able to enter the movie's reality, the sort of scary that lingers in the car ride home, and in your darkened room as you try to will yourself to sleep. It knew what so many other failures of horror movies overlooked, or never bothered to learn: the viewer's imagination is always scarier than anything you can show them on screen.

This revelation (which is really no revelation at all, simply a forgotten truth) goes completely ignored in Book of Shadows: Blair Witch 2, one of the most disappointing and inappropriate sequels in recent film history. There's little so upsetting as seeing a good thing plowed into the dirt, and that's just what happens here.

One of the main ingredients in the success of Blair Witch was the seamlessness of its world: the movie is presented as a collage of footage shot by the characters themselves, and appropriately, the audience doesn't see a single frame that isn't taken from a movie-world camera. If the characters weren't shooting it, the audience doesn't see it, and the sense of authenticity this creates is crucial in allowing the audience to suffer through the characters' fear and apprehension as if they too were out in those woods.

This approach, alas, is thrown out the window in Book of Shadows. Sure, there's lots of supposed character-shot camera footage, but the movie constantly switches back to the omnipresent of standard movie fair, sabotaging its authenticity and demonstrating that this is only another piece of fiction.

Another of the first movie's strengths was its setting: the forest was real, untouched by some director's idea of stylization or nightmarishness, and its bleakness (plainness, even) gave the viewer's imagination no distractions in fashioning its own private fears. The forest was everywhere, demonstrably inescapable, and the perfect backdrop to Blair Witch's subtle but pervasive creepiness.

This, too, Book of Shadows abandons. Yes, the characters spend a night in the woods, but it's shot with loud, bad music and an irritating visual style more befitting MTV than a horror movie. After this first night, the action moves into the abandoned factory where one of the characters lives, occasionally spilling over to the nearby town. The original movie's establishment of the forest as an environment where the supernatural is reality, as delineated from the reality left behind by the characters, is totally lost here. The sequel's attempts recreate the inescapability of the first are likewise hopelessly contrived.

The list continues. Book of Shadows falls into the modern slasher (read: modern bad movie) habit of assembling a group of colorful and volatile characters in the hope that their interactions will lend some emotional edge and comic relief. In this case, we have a formerly-institutionalized Blair Witch tour giver, a crusading wiccan, a stand-offish, sort-of psychic goth chic and a young couple working on a book and in disagreement over what to do about their new pregnancy. Every one of them is the sort of person you'd avoid at a party (well, okay, the wiccan is really cute) and listening to them for 90 minutes is no easy task.

The characters in the original Blair Witch worked so well because they weren't characters at all: they were stand-ins for the audience, and their personalities and ambitions never got in the way of the experience of wandering around in those woods. Here, however, we have nothing but a collection of atrociously-acted weirdos.

The plot of Book of Shadows has holes so big they defy clever metaphor, and some of the developments are just downright stupid.

This weekend, movie fans were not fooled in the least bit by any of its ridiculous ploys to exploit the first film's success. In one of the worst tank jobs in recent history, Book of Shadows opened to an appalling $13.1 million gross. Artisan Entertainment expected the film to bring in around $25 million. The Blair Witch Project, which only cost $30,000 to produce, opened in July of 1999 to an astounding $29 million, and eventually grossed over $140 million. Book of Shadows did not even break even with its production costs of $15 million.

Book of Shadows fell into second place this weekend behind the Robert De Niro film Meet the Parents, which racks up its fourth week at number one. Meet the Parents used this weekend's success to cross the $100 million mark.

Instead of spending eight bucks see to this movie, buy some wool socks and trail mix, and go run around in the woods for a couple of hours with your friends, trying to scare each other. Maybe you'll get scared, maybe you'll just get some healthy exercise, but you're bound to get more than Book of Shadows has to offer.

Ryan Benharris contributed to this article.

COURTESY ARTISAN ENTERTAINMENT

Blair Witch 2: Book of Shadows failed in every possible aspect this weekend. The atrocious film did not even earn enough cash to meet production costs of $15 million.

We test our system; you get free therapy.

- Participate in a completely free pilot test of online therapy
- Free, secure, confidential web-based therapy from one of our Massachusetts Licensed Psychotherapists.
- If you are a Massachusetts resident over 18 years old, whether or not you have tried traditional therapy before, you are welcome.
- To sign up, visit www.webtherapy.com

webtherapy.com

Last minute ideas for Halloween costumes

Shauna Billings

What? Halloween is tomorrow?

This one's for the dreamers, the procrastinators, the ones who never win best costume, and the ones who spilled beer all over their costumes this weekend when they were doing keg stands. Here is your ultimate guide to oh-so-stylish (hey! This IS a style column! And what's more fashionable than dressing up for Halloween?) last-minute Halloween costumes.

To all the smarties out there who feel they are just tread in snooty voice) too above dressing up in a silly costume for Halloween, why not show off your intellect with a costume that compliments your major?

For those of you who feel the need to change five times a day (you know who you are!), try wearing a costume that evolves as the night progresses. These two-part costumes can be great fun, as long as you time the costume change right, while everyone is still coherent enough to catch the nuances.

Arrive at the party wearing around your neck a large poster board with a large window drawn on it. Later on in the evening, flip the poster board over, to reveal a large door drawing, stating loudly, "I make a better door than a window."

Dress extremely strange, the more random the better. When people continuously ask you what you are, look confused as if the answer is obvious. Halfway into the evening, have a crowning ceremony by putting on a tiara and a banner that says "Miss-Understood 2000."

Scenario: You are driving to a party tomorrow night, when you suddenly realize that it's Halloween, and all that there is in the car is that day's Collegian. You are on the line: what do you do? What DO YOU DO? Make a tie, hat and other random articles of clothing from the paper, and be "Crazy Newspaper Man." (Compliments to Ben Joseph on his excellent portrayal of Crazy Newspaper Man last Halloween.)

Turn to Ed-Op, and carefully cut out the photograph of Brian Lohnes. Tape the photo to your forehead and be a Collegian columnist for the evening.

The Salvation Army is always a treasure trove for the ultimate costume, but pickings may now be slim for the more traditional costumes. So, all that's left is a nasty tie-dyed shirt, a hideous paisley thing and a sweat stained white dress? No problem. Slip into the tie-dyed shirt (even better if it's a Grateful Dead one) and chat on your cell phone all night, because you are a yuppie, and that's what you do.

Button up your paisley nightmare, and lean against the wall for the evening. Sorry, you can't do this costume if you want to dance, because you are wallpaper, and wallpaper leans. Pair up your white dress with a makeshift veil, your favorite sneakers and pin a number on your back, because you are the Runaway Bride.

The main problem with last minute costumes is that they are often the type that people have to ask, "What are you?" But use this question to your advantage with these sneaky costumes.

Wear an everyday outfit, but pull on a pair of red gloves. When asked what you are, throw your head back, sigh, act all guilty, and put forward your hands as you say "I guess I'm caught red handed." Clothe yourself in all white and as you walk say that you are the minimalist movement.

Apply large quantities of blush to your cheeks, leave your fly down, have food caught between your teeth, and have toilet paper stuck to your shoe. Respond to peoples inquiries by crying "I'm sooooo embarrassed!"

Dress all in black, and outline yourself all along your sides with masking tape. When people come up to ask what your costume is, drop to the floor with arms and legs splayed, and be the best darn chalk outline you can be.

And finally, since UMass is really pushing the recycling thing this year, why not take a cue from that, and use some materials found around the house, or in the trash? Put a lampshade on your head and tie some empty beer cans to yourself. Be yourself in three hours Drunk.

Stick some pathetic finger paintings and stick figure drawings to yourself and be a refrigerator.

Wear shiny clothes complimented with aluminum foil, and say, "I'm a laser, and I am set on stunning."

Wrap yourself in colored cellophane (Note - Please, please, please wrap the Saran wrap OVER clothing) and wiggle and squirm all night. This should be a popular costume, because there's always room for I-F-I-I-O.

Be a power outage by dressing all in black, and winding your burned out Christmas lights around yourself. Have your friends that live in Southwest riot around you and throw bottles.

Whatever you end up being this Halloween, whether it's a hippie or a power outage, do it with style… and know that a last minute costume can beat out those planned costumes for best costume prize, but only if you really believe that you ARE Jello.

Shauna Billings is a Collegian Columnist

■ Eagles

continued from page 8

the second period, but J.D. Forrest returned it to a two-goal cushion just over five minutes later. UMass center Mike Warner and BC winger Chuck Kobasew traded tallies a few minutes later to make it 6-4 before King recorded his second goal of the evening to close the gap to a single goal after 40 minutes. BC then closed out the visitors with three goals in the final period that allowed it to earn its conference opener.

"I don't think this is a big lump," King said. "They were a better team than we were tonight. I think that most nights they are a better team. They're ranked No. 2 in the country. If our power play had scored five goals, then we would have won 10-9."

Despite a lackluster effort overall, the Minutemen did receive a solid effort from the fourth line of King [two goals, two assists], Wallis [one goal, two assists] and Nizwantowski [one goal, two assists]. Together, the trio combined for 10 points in the losing cause.

"We played well in the first two periods," Nizwantowski said. "It didn't seem like we had enough gas in the third period. It seemed like every time we got within one, five minutes later they would get a power play and get it back."

The Minutemen will return to action on Friday night with a road game at UMass-Lowell. They will then face New Hampshire on Saturday night at the William D. Mullins Center.

■ soccer

continued from page 8

the Rams with 18 points.

La Salle has been one of surprise teams in the A-10 this season. The Explorers have a 12-4 record overall, 5-3 in the Atlantic 10, and can make the conference tournament with a strong weekend.

La Salle visits Totman Field on Sunday at 1 p.m. on Senior Day. Prior to the game, the Minutewomen will honor seniors Kara Green and Kara Ciocca for their contributions to the program.

Two of the reasons for the team's success have been the offensive duo of Amy Schneider and Krista Lee. Schneider is second in the conference with 31 points while Lee has chipped in 10 goals for the Philadelphia school this year. Goalkeeper Kaitlin Glass also had 11 wins and a 1.04 goals against average.

Junior forward Brooke Bartlett continues to lead the UMass offense on the season, as evidenced by her team-leading 18 points. Ciocca and Green have each contributed 15 points, while freshman Amy Mink has 13 points.

…O have a team of n…
…round the cloc…

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

U-MASS WOMEN'S CREW WANTS YOU! Come see why we want little people. 549-4038 ask for Sara

Looking for people to join new RSO! Latin American Club. For more info. call (413) 549-5177

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Honda Civic Si 2door, great condition. $5000 call Erica 253-6504

1995 Saturn SL2 AC, power, sunroof, ABS, traction. $5000 537-0517

89 Dodge Van Best offer 586-0879

1990 Honda Accord EX 140k, moonroof, CD, great condition. $3800 O/B/O 546-2568

COMPUTERS

New Computer Cases with floppy drives. $30 accessories/parts available. Online store closing 256-5412

EMPLOYMENT

Attention! Work form home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

EMPLOYMENT

Hippodrome auditioning dancers to perform coreographed routines on a weekly basis at brandnew entertainment company in Springfield. 413-246-2275 www.hdrome.com

Easthampton Savings Bank Full-time teller position in our Hadley Office. Requires cash handling and customer service experience, plus high school diploma or equivalent. Contact Paula York, Human Resources Manager, (413) 527-4111, or email pyork@bankesb.com AA/EOE

Voice Talent Needed Internet/Radio start-up seeks fun + energetic person to be our VOICE!!! Radio/acting experience + interesting accent "particularly Jamican, W Indian" a plus. Call 617-598-1030 ext. 1230 for more information.

Paid Business Internship Soph, Jr, + Sr. Preffered. For info and application Go to http://www.jablon.com

EMPLOYMENT

Human Services — Residential support needed to work with adults with developmental disabilities. Permanent hours (full and part-time hours) and relief. Hours include evenings, weekends, and/or overnights. Required: HS diploma and driver's license. Starting pay is $7.47p/h (for relief), $8.76 (for permanent). Locations in Belchertown and South Hadley. Call (413) 323-9174 (ask for Marjorie). AA/EOE

Survive Spring Break 2001! Hottest destinations/hotels! Campus sales representatives and student organizations wanted! Visit intercampus.com or call 1-800-327-6013

Housekeeper Part-Time Car essential. 549-1578

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

EMPLOYMENT

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today; 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

MISCELLANEOUS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FRD RENT

Need Spring Housing? Studious female seeks the same to fill 2nd bedroom in Colonial Vge. Apt. Call 256-1232 for more info

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1-2 females to share 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Montreal College Party Weekends Nov. 24 + Dec. 30. From $119. Includes round trip motorcoach. 3 days 2 nights Hotel Downtown full Breakfast + Dinner. Departs Boston, Springfield, + Hartford. Call 1-617-567-0062 Global Tours

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring-break.com

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

Volunteer in Central America/Africa! Work in community development projects - lead health campaigns, organize teaching seminars, develop micro-enterprises. Institute for International Cooperation and Development. Call/e-mail for a free brochure. (413) 458-9828, iicd@berkshire.net

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash tours.com

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreak direct.com

TRAVEL

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

What Are You Waiting For??

The Semester is Running OUT!

Advertise Today!!

Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Ch
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WGCH & HSCN
14 International
15 UMass Academic TV
16 WB/New Haven
17 Sundance
18 The Learning Channel
19 UVC-TV19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
21 Govt to Covet
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN Headline News
24 CNN
25 CNN Fn
26 CNN SI
27 TBS
28 BET
29 College TV Network
30 Univision
31 Comedy Central
32 Cartoon Network
33 TV Land
34 C-Span
35 ZDTV (Tentative)
36 Bloomberg Financial Network
37 History Channel
38 HSCN Programming

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 30, 2000

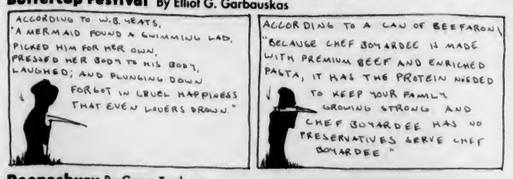
		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Antiques Roadshow (N)		American Experience		Great Campaign of 1960 (N) (R)		Independent Lens (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	3	News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King		Yes, Dear (N)		Raymond	Becker (N) (R)	Family Law "Telling Les" (N) (R)	News (N)	Late Show (N)
WBZ	4	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King		Yes, Dear (N)		Raymond	Becker (N) (R)	Family Law "Telling Les" (N) (R)	News (N)	Late Show (N)
WCVB	5	5	News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Debate	20/20 Downtown (N)		NFL Football: Tennessee Titans at Washington Redskins. (In Stereo Live) (N)
WLVI	6		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless (N)	Friends (N)	Nanny (N)	7th Heaven "Blind" (In Stereo)		Roswell "The End of the World"		News (N)		Friends (N)	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Daddio (N) (R)	Tucker (N) (R)	Deadline "Red Herring" (N) (R)		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		6	7th Heaven (In Stereo) (R)		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Moesha (N) (R)	Parkers (N) (R)	Hughleys (N)	Girlfriends (N)	News		Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT		30	News	NBC News	Job Fair	Hollywood	Daddio (N) (R)	Tucker (N) (R)	Deadline "Red Herring" (N) (R)		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) (N)		News	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N)	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons (R)	Frasier (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Friends (N)	Boston Public "Chapter Two"		Ally McBeal "Girls Night Out" (N)		News		Friends (N)	Frasier (N)
WWLP	9	22	News (N)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Daddio (N) (R)	Tucker (N) (R)	Deadline "Red Herring" (N) (R)		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	4	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Antiques Roadshow (N)		American Experience		Great Campaign of 1960 (N) (R)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N)
WGGB	11	26	News (N)	ABC News	Seinfeld (N)	Frasier (N)	20/20 Downtown (N)		NFL Football: Tennessee Titans at Washington Redskins. (In Stereo Live) (N)
WSBK	12		Judge Judy (N)	Judge Judy (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Frasier (N)	Moesha (N) (R)	Parkers (N) (R)	Hughleys (N)	Girlfriends (N)	Fraser (N)	Med Abt. You	Spin City (N)	Spin City (N)
WTBS	22		Rosanne (N)	Rosanne (N)	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "Crocodile Dundee" (1986, Comedy) Paul Hogan,		American Experience		Great Campaign of 1960 (N) (R)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N)
A&E	13		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Golden Years" (R)		Biography "Cheryl Ladd" (N) (R)		City Confidential (N)		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order (R)
CNN	20	22	Worldview (N)	Moneyline Newshour (N)			World Today (R)		Larry King Live (R)		Newsstand (N)		Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	23	26	Saturday Night Live (R)		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	★★★ "The Princess Bride" (1987, Fantasy) Cary Elwes,		21st Century Airliner		Strangers	Com.-Presents	Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money
DISC	21		Wild Discovery Extr. Dallas		Wild Discovery	Cats	Ultimate Guide "Mummies" (N)		Figure Skating: Halloween on Ice		Prosecutors-Justice		Justice Files
ESPN	31		Sportscenter (R)		2-Minute Drill	Monday Night Countdown (N)							Cheerleading	ESPNews
LIFE	29		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Park Overall"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"When Andrew Came Home" (2000, Drama) Park Overall. (R)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33		Direct Effect	Cribs	Making-Video	MTV Video Music Awards (In Stereo)						Making-Video	Truth (N)	Jackass
NICK	25		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! (R)	Rugrats (R)	Rocket Powr	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	35		Sliders "The Last of Eden" (R)		Babylon 5 "Revelations" (R)		Outer Limits "Bank Slate" (R)		Outer Limits "The Other Side"		Outer Limits "Flipper" (R)		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	34	28	Killer Bees (R)		Paramedics "Desert Jackpot"		Cods Blue: Rite of Passage (N)		Escape Stories		Escape Stories: On the Run		Cods Blue: Rite of Passage
TNT	30		ER "Obstruction of Justice" (R)		Pretender "Stolen" (In Stereo)		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo) (R)				Bull (R)		Pretender "Bomb Squad" (R)
USA	32		Walker, Texas Ranger (R)				JAG "Nobody's Child" (R)		Nash Bridges "The Tourist" (R)		★★ "Snow White: A Tale of Terror" (1997) Sigourney Weaver		Farmclub.com (In Stereo) (R)
HBO	55		★★ "One Crazy Summer" (1986, Comedy) John Cusack. PG (R)				★★★½ "Die Hard" (1988, Suspense) Bruce Willis. (In Stereo) (R)				★★★ "Die Hard With a Vengeance" (1995, Drama) Bruce Willis. (R)
MAX	45		★ "Wild Wild West" (1999, Western) Will Smith. PG-13 (R)				★★★ "Demolition Man" (1993, Comedy) Sylvester Stallone. (R)				★★½ "Judgment Day" (1999, Action) Ice-T. (R)		★★½ "D Life 2000"
SHOW	65		★★ "Camp Nowhere" (1994, Comedy) Jonathan Jackson. PG (R)				★½ "Stigmata" (1999, Horror) Patricia Arquette. (In Stereo) (R)				Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)		★★½ "RoboCop 2" (1990) (R)

Dibbert By Scott Adams

I NEED A NEW JOB WITHIN THE COMPANY BEFORE THE WINDOW SHUTS.
CATBERT IS ALREADY UP TO "O." NEXT WEEK HE GETS AN "S."
WHAT'S HE SPELLING?
HE WOULDN'T SAY. BUT IT STARTS WITH AN "L."

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas



ACCORDING TO W.B. YEATS, "A MERMAID FOUND A SWIMMING LAD, PICKED HIM FOR HER OWN, PRESSED HER BODY TO HIS BODY, LAUGHED; AND PLUNGING DOWN FORGOT IN CRUEL HAPPINESS THAT EVEN LOVERS BROWN."
ACCORDING TO A CAN OF BEEFARON, "BECAUSE CHEF BOYARDEE IS MADE WITH PREMIUM BEEF AND ENRICHED PASTA, IT HAS THE PROTEIN NEEDED TO KEEP YOUR FAMILY STRONG AND CHEF BOYARDEE HAS NO PRESERVATIVES SERVE CHEF BOYARDEE"

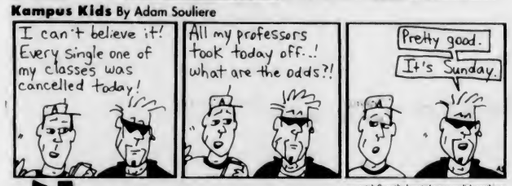
Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

NOW NATION-AL ROLLING NUMBERS IN, SIR!
TELL TELL, HONEY!
OF, I'D'S RESPONDENTS, EXACTLY 0%, PLAN TO VOTE FOR YOU.
WHAT?
HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE? I THOUGHT WE HIT OUT AN AGGRESSIVE NEW CAMPAIGN AD!
WE DID!
THE VOTERS ARE MORONS! MORONS!
I MIT EVERY-WHO SHOULD IN TOWN!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCKY HAS HIS COSTUME ON!
HOWDY
HA HA! NICE! WHAT MADE YOU WANT TO BE A COWBOY?
WELL, IT WAS EITHER THIS OR A FIREMAN, AND THEN I REMEMBERED THAT COWBOYS GET TO PUNCH DOGGIES
OK...NOT SO NICE
DO COWBOYS REALLY DO THAT, ROB? DO THEY REALLY?

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere



I can't believe it! Every single one of my classes was cancelled today!
All my professors took today off...! what are the odds?!
Pretty good.
It's Sunday.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

THIS IS WEIRD BEING SO CLOSE TO AN EX-GIRLFRIEND ON A BUS. IT'S OH, MAN! IS THAT HER HAND GENTLY TOUCHING MY THIGH? WHAT DOES THAT MEAN?
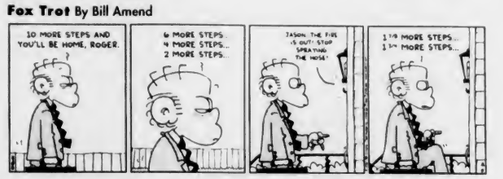
WHAT IF I JUST LET GO OF THIS HANDLE AND LET MY ARM DROP DOWN TO ?
SHE'S HOLDING MY HAND! HOW STRANGE! DOES THIS MEAN SHE STILL ?
OH WAIT. THIS IS REALLY STRANGE

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

SCOTT FINALLY DECIDES TO FOLLOW HIS DREAMS AND BECOME A SUPER HERO.
HE MANAGES TO BEAT UP SOME VILLAINS AND RESCUE SOME DAMSELS IN DISTRESS...
THE JOB DOESN'T TURN OUT TO HAVE AS MANY PERKS AS HE HAD HOPED FOR, THOUGH.
HOW HARD COULD IT REALLY BE?
ALL IN ALL, THINGS SEEM TO BE GOING JUST SWIMMINGLY
SCOTT'S A NICE GUY, BUT "DAMSELS" DIG "BAD BOYS."

Fox Trot By Bill Amend



10 MORE STEPS AND YOU'LL BE HOME, ROGER.
6 MORE STEPS. 4 MORE STEPS. 2 MORE STEPS.
JASON, THE FOX IS OUT! STOP SPEAKING THE WORDS!
1'D MORE STEPS... 1'M MORE STEPS...

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Overdo it today and you'll be in no condition to tackle a challenge that come your way tomorrow – and you must certainly be ready. In other words, lay off the sauce for a change, or you'll stumble late into Bio turnor row reeking of Poland Spring and this time, your professor simply won't stand for it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec. 21) – You're right on track and right on schedule in this time – but you can still benefit from a momentary inspiration late in the day. So quit studying so much and go get yourself some drugs! Actually, drugs are bad, n'kay?

CAPRICORN – (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Look for bargains today, and you'll find that you can have what you want at half the expense – provided you keep careful track of your cash flow. Or you could just steal them, which makes them significantly less expensive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take care you don't lose sight of practical matters today. Financial considerations must not take second place to anything aesthetic now. Take it from us; they really will shut off your electric and phone service. And it's getting COLD.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – This is a good day to give compliments freely – and to offer practical assistance wherever you can. Cooperation can yield surprising results. But remember: blowing sunshine up someone's you-know-what will only cause people to lose respect for you in the long run.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Today you must be willing to let bygones be bygones – or someone close to you is likely to remind you of your own offenses and shortcomings. He may be sleeping with every girl who looks at him twice, but you're not too squeaky-clean yourself, sister.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're likely to be recognized for your efforts today, though the final judgment may go against you, and success may remain elusive. Expect a sentence of no less than 90 days in the joint, but you will be befriended there by bikers and the whole thing will be rather enjoyable.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may be trying to play it by ear today, but someone close to you is gaming on you simply because he or she had laid out a careful plan. Find out who, and threaten to send pictures of them masturbating to the Collegian. That'll fix 'em.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You've not claimed all that is yours at this time. See if you can't add to your coffers by requesting – and receiving – what you're entitled to. If you can't get it, kidnap your autistic brother and head for Las Vegas. Hey, it worked for Charlie Babbit

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – A surprise is in store today that may send you in an entirely new personal direction. A few major choices lie ahead of you now. Or is it "lay" ahead of you? I can never remember. One sounds like you're not telling the truth, but the other sounds so dirty. Ah, screw it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Concentrate on organization at all times today – even when you feel the urge to wing it. Try to maintain self-discipline. "Master, how is it that you see so much? Grasshopper, how is it that you do not?" Man who catch fly with chopsticks accomplish anything.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – It's time to pay the piper – but when all is said and done, you will have gotten the better end of the deal! Your turn fast approaches. Unfortunately, the piper in question is Kowdy Roddy Piper, who actually competed in Wrestlemania I and went on to star in the God-awful scifi flick They Live. Does he really deserve to be paid for anything?

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 46 LOW: 36	HIGH: 49 LOW: 32	HIGH: 55 LOW: 34

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

"I'm down to, like, only one Marlboro a day, man."

© 2000

www.monkey-box.net

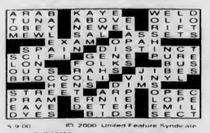
Quote of the Day

"I can't really remember the names of the clubs that we went to."

-Shaquille O'Neal on whether he had visited the Parthenon during his visit to Greece.

ACROSS
1 Piece of insulation
5 Jeweler's measure
10 Panorama
14 ___ replacing
15 Desert plant
16 Aroma
17 Polish river
18 Made weary
19 Singer Horne
20 Hawaii export
21 Finicky
22 Horned animal
24 Fuel
25 Kind of concert
29 Salad dressing ingredient
33 Bright flower
34 "Time — My Side"
36 First night
37 Consumed
38 Time waste
39 Carnival locale
40 Butter bean
42 Sense
43 Painter of ballerinas
45 Source of protein
47 Serious
49 Bobby of hockey
50 Toss a shrew
51 Building materials
54 Reversed
60 Jai ___
61 Judge's need
62 Put on weight
63 Fixes the table
64 By oneself
65 Still-active volcano
66 Luxurious
67 Camp homes
68 Ooze

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



DOWN
1 Coalition
2 Verdi opera
3 Adolescent
4 Soup bowls
5 Japanese drama
6 All excited
7 Affirm
8 Affirm
9 Baseball great Williams
10 Encyclopedia units
11 Fateful date
12 Ages and ages
13 Actress Fey
21 Kill the dragon
23 Fixes the table
24 Female red deer
25 October stones
26 Place for a barbecue
27 Adversary
28 Mature
29 Sheer fabric
30 Ravine
31 Wanted poster word
32 Perch
35 The gal
38 From a ___
41 Gelling of 43 Quick on the —
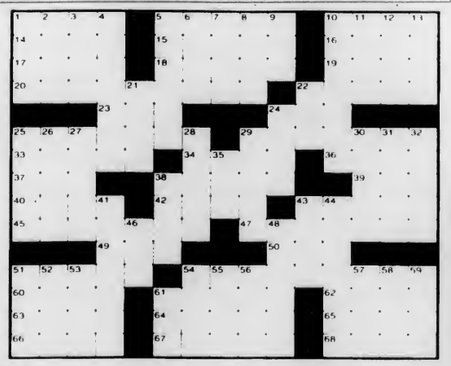
44 Hires
46 Uris cousins
48 Leg joints
51 Stinging insect
52 Mock butler
53 Equine fodder
54 Bundle of hay
55 Electronics company
56 Bronze coin
57 Spend
58 Have supper
59 Ginger cookie
61 B-movie pistol



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Minuteman Croissant Sandwich

Quarter lb. Burger

California Vegetable Chili (vegan)

Vegetable Croissant Sandwich

Sloppy Joes

Vegetable Sloppy Joes (vegan)

Dinner

Cajun Fish

Cavatelli Supreme

Savory Stuffed Peppers (vegan)

Bow Tie Pasta & Vegetable Casserole (vegetarian)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Adam White
Photo Technician — Dan Santella
Copy Editor — Matt Despres
Production Supervisor — Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff — Soren Nash, Margie Smelkinson

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Monday, October 30, 2000 | 8

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMASS BLOWN AWAY

Wind-swept defeat drops football to 5-3

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. – It was a must-win situation for both the Massachusetts and New Hampshire football teams.

The two squads travelled different path into the game, with the Maroon and Wildcats each of their last three games and the Wildcats losing of their last three. Something had to give in the clash of Atlantic 10 foes.

UNH	24
UMass	16

Unfortunately for the Maroon and White, what was given was a chance to control its own destiny. UMass (5-3, 3-2 A-10) dropped a hard-fought, 24-16, decision to UNH (5-3, 3-3 A-10) at Cowell Stadium. The game was the final A-10 home game for 14 UNH seniors and it would end up being their best against the Minutemen in their four years in.

The last time that the Blue and White defeated a Minuteman squad was in 1997, when it came out victorious in a 28-20 decision. But so much has changed from that year, as UMass, 2nd ranked in 1997, has captured a National Championship (1998) and an NCAA quarterfinal birth last year.

The Wildcats took control of the game from the opening kick-off, when they marched 80 yards in 10 plays for the game's first score. All 80 yards gained were on the ground, with the bulk of the load being carried by sophomore running back Stephen Lewis. Lewis, the winner of the Bill Knight Trophy as the game's MVP, capped the drive on a six-yard run to paydirt.

UNH, the A-10's worst rushing team, abused the UMass defense with a series of misdirections and, as a result, captured a 7-0 lead on its best single-drive rushing effort of the year. The lead would be challenged only once in the remainder of the game.

"I've been challenging the [offensive] line," UNH Head Coach Sean McDonnell said. "Especially this week."

And the offensive line responded, creating huge holes all day for Wildcat running backs to run through.

"Just credit New Hampshire," UMass Head Coach Mark Whipple said. "They were better than we were today."

UMass looked to be awestruck by the running game of UNH. "They were better than we were doing something different," linebacker and New Hampshire native Kole Ayi said. Ayi played in his final game in his home state in front of his former coaches at Nashua High School.

On the Minutemen's first possession, Marcel Shipp carried the ball on the first two plays from scrimmage and picked up 13 yards, but the drive was stalled when Kelly Seibert tried to take advantage of a strong breeze at his back and sailed a pass over the head of Jeff Howard and into the arms of free safety Czar Wiles. The interception was the first on the season for Seibert and the first of two in the game.

On the Maroon and White's next possession, UMass took advantage of a 16-yard punt by Shawn MacLean and turned it into a record-setting drive. On the drive, Shipp was involved in seven of the eight plays with the final play of the drive being the record setter. Shipp, on the eighth play, scored the most historic three-yard run in school history.

The score pushed Shipp past Rene Ingolia for the all-time record in touchdowns with 35 and points with 336. The score would be the only bright spot of the day as the Minutemen would squander various opportunities to score as well as chances to play a field position game.

"The wind was a factor," Whipple said.

The wind did not allow for any sort of Maroon and White passing attack, and without one, UMass was forced to run the ball.

Running the ball looked to be an easy task against UNH with the Dynamic Duo of Shipp and Kevin Quinlan. The Wildcats came into the game surrendering 174.6 yards per game. The Minutemen ran the ball with success, but the lack of a passing attack left them unable to surprise the Blue and White with the run.

Early in the second quarter, Lewis and the Wildcat offense would take a 14-7 lead, a lead that they would not relinquish for the remainder of the contest.

On a drive reminiscent of their first, Lewis once again carried the workload and scored on a 24-yard scamper around left end. The sophomore ran untouched along the left sideline for the touchdown.

"Their offense did a good job," Whipple said. "Lewis played well."

Saying that Lewis played well is an understatement, as he carried the ball 35 times for 243 yards and also caught three passes for 28 yards and a touchdown en route to his MVP performance.

Doug White would cut into the Wildcat lead on the ensuing UMass possession, but the 14-10 score would be as close as the Minutemen would get to the hosts.

Heading into the second half, the Maroon and White offense needed a spark, and, just as he had done in the previous week, Whipple replaced Seibert with Richard Lucero to try to spark the stagnant offensive flow.

Unlike the AC game, however, Lucero was unable to muster a formidable attack and UMass was held to 10 points with the game signal caller at the helm.

"We never took advantage of it [the ball and the wind in the second half]," Whipple said.

With the wind at their back in the third quarter, the Minutemen and the Wildcats would trade field goals. Not taking advantage of the wind would spell the beginning of the end for the Maroon and White, as the Blue and White would pad its lead in the final frame.

UNH's final touchdown of the afternoon came on a six-yard shovel pass from quarterback Ryan Day to Lewis.

UMass would make one last grasp at the Wildcats when Lucero found the sure-handed Eric Bross on a five-yard strike with 3:37 to go in the final frame. Jason Cherry's extra point attempt was blocked and the result was an eight-point Minuteman deficit.

The usually strong UMass defense gave up 436 yards on the ground and when it needed to most, the UNH offense picked up key first downs to keep drives alive. No single possession proved more important than its final one, which held off the Minutemen and sealed up the win.

"We basically didn't show up today," Shipp said.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kole Ayi's season-high 17 tackles weren't enough as the Minutemen dropped a close conference game to rival UNH. Ayi became the school's all-time leader in solo tackles (299) in the loss, surpassing Khari Samuel's mark of 298.

Women's soccer one win away from A-10's

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

It all comes down to this for the Massachusetts women's soccer team – one win this weekend over either Fordham or La Salle assures the Minutewomen of a berth in next weekend's Atlantic 10 tournament in Cincinnati.

With two games to go in the regular season, UMass currently sits all alone in third place, one point ahead of the fourth place Explorers and three ahead of Rhode Island. However, if the Minutewomen falter and drop both games, there is a chance that their season could be over after Sunday.

But don't expect that to happen. UMass has been playing some of its best soccer in the final month of the season, even with several key players hampered with injuries. In order to allow some recuperation to set in, UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy gave his team two days off following Sunday's tie with Xavier.

As a result, the Minutewomen should be refocused and reenergized when they take the pitch for today's contest with Fordham. Game time is 3 p.m. at Totman Field.

"This weekend is huge for us," Rudy said. "What I've been telling the players every game is that this game is the most important one of the season. This time, against Fordham, it is once again."

Needless to say, UMass [9-6-1, 5-2-1 in the A-10] would like to have some momentum heading into the A-10 tournament. In the final weekend of the regular season last year, the Minutewomen stumbled through a 1-0 win over Duquesne, and then fell to St. Bonaventure in the regular season finale. The next time out, Xavier crushed UMass, 5-1, in the first round of the conference tourney to end its season.

"I would like us to end last year better than we did last year," Rudy said. "Last year, we were very casual and that loss to St. Bonaventure set us up for the loss in the A-10's. We don't want that to happen again."

"If our players don't remember it, then they should," added Rudy. "It's a humbling memory. Personally, I don't intend to go out that way again, but I'm only the coach. You won't see me kicking at ball out there at any point during the weekend. They're the ones who have to go out and play."

Fordham enters the weekend with a 6-9-2 record, 2-5-1 in the A-10. Since the inception of the conference, the Minutewomen have never lost to the Rams, but that doesn't mean that they can take the New York school lightly. In fact, URI broke a 12-game losing streak against UMass back in mid-September to earn its first win ever against the Bay State school.

"This time, we're playing a Fordham team that has given people crazy fits at the end of the year," Rudy said. "A year ago, they beat Dayton at the end of the year. My good friend, [head coach] Ness Selmani has great tactical plans and knows the game well. His teams always seem to play us tough no matter what the records are."

Sophomore forward Kirstin Gellatly, a transfer from the University of Pittsburgh, is the leading scorer for

Turn to SOCCER page 5

Minutemen shoot down Warriors

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

In Hockey East every game counts – even the season opener.

In what is thought to be the toughest conference in college hockey, a single point can determine whether or not a team makes the post-season. UMass came into the game on the heels of a dramatic 4-4 tie to No. 12 Colgate and rode the high to a 3-0 win over visiting Merrimack [2-2-1, 0-1 HE].

UMass	3
Merrimack	0

The Minutemen came out of the gates sluggish, but midway through the first period Thomas Pock beat Warrior goaltender Tom Welby for the first goal of the game and, more importantly, the first time that the Maroon and White has scored first in a game this season.

The goal was the result of a great play along the right boards by Scott Horvath to keep the puck in the Merrimack zone. Horvath showed excellent vision after he kept the puck in and fed a pass to R.J. Gates at the right of the goal. Gates then slipped a pass to the front of the net where Pock buried his third goal of the season.

"That's the difference," UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon said.

"If they get a goal early or a couple goals early then that changes the complexion of the game, and the game taken on a different shape.

"We get the goal early in the game and that gives you a leg up," UMass kept the pressure on the Warriors and 1:36 later added to their lead when Jeff Turner beat Welby under his right arm with a vicious wrist shot from the high slot to give the Minutemen a two-goal lead.

Turner's goal came off of a neutral zone turnover by Merrimack. Martin Miljko picked off a clearing pass and quickly hit a streaking

Tim Turner, the younger Turner, then found the senior captain all alone in the Warrior zone. The Saginaw, MI native made no mistake and seized the opportunity for his first goal of the season.

Markus Helanen, as he did all night, kept the Merrimack attack at bay with a series of great saves late in the period with the most notable coming on a shot by Marco Rosa from the slot. The senior allowed a rebound but did not let it get too far from his stick as a mad scramble for the puck ensued. The Vantaa, Finland native, in the midst of the scramble, covered the puck and preserved the two-goal advantage.

"Markus [Helanen] was extremely solid in net," Cahoon said. "Helanen was in control of his game all night," Merrimack Head Coach Chris Serino said. "He was handling rebounds, he was making the saves."

The All-Hockey East candidate recorded 31 saves in the win. The shutout was his first in Hockey East action and the third of his career.

The Minutemen carried the relentless pressure into the locker room and came out for the second period and carried the play. The Maroon and White did not give up any quality scoring chances and killed off three Merrimack power plays.

On the penalty kill UMass kept the Warriors wide and did not allow them to gain position down low and give them an opportunity to bang home a rebound.

"Give [UMass] credit, they won the small battles," Serino said. "I thought they played real hard down low. That was the difference in the game."

In the third period the Minutemen took advantage of their lone power play opportunity when Horvath netted his second power play of the season.

The Maroon and White did an outstanding job working the puck around the perimeter and Jeff Turner took a slap shot from the point that Welby kicked away. The rebound went right to the stick of Brad Nizwantowski who poked a pass to Horvath in front of the net.

Horvath then slid a shot under the diving Welby for UMass' third goal of the game.

"It was a good play," Serino said. [Horvath] fought down low hard and beat one of guys down low and scored the goal."

Horvath's goal would be the final of the contest and vaulted the Minutemen to their first Hockey East opening win since the 1995-1996 season. That season the Maroon and White also defeated Merrimack in its opener.

"We've been working for the start of the Hockey East season throughout the preseason," Cahoon said. "It's a good start."

"You can't afford to let games slip by you," Serino said. "This league is so tight. A point here and a point there, down the stretch could mean the difference in being in the playoff and not in the playoffs."

Eagles win slugfest with UMass

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL – The difference in last night's Hockey East matchup between the Massachusetts and Boston College pucksters was plain and simple – special teams.

In a game which was marred by 35 penalties and featured a combined 21 power plays for the two clubs, the Eagles were able to claim a 9-5 decision over the Minutemen thanks largely in part to their ability to score with the man advantage. Whenever UMass would victimize itself with costly penalties, the BC power play unit stirred up the electricity inside Silvio O. Conte Forum. The home team scored on 5-of-12 power plays against the Minutemen, while also tacking on a short-handed goal in the contest.

BC	9
UMass	5

Meanwhile, the visitors were suffering through a power outage with the man advantage, failing to convert on nine opportunities on the night. As a result, a combination of those two factors spelled doom for UMass, which lost its first conference game of the season.

"It was kind of Halloween type hockey," BC hockey coach Jerry York said. "It was spooky watching us play. We were just out of sync."

The contest was reminiscent of UMass' season opener against Wisconsin on Oct. 6, a 9-6 victory for the Badgers. On a night where the Minutemen were able to find the back of the net with relative ease, breakdowns in the defensive zone came back to haunt the Maroon and White time and time again.

"We took too many penalties and we put ourselves in difficult situations," UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon said. "There just didn't seem to be any flow to the game. We had a lot of trouble in a lot of areas. We were very, very careless in our own end."

Added UMass winger Brad Nizwantowski, who scored a goal and added two assists: "It seems like even if you play them perfect on the penalty kill they find an opening every time."

However, through all of the miscues, UMass [1-3-1, 1-1 in Hockey East] only found itself trailing by a goal heading into the third period at 6-5. But from there, the Eagles were able to put the game away in the final 20 minutes with three goals.

"The game kind of got away from us as far as it being 6-5 after two periods," York said. "We were talking about settling this thing down and getting back to defensive hockey. Wins are tough in our league and we had a battle tonight. UMass never gave up."

Nizwantowski opened the scoring only 2:32 into the affair, but Bobby Allen, Krys Kolanos and Ben Eaves countered with three straight Eagles goals to pad the BC lead to 3-1 late in the first period. Darcy King netted his first tally of the year for UMass only 22 seconds after Eaves' goal, but Jeff Guiliano padded the advantage back to two scores with a power play marker at the 17:48 mark of the opening frame.

From there, UMass continued to battle back, but it could never get the elusive tying goal.

Kris Wallis cut the lead to 4-3 only 6:38 into

Turn to EAGLES, page 5

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

UMass goalie Markus Helanen rejects a Merrimack shot while No. 6, defensemen Joey Culgin, looks on approvingly.

Hootie and the Blowfish played what could quite possibly be their last show at the Avalon. Check out the review in the Arts and Living section.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Anke Bruemmer and the UMass field hockey team captured the No. 1 seed in the upcoming Atlantic 10 Tournament with a win over LaSalle on Sunday.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 39 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, October 31, 2000

Howell addresses UMass

COURTESY WWW.CARLAHOWELL.ORG

Libertarian US Senate candidate Carla Howell delivered her platform to the UMass community yesterday.

By Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

In a speech delivered to students at the University of Massachusetts Student Union yesterday, Carla Howell, Libertarian candidate for US Senate, delivered a short, to-the-point message: end the drug war, repeal all gun laws and remember, small government is beautiful.

Howell is running on the Libertarian ticket against incumbent Senator Edward M Kennedy and spoke at UMass during a Get-Out-the-Vote rally sponsored by the UMass Libertarian Party and the Cannabis Reform Coalition.

Kennedy has held his Senate seat for 38 years and according to a Boston Globe/WBZ-TV poll released yesterday, he holds 68-percent approval rating over Howell's 8-percent.

This might be why Kennedy is sitting out the race for his seventh full term in office. His Republican challenger, Jack E. Robinson, 16 being shunned by his party and holds only 16-percent rating in the Globe's poll.

After months of avoiding invitations from both challengers to debate, Kennedy recently announced for the first time in his 38-year term that he would not debate publicly before the election.

Howell wasted no time while speaking at UMass to take Kennedy to task for what she said are the evils of big government, blaming Kennedy for supporting the war on drugs. Howell's platform calls for radical reductions in the federal government, abolishment of income tax and repeal of every regulation that infringes upon civil liberties.

"Senator Kennedy is a right-wing hawk for the war on drugs," Howell said.

She said Kennedy has consistently voted to support the war on drugs and supports maintaining the war on drugs.

"For 38 years, U.S. Senator Ted Kennedy has been a Prime Architect in the War on Drugs," Howell said in a recent press release. "Kennedy's Pro-Drug War: Kennedy's Mandatory Minimum Laws, Asset Forfeiture Laws, expanded powers and funding for the DEA have lead to the doubling of America's murder rate."

Howell said that the murder rate has doubled from five murders per 100,000 to 10 murders per 100,000 since the war on drugs was started in the 1960s. Howell said this trend reflects the murder rate during prohibition, which also doubled to nearly 10 murders per 100,000 as the result of government restrictions on alcohol.

Howell said the war on drugs created government bodies like the Drug Enforcement Agency and Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agency, whose only purpose is to wage war on the American people.

"In times of war the government grows and suspends civil liberties," Howell said. "For years the government has been spreading propaganda and lies about marijuana and marijuana users."

Howell said 18 million Americans use marijuana, making the war on drugs a war against 18 million Americans.

"This no-win war on drugs and marijuana is another Vietnam," said Howell.

Michael Froimowitz, a junior at UMass, spoke briefly at the rally about his race for the State Senate as a Libertarian candidate against Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst. Froimowitz said he is running as a Libertarian because he believes that civil liberties should come before government regulation.

"[I'm running as Libertarian] because it is the only party that stands for civil liberties on every issue all the time," Froimowitz said.

The war on drugs is the center of Froimowitz's campaign and a platform that he says appeals to students at UMass.

"The war on drugs benefits criminals and endangers citizens by creating a black market," Froimowitz said.

Froimowitz said the government does not have the right to control what individuals decide to do to their bodies, even if they harm themselves.

Angela Panaccione, UMass freshman in environmental science and vice president of the Cannabis Reform Coalition, spoke at the rally in support of ballot question 8. Question 8 is a proposition to use money seized in drug-related crimes for drug treatment, instead of drug enforcement and prosecution.

Panaccione said thousands of non-violent drug offenders are imprisoned instead of treated for substance abuse. She said Question 8 would create a trust fund with the assets seized from drug crimes to treat drug offenders.

Currently these assets go to law enforcement and prosecutors.

Turn to VICE CHANCELLOR page 2

Vice Chancellor speaks at open forum yesterday

MAUREEN MAGEE/COLLEGIAN

W. Richard Adrian, professor of computer science at UMass, speaks to students and faculty at a meeting to find a new Vice Chancellor of research.

By Suzanne Furst
Collegian Staff

The first school insider to be a candidate in the University of Massachusetts' continuing search for a new Vice Chancellor of Research, W. Richards Adrian, spoke at an open meeting held yesterday at the Campus Center.

Rick Adrian is currently a professor of Computer Science at UMass and Director of the Centers for Research on Intelligent Complex Computing Systems. He also returned to the National Science Foundation in Washington D.C. last January on a two-year IPA assignment as Division Director for Experimental and Integrative Activities in the Computer and Information Sciences and Engineering Directorate.

Adrian chaired the Department of Computer Science at UMass for eight years, beginning in 1986. Two years later he founded Axiom, a program which ceases to exist. An undergraduate student questioned Adrian about the Axiom program and basically why it no longer exists.

W. Richards Adrian explained that Axiom was founded at a time when the University was struggling with a couple of things. The program was licensing software and growing to be very successful. It spun-off several companies and several staff members. When Adrian was ready to leave the program, which was similar to one that the University of North Carolina later tried to develop, nobody else wanted to take it on.

Adrian believes that it should have been shut down sooner, but adds that it still exists on paper and can be brought back to life. The discussion on the subject ended by Adrian saying, "I feel you create entities because they further your mission."

Another audience member asked for a comment on the tension between

Turn to VICE CHANCELLOR page 2

Skybox show turns into Superdrag

By Adam Martignetti and Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Friday night's Superdrag show, which was supposed to take place at the Skybox, was prematurely broken up by officers from the University of Massachusetts Police Department. However, the reason for the show being shut down remains unclear.

According to Tom Sadlowski, Skybox Executive Director, three police officers showed up before Superdrag took the stage and dismissed the crowd. The officers allegedly explained to Sadlowski that UMass police supervision was necessary for the show's security and since Skybox had not provided any, the show would have to be shut down.

"We've never had to have a police officer up here before, but now we do," said Sadlowski, expressing his frustration with the situation.

The approximately 75 people who showed up to hear Superdrag's set had their money refunded and were sent home.

Although the UMPD was unavailable for comment at press time, Sadlowski speculated that the shutdown was possibly related to the Skybox bar, and specifically, possible underage drinking at Skybox events. No specific charges have been made against Skybox nor has the UMPD previously cited anyone for underage drinking at its performances.

Sadlowski explained that the University, specifically Campus Activities, had given him only two days notice regarding the need for police enforcement of security at the event. However, since the UMPD is part of a labor union, he said that it would have taken two weeks for any work requests to be processed.

"Campus Activities never wanted this [Skybox] to happen. Now, they're exercising their authority," said Sadlowski in citing a couple of recent incidents during which Campus Activities has interfered with Skybox events.

Earlier this semester, Skybox's "Party by the Pond" was forced indoors, on only two days notice, due to the University's unwillingness to hold it by the campus pond. Sadlowski also explained that the University inexplicably changed the capacity of the Skybox for one show from 480, where a building inspector had originally set it at 210.

The advertised bands all expressed disappointment over the situation. Larry Webman, the booking agent for Little Big Man Records, who promotes the headliner said, "Superdrag was very disappointed that they couldn't play."

Webman went on to say that requirements for security at the band's past shows may contradict what Sadlowski believed was needed, "There has to be a cop at every event, and there was no cop at this one."

He said that Sadlowski had told him that it was almost impossible to get a cop at the event because, "They just implemented the rule two weeks ago, and it usually takes around three weeks to get a cop there."

Chris Baird, the bassist for the first opening act Seventeen said Sadlowski told him, "He always gets a cop up there for every show, but for some reason no policeman showed up."

Seventeen was one of two bands that were able to play before the show was brought to a halt. "We played our set, and it was a really good turnout," Baird said. "It's pretty obvious that you should have a cop there, but there wasn't a policeman on duty."

Baird tried to convince the bands to move the show elsewhere. "We tried to get Superdrag and set up a show at a local fraternity, but they just weren't having it, so the band's just split up afterward. I really hope that this doesn't have any reflection on [Superdrag's] relationship with the University."

Both promoters did not entirely give up hope on the venue. Webman said, "I'll go back to Skybox if they can guarantee that the shows are going to happen."

Baird also added, "[Tom's] a really good guy, and we'll definitely be back. Hopefully this won't happen again though."

COURTESY JOSHUA KESSLER

Superdrag was supposed to play the Skybox but an unfortunate incident kept them from taking the stage.

Should dog racing be banned in Bay State? Voters to make call

By Adam White and Ana Reyes
Collegian Staff

Question No. 3 of the eight questions on this year's state ballot centers on whether dog racing should be outlawed in Massachusetts. A yes vote would prohibit dog races where betting or wagering occurs, while a no vote would make no changes in the laws governing dog racing. This issue has drawn the attention of two very different sides. The pro-racing consortium consists primarily of track owners and employees and various dog racing organizations, while the con side is comprised of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (MSPCA), the Humane Society and an animal rights group entitled Grey2K.

State Ballot Question Three

Those in favor of Question 3 point to cruelty and extermination of greyhounds as the key motivational forces behind their efforts. They accuse race personnel of neglect of these animals (they are often caged for up to 22 hours a day) and overbreeding of greyhounds to produce "winning" dogs (every year, thousands more greyhounds than can be placed are bred).

"I think it's sickening and revolting what we do to these dogs," said State Representative John Locke.

The Humane Society's official stance on the topic is that, "the industry exists solely for the entertainment and profit of people – often at the expense of the animals' welfare." It cited that a greyhound allowed to live out its life as a companion would likely reach 13 years of age, while a dog's racing career is usually over by age four. At this time, most dogs are "disposed of by using the least expensive methods" including gunshots, bludgeoning, abandonment and starvation.

Apparently greyhounds are not the only animals suffering in the dog racing industry. The Humane Society reports that as many as 100,000 domestic rabbits and wild jackrabbits are killed each year during training exercises.

Turn to DOGS, page 2

Window broken at Stonewall center last week may be treated as a hate crime

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

A window in the Stonewall Center was damaged in what may end up being treated as a hate crime on curfs Saturday morning, October 21.

According to John Luippold, chief of the University of Massachusetts Police Department, the incident is still under investigation by the police department and has not been ruled out as a hate crime. He explained that the possibility existed due to the fact that the center did serve as a haven for homosexual students and that the play Corpus Christi, a production that was controversial on campus due to its homosexual overtones, was performed at Bowker Auditorium that night.

"Clearly it is a vandalism, we are concerned that there were based indicators," Luippold said. "We have not ruled out the possibility of this being a hate crime."

Felice Yeskel, director at the Stonewall Center explained that they were treating the incident as a hate crime and dealing with it accordingly. She explained that an incident of this type had occurred previously in the past few years and was backed by homophobic sentiments.

"It certainly seemed like a hate crime to me," Yeskel said.

She explained that the incident occurred at about two o'clock on Saturday morning when a graduate student was working on a paper in the office.

"One of my graduate students was here late when she heard yelling and screaming coming from outside," Yeskel explained.

Although the student tried to tune out the noise what she did hear was homophobic in nature. According to Yeskel, the student then saw a figure kick the window in.

Assistant Director for the Center Stephen Pereira explained that the student still left in the center ran around the corner and called the police and then contacted him following the incident.

"I spoke to her at about two o'clock and she was very shook up," he said. "All of the glass showered down on her and she didn't know what would happen next; she was very scared."

Pereira also addressed the issue of increased homophobic sentiment in the form of graffiti on campus in some dormitories in Southwest. He explained that he felt that many students, especially freshmen in the living area, were getting used to the idea of dealing with and accepting homosexuals.

"I definitely think that it is all connected and that it is all homophobia," Pereira said.

In response to the large outpouring of calls that the center has received from students expressing concern about the issue they will hold a meeting on Wednesday, November 5 in the basement of Mary Lyon to address the incident. Students will be invited to come up with ideas regarding eliminating the recent rash of homophobic sentiment on campus.

"When an event like this happens it effects the whole community," Yeskel explained, addressing the need for student input.

■ dogs

continued from page 1

Yet another reason why the sport should be eliminated, according to opponents, is to "put it out of its misery." State revenues from dog racing have dropped almost 70 percent in the last decade, and jobs have also steadily waned.

"No one likes to talk about people losing their jobs," said Kara Holmquist of the MSPCA. "But [the industry] has been on the decline for many years."

Dog racing is currently illegal in 34 states.

Proponents of dog racing point not only to the sport's 4,000-year history as evidence of its credibility, but also to the thousands of jobs and over $1U million in revenue that the industry provides through the operation of two Massachusetts facilities.

Raynham Greyhound Park in Raynham, MA held 507 individual races, or performances, last year alone. The total purses from those performances was reportedly $6,368,777. Wonderland Greyhound Park, located in Revere, held 358 performances last year totaling $3,967,150 in purse revenue.

Representatives from these areas are concerned that closing the two tracks would have a crippling effect on local economies and jobs that far outweighs any animal rights questions regarding dog racing. Senator Mark Pacheco (Taunton) worries not only about RGP's 600 employees and $412,955 in special payments to the town, but also the subsequent impact on local restaurants and businesses that are supported by the track's operation.

"If this referendum were to pass... real people and lives and literally thousands of families in Southeastern Massachusetts would be impacted significantly," Pacheco said. "That's public safety, that's education, that's cuts at the local level."

Representative David Flynn added that the issue may have gender implications as well, urging women to oppose the question in support of the single and divorced mothers for whom the Taunton track provides flexible hours that correspond with the school day. He went on to caution that such a question may lead to further measures by animal rights groups.

"You people with dog on leashes, you're next," said Flynn. "Horse racing is next. Rodeos are next."

Despite the neglect and disposition horrors outlined by advocacy groups that support Question 3, officials from the tracks contend that state-monitored animal statistics tell a markedly different story.

According to the state racing commission's annual greyhound disposition report, only 52 dogs from the Wonderland and Raynham tracks were euthanized in 1998. Of the remaining 2,504 dogs at both tracks, 2,018 left the state, 50 were returned to their owners, 161 went to breeders, 53 were sent to farms and 168 were adopted as house pets.

The tracks' adoption programs have reportedly resulted in hundreds of satisfied greyhound owners who whole-heartedly support both the programs and the industry in general.

"You hear stories of how abused race dogs are, but from my experience, these dogs are treated with the utmost care and love," said Caroline Koehler, who adopted a dog named 'Clover.' "More people should know how good a pet they truly make. We will always own a greyhound."

The American Greyhound Council (AGC) insists that strict guidelines are enforced throughout the industry in regards to the care and disposition of greyhounds, and that anyone found in violation of the standards is banned from the industry for life.

The issue of gambling on college campuses has been widely debated nationwide. Officials from the University of Massachusetts, however, claim that the existence of the two state tracks has not had a negative impact on UMass thus far.

Jeff O'Malley, Compliance Director for the University's Athletic Department, reported that he has yet to encounter a student-athlete with a gambling problem resulting from dog racing. He did, however, admit that the morality of the underlying issue may outweigh the legality of this single facet.

"Gambling on dog racing isn't a problem here, because it isn't prohibited by NCAA rules," O'Malley said. "But I think gambling in general on college campuses is a problem across the entire country."

Extra safety planned for Halloween

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

As Halloween night approaches, the University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) has plans to ensure the safety of local students.

Jim Lyons, a spokesman for UMPD said, "We have some extra staffing and it is our policy not to talk about how much or where."

Lyons said that UMPD is not necessarily looking for anything out of the ordinary. "We're looking for the same things we do on every other night," he explained. "There are a lot of people out and about, so we want to make sure that people are as safe as usual."

Lyons could not recall any specific instances in the past that would cause him to be weary about the holiday. He also noted that a comparison of tonight's event to ordinary weeknights or weekends was not very practical. He said, "Those kinds of comparisons are never easy to make. They're often misleading. So much depends on the time of day or day of the week. It may depend on the weather or location as well."

Halloween is traditionally a time for heightened crime. With extra people on the streets, and more children outside at darker hours, there leaves much more opportunity for unruly behavior.

Christopher Rue, a senior Political Science major says that in his second year at UMass, he doesn't think his personal well-being is too much of a concern tonight. "This is only my second year at Umass, but I grew up in Amherst," he says. "It's been a pretty safe place."

Rue, like more than twenty-five thousand UMass students lives on campus. The large amounts of people in one place could certainly be an acceptable reason for concern, but Lyons assures students that worrying is not necessary. Lyons said, "Our response time is already fast he said, and with extra staff I'd assume response to any incident would be even quicker."

Rene Gonzalez, a senior Legal Studies major, who resides in Southwest also believes that excessive anxiety is not necessary, but he understands why people could become concerned. "People mess around in bathrooms, and everybody's thinking about doing something stupid." He said the most dangerous people to look for are "masked men."

Gonzalez said that he was not worried about his own personal safety, but he definitely had apprehension for others. "I'm not concerned for me, but I definitely think that people should go out in groups, but keep your eyes open," he warns.

Though Lyons explains, "It's really hard to answer hypothetical questions," he seems very confident that Halloween will come and go without unexpected issues.

MAUREEN MAJKE/COLLEGIAN

Life Depends On It

Holly Stabilite, a pre-med major donates blood at the Campus Center yesterday.

■ Vice Chancellor

continued from page 1

CVIPs and the right to own versus those who want to publish in the realm of research. Adrion explained that this conflict arises because there is only one office for all campuses.

According to Adrion, the State University of New York (SUNY) had this problem, but then segregated its office to all campuses.

"[Whether there should be one main office or one for each campus] should be the Vice Chancellor of Research's decision, not someone in Worcester's... not that there's anything wrong with someone in Worcester," Adrion said.

Ethics and compliance in research was a subject once again raised at the open meeting, as it had been raised at the prior two meetings as well. The newest candidate explained that there are required courses on the topic at many schools, a practice with which Adrion agrees.

He went on to mention that the Vice Chancellor of Research is responsible for the formal parts of misconduct, but according to him, UMass is fine in terms of having well-documented policies. Some grants now come with insistence on these components.

Adrion's current research is on the analysis and verification of concurrent, real-time computing systems and issues related to the interplay between non-deterministic constructs and resource-bounded scheduling. He directs the Multimedia Asynchronous Networked Instructional Courseware Project along with Jim Kurose. Furthermore, he is a Fellow of the AAAS and ACM, and in 1996 received the ACM SIGSOFT Distinguished Service Award.

When the graduate of Cornell University and the University of Texas at Austin was asked why he applied for the position he joked stating, "momentary insanity."

Adrion returned to the question at hand and stated his acknowledgement that opportunities exist on campus. According to Adrion, there is a strong faculty and the school is moving forward.

The final open meeting, featuring Larry Lemanski, is scheduled for next Monday, November 6. Lemanski, the Associate Vice President for Research at Texas A&M University, will speak at 4:30 p.m. in room 803 of the Campus Center.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Illnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Tremkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Peppas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com

Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

"No matter what a man does, he is not fully sane or human unless there is a spirit of freedom in him."
Charles Horton Cooley

UNPLANNED PREGNANCY?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
LOCAL CALL: 584-0441
A FULL CIRCLE adoption
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help.
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day.
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families.
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten Years Adoption Experience
39 Main Street Northampton, MA 01060 adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

PROMOTERS WANTED FOR NIGHT CLUB IN NORTHAMPTON $ $ $ $ CLUB METRO
Call 413 • 582 • 9898

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
A great place to get contact lenses
FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient
Special Offer: $25 off
I invite you to use the Eye Care Services".

Frederick H. Bloom O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

Enterprise Rent-A-Car would like to congratulate JILL TATA
for being awarded
MANAGEMENT INTERN OF THE YEAR!
Thank you Jill for your hard work and great attitude this Summer. We hope you have a fantastic year!
Your friends at Enterprise

TEACH
Thinking about a career in teaching?
Teacher Certification Information Session
Wednesday, November 1 at 5:30
Room 1033 Grad Tower
University of Massachusetts
Come for a general information session on how to become certified to teach K-12 math or science.
Refreshments provided
Questions: Contact the STEMTEC Student Services office at (413) 545-0626 or wtyler@k12s.phast.UMass.edu
STEMTEC

Russia takes back power Eurasian Union formed

By Simon Perks
Collegian Correspondent

The Eurasian Economic Community, signed into existence by the Presidents of Russia, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Tajikistan and Kyrgyzstan in Astana on October 10 marks a resurgence of Russian power in the post-soviet world and highlights a significant shift in Vladimir Putin's priorities from the European to the Eurasian sphere.

According to President Nursultan Nazarbayev of Kazakhstan and Aleksandr Lukashenko, his Belarusian counterpart, the new organization will be modeled roughly on the European Union.

Described by Mikhail Kasyanov, the Russian Prime Minister, as a "union of friends," the EEC will promote integration processes between its member states, working towards the establishment of common customs, fiscal, monetary and employment policies.

President Putin was also keen to emphasize the "social and humanitarian aspects" of the community, which will bring "positive results for the people" by consolidating peace and cooperation between its members.

Putin's political opponents are, however, highly critical of the new EEC. They point to the fragility of the largely moribund and under-achieving Customs Union upon which it is based, and to the economic weakness of its members.

Supposedly the powerhouses of the new group, the Russian and Kazakh economies, are far from crisis-free. Tajikistan is the poorest ex-soviet state, with an average monthly income of less than US$ 10.

The situation in Kyrgyzstan is only slightly less bleak, and the Belarussian economy is crippled by annual inflation of 250%, with the standard of living falling rapidly.

The newly formed community has also been criticized for detracting from the role of the Commonwealth of Independent States. Some commentators fear that the creation of the EEC may lead some CIS states, such as the GUUAM group (Georgia, Ukraine, Uzbekistan, Azerbaijan and Moldova), to adopt an even more independent line.

Indeed, on Oct. 12, Uzbek President Karimov and President Kuchma of the Ukraine declared the EEC "a time bomb" that could destroy the CIS.

Vladimir Putin announced on October 23 that the development of relations with its post-soviet neighbours is Russia's "priority number one". Yet it is becoming increasingly clear that the declining role of the CIS frees Russia's hand to expand its influence over the other ex-soviet republics by manipulating their weaknesses and playing them off against each other.

Putin's desire to maintain Russian pre-eminence in the region is reflected in the decision-making structure of the EEC, where Russia has 40% of votes, Belarus and Kazakhstan have 20% each, and Tajikistan and Kyrgyzstan 10%. With decisions requiring a two-thirds majority, Russia effectively has a veto over all EEC activities.

The resurgence of Russian power in the region is further manifested by the proposed regional security arrangement between the five EEC states and Armenia, which would promote both political and military integration. Also, Putin's meeting with his Ukrainian counterpart in Sochi last week, during which, according to the Russian President, they reached "understanding on a broad range of issues" expands Russian influence.

President Putin has also indicated that security matters are behind the new alliance. Speaking to students at Astana's Eurasia University, he said that terrorism, drug and arms smuggling and "aggressive nationalism" were the biggest threats to Central Asia.

On developments in Afghanistan, Putin expressed Russia's concern, "We know that the Taliban break their rules," he said. "They continue to support terrorists and do nothing to prevent the spread of drugs."

Some CIS leaders are, however, critical of what they see of Russian scare mongering. Uzbek President Karimov has decried the way he claims Russia is pumping up the threat of Islamic fundamentalism, forcing other countries to turn to Moscow for help.

The formation of the EEC also marks Putin's desire to reach agreement over the distribution of the Caspian oil and gas reserves. With oil prices skyrocketing, this issue has become a top priority for the Moscow regime, which has to import 14 million tons of crude oil a year from Kazakhstan and is the biggest buyer of Turkmen gas. Until now, however, the Russian formula, which calls for dividing the seabed but not the water or its surface into national sectors, had been universally rejected.

Yet with the signing of the EEC agreements, Putin has won Kazakhstan's endorsement of the Russian formula. Azerbaijan Foreign Minister Vilayat Guliev likewise recently told journalists in Moscow that Baku's position on the Caspian is now "in harmony" with Russia. With Iranian President Khatami indicating that Tehran is also close to agreement with Moscow, this could leave Turkmenistan, the last Caspian state to hold out against the Russian proposals, in an untenable position.

There is now every indication that, with his usual combination of skilful manipulation and delicately-applied pressure, Vladimir Putin will get his own way once again.

Violence finally subsides in East Timor

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Thirteen months ago East Timor voted for independence. After the ballots were counted and it was official that the residents of East Timor wanted to secede from the government of Jakarta, riots broke out and a string of violence that would last a year was begun.

A year later, gunshots are still heard in the tiny country, but the atmosphere has changed dramatically. Today, thousands of East Timorese refugees are finding their way out of West Timor internment camps and crossing the river back into their own territory.

When the initial violence began, as many as 300,000 East Timorese fled the country to neighboring West Timor. Many of the people were immediately captured by militias and were forced to endure killings, beatings and rapes while trapped in camps.

Currently, 120,000 East Timorese are still trapped in militia camps in West Timor. The United Nations has been cracking down on militia activity within East Timor and confiscating weapons from militia members disguised as refugees.

The militias that have played a major part in the destruction and heartache in East Timor are actually radical factions supported by the Jakartan government. These factions have been making hit and run attacks along the boarder of the two countries throughout the last several months. However, lately the militias have been making more infiltrations deeper into East Timor.

As the year has progressed, so have the efforts within East Timor to establish a working democracy. The first democratic congress was implemented in the summer with 450 delegates. Their goal is to have self-rule by 2001.

Until then, the tiny ball of Indonesia will continue to be run by the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET). The United Nations has set up a temporary government committed to keeping the peace and sovereignty of East Timor.

United Nations troops have been stationed at six crossing stations along the banks of the river separating East and West Timor. At one out of these six crossing points the Indonesian troops are cooperating with the United Nations soldiers, who are mainly Thai and Malaysian.

The International Organization for Migration has been sending trucks to help refugees move back to their old neighborhoods. The United Nations is sending the Security Council to East Timor on November 11 to check on the status of the refugees, the militias, the violence and the government.

Most of the foreign aid has been removed from East Timor. Nearly 400 international aids have left the country after three United Nations officials were slaughtered on September sixth. A day after the three UN representatives were killed, twenty more East Timorese were killed in Betun, a city thirty miles from the capital.

US relations with Indonesia have been deteriorating for the last several months and have reached a state of emergency. US officials even fear an attack from the small island. However, the United States continues to support UN involvement in East Timor.

Peruvian rebels take fight to government

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

A group of rebel Peruvian soldiers has fled to a military garrison high in the Andes Mountains near Lake Titicaca after briefly taking over the southern mine town of Toquepala. The mine was captured without the use of violence, but the rebels originally took five hostages with them, including high-ranking officer General Oscar Bardales.

However, all the hostages have now been released, with the exception of Bardales.

An army helicopter squad has been sent into the wilderness to pursue the rebels, who are led by Lt. Col. Ollanto Moises Humala Tasso, but thus far it has been unsuccessful at tracking down Tasso and his men. The rebels were last seen passing through Chilliua, a village of only 20 people that is located almost 10,000 feet above sea level, and at press time remained at large.

This rebellion has only been the latest in a series of developments faced by President Alberto Fujimori, who has seen his third term rocked by scandal after scandal. Just the fact that Fujimori remains in office is controversial, due to allegations of fraud in the recent elections. The president has even stated that he will leave his office four years earlier than the end of his term as a result of the controversy stirred up at the polls. He has promised that new elections will be held before July, 2001.

Last September, the biggest scandal of his term broke into the public's eye, when former Fujimori spymaster, Vladimiro Montesinos, was caught on videotape bribing an opposing politician.

Montesinos has also been accused of such other things as laundering money from drug traffickers, as well as death squad killings and the use of torture.

Now, a full-scale manhunt is on for Montesinos, who recently travelled back into Peru after briefly trying to find asylum in Panama. It appears that he has severely challenged Fujimori's grip on the armed forces, and prompted the President to replace the high officers in the army, navy and air force who once supported Montesinos.

However, a few hours after restructuring the armed forces, Tallo, who was once a part of the 3rd regional command in the army, began his revolt by taking over Toquepala. According to CNN, Tallo has stated, "I will lay down my arms when the chain of command is legitimate and there is a president who has been truly elected by the people to whom I would swear subordination and valor."

Tallo has also called for the capture of Montesinos and for Fujimori to step down as President.

However, despite the fact that the rebels recently declared a mutiny toward the current government, Fujimori has stated that the rebellion is not threat to the nation as a whole, and claims that only 49 soldiers and three civilians support Tallo.

Now, as Tallo calls for more soldiers to join him, the Peruvian military has yet to take serious action against the rebels, and is standing by as Fujimori continues to slowly lose his grip on the military and the country as a whole.

*IMMAGINATION BECOMES REALITY TODAY WHEN*******
*WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MAKES ITS DEBUT. **********

THE ASIAN FINE ARTS AND MUSIC PROGRAM SERIES PRESENTS
Festival of Lights
Angkor Dance Troupe and Nataraj Dancers
Saturday, November 4 Bowker Auditorium at 8pm
A stunning evening of performance showcasing classical Indian and Cambodian dance styles
Visit the Fine Arts Center Box Office 1-413-545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMASS

Multiband
26th Annual MUSICAL EXTRAVAGANZA in the Fine Arts Center
Presented by: Department of DANCE Music & UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST 545-2227
Jazz, Percussion, Wind Music & Modern Dance
FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 3RD
8 PM · FINE ARTS CENTER CONCERT HALL
Featuring:
Jazz, Wind & Percussion Ensembles, Dancers, & Minuteman Marching Band
Tickets:
• $18 General Public • $12 UMass & Other College Students, elders & children under 18
Order Tickets early. Last year's performance was sold out!!
Tickets available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office
(413) 545-2511
Multiband Pops is Co-sponsored by:
Daily Hampshire Advocate · Alumni Association · WHMP 1400AM · 92 WWLP

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
PRE – REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2001
THE WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST
will be offered on:
THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2
@ 7 P.M.
IN BARTLETT 61
(This is the last scheduled test until summer 2001 orientation.)
This test may be taken only once.
Students should pre-register for ENGLWP before pre-registration ends.
Students do not need to register for the test.

NEED HELP FINDING A MAJOR?
Come to the MAJORS FAIR!
Wednesday, November 1, 2000
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
Sponsored by Pre-Major Advising Services, The Commonwealth College/Honors Program, & The Campus Career Network

CHECK IT OUT!!!!
We're giving away 5,000,000 shares of our start-up stock!
(What the hell. It's only money.)
Visit our website for the scoop.
SonicSave.com

ELLEN KONISBERG and VALERIE ELLIS
Thank you for your hard work this summer! You did a great job as a Management Intern. Have a great year-we miss you already!
Your friends at
Enterprise rent-a-car

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

www.dailycollegian.com
launching imagination

Today marks an historic occurrence for the Collegian, the University and the World.

Finally, after months of toil and trouble, www.dailycollegian.com gets launched into cyberspace. For the first time since April, content from the University's premiere news source will be available online. Now, instead of our typical readership in the 30,000-person range, millions of individuals worldwide will have the ability to explore UMass via this exciting and innovative page.

So why such a long wait? And how will this new site be such an improvement over the old one?

First of all, a warning (or reassurance) to those who have used our website in the past: this is totally different than anything you have witnessed from us before. Our previous site was nothing more than an online photocopy of the print version of the Collegian, offering nothing new or original and rarely expanding on our conventional coverage.

This site is, by contrast, an online news experience. It offers not only more in-depth looks at the stories and photos we use to capture life at UMass, but also a chance for our readers (or viewers, in this case) to respond immediately with ideas and criticism so that we can get a genuine feel for where our fellow students stand on the issues that more often than not center on them in the first place.

In other words, it's a chance for you to not only read the Collegian, but interact with it as well. And in a society that is becoming more and more driven by the Internet and interactivity, this is a step that this newspaper absolutely has to take.

In terms of why this site took so long to launch, we believe that one look at www.dailycollegian.com will answer that question itself. The site is comprised of a completely customized interface featuring every major department of the paper, as well as feedback and advertising sections and a few other features. A built-in email feature offers students a chance to set up their own web-based mailboxes that are not only free and easy to use, but provide a wealth of additional services not available through the standard campus email. The chat feature will enable viewers to correspond, both with staff members and the newsmakers themselves, about key issues on campus. Other features will also follow.

But the bottom line is the content itself. The online format allows us to expand our coverage like never before, without the space constraints of the print addition. That means more extensive statistics, more in-depth quotes and more revealing photography to enhance the scope and power of the Collegian's reporting. That means longer features and commentary pieces to provide a broader view on multi-dimensional topics and issues. That means a bigger and better Collegian.

But it also means a renewed need for the student community to get more involved with the Collegian. More space to work with also equates more research to do and more stories to write. It means more photos to take. So if you've ever felt the urge to join the team at New England's largest college daily, there has never been a better time than now.

Even if you don't want to get that involved, take the time to check out our site and tell us what you think. Show us that all our efforts have not been for nothing. Show us that our feedback section is there for a reason. Tell us what we're doing right, what we're doing wrong and where we should go from here.

After all, this is still your newspaper. Hence, this is your website.

Support our athletics

Dear Chancellor Scott:

What is the problem with athletic support on this campus? No, I'm not talking about jock straps; I'm talking about the large amount of apathy towards UMass athletics on this campus. It ranges from the student body, to the community, right up to Chancellor Scott. Personally, I think that the Chancellor is the main reason for the demise on athletics on this campus. What do you have against them?

In order to increase attendance at UMass athletic events, there must be an atmosphere, a buzz that there is something going on at the game that is bigger than the game itself. One thing that would help create an atmosphere, especially at football games, is tailgating. Chancellor Scott, I feel that it is high time you evaluate the policy of prohibiting alcohol at football tailgates. Most of the students on campus have not even had the opportunity to experience a true tailgate thanks to your policy. It is an absolute travesty that the best UMass football tailgate I have ever been to was at the University of Delaware.

Speaking of football, I know it is tough for the Athletic Department to think about moving up to Division I status at its current budget level. Our Chancellor has talked more about ways to spend money toward his highly acrap-a-dated Commonwealth College, instead of ways to improve the Athletic Department. Look at what nationally recognized athletics can do to academics. Do you think more people with higher GPAs and SAT scores have been applying to UMass over the past five years because the campus is pretty? Though the fence in front of the Chapel has (finally) been taken down, and the concrete slabs half the campus lives in (Southwest) have gotten new carpets in the hallways, I don't think it's the scenery.

MICHAEL COYNE

Until recently, the only time I had ever seen the chapel without a fence around it was on my school ID. As far as the campus community, first of all let me be the first to say that this campus spends way too much time on crap. Be it protesting the surviving of an ant farm, attending a flippin' flea market at the center of Amherst or whining about Parking Services. I can safely say that UMass fans are the WORST I have ever seen. Everyone will jump on the bandwagon if the basketball team gets off to a good start, and boo the Hell out of the squad if it starts slow. What kind of fan support is that?

Attention UMass students: support your team all season long! Let me bring another word to your attention UMass; it's called rivalry. We have two major rivals, and this constitutes a rivalry. That means that no matter what the sport is, the crowd should create a hostile environment for the opposition. The major rivals of this school, since it's clearly evident people don't know, are Temple and UConn.

Does anyone else cringe at the thought of the Huskies beating a UMass athletic team? (Congrats to the women's volleyball team for being the latest to kill the Hapless Huskies.) UMass next takes on UConn in men's hockey on Nov. 16. Tickets are FREE to students; call 545-0810 for more info.

The point is, the state of Your State U is a shoddy one at best. There is no way, with its current level of fan support, administrative support and student support that this will ever be a world-class university. We're a school with backward priorities. Academics should be a priority, but athletics are the way to create a truly strong and healthy student body. What are you going to remember more, studying or watching a movie on a Friday night, or getting up at 9:00 a.m. on a Saturday morning, having a few beers and cheering on the football team with your floor? I think it's great that some RAs got their floors together for Midnight Madness and "socialized" before the event. Putting the Zoo back in Zoo Mass is undeniably the way for this school to get back on the right track, and it starts with athletics.

Michael Coyne is a UMass student.

Stop knocking Southwest

Another instance where a few people in Southwest act out, and another chance for someone in another living area to try and tear Southwest apart.

Why?

What is it that compels these students to launch into fits of rage at every chance they get? Why is it that every bad apple, every slip up and each bad decision gives residents who don't live in Southwest an excuse to complain like little children in the back seat of their parents' car on a road trip to Niagara Falls?

Maybe there are not enough of them, and they feel left out of everything that goes on at this campus. Perhaps they have gone insane, living like nomads in their rooms, and having no contact with the outside world.

Maybe since they feel they comprise their own little town, they need to replicate the pettiness and rumor spreading that many associate with the suburban areas of this country.

Maybe they are not ready to live on their own just yet. Maybe they need their mothers to bring them to school and tell them to make friends on their own. They need fathers to take them to play baseball with the other kids down the other end of the street. They need their parents to tell them that when the streetlights come on, it's ok to stay out a little bit longer.

First of all, when you are going to say something that has the intent of angering other students on this campus at least have the respect and courage to sign your name to it. Secondly, I would like to point out that most residents in Southwest are not involved in the incidents that have been described. In fact, I slept through the whole thing like a baby (pun intended), and the next morning I had to be told what happened the night before by some of my friends who were up at the time (which isn't a crime, you know).

"Why is it that every bad apple, every slip up, and each bad decision gives residents who don't live in Southwest an excuse to complain like little children in the back seat of their parents' car on a road trip to Niagara Falls?"

ROB MARSHALL

I think its pretty funny that these people actually thinks that because Southwest has a few people in it who chose not to follow the rules, and chose to treat the University like it is their playground, the whole living area should suffer.

I wonder if they realize that one half of the on-campus students live in Southwest, and that with any group of this size there are bound to be some who don't conform, and some who actually try to make things difficult for others.

Now, I'm sure you would be hard pressed to get this person to admit that in their holy Orchard Hill there are any students who break the rules, or any students who do anything wrong at all. But, I know that even way up on Orchard Hill with their noses pointed even higher up in the sky away from the rest of this campus, which they so obviously detest, there are those who would do the exact same thing given the opportunity.

I wonder if these people have even set foot in Southwest. I would assume not, since they do not have even the slightest notion of what things are like here. Not everyone lives in a tower in Southwest. I know it is the only thing you can see from way up there on Orchard Hill, looking out at the open farmland, boy, how they ruin the view)! And those who do live in towers probably have the best rooms on all of campus. What could possibly be better than having a spacious Z-room? And, in the year and a half I've lived in Southwest, I've never heard ANYONE complain that they felt like they were being "packed in like rats."

Also, do you really think that cameras are the answer to the crime problem (which is obviously plaguing Southwest, but not a problem for the rest of the campus)? I certainly don't. I think that there are other measures that could be taken first.

For example, a few more call boxes would be helpful. Although I guess they wouldn't be much use if the poor soul who wrote the article bashing Southwest was somehow trapped here on a Friday night and the power went out. I do, however, know many of the women in Southwest would feel safer if a few more of these were installed. Another thing would be maybe to install a few more lights in the parking lots, and brighten up that haven of crime.

This, however, is not my point. My point is that lots of people live in Southwest and love it. I include myself in the group. For those of you unfortunate enough to have been stuck in another residential area because Southwest was your first choice, but it was full, I'm sorry, and I hope at least you got into Central. For those of you who chose to live your life holed up in your room, avoiding contact with any other students on this campus except when you are forced to go to classes and share the same room space with the rest of us Neanderthals, why don't you do what comes natural, and keep your mouth shut.

Rob Marshall is a UMass student.

In chess, a knight makes progress in the shape of an "L." If you want to make progress, do it in the shape of a letter to the editor.

Just a Hallo-weenie

BRIAN LOHNES

It will probably come as no surprise to any of the intrepid readers of this paper that my Halloween past is a checkered one. Sure we've all had a few bad costumes here and there, but does anyone besides me cringe at the sight of really old Halloween pictures from when you were just a little tyke?

I have had a few humdingers costume-wise through the years, and in typical fashion I will share my pain with all of you.

Don Zimmer- Yes folks, my parents dressed me up as Don Zimmer, not the evil Don Zimmer from the Yankees, but the kind and loving Don Zimmer from the Red Sox, back in the day. Their basic reasoning for this seemingly inventive costume was that I was a fat kid and Don Zimmer does kind of look like a baby-faced child.

Vampire Boy- Ok this is always a bad idea. I may have been about six when I was dressed up as a Vampire. Anytime a boy puts on a cape and white face powder, horrifyingly embarrassing pictures are the result. Repeated attempts to both destroy the pictures and any memories I had of the costume have failed, and according to my therapist they are permanent.

Hobo- Yep, just when you thought it couldn't get any worse, I was a hobo, complete with a bag on a stick. This costume also required me to wear facial make-up. I had on one of my grandfather's scully caps, so if you take the bag on a stick away you basically have a heavier set version of Oliver Twist.

Pirate- The bottom of my costume barrel. I may have actually worn a fake hoop earring for this one. What I do remember is a red and white striped shirt, an eye-patch and tight head covering of some type. At the time I saw nothing wrong with the costume, but looking back at the pictures, I look like the least manly pirate ever to sail the high seas. The moral of this costume? Anytime you wear an eye patch, an earring (fake or not) and a tight head covering, you are bound for regret later in life.

The Cookie Monster- After years of homegrown costumes, I wanted to break into the pre-made costume genre and I decided to go with the lovable Cookie Monster from Sesame Street. This costume was one of the least embarrassing of the bunch, but the fact that it was basically a blue apron and a mask made of plastic made it the worst of the bunch.

Jason- I, along with every other kid born in the 1980s, and I concocted a plan to scare the living daylights out of every small child who decided to come near my house. I hid beside my house and burst out in my well-worn Jason mask wielding an electric chainsaw (chain removed) screaming like a banshee and charging toward people. My friend Pete would be positioned strategically in front of the stairs with his clothes stuffed with leaves and his head tucked into his shirt. Just when the kids recovered from the chain saw, they looked at the nice scarecrow. Then he would jump out of the chair and scream at them, classic hid in the tree in my front yard and would heave a dummy out of the tree as the kids approached it leaving the yard.

We literally had kids sobbing in their parents' arms. Most parents got a kick out of it, and were scared themselves. There was one defect to our plan, however: no one came to our house the next year. We changed our whole attack plan, revamped everything and the damn kids were too scared to walk onto our lawn.

Needless to say, Halloween has changed for me since back then. The celebrations are a little more hard-core now; the costumes people wear are more thoughtful and thought provoking than when we were little. This year I was The Chronicle Hunter (The Australian guy from Animal Planet). I consider myself a reformed Hallo-weenie. I have moved on from past humiliation to stand tall and celebrate with the best of 'em.

Have a happy and safe Halloween, and what ever you do, don't be a Pirate; have some self-respect for God's sake!

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

UMass issues

LAURA SICILIANO

Some thoughts...

For Halloween, my costume was "A Freshman Girl." Black pants, tight shirt, too much makeup, lots of glitter and keys hanging around my neck. It was pretty cold Saturday night, so I refused to go without a coat. I guess my costume was not right because I had a coat on, since despite the 30-degree weather and the horrible wind chill, the girls walking on frat row still only had tank tops on. Does anyone need to look so good that they have to freeze to death to do so? Girls, you don't look good like that, you just look cold and stupid.

Parking Services, the smartest department on campus, finally gave the purple sticker holders in Southwest a break by giving us three rows in Green lot. Gee, it only took two months for them to figure that one out. Too bad for all the people who got their cars towed in the last seven weeks when they had to park illegally. Since it will probably take Parking Services another few years to figure out how to stop the parking crisis, I will clue them in. Don't sell so many stickers! Ask people where they live, and make purple lots numbered and sell stickers according to living areas. Only sell the same number of stickers as there are spaces. I bet there won't be a parking problem if you do it that way.

The University, which traditionally gave us two full reading days before finals, gave us only one day last spring. I guess they felt bad, because now they are giving us a whole day and a half! As David on "The Real World" would say, Woo-Woo! I know that everyone at UMass is going to be getting up at 8:00 on Saturday the 23rd in order to get that extra four hours of study. Honestly, what could change so dramatically since last December that they cannot schedule two full reading days?

No one riots when our tuition goes up. Nobody held a demonstration of any sort when Nader came to campus. But people riot when the Yankees win or when the power goes out, and I am sure that people would riot if the Red Sox won too. I guess, following the model, we should start rioting when the DC has chicken fingers or when it doesn't, or maybe when finals begin and when finals end. We should only riot when something is fun or our fun is in danger, I guess. Why would we want to use our student power to demonstrate for positive campus or political change? That is for our parent's generation to do. We only want to have fun.

The movie theater in the Hampshire Mall is supposed to be opening soon. Of course, that is what they said in the fall of 1998, too. I'm putting my money on the fall of 2002. I figure four years to build a movie theater is about right.

If you think about it, Halloween is the most charitable holiday of all. We give thanks in November, but most people do not give anything to those less fortunate. Most people give gifts at Christmas, but only to their friends and family. On Halloween, strangers buy candy just to give out to strangers. It may not be much money, but it is people being generous just for the sake of being nice to children. It is the kindest holiday, in many ways.

Have a happy Halloween!

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

Fear and anger after vandalism

At around 2 a.m. on Friday, October 20, I returned home to find a disturbing message on my answering machine. Through the tone of anxiety in her voice, I recognized the caller as Jenny Martin, one of my graduate assistants. She was calling to inform me that earlier in the night while she was working, someone walked by and smashed the window right above her head in The Stonewall Center.

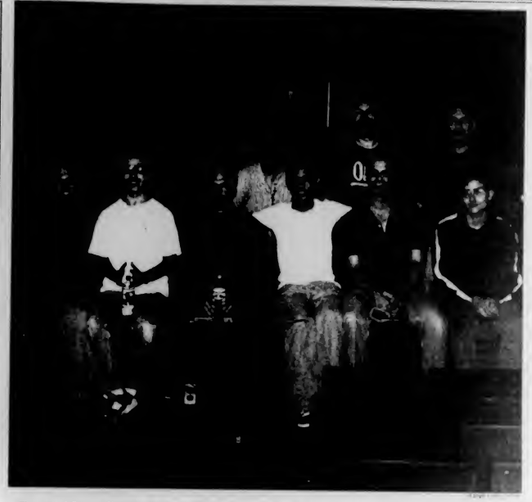
I called Jenny back and spoke with her at length, listening to her describe what happened and relate the fear she felt as she cowered beneath a desk in the office wondering what was going to happen next. I felt both scared and angry, two feelings that only intensified when I went to the Center on Saturday and saw the plywood- as if outside on a Saturday morning, having a few beers and cheering on the football team with your floor? I think it's great that some RAs got their floors together for Midnight Madness and "socialized" before the event. Putting the Zoo back in Zoo Mass is undeniably the way for this school to get back on the right track, and it starts with athletics.complacency was replaced by a Band-Aid covering an open wound of ugly reality.

Saturday evening we hosted a one night showing of "Corpus Christi." Over 500 people attended making it the largest audience that this amateur company, Hole in the Wall Players, had ever performed for. That night I watched a story of the ultimate hate crime, while thinking about the window and how hate hits close to home. "Corpus Christi" was a success, if only measured by its ability to catalyst dialogue in bringing queer issues to public eye once again.

This month we have as our guest, Judy Shepard, who will talk about how hate has changed her life. Mother of Matthew Shepard, Judy has taken on the issue of hate crimes by speaking to the Senate, appearing in television advertisements, as well as agreeing to speaking engagements. Judy will be speaking on December 4th at 8pm in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. The last time I heard Mrs. Shepard speak she reminded the audience how much more needs to be done, just as we all are reminded when someone pierces our sense of safety by smashing a window.

Remember: Enjoy the times when things are going well for our community – but do not become complacent; the seed of oppression is the complacency of intolerance.

Stephen Pereira, Jr. is the Associate Director of the Stonewall Center



The cast of Corpus Christi smiles for the camera after its successful performance October 21.

Cafe is a success

Recently Pride Alliance hosted the first of a series of intimate gatherings. The first Coffee House Queer Cafe was held in the Crabtree Dorm Lounge on the evening on Friday, October 20. Sponsored by both the UMass Pride Alliance and the Queer Union at Amherst College, the event was the first of many events being planned for this year that are designed to foster stronger bonds between the GLBT communities on each of the 5-College campuses.

The 20 or so students at the event spent several very pleasant hours socializing, listening to music, and enjoying each other's company. Those who attended came from all over the area, with a wide array of majors represented. In fact, one of the most frequently asked questions at the event was quite a few of the students there were not even UMass students. Students from Hampshire and Amherst Colleges as well as UMass were present. Both Pride Alliance and Queer Union were quite pleased with the turnout, and hope that all the most 5 College GLBT events are as successful as the Coffee House Queer Cafe. The next 5 College Queer Cafe is scheduled to be held at Amherst College sometime in November. Further announcements can be found by contacting Pride Alliance at 545-0810 or pride@stuaff.umass.edu.

Edward Kammerer, Jr.

Corpus Christi: morality message

By Lynne Babineau
Collegian Correspondent

As most of the community is already well-aware following quite a bit of press, Corpus Christi, a play which was performed at UMass on October 21, was written by Terrence McNally based on the story of Jesus Christ and His disciples. The difference between this play and the Biblical story of Jesus is that, in Corpus Christi, all 13 men are gay and living in the late 60's or early 70's in Texas. The play seeks to educate people that everyone is loved in the eyes of God, and that we should never pass judgment on a person simply because of his/her race, religion or sexuality.

The problem that I saw when I attended the play here at UMass was not with the message, though. As I'm sure that anyone else who attended the play noticed, the vast majority of those in attendance were people who no doubt experienced some type of discrimination in their lives and were already quite understanding of the message of the play and the importance of that message. Unfortunately, those who are most in need of learning this simple lesson would most likely never attend a play such as this one, and even if they did, they wouldn't very likely be open-minded enough to accept or embrace the true meaning of McNally's work.

On a lighter note, however, I did get to meet the cast of Corpus Christi, excluding only one cast member who had already left. Despite any negative attention they've received, they have extremely positive attitudes, stating that they feel the play has been well received in most of the communities in which they have performed. Actually, one cast member informed me that they had expected a lot more controversy along the way. The message of love and respect is obviously getting out there somehow, and even though there are always those that can't be taught, perhaps with the help of works like this play, the rest of the world will grow up sometime in our lifetime.

East German movie Comes Out at UMass

By Joseph P. Derosier
Collegian Correspondent

Coming Out, the first and only feature-length gay film to come out of East Germany, was shown on campus on Thursday, October 19. It was presented by Bethany Moore, a Ph.D. candidate in Modern German Studies at UMass. Coming Out is a film that took 10 years to make due to government control of the film industry; it was a film that the director wanted to be a plea for tolerance of minorities in East Germany. The film was beautifully written and directed, and premiered in sync with the fall of the Berlin Wall – at the time when all of East Germany was "Coming Out."

Coming Out opens with Matthias, a young gay man, overdosing and ending up in a hospital. Throughout his violent convulsions, the nurse is trying to find out what happened that made him want to die. Her repeated questions end up with his answer as to why he attempted suicide: "It's because…I'm queer."

The next scene introduces the film's protagonist, a young gay high school teacher, Phillip, who has been closeted for years and is still trying to convince himself that he is heterosexual. He meets a fellow teacher at school, Tanja, whom he starts dating and soon convinces himself that he loves. Tanja falls head-over-heels in love with Phillip – he is quite attractive – and soon the two are engaged to be married. Tanja brings a dear friend of hers to meet her new fiance, not knowing that the friend was a boy with whom Phillip had an erotic encounter in high school. The boyhood friend triggers something in Phillip and he discovers his repressed sexuality; he attends a gay bar where he longingly looks at the paired couples. The clash between his world and the world in the bar are clear – as a high school teacher and as a son he needs to be straight, but he knows that he is not. His high school would have a problem with a gay teacher, and his mother blames his queerness for her unhappiness.

Soon, Phillip meets Matthias, with whom he falls in love. After being invited to Matthias's 19th birthday party with Matthias's loving and accepting family, Phillip begins to accept himself more. He and Matthias discover an intense attraction – possibly even love – between themselves. Phillip, through his encounter with Matthias, realizes that he has nothing to be ashamed of, he has found a niche where he is comfortable. He leaves a note to tell Tanja that he is leaving and will not be back.

A teacher sat faithf

Ani DiFranco dazzles Mullins

ANI DIFRANCO
Mullins Center
Oct. 28

By Krish Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

Don't call her another folksy woman with a guitar and something to say. After her performance Saturday night at the William D. Mullins Center, it's undeniable that Ani DiFranco is much more dimensional than that.

Too often labeled by her opposers and the media as an angry girl who caters exclusively to others like her, DiFranco, like so many solo female artists who dare to inject their work with substance, is greatly underestimated. Though her 12 albums and collaborations with a variety of well-established musicians, including The Artist, DiFranco has worked vigorously. Her growth was apparent from the moment she took the stage Saturday night.

Following a solid opening act by her former bassist Sara Lee, DiFranco and her band began their 90-minute set with "The Diner" off the 1994 release Out of Range. Immediately it was clear that DiFranco has teamed up with a set of musicians who easily match her caliber of performance.

An ecstatic response from the crowd and raw energy led the band into their second song, "Done Wrong." DiFranco, already dancing around and showing no mercy on her guitar, broke the first string of the evening and directed the band into a gradual fade of the up tempo tune. While the roadies did their work fixing and swapping instruments, the music stopped for a moment and DiFranco treated the audience to one of her spoken word pieces, "The Slant."

The set list maintained a consistent upbeat rhythm, well supported by the band on a Fender Rhodes keyboard, an upright bass, a one-man woodwinds section, a drummer and a trumpet. Songs typically performed by just DiFranco were stepped up for the show and adhered more to the rules of funk than folk. The result was outstanding. DiFranco's songs, already enriched by her soulful lyrics and unique guitar arrangements were layered to perfection by the addition of her band.

DiFranco thanked the audience for making such a large venue feel intimate and said, "It's kind of intimidating. I feel like we're so close that I could fart and you'd know it." Taking advantage of the comfortable rapport she established with the crowd with her flighty, self-deprecating jokes between songs, DiFranco took a moment to talk politics. An advocate of Ralph Nader, she encouraged everyone to vote and to believe that pipe dreams aren't always just pipe dreams.

The social agenda was happily received by the audience, creating an ideal tenor for her next song, "Tis of Thee," one of her most politically charged songs about racism.

Always going back to the studio, DiFranco played a few songs from her upcoming project, which she said would be a double CD set. The yet unreleased songs were just as strong as all of her work and had a very distinct fusion of styles, more similar to her latest CD To the Teeth than any other.

The remainder of the set list ranged in sentiment, but not a moment of it was lacking. The band completely consummated their skills with performances of "Back, Back, Back," "Crawl" (for which Ani was accompanied by the entire audience), and "Jukebox."

Unpredictably, DiFranco reappeared quickly for her first encore and brought, along with her own band, Sara Lee and Lee's band. The nine musicians broke into a fanastic reinvention of Rick James' "Superfreak." And undoubtedly for the fans, DiFranco returned for a second and final encore to perform perhaps her best-known song "Both Hands," quietly and alone, for a beautifully sincere close to the evening.

DiFranco's vocals and stage presence have improved exponentially over the last two years, it seems, and her musical goals appear to have more focus and expanse now than ever. For certain she'll be making many more albums that bring something unique to the scene, as she has been all along, and hopefully she will continue giving performances as tight as she did this weekend.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Ani in the middle of her stellar performance Saturday.

Alvarado comes up short in latest effort

DAVID ALVARADO
Mixer Presents United DJs of America Volume 15
DMC

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

The idea of releasing CD after CD of American DJ music is cool. The idea of assembling such an album is good.

But ideas are little things that live in the heads of dreamers. Rarely is the final product as good as it hypothetically should be, and so it goes with David Alvarado. But don't tell his record company that. Darren Ressler, who surprisingly enough works for Mixer, said that Alvarado is "one of the most skilled DJs on the global circuit... no flash, hype or trickery. David Alvarado is a pioneer who leads a legion of house-heads into the Promised Land every weekend."

No, no and no. Absolutely not.

Let's ignore the obvious and assume that Alvarado was simply "forgotten" when they were putting together the first 14 albums despite the fact that he's a "pioneer" and "one of the most skilled DJs on the global circuit." Further, lets assume that said "house-heads" are actually big fans of this guy, thus undercutting their own credibility. That leaves only the following question to ponder: why?

He's a talentless hunk. His remixes are repetitive, bland and typical of what can make techno-tica so bad in the first place - it all sounds the same. Alvarado has managed to take 13 of the most uninteresting songs and make them even worse by adding recurring pseudo drum-beats and occasional sounds that might, theoretically, go on a techno album somewhere. Not this one though.

As for his skills? Ressler describes them as being "as forceful as the eye of a hurricane." Does he really mean that Alvarado's skill, as compared to that of a hurricane powerful enough to alter, change and destroy, is instead more accurately compared to the time during a storm when nothing happens? Because he's right when his statement is taken literally.

What's to say? This review has to be a certain length, but put this CD on shuffle and it will sound like the first song was put on repeat and then listen to it play again and again and again and again. And unmercifully, Alvarado has decided that the best possible way to mix a song is to drag it out, to add many dead seconds of worthless sound as possible to songs that, as previously stated, just aren't that good.

Alvarado's lack of creativity drags this album down but the quality of his sound produced for it doesn't help any either. In fact, nothing would help this album save for a giant scratch on the disk rendering it unplayable.

Is there anyway to say that this CD should have a sticker on it with the strongest recommendation to avoid without actually saying it? Sure. Don't waste a perfectly good sticker on this album and if stickers aren't good enough for it, ten or twelve or fifteen bucks aren't either.

Are You an SOM major?
What are You doing to give yourself the experience you need for a competitive edge in the Real World? Get this experience in a great setting on campus!
The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN
is now

accepting applications for an Assistant Business Manager.
Please turn them into the Collegian Office in room 113 of the Campus Center, Contact: Erin Renner

Attention!

There will be a mandatory meeting for all current and interested Arts and Living writers this Thursday at 8:00 p.m. in the Collegian office. We need writers to review music and film. More importantly, we need articles about fine arts. We need help with upcoming feature stories that may include interviews with celebrities such as Jim Carrey, Adam Sandler and Ron Howard. In short, we are very needy. If you cannot make this meeting or need further information, contact Ryan at 545-1361.

WANTED
Collegian is taking applications for:
ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVES
We are looking for Enthusiastic, Energetic, Organized and Self-motivated Freshmen, Sophomores and Juniors from any major that can work for next semester
If you are guilty of any of these traits.
Contact Eric or Kate at the Collegian Advertising Office at 545-3500 or stop in and fill out an application at 113 Campus Center Basement
APPLICATION DEADLINE November 8

Hootie takes stage at Avalon for final rock fest

HOOTIE & THE BLOWFISH
The Avalon
Oct. 25

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

I remember how, once upon a time, Hootie and the Blowfish were the biggest thing since the invention of the wheel. Yet whether it was overexposure to their sugary pop melodies or just plain bad luck, the four-man band has not been able to recapture superstardom since their groundbreaking 1995 debut Cracked Rear View.

Three albums later, Hootie is still cranking out new music, but for how much longer? Their fourth studio album, the just-released Scattered, Smothered & Covered, may be their last group effort. Following their tour this fall and winter to promote the new CD, the band is parting ways – perhaps permanently – to pursue solo careers. Guitarist Mark Bryan has already released a solo album, and lead singer Darius Rucker's R&B effort is planned for a March 2001 unveiling. It looks as though the Blowfish may be hooted out, and that their recent show at The Avalon Ballroom in Boston maybe one of their last. The Blowfish blew the roof off the club, going out with a bang in what might be a farewell concert.

At first, though, prospects looked grim. Not only was the size of the crowd less than impressive, but the opening band, Virginwool, wasn't anything to hoot and holler about. A blend of Matchbox 20 and Goo Goo Dolls, the Orlando, FL band threw themselves into their rendition of the same cliched music. The lead singer performed like a young version of Aerosmith's Steven Tyler, treating his microphone pole like it was a love toy.

The back-up singer, an Abercrombie & Fitch-looking poster boy, was unquestionably feeling the music, jumping about the stage, making pained faces and generally amusing to watch.

However, the most droll instances were when the lead singer would leave the stage, and not return until he got a beer at the adjoining bar. By the end of the band's forty-minute set, the audience had grown to almost full-capacity, and the die-hard Hootie fans (better known as Hootie Hooters) were ready for Darius, Mark, Dean and Jim.

They wasted no time in getting the show underway, immediately jumping into a batch of songs off their new album. Composed entirely of covers, several of the new songs were unfamiliar to me (I guess I'm not as much of a Hootie Hooter as I had thought). Yet they indulged the audience occasionally with songs recognizable by most any music fan – a led Zeppelin cover, one by The Cars, a brief attempt at a Black Crowes tune and Santana's "Black Magic Woman."

Between songs, they spoke with the crowd (lead guitarist Mark Bryan doing most of the chit-chat) swapping stories about the Red Sox, Slim Shady and their three-and-a-half hour set last time they played this same venue. Understandably, they were asked by the club's management to shorten it this time, coming in at just over two hours. Yet they took all the liberties they could, coming on for not one, not two, but three encores.

And they were well-deserved, too. After a succession of songs from their new CD, they played a string of hits, encompassing all three prior albums. Most of the recognizable songs came from their debut, but both album two, Fairweather Johnson and album three, Musical Chairs, got their fair share of coverage.

Even with all the tremendous radio airplay Hootie & The Blowfish got at the start of their career, their live performances gave a jolt of life to many of their overplayed songs. "Only Lonely," a heartfelt ballad about loss and longing, began with a straightforward piano solo, total silence falling over the crowd. It was undoubtedly a highlight of the show, only to be matched by "Old Man & Me (When I Getto Heaven)," where they interspersed "Schoolhouse Rocks!" lyrics into the instrumental break.

With the nine-minute version of "Hold My Hand," the song that broke the band into big-time fame, it looked as if the end were in sight, but they returned for three encores, finally finishing with the cover "Love the One You're With." They knew just as well as anyone else in the audience that they couldn't top this final finale.

Like their song "What's Going On Here?" I also cannot understand what was responsible for the sudden loss in popularity for Hootie & The Blowfish. As a friend told me recently when I said I saw them in concert, "Everyone owns their first CD." Even if Hootie & The Blowfish can't recapture the same fame in their own independent careers, they can rest assured that their name will certainly live on indefinitely as a phenomenon of the 1990s, and an icon in rock and roll that can't be matched. And that's something for a Hootie Hooter to be proud of.

Hootie and co. are preparing to pull the plug, but not before one last tour.

Dr. Ruth on college

By Rachel Metz
Daily Californian (U. California-Berkeley)

(U-WIRE) BERKELEY, CA – For Dr. Ruth, whose name is more synonymous with the word "sex" than with her surname, Westheimer, giving useful advice is not just an occupational duty – it's natural. Therefore, it should follow that any endeavor into the specifics of advice-giving, like, say, giving sound advice to new college students, will be smooth and successful.

Well, that's probably her goal, anyway. In Dr. Ruth's Guide to College Life: The Savvy Student's Handbook, the doctor is only halfway in. Though Dr. Ruth does manage to dish on a variety of useful topics from leaving home (chapter one: "Leaving Home Unscathed") to eventual visits with the 'rents (chapter eight: "You Will go Home Again: How Not to Regret it"), her language and anecdotal incidents read a bit too preachy for most students to take her advice seriously.

In chapter two, "Your Roommate: From Peoria or Mars," Dr. Ruth gives several worst-case-scenarios of roommate opposites and how they can learn to co-habitate closer to harmony than hell.

For Michael, whose roommate, Jeff, is a "6'3" 250-pound Olympic hammer thrower who attended West Point and brought with him a collection of swords and knives," the problem is an ultimatum issued by Jeff about Michael's chronic snoring. Jeff tells Michael he can figure out how to stop snoring, or Jeff will beat the crap out of him in a desperate, violent attempt to eliminate the problem. Fortunately, they manage to solve the problem peacefully and later become good friends.

Dr. Ruth uses this example, along with the case of Joanne and her suicidal, body-lice infested roomie, to illustrate different, extreme experiences that new students occasionally encounter but can manage proficiently, especially with advice from a certain (ahem) book.

Advice abounds in The Savvy Student's Handbook, and chapters on surviving dorm life and dealing with university faculty and administrators offer useful, realistic advice. With great tips on premature ejaculation, orgasms and vibrators, Dr. Ruth handles generally squeamish issues with blunt, matter-of-factness. On foreplay, she writes, "I hope all of you have heard of foreplay, although you may not know exactly what it means. While both partners derive a great deal of pleasure from touching and hugging and kissing each other prior to intercourse, during foreplay many women receive the clitoral stimulation they require in order to have an orgasm." Her willingness to take on subjects often glossed-over or daintily touched upon by others gives an outlet to readers who feel uncomfortable bringing up touchy-feely issues with parents or counselors.

© 2000 InfoRocket.com, Inc

Sell your little sister on the black market. OR Get paid for the stuff you know.
InfoRocket.com
Answer questions. Earn cash.
★ ENTER TO WIN A TRIP TO CANCUN FOR SPRING BREAK. ★
REGISTER TO ENTER AT www.inforocket.com/amherst
SWEEPSTAKES ENDS JANUARY 31, 2001. SUBJECT TO COMPLETE OFFICIAL RULES

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Swing/Salsa Dance Northampton Center for the Arts. Wednesdays. Lessons 7pm $10, $7/students. Dance 8:30 $5 for dance only (413) 259-2982 (Mark)

U-MASS WOMEN'S CREW WANTS YOU! Come see why we want little people. 549-4038 ask for Sara

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Honda Civic Si 2door, great condition. $5000 call Erica 253-6504

1995 Saturn SL2 AC, power, sunroof, ABS, traction. $5000 537-0517

89 Dodge Van Best offer 586-0879

1990 Honda Accord EX 140k, moonroof, CD, great condition. $3800 O/B/O 546-2568

COMPUTERS

New Computer Cases with floppy drives $30 accessories/parts available. Online store closing 256-5412

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

NURSING STUDENTS: Pick up some home care experience and earn some extra cash. Work as an Aide for our patients in the Amherst/Northampton area. Various days and hours available. Call today. Interim HealthCare, 586-7365

Attention! Work form home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

EMPLOYMENT

Last Chance Legal Assistants November 9, 2000 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office for the Spring, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact Student Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Don't Get a Job Next Summer, Get a Business! Earn Avg. of $8563/summer as The Manager of a University Painters Summer Business Must be SOPH, JR or SR. Information and application at: www.university-painters.com

Hippodrome auditioning dancers to perform coreographed routines on a weekly basis at brandnew entertainment company in Springfield. 413-246-2275 www.hdrome.com

EMPLOYMENT

Easthampton Savings Bank Full-time teller position in our Hadley Office. Requires cash handling and customer service experience, plus high school diploma or equivalent. Contact Paula York, Human Resources Manager, (413) 527-4111, or email pyork@bankesb.com AA/EOE

Housekeeper Part-Time Car essential. 549-1578

Survive Spring Break 2001! Hottest destinations/hotels! Campus sales representatives and student organizations wanted! Visit inter-campus.com or call 1-800-327-6013

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today; 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Happy 21st Ish! I hope you enjoy your birthday love, Kendrick and 711

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Need Spring Housing? Studious female seeks the same to fill 2nd bedroom in Colonial Vge. Apt. Call 256-1232 for more info

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1-2 females to share 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Massage in you own home! $15 per hour message student Michael 585-8577

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

ACT FAST!  SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

TRAVEL

Montreal College Party Weekends Nov. 24 + Dec. 30. From $119. Includes round trip motorcoach. 3 days 2 nights Hotel Downtown full Breakfast + Dinner. Departs Boston, Springfield, + Hartford. Call 1-617-567-0062 Global Tours

Volunteer in Central America/Africa! Work in community development projects - lead health campaigns, organize teaching seminars, develop micro-enterprises. Institute for International Cooperation and Development. Call/e-mail for a free brochure. (413) 458-9828, iicd@berkshire.net

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash tours.com

TRAVEL

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreak direct.com

Happy Halloween!!

from The Daily Collegian Classifieds!!

Beat the Holiday Rush Place Your Ad Today!! 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bilteen Board
3 - CBS/3 Boston
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC/40 Springfield
6 - PBS 57 Springfield
7 - HSCN Main Channel
8 - UPN 20 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - PBS 24 Hartford
13 - NBC/40 Springfield
14 - Infomercial Channel
15 - UMATV Cablecast Channel
16 - WB 56 New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - Infomercial Channel
19 - UVE TV (Student Channel)
20 - World Cable
21 - Guest to Cable
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TNN
28 - TNT
29 - Sci-Fi
30 - Discovery
31 - Nickelodeon
32 - Cartoon Network
33 - Nick at Nite
34 - TV Land
35 - Comedy Central
36 - BET
37 - Lifetime
38 - Bloomberg Financial Network
39 - College TV Network
40 - MTV
41 - VH1
42 - The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 31, 2000

		6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Building Big (N)		Nova "Holocaust on Trial" (N)		Frontline "The Case for Innocence" (In Stereo)			Vampires-N.E.
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "JAG TV" (N) (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "Instincts" (N)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "JAG TV" (N) (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "Instincts" (N)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Buffy the Vampire Slayer		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Buffy the Vampire Slayer		News		News	Tonight Show
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Fraser (N)	Just Shoot Me	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	7th Heaven "Red Tape"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	★½ "The Night Flier" (1997, Horror) Miguel Ferrer. (In Stereo)		News		Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Fraser (N)	Just Shoot Me	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show	Titus (N)	Dark Angel "C.R.E.A.M." (N)		News		Friends	Fraser
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Fraser (N)	Just Shoot Me	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Building Big (N)		Nova "Holocaust on Trial" (N)		Frontline "The Case for Innocence" (In Stereo)			Charlie Rose
WGGB	40	ABC News		Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	Once and Again "Bookovers"		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	NHL Hockey	Boston Bruins at New York Islanders. (Live)						NBA Basketball: Lakers at Trail Blazers
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Tip-Off		NBA Basketball: Philadelphia 76ers at New York Knicks. (Live)
A&E	41	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Girlfriends"		Biography: Farrah Fawcett		American Justice: Murder Pact		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Out of Control"
CNN	43	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	29	Saturday Night Live Halloween		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★★ "The Sixth Thing" (1985, Comedy) John Cusack.				Premium	Whose Line?	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	31	Wild Discovery: Deadlihaer		Wild Discovery: Occul		On the Inside: Real Ghost.		New Detectives				FBI Files "A Model Killer"	Justice Files "DNA on Trial"
ESPN	45	Sportscenter		Outside Lines	Strongest Man	PBA Bowling: Indianapolis Open. (Live)				Wonderful World of Golf (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE	42	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: Faith Hill		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★★★ "The Silence of the Lambs" (1991, Suspense) Jodie Foster.					Golden Girls
MTV	53	Direct Effect	Making-Video	Senseless	Jackass	Fear (In Stereo)		Real World: E.	Real World: E.	Real World: E.	2gether	Truth (N)	Fear
NICK	52	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Petswick (N)	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	35	5:00 ★★ "Night of the Creeps"		New York's Village Halloween Parade (In Stereo Live)				New York's Village Halloween Parade (In Stereo)				★★½ "Cheerleader" (1990)
TLC	62	Survivor Science "Jungle"		Paramedics "We the People"		Trauma: Life in the ER (N)		Escape Stories: Home Run (N)		Escape Stories: Triumph Over		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	46	ER "Think Warm Thoughts"		Pretender "Bank" (In Stereo)		★½ "I Know What You Did Last Summer" (1997, Horror)						Bull (R)	ER "Humpty Dumpty"
USA	32	Walker, Texas Ranger		New York's Village Halloween Parade (In Stereo Live)				"Dark Prince: The True Story of Dracula" (2000) Rudolf Martin.				NY Halloween Parade
HBO	33	"All New Adventures of Laurel & Hardy: For Love"		★½ "Crocodile Dundee II" (1988, Comedy) Paul Hogan. (PG)		★½ "Leprechaun in the Hood" (2000, Horror) (R)		★½ "The Puppet Masters" (1994) Donald Sutherland. (R)
MAX	34	5:00	★★★ "Ghostbusters" (1984, Comedy) Bill Murray. (PG)			★½ "Leprechaun in the Hood" (2000, Horror) (R)				Beggars and Choosers		"The Blair Witch Project" (1999)
SHOW	55	★★½ "Believe" (2000, Horror) Christopher Heyerdahl. (PG				"Possessed" (2000, Horror) Timothy Dalton. (In Stereo)

Dilbert By Scott Adams

TED, YOUR THIRTY-DAY DANCE OF DEATH BEGINS TODAY
YOU MUST FIND A NEW JOB WITHIN THE COMPANY DURING THAT TIME
IS THE SPRAY-PAINT ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY?
THAT'S AN "L."

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

OK? I'M PEEING AT OK?
YES, SIR.
AFTER A YEAR OF CAMPAIGN-ING?
YES, BUT THERE'S A MARGIN OF ERROR OF 4%
WHICH MEANS YOU COULD BE AT +4%, NECK AND NECK WITH RALPH NADER!
GREAT! SO COULD YOU.
WE? TIED WITH NADER?
SURE— THIS IS AMERICA, HONEY!

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

COME ON, CATCHEL! GET YOUR COSTUME ON! WE'RE GONNA BE LATE FOR THE PARTY!
WHAT THE HECK ARE YOU? A VACUUM CLEANER?
YEAH IT WAS THE SCARIEST THING I COULD THINK OF EXCELLENT COSTUME, DUDE. VERY SCARY.
AWAY!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

THAT WAS A MISTAKE! I DID NOT MEAN TO HUG YOU! THE BUS CAME TO A STOP I LOST MY FOOTING IT WAS A COMPLETE ACCIDENT!
NEXT TIME THE BUS COMES TO A SUDDEN STOP I'LL LET MYSELF FALL FLAT IN THE AISLE
OKAY, IT WAS A MISTAKE I BELIEVE YOU

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak

See Troy rollerblade...
...into the street
HONK! AHHHH! CRASH!
See Troy get run-over.
I don't know whether to call an ambulance or America's Funniest Home Videos.

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

IT'S GOING TO BE A SELF PORTRAIT RAIHEL A SCULPTURE THAT REFLECTS...
WHAT ARE YOU MAKING, SPUNK?
...HUMILITY, MODESTY, HUMBLENESS, DEDICATION TO ART OVER EGO
"NOTHING IN EXCESS."
OH BROTHER

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

SO, PETER, WHAT ARE YOU DRESSING UP AS FOR HALLOWEEN TRICK-OR-TREATING?
DINGUS, I'M 16 YEARS OLD
GUYS MY AGE DON'T GO TRICK-OR-TREATING.
DUH.
SHEESH. USE YOUR HEAD.
SO YOU'LL BE DRESSING UP AS SOMEONE YOUNGER.
I FIGURE IF I SHAVE I CAN PASS FOR 12.

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Though your skill alone can get you through, with a little inspiration you may be able to accomplish the impossible at this time. But don't get your hopes up; you still can't get any action.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – It's essential that you play the role of good guy today – despite your resistance to certain developments taking place. But in the tradition of good guys, you'll finish last (see Scorpio comment about not getting any action).
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Others are looking to you for the kind of guidance you would appreciate receiving yourself. It's time to learn on the job. So next time you stop for money, look for a moral.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take advantage of the opportunity today to share your dreams and aspirations with another, and to work together to see them to fruition. I'd keep the one dream about skinny-dipping in the campus pond with Chancellor Scott to yourself, however.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Take care you don't sabotage yourself by trying to be too careful today. There is such a thing for being too prepared; you only need one condom tonight.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Today's activities may be reminiscent of a time when you had it all – and indeed you may be spurred on to increase your efforts and your profits. But those times are over. Deal with it; you're a loser!
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Travel is in the picture. Be sure your preparations have been thorough. Pack your toothbrush!
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your likely to play a significant role in the affairs of a Cancer or Leo native today. Take care you don't come on too strongly, however. Take a shower.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – A late start is nothing to panic about today. You will want to be sure you are on solid ground before taking any kind of new and unusual risks. When you see the cute boy from your math class, go over digits with him.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Take the initiative today – and keep it. If you are sure to maintain a controlling influence at this time, you can score a major success and a hot date.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – An unexpected scenario may require more of an open-minded attitude than you are used to – but in the end, you'll receive your rewards. You CAN have your cake and eat it too.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Don't hesitate to trust your instincts and make that phone call or write that letter that can attract attention to your current plight. But after Halloween, you have no excuse to pose as a stalker.

Amherst Weather

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 49 LOW: 34	HIGH: 53 LOW: 34	HIGH: 60 LOW: 40

Quote of the Day

"The trouble with real life is that there is no danger music."
–The Cable Guy

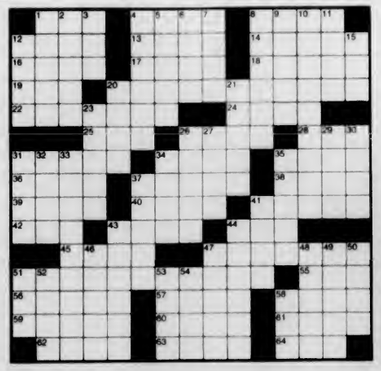
ACROSS
1 TV add-on
4 Pocket money
8 Gets better, as wine
12 About 2.2 pounds
13 "__ Bien Adhem"
14 Plays
15 "Garfield" pooch
17 Blacken
18 Type of pants
19 Dress part
20 Scant attention
22 Popular seafood
24 Fashion designer Gucci
25 Concealed
26 Sly
28 Last but — least
31 Cavalry sword
34 Trademark
35 Shue's "Leaving Las Vegas" co-star
36 Urge
37 Tornado warning
38 Taj Mahal site
39 Taverns
40 Valid
41 Brock
42 Election mo.
43 Sewing joint
44 Admin. head
45 Aunt Bee's nephew
47 Glossy fabrics
51 Violet hue
54 Dozen, to Caesar
56 Proverb
57 Scare away a fly
58 Unlock
59 Navajo lodge
60 Conjoins
61 Word that follows "crew" or "fly"
62 Landlord's fee
63 Headlong
64 Pisces shout

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-13-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 It is used in 1 Across
2 Conquer
3 Everest
4 Slashed in a secret place
5 Detest
6 Fly high
7 Damage
8 Fortatiously
9 Sentry
10 Spy work
11 Feudal slave
12 Eye makeup
15 Take a chair
20 Agitate
21 Early Brit
23 Motts
26 Roman marketplace
27 Curved molding
29 Fairy-tale meanie
30 Salad-bowl wood
31 Turn
32 "New Yorker" cartoonist
33 "Have a great trip!"
34 Italian dollar
35 Cut the turkey
37 Like mountains
41 Dove's home
43 Type of partner or movie
44 Waterproof overshoe
46 Idolater
48 Dalmatian markings
49 Dust
49 Brother's child
50 Basin
51 Cheerleader's shout
52 Aroma
53 Gorbachev's domain (abbr.)
54 Mother of Zeus
58 Singer Yoko

Is it my imagintion, or are the crossword puzzles getting harder and harder as the year goes on?



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Hot & Spicy Chicken Wings (B, F, H)

Sloppy Joes (B, F, H)

Curried Vegetable Couscous (vegan) (B, H, W)

Garden Burger (vegetarian) (B, F, W)

Fried Chicken (W)

Dinner

Country Ribs (B, F, H)

Mandarin Chicken (B, F, H)

Potato Mushroom Delite (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Mandarin Tofu (vegan) (B, F, W)

Meatloaf (W)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Bryan Smith
Photo Technician — Maureen Maske
Copy Editor — Adam White
Production Supervisor — Mike Kulak, Adi Husenovic
Production Staff — Jess Grant

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutewomen capture No. 1 seed in tourney

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Instead of playing field hockey, the Massachusetts and LaSalle teams should have been having a snowball fight.

However, instead of succumbing to the freezing temperatures, gusting winds and falling snow that blanketed Richard F. Garber field on Sunday, the Minutewomen stepped up and delivered a big 4-0 win that clinched the regular season Atlantic 10 championship for the Maroon and White, as well as the No. 1 seed in the A-10 tournament.

With the win, UMass improved to 16-3 (5-0 A-10) on the year, while the Explorers dropped to 3-14 (1-4 A-10). It was the last regular season game for the Minutewomen, but this year's senior day was not as emotional as most, considering the fact that the Massachusetts seniors will be back on the friendly confines of Garber Field in less than a week, when they host the Atlantic 10 tournament on Nov. 4-5.

"There was a lot of emotion out there," said forward Lindsay Abbott, who contributed to the cause with two assists. "Right now we are all set and focused, and everyone is really excited."

"We're getting better when we need to get better," added Kristen Schmidt. "We are taking steps forward instead of taking steps back. Team unity is a huge part of our team, and we are all working towards the same goal."

In the first half, UMass uncharacteristically got on the board quickly when Tamra Geryk celebrated her own senior day by taking a looping pass from Patty Robinson with 16:33 remaining, and one-timing it into the back of the cage for her first goal of the season. This sparked a goal-scoring rally that hadn't been seen by the Massachusetts faithful since the opening day game against Colgate on August 30.

Anke Bruemmer got into the act next, a little over five minutes later, when she took passes from Lucy Koch and Abbott on a penalty corner, and blasted a shot by the stunned LaSalle goalie. With 1:33 remaining in the half, Sarah Bohonowicz concluded the rally when she smacked in another pass from Abbott to make the score 3-0.

At halftime, the snow really began to fall and the first signs of accumulation could be seen on the field. Because of this, the second half was marred with players slipping and sliding all over the field.

By the time the horn sounded for the end of the game, almost an inch of snow had built up on the turf, and when it became clear that the white balls were blending into the tundra-like background, the refs had to bring in orange ball replacements that could actually be seen by fans and players alike.

"It was like an ice skating rink out there," said Abbott. "I had played in conditions like this once before on grass, but you slide a lot more on turf."

In the second half, the Minutewomen were able to tack on another goal when Kaitlyn Byron slapped one into the net unassisted at the 22:09 mark. After that point, though, conditions became almost unplayable, but the two teams continued to slug it out due to the fact that a postponement would have forced the two teams to replay the final few minutes at a later date.

However, considering that before Sunday, the UMass offense had failed to score over two goals in a game since Sept. 21, the Arctic gall that took place in the Pioneer Valley might have been beneficial after all for the Minutewomen.

All of this capped off a nice weekend for the Maroon and White, which beat West Chester Friday night by a score of 2-0, in a game that actually took place under the normal weather conditions usually found in late October in New England.

The first half of that contest remained scoreless, but with 25:51 left in the game, Abbott took a pass from Bohonowicz and scored her seventh goal of the season. UMass was then able close out the scoring when Bruemmer knocked in yet another penalty corner shot with 5:43 left. The two-goal win was the first time in nine games that the Minutewomen won by more than one goal, but the score did nothing to dictate the degree that the contest was dominated by the Maroon and White.

UMass will now enter the postseason with a seven game winning streak and the aura of invincibility that goes along with winning the A-10 regular season title.

"We want to go to the final four and win a national championship," said Schmidt. "And the only way we won't make it is if we beat ourselves."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Anke Bruemmer scored UMass' second goal Sunday afternoon as the Minutewomen defeated LaSalle to capture the Atlantic 10 crown.

Men's tennis drops finale: Undefeated season gone by

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's tennis team journeyed to Storrs, CT this weekend to fight their toughest battle of the season against the bitter rival UConn.

The Maroon and White went into the match undefeated. It played under horrible conditions of cold and wind and had to endure a relentless UConn crowd that came prepared to boost the Huskies to victry.

After a big win against the Red Storm of St.John's, the UMass team came into the match with a great deal of momentum in this last test of the fall season. Despite their drive, the squad came up short, and lost 5-2 to UConn, who was also undefeated.

"I think a lot of guys came into the match kind of nervous and we didn't play up to our ability," said freshman Aron Gortman.

UConn started off with a boost by winning the doubles point capturing two of the three matches. The duo of Jono Talbot/Andy Swealt knocked off the freshman pairing of Gortman/Rory Theis 8-5 in the No.2 match.

Todd Champeau/Will Shaw lost 9-8 in the No.3 spot in a hard- fought, competitive match.

A bright spot for the Maroon and White came from the solid No.1 doubles tandem of Steve Prisco/Brent Davis. The pair have been outstanding throughout the fall season. The duo cruised past Max Zubatsky/Mike Furman of the Huskies 8-4, which boosted team moral going into singles competition.

The greatest success story of singles play was that of freshman Gortman, who after struggling with back spasms all week breezed past a strong UConn No.2, Talbot 6-4, 6-0.

Gortman, a highly recruited player who has struggled with his confidence all season seems to finally be at the playing at one hundred percent.

"I had an acute muscle spasm in my right back and the last three days leading up to the match they had stim, plugs of electricity, on my back. I think it helped me because I wasn't nervous. I was thinking about my injury," said Gortman.

"Aron went out there an just played amazing against a solid player," commented Champeau on the freshman sensation.

This was a great way to end the season for Gortman, as he has high expectations for his play for the spring season, which starts up in February.

"Talbot was the best guy I've played all season and I beat him in a duel match. I feel like I'm back to the old me and it's a good sign for the spring," said Gortman.

In other singles play Max Zubatsky defeated Minuteman Champeau 7-6, 6-2 in an emotional match.

"Max is my best friend from home and I've played him a hundred times before. It was a tough match for me," commented Champeau.

In other matches senior Bill Greener lost to a strong Husky No.5 Andy Swealt 6-4, 6-1. In the No.6 match Minuteman Will Shaw lost to the solid play of Bryan Adinolfi 6-4, 6-1.

Another freshman who played exceptionally was Davis, who knocked off senior Grimshaw 6-4, 6-1.

The Massachusetts squad had a fabulous fall season despite the loss, as they knocked off the tough competition of St. John's and Boston College. They hope the spring season, which features more conference play will be as successful.

"We feel like we didn't get the best tennis out of everybody this past weekend. If our whole team is playing well then we can beat UConn. UConn was an emotional match as they're not in our conference. We want to rebound now and win the conference in the spring," said junior Champeau.

Two memebers of the UMass squad, No. 1 Prisco and No. 2 Davis, will at the ITA Regional Championship in Blacksburg, VA for their efforts in the fall campaign.

"I don't know what to expect in the tournament. I just want to play hard and get as far as possible," said Davis.

Water polo grabs ECAC bronze

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

The No. 14 Massachusetts men's water polo team (20-10, 8-2 CWPA) traveled to Princeton, New Jersey this weekend to participate in the ECAC Championships. The Minutemen faced four top-20 teams over the weekend and won two of the games while losing the other two by a total of two goals. The UMass squad placed third overall in its first tournament of the post season.

The Maroon and White began the weekend with a loss to the eventual tournament winner, No. 12 St. Francis, by a final score of 11-10. The Minutemen held a 5-3 lead going into the half, but succumbed to the Terriers in the fourth giving up five goals.

Juniors Carlos Ramos, Adam Moore, and Greg Trayer each scored two goals in the loss.

"We let down in the fourth quarter," said junior goalie J.R. VanderWall. "It has been typical of us lately."

The second game of the tournament proved an old adage to be true. The third time really was a charm for UMass as they finally bested No. 15 Navy 11-8 in the second game of the tournament. The Minutemen had previously dropped two close games to the Midshipmen, including a tough double overtime defeat a month ago. It was another story in Princeton, though, as Massachusetts jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first and had a 5-2 lead at the half. They held on the rest of the way behind stingy field defense and solid goalie play.

"We needed a little redemption after the first lost and really took it to Navy," said VanderWall.

Mike Foley dominated the two-meter, scoring five goals to lead the Minutemen. Ramos and Moore each added two goals in the victory. VanderWall keyed the defense, posting five saves in the net.

The second day began the same way as the first, with a hard fought loss, this time to host, No. 16 Princeton, 10-9. The Minutemen were down by one at the half, but picked up the defensive pressure and had the score even by the end of the third quarter.

The Maroon and White fought with the Tigers to keep the score even until Princeton was able to score on a goal that was shot from the outside, bounced off the post, and then off VanderWall and in to give them the lead. UMass then got the man-up advantage with less than 20 seconds left in regulation, but was unable to put the ball in the net, as they suffered their second one point loss of the tournament.

"We played a tough, aggressive game, but couldn't close it out in the end," said VanderWall.

Senior co-captain and usual defensive whiz Brook O'Neill, Foley and sophomore Brady Hahn each scored two goals to help lead the Minuteman offense while VanderWall led the defense, making six saves in goal.

In the third place game, UMass got some sweet revenge on Queens. After dropping a heart-breaking 10-9 loss to the Knights last weekend, the Minutemen beat up on No. 13 Queens 12-6. The Maroon and White jumped out to a 5-3 lead by halftime. They extended the lead in the big fourth quarter, outscoring the Queens squad 4-0, for the eventual six-goal victory.

"The bigger pool really helped us," said Trayer. "It allowed our offense to spread out and that works to our advantage."

Ramos, Foley and Moore each scored two goals in the win.

VanderWall posted 10 goals in net.

"We took it to Queens and didn't let up," said VanderWall. "We didn't want fourth place."

UMass placed third in the ECAC tournament, having gone 2-2 for the weekend. As they look to next weekend's CWPA North Championship, the squad can be optimistic in the fact that they played four tough games and their losses were each by a single point against quality competition.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

The men's water polo team captured third place it this weekend's ECAC Championships.

UMass takes share of A-10 crown

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

Looking for last minute costume ideas? Well put away the fake plastic fangs and stage blood and take a cue from the Massachusetts men's soccer team. It will be dressing as Atlantic 10 co-title holders this Halloween.

This past weekend Maroon and White clinched a spot atop the A-10 after scaring up a couple of wins against Fordham and La Salle to finish the season at 12-5-2, 8-1-1. The title marks only the second time in University history in which the men's soccer team finished first in the Atlantic 10 the first time being in 1994. Tied with the Minutemen for A-10 season champion, Dayton failed to defeat George Washington to edge out UMass, as the Flyers played to a 2-2 tie against the Colonials on Sunday.

"It is a great accomplishment," said men's soccer team coach Sam Koch when asked about the Minutemen being co-A-10 titleholders. "We are certainly excited, it is kind of tough to finish 8-1-1 in the conference and be in second place."

However, before the Minutemen were awarded the Atlantic 10 accolade they had to go through Fordham and La Salle.

Fordham fell to UMass 3-0 on Friday afternoon in a game where freshman Obie Gravely netted two goals for the Minutemen. Scoring both goals within two minutes of each other, Gravely rifled both goals through the Fordham defense towards the end of the game, giving UMass the necessary insurance to maintain their lead. Freshman Ptah Myers helped Gravely with the first goal while fellow freshman Matt Laughlin got the assist with the second.

Scoring the game winning goal for the Minutemen, junior Fred Kinateder found the back of the Fordham net early in the game as he scored off an assist from sophomore Derek Rhodes about two minutes in.

Also putting in a strong performance for UMass was junior goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn who tallied his seventh shutout of the season. The shutout brings him within one of the University's single-season shutout record.

"Unfortunately we had some lulls during the game, but in the second half we came back and scored two quick ones," said Koch.

Although the Minutemen appeared to have dominated much of the Fordham game, Sunday's game against LaSalle did not go as easily.

The two teams went back and forth for much of the game until sophomore Jeff Deren scored with about 20 seconds remaining in regulation.

Deren who is the leading goal scorer for the Maroon and White hit the top left corner of the LaSalle net after receiving a pass from sophomore
John Lytton who recoded two assists on the day.

The goal broke up a 1-1 tie established earlier when a LaSalle player found an opening in the UMass defense and scored with about left in the game.

Five minutes later, the Minutemen answer back with a goal from senior Seth Lilburn who got a pass from Lytton.

"I give the guys an awful lot of credit once we went down for them to battle hard to come back to win it," said Koch. "We certainly did what we needed to do to get the 2 W's."

Next up for the Minutemen will be the Atlantic 10 tournament, which will begin on Friday evening at 7:30 p.m. when UMass takes on the Rhode Island.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

UMass and Dayton will share the Atlantic 10 regular season title this year. Both the Minutemen and the Flyers posted identical 8-1-1 records.

NOVEMBER

Ryan Benharris rants on Limp Bizkit's offensive lyrics. Want the nookie? Then turn to today's Arts!

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

The UMass volleyball team split a pair of matches over the weekend. To learn more, check out the Sports page.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 40 www.dailycollegian.com Wednesday, November 1, 2000

Question 4: tax cut debate rages on ballot

By Julie Rabenhymer and Amit Vachher-Gnanathurai
Collegian Staff

Question 4 on this year's state ballot asks voters to approve a law to reduce the personal state income tax to five percent by the year 2003.

A 'yes' vote would repeal the current law, which sets the rate at 5.85 percent, and allow the proposed tax law to be voted upon by the state legislature. A 'no' vote would leave the law as it is.

Over a decade ago, Massachusetts had a financial crisis and the legislature raised the income tax rate by 15 percent. The legislature promised the increase was temporary and that it would return to the original rate as soon as the crisis was over.

Eleven years later, Governor Paul Cellucci (R) is trying to keep that promise through Question 4 on this year's ballot.

Few prominent public figures, mostly Republicans, favor a 'yes' vote. The list includes Cellucci, Lt. Governor Jane Swift, Holyoke City Councilor Kevin Jourdain and Representative Walter DiFilippi (Agawam).

According to supporters, the tax increase was designed to bail the state out of a budget deficit. Since then, they say, the state budget has almost doubled, giving Massachusetts $1.4 billion in a so-called "rainy day fund." They argue that the state could use this fund to help with the transition of losing $2.4 billion in tax revenue over a three-year period.

According to the supporters of Question 4, during the 1980s when the economy was strong, the state government grew to a level that could not be sustained when the economy slowed down. They argue that the only way to control the growth of the state government is to keep the surplus money away from the legislature, and in the hands of the taxpayers.

The supporters also say that the tax rollback will be a pay raise for the working people of Massachusetts, allowing taxpayers to invest in their family's future.

Opponents of Question 4 include Mayor Michael Albano of Springfield, Mayor Mary Clare Higgins of Northampton, the majority of the Amherst Town Selectboard and Chris Tilly, an economics professor at the University of Massachusetts.

Those against Question 4 say the bill does nothing to promote investments or create jobs, while it benefits wealthier people far more than middle-income families. Opponents say a tax cut would make it harder to reduce class size, expand early childhood education, fix crumbling schools or increase access to health care.

The Campaign for Massachusetts Future, an independent group of voters against Question 4, cite the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities' recent study entitled "When it Rains it Pours." The Washington D.C.-based institute's study shows that if the tax cut on the ballot in November were to pass, the state would face a nearly 25 percent budget deficit in the case of a modest recession.

The opposition says that the increased number of jobs and increased spending by individuals would boost the economy and negate this budget deficit.

The Boston Globe has editorialized against Question 4, while The Boston Herald endorses it.

The only Western Mass. debate on the tax rollback question will take place here at UMass this week. Co-sponsored by SEIU 509, the debate will feature leaders of the pro and con campaigns. Many local political leaders will be attending and Bob Paquette, News Director of WFCR, will be the moderator.

TIBORA GIRCZYC BLUM - COLLEGIAN

What would Jesus do?

A divinely inspired student dressed up for Halloween yesterday.

Majors Fair to unlock potential

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Walking into college and declaring the major Undecided is something that many University of Massachusetts students face each year.

Today in the Student Union Ball room, students will have the opportunity to attend the annual UMass Majors Fair. The fair is being co-sponsored by Pre-Major Advising Services, Commonwealth College/Honors Program as well as by the Campus Career Network.

"This is the only occasion during the academic year when so many different departments are going to be together under one rough. It's good for students who are reluctant to see a faculty member. This enables them to go up to the tables, take literature, ask informal questions and see that faculty are not so difficult to approach," said Academic Advisor, Susan Machala.

This year's event is the largest to take place in Major's Fair history. It will house 92 departments, representing the various majors offered at UMass. It will provide students not only with possible majors, but academic support, scholarship information and various other resources located on campus.

"For people who are undecided, they can gather a lot of information about a lot of different majors. Those who are decided can find ways to make themselves an excellent candidate for what comes later," said Machala.

"They [decided majors] can speak to people at the career network, and look into the office of national scholarship advisory. If you're having trouble with a course, we're going to have people from the learning support services on hand. It's a kind of one-stop shopping for whatever academic assistance you need to make the most of your time at the University. It's a way to get your feet wet as far as majors go."

Coinciding with this event is the up and coming pre-registration of the spring 2001 semester. Pre-registration will begin on Nov. 9, and finish on Nov. 21.

"The timing of the event was planned a week before pre registration, which is Nov. 9-21 spring 2001, and it's purposely set at that time because we feel students would be the most motivated at this point in time to attend the majors fair," said Machala.

Clarkson Edwards of the Campus Career Network in Engineering also explained the importance of knowing about majors and what each one entitles. Machala supported this by adding that each major has different pre-requisites and one major may take more credits than another.

The Majors Fair is not only an opportunity for students, but for faculty as well. Faculty will have the opportunity to meet with students and answer questions as well as show off what they do professionally.

"I've been in touch with the faculty members and departments and this is a great opportunity for them. And they know that, because it's one way that they can get in touch with students, so they look forward to it every year and they're excited about this year," said Learning Coordinator of the Commonwealth College, Melissa Beesely.

"It's an opportunity for freshman and sophomores to find out what interests them sooner, which can only be to there advantage. As an advisor, I can say that, and there will be people from here as well offering there services to the students as well," said Machala.

Over 50 percent of the UMass student body is declared Undecided at this point in time. Machala explained her concerns in regards to the fact that there are resources available, but students choose not to take advantage of them.

"Oftentimes, students don't know about all of the resources available at the University until there juniors and seniors, and it's almost too late to take advantage of them," said Machala. "So here's an opportunity to find out, in one shot, many things that might be useful for the academic future of many students."

Sexual assault, peeping Tom headline UMPD crime log

By Chris Thompson and Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police encountered two crimes of a sexual nature last week including an alleged acquaintance rape and a report of a "peeping tom" in the North Village Apartments.

On Wednesday October 25th police received a report of an assault and battery, the crime was upgraded to sexual assault. After completing additional interviews the police further characterized the crime as a male/male acquaintance rape.

"We haven't released any more information because it's still under investigation," Jim Lyons spokesman for the UMPD said. "This is a sensitive issue."

UMass police received a report on Sunday of a man peeping through windows in the North Village Apartments. A search of the area failed to locate the suspect, but he was later identified. The case is still open and is being actively pursued. The suspect was a white male with brown hair and blue eyes. The subject was also described as 6 feet tall weighing 245 pounds with a stocky build and being approximately 52 years old. He was last seen in the area driving off in a blue 1987 Chevrolet Cavalier sedan.

"If this person is spotted in the area, he should be reported to the police immediately," Lyons said. "Because of the interaction we have had so far we have been able to bring this to a successful conclusion."

UMPD officers arrested Sharif Bilodeau, 21, of Chicopee for operation a motorcycle without a license, failure to submit his license to a police officer, and obstruction of justice.

"He gave false information about who he was and it also turned out that he had a suspended license," Lyons said.

A fight broke out on the first floor of MacKimmie Dormitory on Friday involving 20 individuals resulting in minor injuries to two individuals.

"There was one female student who had an injury to her eye," Lyons said. "She stated that another female student had punched

Turn to POLICE page 2

Southwest erupts after Yankees win "Subway Series"

By Melissa Hammel and Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

Students in Southwest residential area erupted early Friday morning in a raucous celebration resulting in two arrests following the Yankee victory in the World Series.

The disturbance followed in the wake of last weekend's rioting by Southwest students after a power outage.

"We haven't identified this as a riot," John Luippold chief of the University of Massachusetts Police Department explained. "This was [a case of] students that were celebrating."

A crowd of approximately 200 students gathered in the Southwest living area chanting, "Yankees suck," "police suck," and "show me your tits." Periods of brief nudity marked the event as well as the burning of a Yankees' hat.

"One girl was wearing a Yankees jersey, sitting on somebody's shoulders, and someone threw a bottle at her," recalled Freshman Jessica Klein. "I thought it was pretty ridiculous. My friend was holding a Yankees towel, and somebody took it and burned it."

UMass police arrested Christopher Gallucio, 18, of Peabody for disorderly conduct and Ryan Betti, 18, of Milford for possession of a class D drug, possession of liquor and disorderly conduct.

"The cops watched until some small fights happened, and then they broke them up," said Megan Bisk a sophomore and a resident of John Quincy Adams, Bisk added, "The cops did a good job."

Bisk also expressed her exasperation over the behavior of her fellow Southwest residents.

"It wasn't a big deal," Bisk said. "It seems silly that people have to do that [riot] at this age."

Several other students complained about the celebration becoming dangerous to the people involved.

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Two arrests were made by the UMPD after students gathered near the pyramids in Southwest early on Friday morning.

"It was pretty crazy. People were crowd surfing but it died out," said Eric Schumacher a sophomore resident of John Adams. "It got old."

Schumacher also recalled students throwing bottles.

"My roommate was hit with a beer bottle. We couldn't see who it was," he said. "There were so many people."

According to Luippold, events such as these are more common with sporting events when the teams involved are closer regionally to Massachusetts. This was a dominant factor in the frenzy that occurred last year when the Boston Red Sox defeated rival Cleveland Indians in game five of the American League playoffs. Students, showing their support for the Red Sox, gathered in the Southwest living area and moved through the other living areas on campus.

"We haven't had [riots] in the past every year," Luippold said. "When the teams are more regional it leads to more interest."

Matthew Despres contributed to this article.

Police Log

Accidents
Oct. 25
A truck struck a light pole on the corner of Massachusetts Avenue and North Pleasant Street. The truck was then observed leaving the scene.
Oct. 24
A motorcycle crashed on Eastman Lane.
Oct. 25
A minor two-vehicle accident occurred on Massachusetts Avenue.

Annoying Behavior
Oct. 29
UMass Police received a report of a "peeping tom" looking in windows at North Village.

Assault and Battery
Oct. 25
An individual reported an assault at Dickinson Dormitory.

Arrests
Oct. 25
UMass police arrested Sharif Bilodeau, 21, of Chicopee for driving without a license.

Burglary / Breaking and Entering
Oct. 23
A vehicle was broken into on Forestry Way.
Oct. 24
A vehicle was broken into on Stadium Drive and moved. CD's were stolen from the glove box.
A lock was forced in a room in the Fine Arts Center.
Oct. 27
A bicycle was stolen on Forestry Way.
Oct. 28
A CD case containing a large amount of CD's was stolen from an unlocked room in Kennedy Dormitory.

Disturbance
Oct. 25
A fight occurred in John Quincy Adams Dormitory.
Oct. 28
Individuals threw bottles at Greenough Dormitory from Orchard Hill Drive.

Larceny
Oct. 24
Hubcaps were stolen from a vehicle parked on Authority Way. They were valued at over $100.

Vandalism
Oct. 25
The U-Card cable to the washing machine was cut in Moore Dormitory.
Oct. 26
The glass covering of a fire extinguisher cabinet was smashed.
Oct. 27
Three windows were broken on the French Hall Greenhouse.
Oct. 29
Windows were smashed on three vehicles on Massachusetts Avenue.

Ad against Nebraska gay-marriage ban pulled

By Jill Zeman
Daily Nebraskan (U. Nebraska)

(U-WIRE) LINCOLN, Neb. – An advertisement against a proposed gay-marriage ban that displayed the image of a swastika will not see air time as three Nebraska television stations have decided to pull it.
The ad was originally slated to run on KLTV last Saturday during the Nebraska-Oklahoma football game.
But the station, its parent company, Hearst-Argyle Television and legal counsel made the decision not to air the advertisement.
The ad begins with Nebraska's state motto, "Equality Before the Law."
Then, a blurred image of a swastika comes into focus and a speaker says, "Things like 416 have happened before. Let's make sure they don't happen in Nebraska."
KLKN in Lincoln and KHGI in Kearney also decided to pull the ad.
The manner in which this image was used may be perceived as offensive by some viewers or personally defame proponents of Initiative 416," according to a press release from KLTV.
M.E. McBride, campaign coordinator against Initiative 416, said campaign workers were disappointed the ad was pulled.
McBride said she knew the ad was controversial, but campaigners worked with a council of Jewish leaders to help determine its content.
"We believe it's our responsibility to tell Nebraskans the truth behind 416," she said.
The group spent about $25,000 on the ad, she said. Members are working to get the money back from the station. They hope to get it back before the election.
But some good has come out of the ad that was never seen, she said.
Several Nebraskans have approached the group and said the news of the ad made them realize the initiative is a civil issue, she said.
The advertisement is posted on the group's Web site, www.voteagainstdiscrimination.com.
"We all agree the swastika is the most horrific symbol of discrimination," McBride said. "416 is taking people down the same path."
Guyla Mills, chairwoman of the Defense of Marriage - Yes to 416 committee, said she was "very thankful" the station managers pulled the ad.
Mills also said she thought the opponents used the swastika as an effort to "inflame the audience."
It's unfair to people of Jewish lineage," she said.
Mills stressed her group was not trying to take away anyone's existing rights.

Interest engineered among women

By Lindsey Knox
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Chapter of the Society of Women in Engineering and the Women in Engineering Program at the University of Massachusetts hosted their annual Career Day in the Campus Center Auditorium on Oct. 30 from 8:45 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. The purpose of the event was to increase the awareness of the engineering field to female senior high school students and encourage them to consider engineering as a career option.
"This event is extremely important given that today's workforce is 46-percent females, and out of that only 9-percent are female engineers," Dr. Vanessa M. Rivera, the Director of Women in Engineering Program and the Assistant Dean of Student Affairs for the College of Engineering, said. "There is a tremendous need for companies to have engineers in general because the era that we live in, there is a demand for technical engineers."
According to Rivera, 50 to 60 high schools from all over the state were invited to the event, and each school is asked to select six to 10 students. Out of those 60 schools, there were 210 female high school seniors, accompanied by guidance counselors and teachers that attended from 26 schools.
"We want to increase the awareness that there is a tremendous opportunity, excitement and energy in the field. They should cherish the challenges that come along," Dr. Rivera said.
Rivera also said that she has noticed more interest from female students since the event began.
"You see more females interested in the field, and we have experienced an increase in attendance [at the event]," Rivera said. "This years incoming freshman class had 20-percent female students that were engineer majors."
However, according to Rivera, the number of female engineers in the workforce has not increased. This is due to a lot of Environment and Social factors.
"Women are shying away from taking high demand courses in math and science. Some environmental factors may be lack of exposure to role models and what engineers do," Rivera said. "Some cases may be the fear that the field is way to rigorous to succeed in. We are trying to reverse this factor."
The organizations hope to accomplish this is by increasing the awareness of what the field offers through yesterday's event. Students got the opportunity to meet with engineers and see products that they have worked on and learn what it is like to be an engineer, according to Rivera.
This years Career Day was co-partnered by corporate engineering members who provided interactive displays for the students. These corporations include: the Hamilton Sundstrand, IBM Corpotation, Tighe & Bond, Raytheon Company and General Electric Company. The day's events also consisted of a panel of women engineering, which included UMass alumni and faculty, and a panel of UMass women engineering students.
Engineering students can also get involved on campus through The Society of Women Engineering (SWE) and The Women in Engineering Program (WEP). The SWE is a non-profit educational service organization of graduate engineers, both women and men with equivalent engineering experience. It was founded in 1950 and consists of more than 14,000 members in 79 local sections and 277 student sections, with one at UMass. The WEP was established in 1983 and assists the College in the recruitment, retention, and professional development of women. This is done by academic and non-academic activities.

■ police

continued from page 1

her in the eye."
According to Deputy Chief Barbara O'Connor explained that students wanting to fill out a show-cause form could either go to a district court or the UMPD who would assist them.
"We at the UMass police department would fill out a show cause form and submit it for you [the alleged victim]," O'Connor said.
A female student in Van Meter experienced a violent reaction to LSD early Sunday morning. Officers were dispatched for a medical emergency.
"Upon arrival the person was struggling and screaming and ambulances and other officers were requested," Lyons said.
The woman was transported on a stretcher to an ambulance which brought her to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.
A female student reported to the UMPD that a drunken male student staggered into her room in Washington Dormitory on Saturday. The next day she found a disturbing note on her message board. The student then asked to be relocated out of fear for her safety.
A Pioneer Valley Transit Authority asked the police to check on the well being of an apparently sick raccoon in a bus shelter. The police did not find the raccoon.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gaglewsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuna Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Burton Forum K2 Santa Cruz
A SNOWBOARD SHOP
Gear up to Get Down
THIS WINTER
Rt. 5 Easthampton (413) 586-8766
Oxygen Four Square Banfire
Never Summer Ride
Western Mass. Largest Snowboard Dealer!
PRICES THAT CAN'T BE BEAT!
Adult packages starting at $295.00
Board/Boots/Bindings!
Rt. 83 East Longmeadow (413) 781-5142
Special Blend Salomon

Promoters wanted for Night Club
Northampton
CLUB METRO
Call 413 • 582 • 9898

FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY
LIVE, STUDY AND WORK ABROAD WHILE EARNING COLLEGE CREDIT
• Year and semester-long programs in JAPAN, CHINA, ISRAEL, INDIA, ENGLAND OR COSTA RICA.
• Year-long program in Comparative Religion & Culture in TAIWAN, THAILAND, INDIA and ISRAEL
Experiential learning through cultural immersion, academic seminars, and independent field study makes Friends World the educational experience of a lifetime
(631) 287-8474
e-mail: fw@southampton.liunet.edu
www.southampton.edu/fw
FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY
239 Montauk Highway • Southampton, NY 11968
GLOBAL EDUCATION FOR SOCIAL CHANGE

We're giving away 5,000,000 shares of our start-up stock!
(What the hell. It's only money.)
Visit our website for the scoop.
SonicSave.com

NEED HELP FINDING A MAJOR?
Come to the MAJORS FAIR!
Wednesday, November 1, 2000
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
Don't miss this unique opportunity to explore the impressive range of majors & resources available at UMASS: representatives from more than 70 departments & programs in one location.
Sponsored by Pre-Major Advising services, The Commonwealth College/Honors Program & The Campus Career Network

Massachusetts School of Law
AT ANDOVER
CLASSES START IN JANUARY
• LSAT NOT REQUIRED
• DAY AND EVENING PROGRAMS
• AFFORDABLE TUITION PLANS - 1/2 THE MEDIAN LAW SCHOOL TUITION IN NEW ENGLAND
• OUR PRACTICAL/THEORETICAL PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR THE PRACTICE OF LAW AS WELL AS NUMEROUS OTHER PROFESSIONS
THE LEADER OF REFORM IN LEGAL EDUCATION
500 FEDERAL STREET, ANDOVER, MA 01810
Phone (978) 681-0800 • email: poolby@mslaw.edu
www.mslaw.edu
CONTACT US NOW FOR YOUR COPY OF FEDERAL REPORTS 600 - THINGS YOU CAN DO WITH A LAW DEGREE

Multiband
26th Annual MUSICAL EXTRAVAGANZA in the Fine Arts Center
Presented by: Department of Music & Dance
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST 545-2227
Jazz, Percussion, Wind Music & Modern Dance
Friday, November 3rd
8 pm • Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Featuring:
Jazz, Wind & Percussion Ensembles, Dancers, & Minuteman Marching Band
Tickets:
• $18 General Public • $12 UMass & Other College Students, elders & children under 18
Order tickets early. Last year's performance was sold out!!
Tickets available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (413) 545-2511
Multiband Pops is Co-sponsored by:
Advocate Alumni Association WHMP 1430AM 22 WWLP

Students get dirty to clean up Conneticut river

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

The trash that once was is no longer after Water Watchers spent the past weekend cleaning up the Connecticut River.
This group is just one of many groups that makes up MASSPIRG, a student organization that seeks to make improvements within our environment.
This past weekend, in celebration of Make a Difference day, 50 Water Watchers volunteers headed off to clean up trash at the Connecticut River for the second time this semester.
"It's really incredible, a lot of the campaigns are really political, and it's just amazing to get people together to make a difference and see results at the end of your day," said Laura Keyser, Water Watchers event coordinator.
This up and coming weekend will be the groups third clean up of the year and will be in preparation for the groups big spring clean up at the Chicopee River.
"It's been hard to get people out there on Saturday mornings, so this Sundays clean up is going to be in the afternoon and is going to be a preview of what the Chicopee clean up will be like in the spring," said Water Watchers organizer, Elizabeth Fenzel.
The group's focus has been mainly on the cleanup, as well as getting a general awareness out to the community.
"It's great to get the community and students involved and to get a hands on approach to learning about our environment. It's good to make people aware of what is going into the rivers, such as old mills and the dumping that takes place from them as well as other legal sewage waste that goes into our rivers," said Fenzel.
The group's final endeavor into Chicopee will be wrap up the year's events.
"Amherst and Northampton are generally rather clean, so were looking forward to moving the clean ups to other areas, such as Chicopee that are a real disaster areas," said Keyser.
Education is also on the group's agenda this year as it has been educating students at Amherst Elementary as well as working with the Springfield Museum of Science.
"There's been a really positive response, were hoping in the future to move out into the Holyoke school district and eventually develop our own lessons to teach the kids," said Fenzel.
Water Watchers also takes part in water testing around the given areas as well as other related projects.
"We have people who do water testing, check the pollution status of local rivers, look at if we have endangered species do to the pollution as well as people who perform chemical testing," said Keyser.
Although all of these things make up the group, Fenzel and Keyser both explained that in order to make Water Watchers grow, more volunteers are always be needed.
"We've mainly been focusing on the Five College area so far, in regard; to volunteers and we would like to get other community members as well as local high school students involved in the clean ups," said Keyser.
"We encourage activism whether it be political or by performing clean-ups. It's great to get out into the environment and at the end of the day to see the results."
Anybody more interested in the group should call Water Watchers at 545-0199 for further information.

THE ASIAN DANCE AND MUSIC PROGRAM SERIES PRESENTS
Festival of Lights
Angkor Dance Troupe and Nataraj Dancers
Saturday, November 4
Bowker Auditorium
at 8pm
A stunning evening of performances showcasing classical Indian and Cambodian dance styles www.chec.umd.edu/angkor www.umass.edu/fa/asian
Call the Fine Arts Center Box Office 1-(413)-545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS

Nice Mass
Critical Mass meets the last Friday of every month in Amherst center to promote bicycle advocacy.

VISITING CHEFS
THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2
4:00 PM - 7:00 PM
Chefs from your favorite local restaurants will join our staff in the dining halls to prepare their most popular menu selections.
WORCESTER DC
GREAT WALL 長城 CHINESE RESTAURANT
FRANKLIN DC
EASTSIDE GRILL
BERKSHIRE DC
BUB'S BAR-B-Q
'Pig Out In Style'
HAMPSHIRE DC
LA VERACRUZANA MEXICAN RESTAURANT
Please join us for this special event
Free to all Resident Board & YCMP students
UMASS FOOD SERVICES
Great Food Great Fun!
www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

Are You an SOM major?
What are You doing to give yourself the experience you need for a competitive edge in the Real World? Get this experience in a great setting on campus!
The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

is now
accepting applications for an Assistant Business Manager.
Please turn them into the Collegian Office in room 113 of the Campus Center, Contact: Erin Renner

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Oliver absent;
UMass overlooked

With the political world heating up in this, the last week of the elections, campaigns from all over are upping their effort in an attempt to win our votes. Candidates are buying newer and nastier advertisements for our televisions. Candidates are debating one another. And most importantly, candidates are visiting their constituents.

Be it Al Gore and George W. Bush campaigning across the nation for possible voters or gubernatorial candidates visiting state residents, candidates from all over are visiting the people that might vote for them. Why, even on the UMass campus, candidates for office have even visited us.

Carla Howell came earlier this week and Peter Abair made an appearance last week. Howell, a Libertarian, is running against incumbent Ted Kennedy. Abair, a Republican, is campaigning for a seat held by John Olver, a member of the United States House of Representatives.

But while Howell and Abair have visited us, neither of our Democratic representatives has chosen to do so. While we can understand why Kennedy, an absolute lock to win, wouldn't visit us because, overall, he hasn't really campaigned anywhere in the state, we wonder about John Olver.

He has twice cancelled appearances on this campus, thus depriving the student body, whom he would partially represent, of having any access to the candidate. He has campaigned in Amherst and Hadley and Northampton, yet has proven incapable of making what would be, at most, a two hour long appearance on our campus.

He can't come today because he has been kept in Washington due to Congressional ineptitude, a member of his campaign staff described the first district representative as a "relentless" campaigner.

Apparently his relentless campaigning, while it involved the majority of the first district, hasn't brought him to the UMass campus.

Such behavior is both disrespectful and rude, yet another slap in the face to our academic community by individuals who do not value who we are or what we represent. Mr. Olver, like so many local politicians and especially Amherst politicians doesn't care.

We have witnessed continued disrespect of our needs and our community by the town board, despite the fact we have shown we can elect the candidates that we want to see in office. Anne Awad certainly owes this campus a considerable debt of thanks for what we did for her. But what of the other local politicians?

They have continually ignored student needs, verbally declared war on our campus and indicated that we just aren't a part of their political dealings. And now Olver, instead of coming to UMass, a group that could swing elections if truly motivated, has chosen to avoid our campus, our concerns and most importantly, our community.

Such behavior isn't the behavior of a representative; it is the behavior of an exclusive untouchable politicians. That isn't the kind of behavior that we expect from our leaders and we can only that hope that Olver's absolute immaturity isn't indicative of further political ineptitude.

Because we've got enough from our leaders, we don't need anymore.

"Real" rock and roll

RYAN BENHARRIS

I've been quiet way too long. The upcoming election has me fuming. I hide behind articles about Eminem or job hunting, as I fight the urge to bludgeon you with my opinions on Bush, Gore and Nader. I want to discuss my ideas on foreign policy and my concern for inner city schools. These are issues we need to tackle. Nah, screw it, I'll just talk about porn.

Scared you for a second didn't I? No more beating around the bush. We all know that even though the Bible said that on the seventh day God gave us rest, I say he gave us porn. Now, my desire to talk about the adult entertainment industry didn't just pop up all of a sudden. It was actually sparked by an article I wrote for the Sports department last week.

Somehow, while writing an article about college rodeo, I made a comparison of bull riding to pornography. Being the tenacious journalist I am, I decided to call an expert in each field. After a conversation with the coach of the women's rodeo team at the University of Tennessee, I called the coach of the woman's exploitation team at Adults Only porn store in Hadley.

My conversation made me realize something right off the bat about porn connoisseurs: they're all wackos! (No pun intended) The man on the phone whisked through phrases like "Who wants to watch something that only lasts eight or nine seconds," straight-faced. I assume he was talking about rodeo. I began to become more curious.

While flipping through the channels, I thought to myself, "You know what I should do? I need to watch me some porn!" Since HSCN deprives us of the fine adult networks like Spice, Playboy, Whack and whatever else there is, I had to settle for the next best thing, VH1.

Ah sweet VH1, the place where porn goes to die. Or at least that's what you'd think. Amidst the premier of the new Sting video, and episodes of "Pop Up Video," VH1 ran a truly important documentary program. The show tried to find an answer to that age-old question of, what happens if porn stars decide to become rock stars?

"Porn to Rock" looked at the lives of four ex and current porn stars who rose to the occasion and entered the rock industry from the back door while no one was looking. Their names were about as genuine as their desire to pursue an honest life of song. Johnny Toxic, Mark Stone, India and Houston all basked in the glory of the porn industry. All would take it one step deeper.

Mark Stone is a man with a strong, hard name who simply refuses to get on his knees and beg for acceptance. He takes charge. When all is said and done, he demands satisfaction! VH1 reported the struggles of Stone's life, and where he began before he ventured into the recording industry. "Mark was the godfather of gonzo porn," they explained. They neglected to elaborate on what gonzo porn actually was, but I assumed it had something to do with that big nosed guy on the Muppets. You know what they say about guys with big noses? Stone whole-heartedly admitted that becoming a musician was tougher than he originally assumed it would be. "Porn is definitely a full time endeavor," he said, "so it makes being in a band difficult." I suppose he should learn to prioritize. He honestly wants to be a rock star though. He said, "I am into doing music." You would think a man would simply settle for being the grandfather of gonzo porn, but not Mark Stone. He wants to "do" music. Stone is currently set to release a full time album he produced with his brother called, Thousand Year Itch, I'm assuming it's a reference to how he got his nickname in the sex business – crabs.

Johnny Toxic knows what's up. He's dabbled in the trial and error world of pornography and rock. "All porn stars want to be rock stars," he says, "We'd dress as transvestites or in scuba gear or whatever, but nothing helped." Don't you hate it when you're a porn star, and even dressing up in scuba gear doesn't make you a rock star? What I don't understand is why he didn't just pick up a guitar. When he finally busted his hump into music, Johnny's first band was called, Wheat Whore. Now, I had "the talk" with my dad, and I went to ninth grade health class, but I still have no idea what the hell a wheat whore is. Come to think of it, I'm pretty sure that I don't want to know what the hell a wheat whore is. When the record companies deemed Wheat Whore to be too offensive of a name (and I have no clue why they would), it was changed to "Goldo." The narrator of the show proclaimed that due to the change, "Johnny was feeling suffocated." (Wasn't that how the guy from INXS died?) To deal with the suffocation, Johnny "went on to do several solo projects." Funny, in the world of rock, a solo project makes you a God. In the world of porn, a solo project means something entirely different.

"Porn to Rock" would certainly not be complete without female perspectives. The first came from India – the porn lord, not the country. She described herself as "A soft spoken mama's girl with a voice that could rock a room." I guess it was her vocal chords that got her all those jobs. The story of how India became a porn super goddess was quite interesting. The narrator tells, "Ironically, while walking along the beach in Venice, CA, a porn producer saw her and immediately offered her a starring role in a film, which she accepted." Now, ladies, help me out with this one, but if you're walking on the beach and a dude asks you to come back to his place to star in a porno, which fist do you use to knock him on his rapist ass first? Anyway, India went on to star in over 120 films. She says, "Singing's always been in my heart, and when something's in your heart, you can't leave it." Yeah, but what about all of the things you've had in your...forget it, that joke's much too easy.

The last superstar on VH1 was a woman known as Houston. She's recognized all over the globe for breaking the world sex record. Apparently she had sex with 500 men at once. A woman like that clearly has too much talent to be wasting away in a porn studio, so she made a demo of herself covering Christina Aguilera's "Geenie In a Bottle," and the record companies ate it up! Houston exclaims that she has found her calling in music, and "just wants to rock." "I want to bring back the 80s she says." Apparently men numbers 80-89 were her favorites. Houston acknowledges that her porn career touched people's lives (or made them touch their own "lives"). "I've done it all. All I have left to do is prove I'm a rock star." I guess she's right. She's done everything else.

VH1 was extremely sneaky during the airing of this very important documentary. Even during the commercial breaks, they ran ads for Ball Park Franks that "plump when you cook em." They had one commercial for the upcoming "Behind the Music" on Tiffany. I was uninterested though. I've decided that I only care about musicians with names like Mark Stone, or who have banged 500 guys at once.

So as I promised before, here's my social commentary on the upcoming election. I support whichever politician used to be a porn star. I'd definitely vote for Ron Jeremy, Pam Anderson or Eric Cartman's mom. "Porn to rock" was nothing but shear information. Personally, after seeing this, I plan to petition Chancellor Scott to add a "Porn to Rock" course to the curriculum. People need to know!

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist

Q and A

What vote will most tangibly affect the lives of U Mass students on November 7th? The one between Gore, Bush, or Nader? No. A much less exciting local contest will affect the lives of people on this campus much more directly than the outcome of the presidential race. This contest has no faces attached to it, no annoying misrepresentations or sighs and relatively little hype. I'm talking here about Propositions 4 and 6.

Neither Gore nor Bush will affect your class size, your ability to get the classes you need nor your ability to graduate on time. But Proposition 4 and 6 will. If these referendums pass, expect to see fewer course selections, bigger classes, more faculty attrition, delayed graduations and no building repairs. As a teacher here, I've had to turn away at least a dozen, pissed-off students every semester because there's not enough kids in the class. I shudder to think of this getting worse.

These classroom-eating monsters are disguised as something seemingly benign, a tax cut. Proposition 4 calls for a reduction of the income tax rate from 5.85 percent to five percent, and Proposition 6 would make tolls on the Mass Pike tax deductible. Combined, these would reduce the state budget by $1.9 billion annually. Critics have pointed out the fact that these tax cuts benefit the wealthy disproportionately. Proposition 4 for example, the richest one percent would save more than the bottom 60 percent combined. But very few have talked about the effects of these referendums on UMass.

If Propositions 4 and 6 pass, the University expects a five percent cut in its budget. Fuzzy math? We know this because department heads have already been asked to submit damage assessment statements to Whitmore, responding to the question, "What would happen to your department with a five percent cut?" Just to illustrate what a five percent cut means, let's look back to the budget cut scare of 1990-91.

As many of you remember, there was a tremendous uproar over the administration's announcement of budget cuts at that time, because among other things they threatened the loss of over 100 Teacher Assistant (TA) jobs (roughly 10 percent of the teaching force). The proposed cuts were triggered by the fact that the University received only a five percent increase in state allocations, rather than its expected six percent increase. If there were 100 fewer teachers with a five percent increase, imagine what we're facing with a five percent cut! Incidentally, another reason the administration decided on the cuts last year was that they feared Proposition 4 would pass, and thus they wanted to do some preparatory belt-tightening. Fortunately, due to the uproar on campus, those cuts never happened.

CHRIS VIALS

But why is the University so fragile? Why would the failure to get a pay raise create chaos? This is because UMass is chronically under funded. Massachusetts is 48th out of 50 states for funding for public higher education, and even the budgetary increases over the past five years have merely allowed us to play catch-up to the funding levels we had in the 1980s. As a result, UMass has a $300 million maintenance backlog and retiring faculty have simply not been replaced. Moreover, inflation, the ever-increasing demand for a college education and ambitious plans for new computer networks continue to drive costs higher.

Cellucci denies there will be any drastic effects accompanying these cuts. The state has a big revenue surplus this year, he argues, so why not give it back? Reality is unfortunately not so simple. We can't count on surpluses in the future, and besides, most of last year's surplus was eaten up by the Big Dig. But more to the point, our situation here at UMass shows the public higher education coffers can't afford to loose a cent. So if you want to get into classes, graduate on time and continue to attend a quality institution, Vote "No" on Propositions 4 and 6.

Chris Vials is a graduate student and teacher in the English Department.

The sporting life

ANNA FAKTOROVICH

Somebody had to say this before: there is no goal, there is only the game.

Sports, there is something untouchably sacred about them. I'm nosey, so I'll ask: if you've never played sports, why not? And if you play sports, why do you do so? What makes you get out there on the field and participate in an activity that can't be reasonably explained? Or can it.

The sweeping spirit of sport hasn't engulfed me as it has others. I "don't have the body-type for it," as a ballerina instructor said rejecting my acceptance into her class. But when I do play, there is that moment when a game begins. That moment is when something in and around my heart explodes, fills my lungs with a burst of... I don't know what. It's a really funky and lively feeling.

One of the most extreme sport activities that I remember from my childhood is skiing practice. To practice before skiing I ran in large circles, by a barbed-wired fence, around an old building in the middle of nowhere. My lungs could never quite handle running. I don't have asthma. I just get exhausted and breathe really heavily – as if instead of snow, there is dust all around and I've been running forever on a roller coaster in hell. But you have a happy Halloween by the way? Sometimes when I run, I imagine a pulling-string in my fingers, you know, like the one they have to get to the top of a hill, and I grab on to it. And then I try to convince myself that if I can just hang on to it, the whole running thing would be a breeze. But what can I do? I'm only human. So, I just run and hope it will end sooner than later. After the run, I climbed through bushes and snow to the top of the hill to ski, and fell into every second bundle of snow. But when I look back I just think wow, me, a ten-year-old kid, skiing down a mountain, I don't know - sounds creepy. Why did I do that? I can't remember.

Come to think of it, I can't explain most things I've done. Why on earth did I try to join my high school hockey team? You know Framingham High School hockey – yeah – they are real mean devils on that team – and one day I got the urge to join them. And so I came to the first practice. I fell on almost every lap. My feet were aching like I couldn't believe. And when I did the circles, the whole place was spinning. One moment that stands out was in a practice game we played that day. I didn't have my helmet on because it squished my head and hurt my whiskers. I was trying to get the puck away from an opponent. And we were getting closer and closer to the boards. And at the moment when I was inches away from the wall, I suddenly realized what I was doing, started to slow down and said "sorry," in a low apologetic tone. In response, the girl smashed me into the wall. I didn't even notice the wall and kept on going after her. Somebody in the audience screamed, "Go Anna." Once I heard this exclamation, I realized that I had just succeeded in achieving the reason I was on that field in the first place – and I never played hockey again.

Actually wait a minute... yes, yes, I've got it! I do know why I tried to join that team. When I was a kid, a relative of mine was playing hockey with a bunch of his friends. They were all boys. It wasn't just hockey. For example, they played this game where they would pretend they were ninjas and would fight with each other, and the robot war... Well that's not my point. So, this one time they were playing hockey and I came over, and I had my skates and was ready and psyched to play, but they said: "No, you are a girl. Girls don't play hockey." What's up with that? I hate when people tell me I can't do something. Note to those who are planning to compete with me in anything, whatever you do, don't tell me that you think I'll lose. I'll beat you at that game and a few more down the road.

Another sport that's a passion of mine is skating. My heart turns every time I see a skater. What? There was this one time in Brooklyn when I was skating in circles around the park and there was this other kid there also making circles, so I proposed a race. We started going around and we were in a tight race. Then I saw this group of children in front of us and I swirled away from them and smashed right into a poll while he kept going. He came back and said that he thought I was just trying to make him stop so that I'd win. Man, it takes a brick will and stone determination to win in a sport.

As hard as I try to think differently, I still don't want to see the end – whatever wonders it holds. I just enjoy the means, the race. And then I remember, but how can I describe this? It's really difficult you see; it's silly. There was this guy in junior high and he was a skater. I was playing in this baseball game and he was right there behind me cheering. I was terrible and he didn't care. I always seem to lose. Even when I win, I really lose. I'm tired. I'm tired of endless games, but I can't live without them.

Sports played an unconsciously crucial role in my life. The moment of that explosion in the heart, I spoke about earlier, is a spark that lives in my heart as a triumphant recollection later in life, when I'm down and need an inspiration to go on.

Sports are a mystery to me. But I can't imagine my life without them. Inside my many losses in sports are some of the victories that I'm sure to remember for years to come.

Anybody who dares to play a sport is a winner. In sports are the natural animal instincts that humanity otherwise so successfully suppresses. But there is also the supernatural spirit of supreme greatness screaming loud and clear in the heat of the game.

Anna Faktorovich is a Collegian Columnist

Time to grow up

I am really pissed off. Now, if you are someone that knows me, you'll realize that for me it's a pretty strong statement. Usually, I am a very happy-seeming person, not someone who gets angry very easily. I often try to make excuses for other people's stupid or mean actions by trying to justify them instead of getting angry, just because I don't usually like conflict.

However, at the same time, I'm also someone who has very strong opinions on certain issues. There are definitely some things people can do to make me really angry. If you throw a cat at a car in Southwest, you piss me off. If you are a student athlete who feels like he is free from all rules and can therefore go steal merchandise at a local store, you piss me off. If you are some stupid guy who tries to get with girls at frat parties by getting them drunk and/or slipping drugs into their drinks, you piss me off. And if you're one of the inconsiderate, moronic students who vandalizes things on the UMass campus, you really piss me off.

The issue of vandalism at UMass has been on my mind particularly during the past week or so. This is because there has been a lot of vandalism occurring in my dorm, so to speak, on my own home turf. I live in Gorman, which is the multicultural dorm in the Central living area. I love living in my dorm. It's a really friendly place with lots of very interesting people, and I really enjoy being able to live in a social, diverse environment. For me, it's really the ideal place to live.

Having said that, I must also tell you that, right now, I am not particularly thrilled with my living situation. This is because throughout this semester, but particularly during the last few weeks, some of the people in my dorm have been vandalizing our building. A lot of the damage has been relatively small. For example, the flyers for different UMass groups and events on our walls have been getting torn down, and some of the bulletin boards have been torn or written on with markers. However, when you consider the fact that our RA's spend a lot of time every week putting up new flyers and creating bulletin boards, the damage doesn't seem quite so insignificant. Basically, the people who are ripping down posters are disrespecting Gorman's hard-working RA's, and they are also doing a disservice to their fellow students by destroying flyers and posters with important information on them.

Sadly, several major incidents of vandalism have recently occurred in Gorman as well. I was a witness to one of these incidents. When I came home last Wednesday night at around 2:30 am, hoping to peacefully go into my dorm and go to bed, I was shocked to find that the two trash cans in front of Gorman were overturned and trash was spilled all over our front stoop. You cannot imagine the horrible sight and smell of the assorted trash strewn about -- the half-eaten chicken wings, the dozens of cigarette butts, the almost-empty cans of soda, the crumpled papers, and even the occasional potatoes or banana peels. It was really disgusting, and it made me really angry. And there is even more to this tale of the systematic damage done to my dorm.

This weekend, while I was away, someone trashed the girls' bathroom on my floor, toilet-papering everything in the bathroom. In fact, there have been several incidents of people messing up the bathrooms in Gorman this semester. That Wednesday night, when there was trash on the front porch, I found that someone had broken the soap dispenser in the girls' bathroom and spilled soap all over the floor. My friend in Gorman told me that another girl's bathroom had had magazines thrown in all of the toilets a few weeks ago.

I am really pissed off about this whole issue. No one should have to wake up to that kind of mess in the morning in his/her home (because that's what dorms are to UMass students -- their home for most of the year). More importantly, even, the maintainers who work so hard to clean up after the students in the dorms should not have to deal with the extra work and mess of having to clean up the results of someone's stupid and mean desire to "mess things up." There is really no fun apparent to me in throwing trash around all over the place, especially if you do it in your own dorm and you have to wake up to the mess than you made the next morning. How's that entertaining? How is it fun to destroy your house and the place where your friends live? I really don't know too many people who would go home for winter break and break furniture or write on the wallpaper in their house for "fun." If you wouldn't do it in your own home, there is no reason to do it in the dorms. In addition, you have to share your dorm with tens or hundreds of other people, while you have to share your home probably with only a few others, so you should make a special effort to not destroy anything in the dorms and make life difficult for so many other people.

JEANIE GORLOVSKY

When I told my friends about the vandalism in Gorman and how heated it makes me, a lot of them shrugged their shoulders and said, "Well, those people were probably just drunk." To me, being drunk is not a valid excuse to do stupid things when they affect the lives of other people. If you want to get drunk and then puke all over yourself in the bathroom, that's fine with me, as long as you puke in the toilet and then flush after yourself. In that case, you are not hurting anyone else but you. However, if you feel like you can get drunk and rip down posters in your hall, or go throw trash around all over the place, and then not have to take responsibility for your actions because you were wasted, think again. It's your decision as a person if you want to drink enough alcohol or use enough drugs to be wasted enough to not think about what you are doing or remember it the next morning. If you make that decision, however, you are not absolved of the responsibility for your actions while you are wasted. I don't care if you want to go out and drink, go ahead -- just don't destroy your dorm after you do. There is really no excuse for it.

Listen, people, we are in college now. We are not two-year old kids who draw on the walls with their crayons and get yelled at by their parents. We are lucky enough to not have to clean our own bathrooms in college, but the maintainers are not here to clean up other huge messes that we make because we are drunk, foolish, bored, or just mean. Everyone who lives in the dorms should have enough sense to treat their living area with respect, because he/she is the person who has to live there. If you want to run around and destroy your house when you are home, that's fine, but don't do it here at UMass where we all have to live together and every person in your dorm suffers the consequences when you decide to go damage something in the dorm. Grow up already! Don't make your life and the life of others more difficult and disgusting because you decide you feel like making a mess in the place where you live.

And, listen, if you are really bored this weekend and you can't think of anything more fun to do than toilet-papering the second-floor girls' bathroom or going outside to throw trash around, come to my room. I'll give you my Blockbuster card and a couple of bucks to go rent a video or something. Hey, in my opinion it's a lot more fun to watch even the stupidest movie ("Dudley DoRight" or "Rocky and Bullwinkle," anyone?) rather than to act like an irresponsible idiot by vandalizing your dorm for kicks.

Jeanie Gorlovsky is a Collegian columnist

No chicken

Recently, I witnessed the lunch line at Franklin D.C. spin out of control. Despite an obvious administration cover-up that has kept the incident shrouded in silence, I am here to expose it to the campus community. Furthermore, it is my feeling that the oft-suppressed social issue of Lunch Lady Bitterness Syndrome (LLBS) is to blame for the conflagration.

Here me out. If I were a lunch lady at our dining commons, I'd be bitter too. But sometimes even bitterness can go too far.

The content of wills between me and a lunch lady that I'll call, "Gladys," began at approximately noon on Monday, October 23, 2000. The day had begun normally with class and a Quaker Chewy Bar. Admittedly tasty, but low in nutritional value, the Granola bar was enough to tide me over. I was extremely hungry as I made my way over to Franklin, reaching the right side of the lunch line with my plastic tray and full-fledged appetite.

ELIZABETH PARISEAU

I was met with turmoil. Though it was Chicken Puck Day, the administration had both: a) Foolishly printed information in the Collegian as to the whereabouts of Chicken Pucks, the D.C.'s only edible entree offering that day and b) Had then proceeded not to stock enough chicken pucks for the hungry crowds sure to amass for the rare luxury of tastiness at the DC. Hence a common chicken puck problem emerged – a delay on refills of the trays of pucks being served to students, causing a lunch line meltdown. The problem was compounded by a lack of tater tots also. The entire DC system had slowed to nearly a standstill. The only remaining food was something along the lines of Broccoli-snot casserole – clearly not something that would placate the masses.

Enter "Gladys," and her LLBS problem. Frantic over the food shortage, her first reaction was to screech to her compatriot in the food-service trenches, "Ya got any chicken?"

"NO," the reply came back.

Gladys made sure we understood. "She's got no chicken," she grumbled belligerently at us, gesturing exasperatedly as if to say, "Go away."

She went back to her colleague one more time, however, just to make sure her research into the extent of the problem was thorough.

"Ya got any tatah tots," Gladys yelled.

"Just a few," was her colleague's reply.

"We only got a few tatah tots and no chicken," Gladys exhorted us, gesturing still more excitedly as if to say, "Now will you go away?" Most people caved in under her pressure.

Not I. No, I come from stronger stock than that. I knew I had to take a stand. Inspired by past student Chicken Puck Day heroes, including a young man I once saw actually have to pound his tray and yell in order to be served Chicken Pucks, I decided to take action. Or rather, not take action-just hold my place in line until my chicken was served.

This was crossing the line with "Gladys." She appealed in a panicked tone to the card-swiping lady. "Hold'em up," she screeched, at even higher decibels than during her earlier damage inquiry. "There's no more chicken."

Then I dared to do the unthinkable. "Do you know how long it's probably going to be for chicken, by any chance?" I asked, trying to sound meek, polite and understanding.

"LOOK! I have no Idea she snapped!" I know how to pick my battles. The time would come to fight, but not right now. I just nodded knowingly at "Gladys," and continued to wait.

In the mean time, other students came by to pile abuse on poor "Gladys." already bitter situation. "Is there any pasta left for the pasta bar?" One boy asked. "I have no idea!!" Gladys shouted. Her tactic was simple but effective, the student ran away.

It soon became clear that this was a desperate situation. Students were backing up around me, dumbfounded looks on their faces, still innocent, as I had only moments earlier, to the terrible chicklenessness of the DC. I knew it was up to me to fight on their behalf. I told them they could go around me. Most did, thanking me on the way by, but two other students joined me waiting.

Gladys could take no more. She turned on me. "You're holding up the line!" I told her that I was waiting for the tater tots and chicken.

I knew I had gotten her there. She may have had a rebuttal, but it was cut short by the sudden discovery of one more tray of tater tots. Excitement rippled through the line as the news of new tater rations was passed back. Soon students lost their chicken puck resolve and began flowing steadily by me again.

Two things came into play with what happened next. I was still a theme in Gladys' side with my waiting for the chicken. And then a new catalyst found its way into the mix. A male student took the first heaping spoonful taking an entire plate of tater tots. I knew I was in trouble.

In a matter of seconds, Gladys had inspected the young man's plate, and was on him before he could escape. She stood up and yelled, "What's the matter with you?!" The student made the argument that he could take as much as he wanted. When other students sided with the first guy, Gladys backed down.

She began to glare at me. Tough luck, Gladys, I thought. No more Mr. Nice Guy. I crossed my arms and kept waiting.

I waited and waited for a while with Gladys trying to play the Good cop now. This wasn't going to fly with me and she knew it. I told her I had all the time in the world and then our of nowhere someone yelled, "I got chicken!"

I did receive my chicken award. It was my right, and I meant to take advantage of it. But right at that moment I felt a strange sadness about winning – about leaving Gladys there alone in her bitterness. I knew it was time to move on. I moved off down the line all the while thinking, "We'll see each other again Gladys, there will be another Chicken Puck Day."

Elizabeth Pariseau is a Collegian staff member.

Your Opinion
Music, Sports and Politics

To the editor:

I could not agree more with your article "Dancing in their graves." I definitely understand when you talk about songs that have very personal meaning to you. I am the same way. Although, if I were you, I wouldn't have been so apologetic for being upset about people listening to songs in such a shallow manner. In my experiences, it seems that America is not being dumbed down as another article likes to claim is being shown by Playstation 2, but I digress.

Instead, I say it seems America is losing its soul. Once upon a time songs were used politically to protest the Vietnam War, or to express the anger of a generation, and while many songs still do this, the true meaning of the music has been glazed over by a sickeningly sweet layer of commercialism. Believe it or not I have friends that love N'Sync and Britney Spears, but drool over Eminem (aren't the 2 enemies??). And to refer to an article in the Collegian yesterday, MTV is no help, going from head bangers ball playing obscure metal groups at two in the morning, to playing TRL over and over and over, with the same videos over and over and over, and introduced by a VJ who looks bored to tears. Anyway, like I was saying, I think your article about people getting giggly to "Last Resort" is just another example of how America has lost its soul. After all, there was once a time rock and roll was considered the work of the devil, now heavy dark music is completely ignored because the artist is cute. As for that Fade to Black incident, that is just wrong. I would have slapped some of those people making out; I think Metallica would have slapped those people. That is almost as bad as people who listen to just "Another Brick in the Wall, Part 2" on Pink Floyd's The Wall. Lastly, if I were you, I wouldn't be envious of people who don't have depth enough to relate to heavy songs like "Last Resort", "Faget", "Suicide Note Part II", or "Fade to Black" on a personal level. Keep letting the music move you we are part of a diminishing breed.

Adam Bejilich
Sylvan

To the editor:

I enjoy reading and skipping through the Collegian during lunch and throughout class. I never was so appalled and disgusted until I read the Thursday, October 19 edition. Not one but two articles stuck out: these being the two anti-New York write-ups.

I don't know where to start with dealing with the article, "I hate NY sports". I am from New York and I have heard many malign sayings about New Yorkers and fans of the Yankees, and have learned to deal with it. But this article helped to define the "Masshole". I will get back to its meaning later. The writer is obviously one of the most jealous people around. He talks about how spoiled New York people are. What is he talking about? We are all the same people and some people may have it easier in New York, but the same applies to Massachusetts.

The writer Sam Wilkinson has some of the most ridiculous examples, like how the guy who runs the red light and never gets pulled over. He's obviously trying to show we can get away with anything, which isn't even close to making sense. Stating that no one gets pulled over in New York is nonsense because we probably get more tickets than any other state. Anyone traveling in the city or throughout the state knows that. Yes, we have dominated baseball this year and in the past, but does that make us obnoxious and snubby people. Do we walk around with "Redsox suck" shirts. NO, but I have seen plenty of "Yankees suck" or "NY sucks" shirts. Do we really suck? Have the Yankees not won twenty-five world championships, going on their twenty-sixth? No team has ever even come close to that. We don't go around bashing on other teams. We may brag, but we have all the rights in the world to. So why do we continue to hear the "NEW YORK SUCKS" chants?

The point I'm trying to prove here is that the writer here is jealous along with many other Massachusetts people of NY. They might not realize it, but it's shown in their attitude against us. Did we do something wrong by being great? I don't think so. I feel very strongly that if the tides were changed, and Boston had a strong baseball league, there would be no tension or hate against New York. Or if there anti-New York people lived in New York and spent time there, they would feel differently.

I even went to a party one time, and some guy said he couldn't talk to me anymore once he found out I was from New York. That kid is a real winner. This helps in my definition of a "Masshole". A Masshole is a person from Massachusetts that has negative feelings for other people regarding where they are from, and aren't very social in that they don't give most people the time of day. If you're from out-of-state, you might know what I'm talking about. I'm not saying all residents of Massachusetts fall into this category, because I've met many cool and fun Massachusetts people, but I've also met many kids that fit into my definition.

One main reason I wrote this letter today was because I wanted to get the point across that this paper isn't only getting read by Massachusetts residents, but people from all over the world. There are a large percentage of people that go to UMass that are from New York and surrounding states like New Jersey. I don't mind Sam's opinion - except for his ridiculous and far-fetched ideas. What I do get annoyed at is there are not many pro-NY articles. Maybe you should hire more diverse and cultured people? There should be some positive articles about the World Series and other out-of-state sports. I haven't seen any articles about scores and highlights of one of the most watched games in the country.

The most important thing to remember is that you are not writing for a high school, but for a college that has over 25 thousand people attending. Just please keep in mind: writers of the Collegian, that not everyone is from Massachusetts and loves Boston sports.

Thanks,
Jared Mones
UMass

To the editor:

In response to "Time to Grow Up in Southwest"...

The line that reads "...(just ask the inmates who aren't allowed to vote)." This is not true when it comes to Massachusetts. MA is one of the states that allows criminals incarcerated for felonies to vote in regular elections. Ironically, Referendum Question 2 for this year is about changing the state constitution to either: amend the law and limit the voting rights of incarcerated felons; or leave the law like it is.

Jonathan Parent
Cance

To the editor:

I participated in the first of a series of open meetings on October 16 to meet one of the two finalists for the Vice-Chancellor of Research Position. At the question and answer period, I asked Dr. Kuehn to address the following issues regarding higher education and environmental sustainability:

1.) Given the resource and waste impacts campuses have on the local and global environment in general, what role does higher education play in promoting ecological sustainability?

2.) Given his background in ecology, and his entrepreneur involvement in the biotechnology industry, what opportunities does he see to advance the goals of sustainability in the daily physical operation of a university.

This is what he said: "The goal is a very good one. There is not much opportunity for sustainability. You can't throw radioactive materials on the street."

He explained, due to the limited financial resources the University has, and the fact that it has already spent a substantial amount of money to meet environmental and safety regulations, there is really no opportunity to operate in a more environmentally sustainable manner.

I found his answer and his attitude towards the sustainability issue and higher education both disappointing and disturbing. With the mounting environmental problems facing humanity, and the public's awareness environmental stewardship, it's disappointing to see that as a seasonal educator in ecology and evolution, he has not seen the need to integrate sustainability into college curriculum and research.

It is also disturbing to find the old mentality of environment versus industry, in this case, environment versus research dilemma, could still thrive in the world of higher education where creativity and discovery are supposed to be the goals of education. The discovery and creativity in how to achieve what we want, but with a less environmental impact are still yet to be found in higher education.

On the other hand, private industries such as 3M, Dow Chemicals and others have discovered not only how they can benefit from the PR of being an environmental steward, but they can actually make a profit from source reduction or substitution of materials in dealing with toxic industrial discharges.

The Vice Chancellor for Research position has yet to be filled for UMass. Given the financial and academic importance of research in this institution, and the pride we all have for the discoveries and contributions made by UMass faculty and students, we need to find a leader who had vision and courage to lead us into the 21st century and the beyond.

There is another open meeting to meet the last finalist at 4:30 p.m. November 6 in room 811 in the Campus Center. I encourage you all to come. Check out this candidate and let your voice be heard.

Hwei-Ling Greeney
Poli-Sci dept.

COURTESY OF MUSIC AND DANCE DEPARTMENT

Go Into Your Dance

The University Dancers will perform at the 26th Annual Multiband Pops on Friday at 8 p.m in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Tickets are available through the Fine Arts Box Office at 545-2511.

All New. All Yours. All Free

No Brainer.

MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts
Amherst

The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T-shirt. Just another way to solicit MadAdz.com will hook you up.

$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.

Live & Learn.

MadAdz.com hooked me up.
Your Classifieds. Your Community. Free.

No purchase necessary. Void where prohibited.

Limp Bizkit: Chocolate insensitivity and the Hot Dog flavored oppression

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

This is not a test. This is reality." A robotic voice signals this warning for the first track, "Intro," on Limp Bizkit's new album, Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water.

The authenticity of Limp Bizkit's reality came in the form of one million purchased CDs in seven days, easily making it the number one selling album of the week. Besides the obvious fact that Chocolate Starfish is not that good, there are several other factors that would make the incredible demand for the album a phenomenon. However, no matter how hard you try to argue, the palpable truth is that Limp Bizkit is enormous. They may be the biggest act touring the country right now.

There's something wrong though. If you listen to the new Chocolate Starfish, it sounds normal. It sounds like Limp Bizkit. It has Fred and the boys giving shout outs to DJ Lethal, Ben Stiller and Xzibit. There are collaborations with other artists, but it also has doses of solo screaming. There's everything needed to fulfill your run of the mill pop-music record. However, there is something wrong.

Here it is, why you should be hooked to this article: the question of the day, the point of my argument. Buried deep within the jumbled mass of unhappy and mean spirited lyrics lies a dangerous message that we're overlooking. Allow me to share with you a quote from Fred Durst at the recent Anger Management concert in Worcester.

"This song is dedicated to Christina Aguilera that I king bitch." Durst then proceeded to play "Break Stuff" from the band's 1999 album, Significant Other. This has become a staple for every show on the Anger Management Tour. Durst makes the same dedication at every performance.

The fact that he's calling Christina Aguilera a bitch is terrible. What is much worse is that the lyrics of that song include lines such as "I hope you know I'm like a chainsaw/ I'll skin your ass raw" and "Give me something to break/ How about your...face." Here we see some very aggressively violent words targeting Aguilera, thrown on top of Durst calling her a bitch.

Why is it okay to call women bitches in music? Think about it. With all of the recent controversy about censorship in music surrounding Eminem, and his disgusting overuse of the word "faggot," the fact that women are being called bitches is ignored.

Before you start sending me letters about how it's okay for Eminem to say faggot because, "he doesn't mean gay" or "he's just trying to get a reaction," try to understand it on this level. Do you think that it offends people? Of course it does, and if it does, then your defense of his use of the word is weak. I like Eminem's music a lot, but that doesn't mean I'm obligated to defend what he says.

The world has forever come down hard on artists who use derogatory terms to define minorities. "Faggot" makes a return appearance on Chocolate Starfish on the song, "Getcha Groove On." Only this time it's in the form of "Knockin' faggots unconscious." Thanks for the wonderful visual picture on that one tough guy. A few years ago, Blessed Union of Souls was forced to change the term "nigger" to "brother" for acceptance on pop radio stations. Michael Jackson took a lot of heat on his album HisStory for using the word "Kike" as a verb. Everyone was so quick to catch all of these things, but at the same time, everyone overlooks the term "bitch."

Personally, I would never call a woman a bitch. That is a word that was solely designed to oppress more than half of the human population. There are so many more people that are being targeted when Eminem writes a song called "Bitch Please," or when Prodigy sings, "Smack My Bitch Up" than any other offensive term you can think of. For some reason, it has become acceptable to refer to women as bitches in song.

So while Limp Bizkit advertises the importance banding together a generation, they are secretly eliminating half of the population with one word. During the Anger Management concert, Durst pulled a woman out of the crowd to bring up on stage. He immediately made out with the woman for about ten seconds. Though she might not have minded, what does it say about Durst's opinion on the purpose of females?

On this week's Billboard chart of the top 200 album sales for the past week, six artists have at least one song where they refer to a woman as a bitch. All six of those artists are men. An astounding nine out of ten of the albums are from male performers. The most amazing statistic of all is the fact that Eminem does not account for any of these numbers. He clocked in at number 11 for the week. So if you think that he's the only one out there being hateful and mean-spirited, think again.

I hear it on campus all the time. A guy gets fed up with his girlfriend; she's a bitch. Some woman gets a higher grade on a test than you: she's a bitch. It has become much too acceptable, and music simply helps aid this acceptance along.

So what's the answer? I certainly do not promote censorship. If Limp Bizkit wants to call women bitches, they have the right as Americans to do so. I don't agree with it, but we can't stop them. However, it's too bad that they're so sneaky about it. Wouldn't it be great if they came out on MTV, and said, "We, Limp Bizkit, as a collective group of musicians would like to hereby publicly announce that we consider women to be bitches. By using this word, we realize that we are undermining the importance of the female population and do not really care."

Obviously this will never happen, they would lose too much money and would never sell one million albums in a week. Kids will continue to be deceived. I guess the robot's right. "This is reality."

The Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies
Presents:

Howard Zinn
Boston University (Emeritus)

The Myth of the Cold War

7:30 PM Wednesday, November 1
Thompson 106, UMASS

PAWSS

This event is free, open to the public, and wheelchair accessible.
For more information please call PAWSS at 559-5367 or visit http://pawss.hampshire.edu

WANTED

Sales experience helpful, but not necessary

Collegian is taking applications for:

ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVES

We are looking for Enthusiastic, Energetic, Organized and Self-motivated Freshmen, Sophomores and Juniors from any major that can work for next semester
If you are guilty of any of these traits.
Contact Eric or Kate at the Collegian Advertising Office at 545-3500 or stop in and fill out an application at 113 Campus Center Basement

APPLICATION DEADLINE September 8

Did you know....

[redacted]

DELIVERS

FRANK & TERESSA'S ANCHOR BAR ORIGINAL BUFFALO CHICKEN WINGS

TOMASSITO'S PIZZA
On campus
Sun. - Wed. 5:00 PM - 1:00 AM
Thurs. - Sat. 5:00 PM - 2:00 AM
Call 5-2039
www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

UMASS FOOD SERVICES

NBA embarks on 2000-01 season

FULL COURT PRESS with Glen Straub

After a summer of blockbuster trades, lucrative free-agent signings, and a mediocre "Dream Team" performance in Sydney, the National Basketball Association tipped-off last night. The 2000-2001 NBA campaign will be a time for organizations to enter new eras and start dynasties while others are left just trying get through the season and hopefully get a good draft pick in next June's draft.

One thing is certain about this season is the East is no longer the Beast of the professional basketball, because the West is the best.

Although it's hard to believe, the defending champions, Los Angeles Lakers, are possibly even a better team than last season's club. For starters, they picked up exiled Atlanta Hawks guard, Isaiah "J.R." Rider to provide some extra punch on the offense end. If Phil Jackson was able to contain Dennis Rodman in Chicago, then Rider's tardiness will be a piece of cake for the seven-time championship head coach to deal with.

The Lakers also improved their squad by acquiring Horace Grant in the Glen Rice-Patrick Ewing deal. Losing Rice's 14 points a game will definitely not be missed, because star guard Kobe Bryant has the ability to score another 10 points a game. Plus, with the presence of a good power forward such as Grant, Shaquille O'Neal will be less susceptible to double teams since teams know they cannot leave Grant open at the top of the key.

The team that has the greatest chance of stealing the Lakers' crown away is the Portland Trail Blazers. Name another team in NBA history that has had three all-star power forwards on their roster. I am sure you can't. The Blazers lost Brian Grant to sunny Miami in the off-season but there are no worries for coach Mike Dunleavy because they acquired Shawn Kemp and Dale Davis, both one-time all-stars, to help Rasheed Wallace at the position. This team is even deeper than were last year.

There is one cause for concern, however. Can center Arvydas Sabonis survive the marathon and be healthy when they are in the late stages of the NBA playoffs? If not, coach Dunleavy has plenty of bangers to throw at Shaquille O'Neal to put him on the foul line.

Tim Duncan resigning with the San Antonio Spurs saved the franchise. If he had not, then David Robinson and Sean Elliot may have retired and point guard Avery Johnson may have signed with another team. However, those are "what ifs." The Spurs are ready to reclaim the NBA title form LA and they finally picked up a solid shooting guard – Derek Anderson from the LA Clippers – to help the twin towers with the scoring responsibilities.

Other than unveiling new uniforms, the Phoenix Suns did not make much noise in the off-season. General manager, Bryan Colangelo obviously feels that the 1-2 combination of Jason Kidd and Anfernee "Penny" Hardaway – if both stay healthy – will be enough to go far in the playoffs. If forward Tom Gugliotta can return to his stellar play after recovering from a season-ending injury last season, the Suns can compete with the likes of Portland, LA and San Antonio in the playoffs.

The Minnesota Timberwolves have gotten off on the wrong foot so far, and the season has not even begun. Over the summer, starting two-guard Malik Sealy was killed in a tragic car accident and last week NBA commissioner David Stern punished the organization for having an illegal secret contract with sixth-man Joe Smith. Smith's situation with the team is still up in the air. However, if the Kevin Garnett and the rest of the TWolves want to win they need to win now, because they do not have a draft pick for the next five years as part of the punishment.

The Utah Jazz will once again will make a playoff run behind the ancient tandem of John Stockton and Karl Malone. The Jazz made some key acquisitions to help the dynamic duo such as Donyell Marshall, Danny Manning and John Starks. However, it is going to be hard for this team to win with a pick-and-roll style in the run-and-gun West.

Although they may not be able to compete for the championship, there are many clubs that improved immensely over the summer.

In acquiring future Hall of Famer Patrick Ewing, from the New York Knicks, the Seattle Supersonics finally have a productive center that will take the oppositions' attention off of power forward Vin Baker.

Don't be surprised if the Dallas Mavericks and the Los Angeles Clippers may lose their titles as laughingstocks of the league at the end of this season. Both clubs have an excellent crop of young players.

All of those Kings fans out there: your time on the bandwagon is dwindling. Do not be surprised if superstar Chris Webber is on a member of a different organization by season's end.

To many, the East this year seems "watered down" compared to the West. However, there are a couple teams that could give the juggernauts of the West some stiff competition.

The two teams from the Sunshine state – the Miami Heat and Orlando Magic – worked hard and succeeded this off-season. The Heat revamped their starting line-up by trading away Jamal Mashburn and P.J. Brown to Charlotte for Anthony Mason and all-star Eddie Jones. Jones will provide much needed scoring at the guard position and if coach Pat Riley and Mason can keep out of each other's way – the two quarreled on many occasions while they were both in New York – he will fit in nicely. The addition of Brian Grant will surely help the Heat frontcourt as well. However, with the absence of team-leader Alonzo Mourning this season due to a kidney ailment, Miami's dreams of a title may have to be held off for next season.

The team that shares the town spotlight with the duo of Donald Duck and Mickey Mouse now has a dynamic duo of their own to advertise on billboards. As expected the Magic front office dealt out the big bucks to two of the top free-agents, Grant Hill from Detroit and Tracy McGrady from Toronto to lead last year's Coach of the Year, Doc Rivers' squad. The team has high expectations of making to the finals this year and without a dominant center in the east this year, Jon Amechi could be the centerpiece to Orlando's eastern conference crown.

The two teams that have dominated the East in the "post-Jordan era" also bring a new look in the 2000-01 NBA season.

The New York Knicks are entering a new era. They traded away arguably the best player in franchise history, Ewing, to Seattle in exchange for Glen Rice, Luc Longley and Travis Knight in September. However, the blockbuster deal did not cure any of the team's problems. Charlie Ward is still the best quarterback in New York – not the best point guard, and Larry Johnson is still an undersized, ailing power forward. In fact the deal may have given coach Jeff Van Gundy a new conflict – how do you distribute the ball between three premier perimeter players?

Like their rivals, the Indiana Pacers lost their franchise center, Rik Smits, in the off-season – but to retirement instead. It is now Jalen Rose's time to truly shine. He will play all three perimeter positions for new coach Isaiah Thomas' squad once he returns from injury. Watch out for a breakout year for forward Jermaine O'Neal – who was traded to Indiana for Dale Davis. He will finally get the playing time to show his talents under Thomas' system.

The Milwaukee Bucks will look to take the Central division crown from the Pacers. Ray Allen had an excellent Olympics and Glenn Robinson wants to follow up on last years' all-star season. The Bucks also have an efficient point guard tandem this season. Sam Cassell is back to take charge, and they acquired Lindsey Hunter from Detroit over the summer to give Cassell some rest, so he is fresh for the playoffs.

Despite losing Tracy McGrady, the Toronto Raptors will still be a force to reckon with in the East. Hall-man, half-amazing Vince Carter will be a more all-around player this season since he is developing a solid jump shot as he showed in Sydney. With the signing of Mark Jackson, Carter will have someone to feed him alley-oops all day long. However, can the aging Jackson keep up with Carter?

Another team that will do significant damage in the East is the Charlotte Hornets. Jamal Mashburn is finally the top scorer on a team – something he has wanted for years – and with big men Elden Campbell, Derrick Coleman and P.J. Brown around him, the Hornets could surprisingly be the Eastern representatives in the Finals.

New Jersey, Philadelphia and Boston may not have much to look forward to this season. The Nets – despite getting the number one draft pick, Kenyon Martin – have had a bad case of the injury bug. Keith Van Horn broke his leg, Kerry Kittles is out for the season with a knee injury, and backups Jamie Feick and Lucious Harris are both out with various ailments.

The 76ers made no moves in the off-season to improve their squad, except for resigning forward Toni Kukoc. The biggest question with this team is who is not going to be in Philly at the end of the season: Allen Iverson or Larry Brown?

This is the last chance for coach Rick Pitino to put a winning team on the court in Boston, according to him. If the Celtics don't make the playoffs, Pitino says he will leave the organization. Il Antoine Walker and the rest of the Celtics want to keep their coach, they need to get their act together and win some games.

It is hard to say if any of the Eastern Conference teams have a chance in a seven-game series against one of the West powers. However, one thing is certain: the East is wide-and anybody can take the crown of Eastern champions.

Glen Straub is a Collegian columnist.

■ volleyball

continued from page 10

the Maroon and White high hopes, as they pulled out to a 6-1 lead early. But Brown stepped up for the Colonials, and on her serve ran off four consecutive points, including two kills of her own, to trim the lead to 6-5.

The two teams would jockey back and forth with the Minutewomen taking a 12-10 lead after a block by junior co-captain Lymaric Duvet and Baxter. GW took a timeout and from then on grasped control of the game, with a Jahnke kill finishing off the Maroon and White.

Hasson led the Minutewomen with nine kills and 14 digs, while DeMatte was just behind with 12 digs. For GW, it was Brown leading the way with her 24 kills, and Jahnke posting a double-double with 13 kills and 10 digs.

"Offensively, we never got in sync because of our passing," Kenny said. "GW has too many weapons to not have a good game offensively against them, so that was really disappointing."

The loss drops the Minutewomen another game behind fourth place Dayton, who has rolled since falling to the Minutewomen, including consecutive sweeps of LaSalle and A-10 leader Temple, who had been undefeated in conference until running into the Flyers. Only the top four teams in the conference play in the A-10 tourney.

Write for Sports!!!!

■ cross country

continued from page 10

Ketschek finished in 27th.

Senior Mike Pieck, led the way for the men with an 11th place run and a time of 26:08. Junior Kevin Curtin finished only nine seconds behind Pieck with a 26:17 mark, earning him 14th overall. Two New York natives finished with the same time of 26:24, as Ryan Corbett and Brendan Sullivan placed 20th and 21st respectively. Another senior veteran, Kevin Somers, finished 23rd with a final time of 26:28.

The men can take solace in the fact that they finished in the top half of the conference. However, the women must be disappointed in their failed bid for another conference title. Overall, the Minutewomen found themselves in second place for the first time since 1995. The Maroon and White ended its five-year A-10 championship streak as the Rams of Fordham spoiled the bid for a sixth.

There will be a Sports staff meeting on Thursday night at 5:30 PM. We will hand out winter beats and discuss the upcoming basketball magazine. Call Mike or Bryan at 545-0719 if you cannot attend.

Tu mange du sport?

Moi aussi!

©hoice

Does copyright have meaning in a digital world? Get the online music debate from the artists' perspective.

ARTISTS AGAINST PIRACY

www.ArtistsAgainstPiracy.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

2 My Little Here's your clue #2. Printed in public for all to view. Skinner Hall is where I can be found or in the Library not making a sound. Hang out with this is what I do best. So with all my work there's little time to rest. Soon enough you will find out. What big sisters are all about. Do you know who I might be. Hold on tight for clue #3. Phi Love your Big

Indoor Soccer League Teams and individuals welcomed. Begins Nov 6th. Call Jesse at Breakaway Sports 549-3638 between 1pm-6pm email golus@hotmail.com

Swing/Salsa Dance Northampton Center for the Arts. Wednesdays. Lessons 7pm $10, $7/students. Dance 8:30 $5 for dance only (413) 259-2982 (Mark)

OFFcampus Antics Find Deanna doing a handstand on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

U-MASS WOMEN'S CREW WANTS YOU! Come see why we want little people. 549-4038 ask for Sara

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Honda Civic Si 2door, great condition. $5000 call Erica 253-6504

1995 Saturn SLZ AC, power, sunroof, ABS, traction. $5000 537-0517

89 Dodge Van Best offer 586-0879

1990 Honda Accord EX 140k, moonroof, CD, great condition. $3800 O/B/O 546-2568

COMPUTERS

New Computer Cases with floppy drives. $30 accessories/parts available. Online store closing 256-5412

Work From Home - $1200 to $5000 pt/ft 1-800-716-3528

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research

EMPLOYMENT

Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer.

EMPLOYMENT

M/F

NURSING STUDENTS: Pick up some home care experience and earn some extra cash. Work as an Aide for our patients in the Amherst/Northampton area. Various days and hours available. Call today. Interim HealthCare, 586-7365

Last Chance Legal Assistants November 9, 2000 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office for the Spring, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required--training is provided. Contact Student Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Voice Talent Needed Internet/Radio start-up seeks fun + energetic person to be our VOICE!!! Radio/acting experience + interesting accent "particularly Jamican, W Indian" a plus. Call 617-598-1030 ext. 1230 for more information.

Hippodrome auditioning dancers to perform coreographed routines on a weekly basis at brandnew entertainment company in Springfield.

EMPLOYMENT

413-246-2275 www.hdrome.com Housekeeper Part-Time Car essential. 549-1578

Survive Spring Break 2001! Hottest destinations/hotels! Campus sales representatives and student organizations wanted! Visit inter-campus.com or call 1-800-327-6013

Attention! Work form home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call

MISCELLANEOUS

Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22 RAISE $1600-$7000 + GET FREE CAPS T-SHIRTS & PHONE CARDS! This one week fundraiser requires no investment and small amount of time from you or your club. Qualified callers receive a free gift just for calling. Call today at 1-800-808-7442 x 80 Beerpong Tables Make Great Gifts. Get that special someone a special table. 549-5950 ask for chad.

FOR SALE

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

You're curious, so call us. We're the beer-pong table guys MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles.

ROOM FOR RENT

Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899 Need Spring Housing? Studious female seeks the same to fill 2nd bedroom in Colonial Vge. Apt. Call 256-1232 for more info 3 girls need roommate for Spring in Brandywine $228/mo. Call Nadiah 549-4907

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1-2 females to share 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info. Massage in you own home! $15 per hour message student Michael 585-8577

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995 Calculus Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com Pregnant? Need help?

SERVICES

TRAVEL

Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906 Spend Winter Break in Mont Tremblant, Canada! 5 days ski/ride, 5 nites, roundtrip coach. Club party nites! 1/7-1/12 #1 resort in east! From $309! Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club @ 5-3437 or visit Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

Ski, Ride, and Party in Quebec City! 12/1-12/3 2 nites, 2 days lift tix! Roundtrip couch! From $159 $109 non-ski. Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club 5-3437 or stop by Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

CAMPUS REPS

EMPLOYMENT

NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring break.com

Montreal College Party Weekends Nov. 24 + Dec. 30. From $119. Includes round trip motorcoach. 3 days 2 nights Hotel Downtown full Breakfast + Dinner. Departs Boston, Springfield, + Hartford. Call 1-617-567-0062 Global Tours

Volunteer in Central America/Africa! Work in community development projects - lead health campaigns, organize teaching seminars, develop micro-enterprises. Institute for International Cooperation and Development. Call/e-mail for a free brochure. (413) 458-9828, iicd@berkshire.net

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn

TRAVEL

easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreak direct.com 2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash tours.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499

Can't sell that car?

What are you waiting for?

Advertise to Thousands

Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS/2 Hartford
4 - CBS/4 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - FOX 22 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN/20 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Pseudo Hartford
12 - PBS 24 Hartford
13 - NBC 40 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - WEATV (Academic Channel)
16 - WTNH New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - CNN2
19 - WVIT/NBC New Britain
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Good to Days
22 - A&E
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - Discovery
30 - Nickelodeon
31 - Sci-Fi
32 - Disney
33 - Comedy Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Broadcast Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 1, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Time to Choose: A Voter's Guide (In Stereo Live) (N)						Running Mate (In Stereo) (N)
WFSB	3	News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Bette (N) (N)		Welcome-N.Y.	"Children of Fortune" (2000, Suspense) James Brolin. (N)			News (N)	Late Show (N)
WBZ	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Bette (N) (N)		Welcome-N.Y.	"Children of Fortune" (2000, Suspense) James Brolin. (N)			News (N)	Late Show (N)
WCVB	5	News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey (N)	Spin City (N)	Gideon's Crossing "The Race"		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless (N)	Friends (N)	Nanny (N)	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) (N)		Felicity "Surprise" (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)		Friends (N)	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Titans "Frisky Business" (N) (N)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Law & Order "Dissonance" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	7th Heaven "Homecoming" (N)		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	7 Days (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N) (N)	Hollywood	Titans "Frisky Business" (N) (N)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Law & Order "Dissonance" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons (N)	Frasier (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Friends (N)	Simpsons (N)	Normal, Ohio	Street "Pilot" (N) (N)		News		Friends (N)	Frasier (N)
WWLP	22	News (N)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Titans "Frisky Business" (N) (N)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Law & Order "Dissonance" (N)		News (N)	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Time to Choose: A Voter's Guide (In Stereo Live) (N)						Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N)
WGGB	40	News (N)	ABC News	Seinfeld (N)	Frasier (N)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey (N)	Spin City (N)	Gideon's Crossing "The Race"		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WSBK	38	Judge Judy (N)	Judge Judy (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Frasier (N)	7 Days (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Frasier (N)	Mad Abt. You	Spin City (N)	Spin City (N)
WTBS	72	Roseanne (N)	Roseanne (N)	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order (N)		Biography: Drew Barrymore		Behind Closed Doors (N)		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Corruption" (N)
CNN	23	Worldview (N)	Moneyline Newshour (N) (N)		Crossfire (N)	World Today (N)		Larry King Live (N)		Newsstand (N)		Sports	Moneyline (N)
COM	35	Saturday Night Live (N)		Uncomfortably	Behind	★★★★ "When Harry Met Sally" (1989) Billy Crystal, Meg Ryan				N.Y. Friars-Rob Reiner		Daily Show (N)	Friars Club
DISC	52	Wild Discovery: Wolves		Bloodsuckers!		On the Inside: Death Row		Prison Riot: Five Deadly Days		Beneath Alcatraz (N)		Justice Files
ESPN	21	Sportscenter (N)		Billiards		NHL Hockey: Philadelphia Flyers at New Jersey Devils. (Live)						Sportscenter (N)
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo) (N)		"Love & Murder" (2000, Drama)		Wendy Crewson. (N)		Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	43	Direct Effect	Makeover	Truth	Diary	Say What? Karaoke Finals (In Stereo)				Jackass	Jackass	Truth (N)	Undressed (N)
NICK	53	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! (N)	Rugrats (N)	Told by Ginger	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	45	Sliders (In Stereo) (N)		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Viper "Pilot" (N)		★★ "The People Under the Stairs" (1991, Horror) Brandon Adams.				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	29	28 Survivor Science "Tornado"		Paramedics	Desert Sirens" (N)	Jump Jets		UFOs Uncovered		Suicide in the Air (N)		Jump Jets
TNT	25	ER "Sharp Relief" (In Stereo) (N)		Pretender "Bloodlines" (N)		NBA Basketball: Orlando Magic at Miami Heat. (In Stereo Live) (N)				NBA		"Planet of the Apes" (1968)
USA	15	Walker, Texas Ranger (N)		JAG "Shakedown" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Swingers" (N)		★★★ "The People vs. Larry Flynt" (1996, Drama) Woody Harrelson, Courtney Love. (In Stereo)
HBO	33	★½ "Ask Monay" (1994, Comedy) Melanie Griffith. PG-13 (N)				★½ "Big Daddy" (1999) Adam Sandler. PG-13 (N)		Charlie's Angl		Oz "Out o' Time" (In Stereo) (N)		Chris Rock (N)	"Crazy"
MAX	45	(5:45) ★★½ "Dumpier Old Men" (1995) PG-13 (N)				★★★ "The Matrix" (1999, Science Fiction) Keanu Reeves. (In Stereo) R (N)				★★★ "Arlington Road" (1999, Suspense) Jeff Bridges. R (N)
SHOW	55	★★★ "The Climb" (1997, Drama) John Hurt. (In Stereo) PG-13 (N)				★½ "Neil's Kitchen" (1998, Drama) Mekhi Phifer. (In Stereo) R (N)		Soul Food (N)		Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)		"Thicker Than"

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

I JUST DON'T UNDERSTAND THOSE NUMBERS NOWDAYS. HOW COULD I BE AT 0%?
CHAIR ACTIVE? ISSUES, SIR.
CHAIR ACTIVE ISSUES? WHAT DO YOU MEAN?
WELL THERE SEEM TO BE CONCERNS ABOUT YOUR LIFE STYLE.
MY LIFESTYLE? WHAT ABOUT STUDENTS? HE'S GOT A HISTORY OF ALCOHOL ABUSE AND COCAINE!
WELL, SO I DO. YOU, SIR, AND THEN SOME.
YEAH, BUT AT LEAST I DRINK IT! SCRUB, LADDIE!
GOOD POINT. THAT IS MORE PRESIDENTIAL.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

YOU'RE STILL WEARING YOUR COSTUME AROUND? HALLOWEEN IS OVER, BUCK
HALLOWEEN MAY BE OVER, MY FRIEND, BUT STYLE NEVER GOES OUT OF STYLE
SO YOU GOT STYLE RECENTLY, EH? SOD FOR YOU. I MUST HAVE MISSED THAT.
ROB ROB ROB YOU DON'T GET STYLE. YOU EITHER HAVE IT OR YOU DON'T SO UNLIKE FLEAS, FOR EXAMPLE, YOU CANNOT ACQUIRE STYLE.
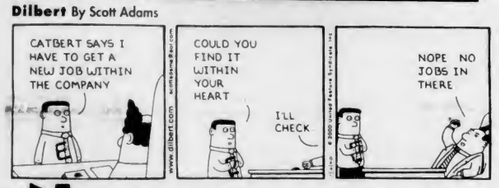
CORRECT. STYLE IS AN ATTRIBUTE WHEREAS FLEAS ARE MORE OF AN ACCESSORY AND A RATHER LOW-CLASS ONE, I MIGHT ADD

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Dilbert By Scott Adams



Robotman By Jim Meddick

JUST IN CASE YOUR SICK PERVERTED MIND THINKS THAT OUR CLOSE PROXIMITY IN THIS BUS WILL SOMEHOW REKINDLE SOME OLD CHEMISTRY WE ONCE HAD, FORGET IT!
QUITE THE OPPOSITE, I'M SICKENED BY THIS! I CAN'T WAIT TO GET OFF THIS BUS!
YEAH? WELL THE SAME GOES FOR ME! ONLY TEN TIMES MORE!
DO YOU WANT TO GET TOGETHER LATER AND HAVE A BEER?
HOW 'BOUT NOW?

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

OK? I'M POLLING AT 0%
YES, SIR.
AFTER A YEAR OF CAMPAIGNING, THAT?
YES, BUT THERE'S A MARGIN OF ERROR OF +1%
WHICH MEANS YOU COULD BE AT -1%
NECK AND NECK WITH RALPH NADER
GREAT. SO COULD YOU.
ME? I TIED WITH NO ONE?
SURE. THIS IS AMERICA. MONEY!

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

WHAT'S FOR LUNCH TODAY?
LET'S SEE...THERE'S CHICKEN POT PIE, PIZZA PIE, CHERRY PIE AND APPLE PIE
BASICALLY PIE, PIE AND MORE PIE
YOU DO THIS JUST TO TORMENT THOSE OF US WITH OUR TRIG MIDTERM TODAY, DON'T YOU?
YOU KNOW, YOU'RE THE 3.14159TH PERSON TO ASK ME THAT

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Horoscopes

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Try to use the word "mealy" as often as possible today. "Man, this sandwich sure tastes mealy." If your name is Steve Climo, you will suffer from a mealy red-butt you birthday boy/girl.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Today someone will accuse you of spending too much time with your computer. The way to handle this is to say you've got "lots of work to do" (I find I don't let them spot you fondly caressing it.)

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - While attempting to stifle a yawn today, you will accidentally make a loud "smacking" sound. Try bringing out your pager, and saying "these new models sure have some interesting sound options, don't they?" This will work well with several other involuntary noises today.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) - You will develop a passion for Cajun cuisine, and refuse to eat anything that isn't "blackened". Your friends will draw the line at blackened cornflakes, however.

Aries (March 21-April 19) - Go into class today and build a play-fort out of your desk. Hang up a sign that says "No Professors Allowed." Sit in your fort all class and play with dolls.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) - Ask someone if they mind stopping at the ATM with you. Then drive to New York, explaining, "Oh, I meant the Association of TeleMarketers. They're located in Albany."

Gemini (May 21-June 20) - An old man with bad teeth and the smell of Johnny Walker on his breath will whack you with his cane today, as you walk past. He'll pretend it is an accident. Put him in his grave.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) - Yawn incessantly. Comment on how those infomercials are wrecking your sleep schedule. You find Don Lapre rather magnetizing with those tiny, classified ads.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) - Not an especially good day to play with crossbows, guns, machetes, flame throwers, mortars, heavy artillery, knives, ninja throwing stars, mines, or nuclear weaponry. At least not all at once. Why not go out and putter about in the garden or frolic gingerly around hippie beach.

Virgo (Aug. 23- Sept. 22) - If a really good roast beef melt isn't the best sandwich in the world, Virgo doesn't know what is.

Aries (March 21-April 19) - A dangerous but comical event will occur everytime you ask the rhetorical question, "What next?"

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) - Remember: There is nothing wrong with a vigorous and athletic display of sexuality, so long as you have the money.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 54 LOW: 37	HIGH: 53 LOW: 39	HIGH: 61 LOW: 37

MONKEY BOX
BY FBB.J
"WOW, HAVE YOU TRIED THESE CHIPS? I LIKE THE BLUE AND RED ROUND PLASTIC ONES IN PARTICULAR..." © 2000
www.monkeybox.net

Quote of the Day

"And so I drank one...it became four. And when I fell on the floor I drank more."

–Morissey

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Chicken Cutlet Sandwich (B, F, H)

Manicotti (vegetarian) (B, F, H)

Veggy Sloppy Joe (vegan), (B, F)

Pot Roast (W)

Cheese Spinach Sq. (vegetarian), (W)

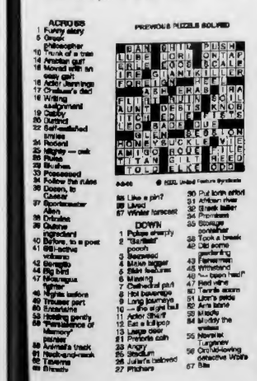
Breaded Vegan Cutlet (vegan), (W)

A 'mealy' Roast Beef Melt

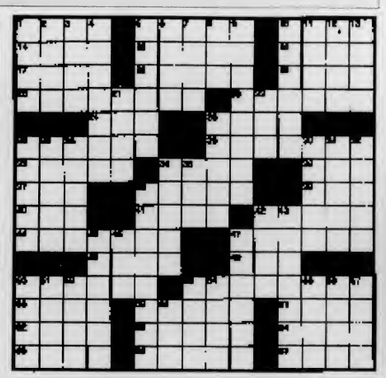
Dinner

Who Knows??

You'll still be full from all that lunch!



Congrats to the Superstars for winning the intra-mural girls soccer league!!!!



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martinetti
Photo Technician	Tiboro Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Brian McDermott
Production Staff	Kara Stokes, John Zawislak

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Wednesday, November 1, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass volleyball splits a pair

Colonials dominate in three set match

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

When it rains, it pours.

The Massachusetts volleyball team learned this fact first hand on Saturday night at the Curry Hicks Cage as they fell in straight sets (15-13, 15-8, 15-2) to George Washington.

With the victory, the Colonials have now won 18 of their last 20 contests and have recorded four consecutive sweeps of Atlantic 10 opponents.

The game ended with the Minutewomen (11-12 overall, 7-6 Atlantic 10) letting a serve by senior Julie Jahnke land in between junior Janeen DeMarte and sophomore Jen Davis. It was the third and final such miscommunication between the two on the night.

"Our serve receive was really poor tonight," UMass volleyball coach Bonnie Kenny said. "We saw balls fall between two primary passers without any of them stepping forward to take the ball."

The Minutewomen were tied at two early in the third contest, but the Colonials (18-4, 8-1 A-10) took over from there, allowing only sideouts to the Maroon and White the rest of the way. Senior Tracee Brown had six of her 24 kills in the final game, two of them in a five point run on freshman Ruth Lazzari's serve.

"Tracee Brown's a tremendous athlete, most of the time she hit over our blocks," Kenny said. "That's about as poor as we can play and we've been on a nice roll, so that's really disappointing loss. We didn't have anybody play well tonight."

Down 12-2, senior co-captain Rebecca Hasson threw down a kill to get the serve back to UMass. But every time the Minutewomen struck, GW immediately stopped them, regaining the serve and eventually winning the match on Jahnke's ace.

Game two was slightly better for the Maroon and White, but the end result was the same. Early in the game, a kill by Jahnke put the Colonials up 7-1. The Minutewomen fought back, rallying back with the help of a few nice kills by junior Lauren Vander Veen and several GW miscues.

UMass closed the gap to 8-7 on a kill by sophomore Clare Baxter, but the Colonials stopped UMass right there. From that point on, Lazzari dropped two kills in a row and Brown and setter Jill Levey followed with kills of their own to help GW pull away with a 12-7 lead and an eventual victory.

"Jill Levey's a great setter, she's the unsung hero that keeps those seniors like glue together," Kenny said.

The first game of the match gave

Turn to VOLLEYBALL page 7

The UMass volleyball team split its two matches over the weekend, defeating Fordham, and losing to George Washington.

UMass downs Rams; Returns to .500 mark

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

Two teams at different ends of the spectrum matched up last Friday night at Curry Hicks Cage, both hoping to accomplish different things.

The Massachusetts women's volleyball team entered the Cage as the favorite, looking to even up their season record at .500 on a quest to make the Atlantic 10 tournament. Fordham entered the Cage as the underdog, hoping to gain revenge for a bitter sweep by UMass earlier in the season, while adding a big win to their A-10 total.

But once the lights were turned on and the first serve was delivered, destiny would prove that upset card was not to be played for the Rams. The Minutewomen would maintain a killer attitude throughout the night and put the Rams away in three straight matches (15-7, 15-12, 15-8).

In a game that featured a wide array of Minutewomen on the Cage floor, it was once again senior standout Rebecca Hasson who would pace the Maroon and White offensive attack with 13 kills. Hasson's co-captain, Lymarie Llovet, was also a factor on the court as she nailed 10 shots for kills while saving eight digs.

Sophomore starter Jen Davis proved to be the surprise of the night for the crowd, as she banged nine kills home and snagged 11 digs throughout the sweep.

Meanwhile, senior setter Jenni Drennan again put up all-star numbers, notching 43 assists for the night.

"Lymarie, Rebecca and Jenni played really well," UMass volleyball coach Bonnie Kenny said. "In two games we hit over .300; you can't ask for anything more than that."

Fordham was led by sophomore outside hitter Beth Crocket, who scored 13 kills for the Rams while saving 8 digs. Freshman standout Lindsey Loftstedt had a career night posting a personal high 11 kills.

The win evened out UMass' overall record at 11-11, 7-5 in the A-10.

As for Fordham, the loss was their sixth in its past seven matches, and second three-match sweep in a row.

Each game comes with increasing significance for the Minutewomen, as they stand outside of the playoff picture, looking in. And as November begins, only four regular season games remain.

UMass will need four more total team efforts to keep their chances alive for a berth in the A-10 tourney.

Crew enjoys solid weekend

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

There were plenty of tricks and treats for Massachusetts women's crew team this past Saturday at the annual Head of the Schuylkill Regatta.

The Philadelphia regatta took place on the Schuylkill River and was hosted by the University Barge Club of Philadelphia. The regatta is the single largest one day rowing event in the world and UMass was proud to have seven boats representing this year.

Last weekend, the Minutewomen placed 23rd out of 57 teams at the Head of the Charles Regatta, so they were looking for a better turnout this time around. And sure enough, they got just what they were looking for.

The highlighted race was the women's championship varsity eight boat. With Sarah Pragluski coxing the rowers, and Kate Tynan, Anna Talucci, Erika Earl, Laura Kramer, Heather Walker, Julie VanDerPloug, Mary Neubecker and Danielle Smith pulling the boat, the group moved down the river to a third place finish.

They trailed just behind Syracuse and Michigan State. Despite the 20 mile an hour winds, the bone chilling temperature, and a 5 p.m. start, the Minutewomen braved the water and rowed through Boathouse Row. The weather was a distraction on locus and the rhythm of the rowers.

"We had a good strong start but the one thing holding us back was focus," senior captain Heather Walker said. "We have the ability to beat any of those teams."

Along with the varsity eight boat was the women's four, with rowers Jessi Averill, Anne Grejaus, Bonnie Swart, and Kim Ros. In driving five hours to the race and waiting for a three o'clock start, the women were disappointed with the disaster that took place when the steering in their boat malfunctioned just a few strokes into the race.

Without the steering the women began to veer off the course and had to come into shore.

"I'm a little disappointed that we came all this way down and couldn't finish," Averill said. "We're looking forward to our next race."

The women's club eight squad was also in Philly to represent the Maroon and White. It placed a strong 10th out of 36 boats. The team felt good about the race despite by the conditions.

"We are still working out the kinks," said Melanie Laur, a rower for the club eight squad. "We want to beat everyone."

The team was lined next to Navy, and their main goal was to pass them. They came close as they walked up, but were not able to go by the full extent of the boat. The team was happy that no one came from behind to pass them.

The lightweight women's eight boat was only able to pull out a ninth place finish in Saturday's regatta.

"Conditions weren't preferable, however they fought through it," said Coxswain Megan Mastropolo.

The freshmen boat filled with new rowers pulled out a surprising third place finish, just six seconds off of first place Princeton. The team was thrilled after beating Syracuse, Boston University, and Princeton.

Kristin Keller, one of the freshmen of the team, was excited about how well the team has been doing. She described the feel of collegiate women's crew to be a highly competitive situation. Overall, the frosh have pulled together and given a pleasant surprise.

"Our work says a lot for the job the coaches do," said Keller.

The freshmen boat was coxed on Sunday by varsity captain Pragluski, already an established force in the boat in her own right.

"She was so awesome," said Keller on Pragluski. "She made a huge difference. She is an amazing coxswain."

A strong force to the freshmen boat, Lauren Cronwell, has been picking up the skills of rowing since just this fall. Her teammates have described her to be a real athlete. As a novice, she has been put into a boat of experienced rowers and has picked it up quickly.

Also rowing in Saturday's event was Head Coach Jin Dietz in the Men's Masters Quads, and junior Gavin Blackmore in the Men's Lightweight singles. Blackmore placed seventh in a race of 20 rowers.

With Schuylkill now behind them, the Minutewomen will head back down to Philadelphia this weekend to participate in their last pre-season race, the Fall Atlantic 10 Championship.

George Washington was slated to beat them last spring, but the Minutewomen pulled out a surprise finish taking the Atlantic 10 Championship Cup back to Amherst. With GW having graduated a majority of their seniors last spring, the women of crew feel that their chance to be beat was last year and this year they will once again bring back a win. Walker was adamant about next week's race.

"We'll win easily," she said.

Minutewomen remain on a roll; UMass downs CU and UConn

By Alison Sciamanna
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's tennis team enjoyed a victorious weekend on the road by downing Columbia 5-2 on Friday and sweeping Connecticut 6-0 on Saturday. With the wins, the Minutewoman pushed their record to 6-1 on the season.

The Minutewomen traveled to New York City to take on the perennial power, the Lions of Columbia University, on Friday. Freshman Francesca Mancini downed Columbia's Shelly Mittal (6-2, 6-4) in straight sets to remain unbeaten at 10-0.

Junior Helena Horak defeated Laila Shetty (6-3, 3-1) to take the match by default. Freshmen Iafra Depontes, out of Hawaii, took the Lions' Rebecca Nathans in straight sets (6-3, 6-3). Junior Bay State native Lindsey Gillooly won her first set, was beaten in the second set, but battled back to take the third set and the match (6-0, 5-7, 6-2).

Junior Annie Hamilton suffered a loss at the hands of Columbia's Joyce Chang. Chang took the match in straight sets (6-1, 6-3). Susan Hyams battled Ilene Weintraub, but dropped the match (6-1, 7-5).

In doubles action, the duo of freshmen Mancini and Depontes defeated Columbia's Shetty and Chang 8-3, while the tandem of Horak and Hyams won over the doubles team of Lauer and Weintraub.

"We were expecting to do well against them, but I don't think we knew we could do that well," Gillooly said of the 5-2 victory.

The team continued their road trip on Saturday with a match against UMass rival, UConn at Storrs, Conn. The Minutewomen swept the Huskies 6-0 in a superb effort, with all six singles matches won in straight sets.

Mancini added an 11th win to her perfect record by beating UConn's Trinell Russel (7-6, 4-0) before Russel retired in the second set. Junior Helena Horak continued her consistent play with a victory over the Huskies' Colleen Connors (6-1, 6-1). Depontes downed Anne Dewberry (6-1, 6-3), while Hamilton defeated Katie Olsen (6-4, 6-3). Hyams downed Melanie Polanco (6-1, 6-1) and Gillooly beat Laurel Leahy (6-1, 6-0). There were doubles matches scheduled, but none of them were played.

The Minutewomen will send Mancini and Depontes to compete in the ITA Regional Championships to be held this weekend at William and Mary in Williamsburg, VA. The four-day tourney will culminate the team's fall schedule, which included big wins over regional powers Dartmouth and Columbia. They will resume play in February for the spring season.

The UMass minutewomen had a victorious weekend, defeating both Columbia and Connecticut, pushing their record to 6-1 for the season.

Cross country teams fare well at A-10's

By Matthew F. Sacca
Collegian Staff

Both Massachusetts cross country teams were nipped in the heels by the rest of the Atlantic 10 at the conference championships this past weekend.

The Minutewomen ended a streak of five straight A-10 championships by finishing second, while the Minutemen placed fourth overall.

This years A-10 championships were held at Duquesne University's Schenlan Park in Pittsburgh, PA.

St. Joseph's ended up winning both of the 10-team races by fairly wide margins as they seemingly had a step on the rest of the conference. The Hawks had a total score of 35, followed by the Minutewomen who finished with a 74.

In the men's race, SJU won by an even larger margin with a final count of 27. La Salle finished second, followed by the home Dukes at third, as the Maroon and White managed only a fourth place finish with an 89.

The Minutewomen were once again led by Kristin Cisowski, who came in second overall with a time of 17:44. Senior Melissa Henderson finished mere seconds behind her teammate with a time of 17:55. The rest of the squad mirrored the order of the previous meets, as the next three to finish for UMass were Megan McCormick, Katherine Blais and Molli Ketschek. McCormick and Blais finished 20th and 21st while

Turn to CROSS COUNTRY, page 7

U2 and others released albums that we reviewed on our Arts Page. See it!

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Check out our feature on big UMass lineman Tyler Lauback on page 12.

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 16

Volume CVII Issue 9 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, November 2, 2000

Fire ravages student home

This house at 57 Shumway Street burned Friday night.

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Five University of Massachusetts students are now without a home after a fire burned down their residence last Friday night.

The fire at 57 Shumway St. in Amherst burned for half an hour and left behind a gutted shell of a house.

According to Amherst Fire Department Chief Keith Hoyle, the fire was first reported at 9:50 p.m. on Friday night by both a resident of the home and two other individuals.

"They [the residents] reported it, then somebody in 59 [Shumway] reported it, then somebody across the street reported it," explained Hoyle.

Amherst Police Department officer Kenus Arocho was the first to the house. Arocho responded within thirty seconds of the call as he had been in the area on other police business.

The police report filed by Arocho with APD Chief Charles Scherpa said that the officer found the front door of the house blown open from the wind. Arocho, who was then assisted by fellow officer Glenn Jackson, entered the home through the open door where he witnessed one of the residents trying to extinguish the fire with water.

Arocho had the house next door evacuated and tried to put out the flames himself with an extinguisher. The police report described how, in his attempts to douse the fire, Arocho accidentally knocked over a nearby can of kerosene, which caused the flames to rise up once again.

"It's still unclear how the fire started," said Hoyle. "It was accidental. It did involve home and lantern fuel, like kerosene."

The police report filed by Arocho indicated that the fire might have originated from a pumpkin or possibly a candle being placed inside a jack-o-lantern, and then later aided by the kerosene.

Hoyle said, "[The cause of the fire] is still being debated. The state police, the insurance investigator and our investigator are looking into it."

At the time that the fire was reported, there were only seven firefighters on duty, five of who were actually in the station. Eventually 38 Amherst firefighters were called in to put out the blaze, which took approximately half an hour.

"We're listing the house as totaled," said Hoyle. "It was worth $130,000 and the owner is going to knock it down."

Ben Sutner of Belchertown, who had rented the house to the students, was unavailable for comment at press time.

All five residents living at the Shumway St. home were University of Massachusetts students. Brian King, a junior Building Material and Wood Technology major, Todd Wilson, a sophomore Building Material and Wood Technology major, James Chekos, a senior Economics major, Bryan Appel, a senior Marketing major, and Jake Pescatello, a senior Psychology major could not be reached for comment.

Of the five students living in the house, three were home at the time that the fire broke out, according to Hoyle.

The Fire Marshall has ruled that the fire was accidental.

Zinn's lectures to packed U house

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

A "Free College Ski Rates" flyer taped on the Thompson building main bulletin board was affixed firmly and perfectly on top of the only flyer this campus traveler could find promoting Howard Zinn's speech, after two days of searching.

Like the tiny blue margins of the Zinn flyer peeking out from behind its ski agency counterpart, much of the life of Howard Zinn has been dedicated to trying to shine some beams of truth through the heavy cloud of historical misinformation. Even more challenging for Zinn is trying to penetrate the minds of the majority of Americans whom would rather not hear the untold stories of their heroes and of the country they have marched in parades to support. Accordingly, Zinn had to apologize more than once during his speech last night in Thompson entitled "The Myth of the Cold War," presented by The Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies.

Zinn's controversial message didn't prevent Thompson 102 from being filled to well over capacity, with both aisles and the stage completely filled with onlookers, as well as spillage out all four doors. The hot, uncomfortable environment and lack of amplification in the room resulted in an ill fated attempt at securing a larger room, as well as a twenty-five minute delay from the 7:30 p.m. start time.

Howard Zinn is a Professor Emeritus at Boston University, although calling him simply a professor is calling Jimi Hendrix simply a guy with a guitar. Zinn's influence has been strongly felt throughout various intellectual and social circles for many decades, with his two most well known works being "A People's History of the United States" and his autobiography "You Can't Be Neutral on a Moving Train." His vast historic knowledge and trademark humor have long been attracting audiences to his live performances, and after Wednesday night's audience decided he shouldn't shorten his speech due to the cramped conditions, he joked, "You are going to suffer!"

Zinn began the night addressing the popular belief in the United States that the Cold War with the Soviet Union lasted from 1945 to 1989, the latter date at which the Soviet empire disintegrated and since then "everything is wonderful, you noticed?" U.S. hostility towards Russia started nearly three decades earlier according to Zinn, around the time Lenin dissolved the Constituent Assembly, a development that didn't sit well with President Wilson. Through a series of examples, however, Zinn illustrated the "crushing, disturbing" foreign policy decisions the U.S. was making up until the late 1940s, all in an effort to blast our "militaristic, expansionists, imperialistic power."

Not "by being nice" did the United States expand so rapidly after the American Revolution, Zinn showed, citing the various atrocities that accompanied the sedately named Mexican Session and Louisiana Purchase. A strong proponent of non-violence, Zinn was not too impressed by the eagerness President Theodore Roosevelt led the country into war.

"What is he (Roosevelt) doing up there on Mount Rushmore?," Zinn asked. "And how can we get him off, in light of his incessantly warlike nature?"

Howard Zinn knocked the socks off listeners last night in Thompson.

Zinn had to apologize for shooting down a figure normally seen as an American hero, but it wouldn't be the first time that night exalted figures would have their unpleasant sides revealed.

"He was a hero of mine...for about five minutes," Zinn said, jokingly referring to Winston Churchill, after reciting some racist comments made by him in reference to not wanting an independent Cuba to result in "another Black republic."

The audience was urged by Zinn to notice how the stated motives for foreign actions involving the U.S. "turn out to be lies and deception," drawing parallels between the sinking of the battleship Maine during the Spanish-American War and the recent incident involving a U.S. ship in Yemen. Further disquieting evidence of the true U.S. motives behind intervention were given by Zinn in the cases of Vietnam, the Philippines, Guatemala, and Panama.

Before answering a handful of questions pertaining to current U.S. foreign policy and the upcoming election, Zinn made a strong plea for citizen activism, urging the audience to reclaim democracy by getting involved in movements and creating lasting social changes.

Feeling sick? Ballot question to address Health Care

By Mike Suppappola and Jonathan Vega
Collegian Correspondents

The future direction of Massachusetts health care may be decided on Nov. 7 when residents vote on Question 5, which asks voters to approve a proposal for universal health care in the state.

The proposal would create a state Health Care Council to review and recommend health care legislation that would ensure a universal health care system in Massachusetts by 2002. The system would be comprehensive, giving high quality coverage to all Massachusetts residents, regardless of age, health and income.

A no vote would leave the current Massachusetts health care system in place.

This is one of the first propositions of universal health care in Massachusetts. It was prompted by complaints about patient treatment by health maintenance organizations (HMO's), and concerns over the shift by hospitals from non-profit to a profit-driven status. Supporting legislation may be needed to ensure the equality of health care that this bill proposes.

Under the proposed law, non-profit hospitals, HMO's and health insurers would be prohibited from converting to profit-based systems until a comprehensive health care system is in place. The law would also require all state health insurance carriers to guarantee a patients' bill of rights, which would include the right to choose a physician and the right for a patient to be reimbursed when paying cash for emergency services to providers not affiliated with their carrier.

Supporters of question 5 include the Massachusetts

Turn to BALLOT, page 2

One of the more than 500 butterflies at Magic Wings in Deerfield rests on a bench yesterday afternoon.

Butterflies in Deerfield

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Adhering to the New England tradition of a love for wildlife and a need to see it preserved, the Magic Wings Butterfly Conservatory and Gardens has taken its place as a haven.

Nestled between Yankee Candle and Historic Deerfield, right off of Routes 5 and 10, the conservatory is committed to providing a safe environment for butterflies in Massachusetts.

The highlight of the structure is a 4,000 square foot glass enclosed glass conservatory that houses the butterflies.

According to Roland Bisi, a staff member at Magic Wings, "basically when you enter you are surrounded by butterflies."

Bisi explained that there were a variety of different types of butterflies and that the conservatory houses over 300 native and tropical butterflies. The butterflies are either raised or imported to the enclosed controlled propagation enclosure. He commented that the variety of types of butterflies depended upon the season.

The signature butterfly of Magic Wings is the New England Mourning Cloak, a butterfly that hibernates in the winter and awakens in the summer to live one of the longest life spans known to butterflies, eleven months. Some other butterflies that are housed at the conservatory include the Regal Fritillary, the Tiger Swallowtail, the Red-Spotted Purple and the Buckeye.

In the conservatory, visitors are invited to come in and observe the butterflies up close, an opportunity that they might not have in any other surroundings. For more information about the butterflies, visitors are invited to ask questions of the staff members referred to as "flight attendants" who monitor the floor.

A variety of different types of people are interested in the butterflies, Bisi explained, and staff is always on hand to provide more information about butterfly life cycles, migration, food sources and a variety of other topics.

"We have some people come in that know a great deal about butterflies and some that do not know as much," Bisi said.

Other attractions also available to attendees are a gift shop and a garden shop. The garden shop is geared towards helping those interested in creating their own butterfly sanctuary at their home. Participants interested in creating their own butterfly garden are encouraged to first grow lots of nectar plants, the main food of adult butterflies. Groups of different flowers are enticing to butterflies and different heights and sizes of flowers promote nectar consumption.

Another thing that is encouraged in growing a butterfly garden is to grow caterpillar food plants. By planting larval food plants, the type that caterpillars typically eat, egg-laying female butterflies will be attracted to the garden. Butterflies also need a sunny location with a great deal of shelter to survive. Another way to keep

Turn to BUTTERFLIES, page 3

Tracye Taylor, a photography student in Turner's Falls and a Tennessee native, takes pictures at Magic Wings yesterday.

Cevallos speaks; SGA fights about him

By Kristin Shrewsbury and Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Last night, newly appointed Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Javier Cevallos addressed many questions from the Student Government Association on a night when his own position was discussed under fire among both members and students.

Questions came primarily from the topics concerning the installation of surveillance cameras that were recently put up on the corner of the John Adams Admin residence hall.

With recent wondering about the recent Southwest Airlines situation focused on the camera's ability to zoom in, power and the fact that the images recorded in effect at the time of the incident.

The camera was installed and was not connected to the John Adams power source at that time.

SGA speaker Jim Ellringham reacts to a comment in the crowd.

"If you were to take the video and put it into a normal VCR you would not be able to see much, but if you hooked the video up to a computer, you would be able to see everything clearly. We can probably count the hairs on your head if we wanted to."

Accessibility to the cameras video also came into question, as senate members expressed concern over who could access the tapes and when they could access them.

"I met with a group which included University of Massachusetts Chief of Police Jack Luippold, Trustee Seth Avakian and we decided that Chief Luippold is the only one with the authority to access the tapes," said Cevallos.

"If I wanted to access the tapes, I would not be able to. And if Chancellor Scott wanted to access the tapes, he would not be able to view them either."

He then went on to explain that the camera's video has a 20 day period where anything recorded is held. After 20 days, the camera will then relapse and any information recorded will be erased.

After further questioning, the SGA moved into its main focus of the evening, motion 2000-113, which called for Chancellor Scott to rescind his offer of permanent Vice Chancellor to Cevallos until an appropriate search is conducted. The motion was co-sponsored by Senator Shamapande and Senator Lacoste.

Controversy over the motion was expressed by both sides as senators debated the pros and cons of the issue at hand. At stake was whether the motion should be brought up for vote, or tabled until the next meeting when Chancellor Scott is scheduled to appear.

Expressing his concern over Scott's failure to consult the SGA Shamapande said, "I think it's absolutely ridiculous. It's like a big slap in the face of the SGA."

"He is violating his own procedure, a man who is all about procedure."

Shamapande went on to explain that this is only the second time that Chancellor Scott has not held a national search for the Vice Chancellor position. The only other time this happened was when the position, then called Deputy of Student Affairs, was first conceived.

Lacoste then added, "The position needs to go through a search to legitimize it."

Central Area Governor Ken Campbell was the main opposition to the motion. Campbell argued: "I know Sal [Shamapande] meant no disrespect, but I don't see how you can write this and not have it be an attack on Javy [Cevallos]."

Campbell went on to explain that even the Office of Equal Opportunity said that a search was not needed for the position.

"Telling Chancellor Scott to pull Cevallos out of his position is wrong, just wrong," said Campbell.

Proponents of the motion argued that it was necessary to address the issue now because the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs is the SGA's direct and only link to the Administration.

"This motion is to empower the SGA," said Agnes Capron.

After the debate, a vote was called on whether or not to table to motion until the next meeting. When Speaker of the Senate, Jim Ellringham called for a voice vote, the "yeas" and "nays" sounded even. The idea of a hand vote was brought up by the body, but not executed because of a fear of losing quorum.

Ellringham then made the spontaneous decision to table the motion until next week's meeting.

"It was tough because some people wanted to table it and some people wanted to vote. There was a question about going to hands and meeting quorum," said Ellringham.

After the meeting, Campbell said that in talking to those present, a lot of people, most likely three-quarters, would have liked to table it.

Earlier in the meeting Chief Justice Gabriel Tavarez raised issues concerning trends in recent University admissions policies.

Citing the most recent University Fact Book, Tavarez brought up statistical information regarding graduation rates for the class of 1989. Only 58 percent of the class graduated within four years. Tavarez added that currently there are more administrators than professors on campus and that approximately 250 professor positions remain vacant.

Tavarez also addressed a disturbing reduction of ALANA admissions at the University. Since 1997 there has been a reduction of 45 percent among African American students and 41 percent among Latino students. In addition, there has been a 62 percent decline among students whose families do not make at least $60,000 a year.

"Senator Santos said you guys need to do shit. Well you do," said Tavarez.

■ ballot

continued from page 1

Nurses Association, the Ad Hoc Committee to Defend Health Care and Physicians for a National Health Program. Bernard Lown, a physician who belongs to the Vote for Health – "Yes on 5 Group," believes there is a pressing need for comprehensive health care in Massachusetts.

"Health care faces a crisis," Lown said on The Official State Massachusetts Voter Information website. "Costs are out of control, and too many people have no medical insurance or are at risk of losing their coverage."

Opponents, which include The Boston Globe and The Boston Herald, say the state already has one of the highest rates of insured residents in the country and such an overhaul will be too costly. The "No on 5" Coalition has asserted that many citizens who originally supported the proposed legislation are now opposed to it, because it will undo a patients' rights and health care reform law passed by the Legislature last July.

"This measure is poorly written, costly, and damaging," opponents said on the voter information site. Other opponents include the Massachusetts Taxpayers' Association, Associated Industries of Massachusetts, and the Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts.

The voter information website describes the primary advantage to the bill as a guarantee that by July 2002, Massachusetts' residents could not be denied medical care because of inadequate insurance. This proposed legislation would also require health care expenditures in the state to rise and fall no faster than the U.S. average at the present time.

The voter information website contains research by independent studies at Brandeis University, Harvard School of Public Health and other health care experts who conclude, "the measure would be damaging to health care institutions." They argue, "the measure would eliminate existing protections designed to ensure the quality of health care." The measure would create two government bureaucracies with no limit on spending. They claim, "those health insurance rates for employers and consumers would significantly rise potentially causing the Massachusetts taxpayer billions of dollars each year."

Liberal John O'Connor and his multi-million dollar company Greenworks primarily bankrolled the initiative petition for Question 5.

www.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

"Deadline" cancelled: Good riddance

Yesterday, NBC announced that it is canceling its new drama series "Deadline." The show stars Oliver Platt as a crime fighting journalism professor who enlists the help of his students to solve crimes.

NBC credited the cancellation to the show's low ratings, and nothing more. The cancellation is the third for "Deadline's" writer and director Dick Wolf. Wolf was also responsible for "Law and Order: Special Victim's Unit" and "New York Undercover." Wolf's sole claim to success was the 1980's hit, "Miami Vice." "Deadline" was NBC's third cancellation of the new season.

As representatives of a form of news medium, we at The Daily Collegian are quite disappointed in the entertainment industry's utter lack of a quality interpretation of journalism.

"Deadline" was simply another boring attempt to exploit the rare outrageous situations in newspaper work, while ignoring the real aspects of the job. It seems like every film or television show would rather portray inane journalist behavior like, Courtney Cox's character in Scream than focus on what they actually do for a living.

Remember the film The Paper? Michael Keaton and Glenn Close battled it out in the newsroom to find the ultimate story. There was so much content in that film that was clearly influenced by real life journalism. That authenicity clearly made it a gripping and intense drama. That is something that you simply cannot find in a ridiculous mocking of the industry like "Suddenly Susan."

Perhaps NBC's cancellation of "Deadline" represents something much more subtle. Why didn't they change the plot of the show into something much more believable? With a little work, "Deadline" could certainly have been a much better series. It wasn't even that terrible to begin with. NBC and the writers of the series could have done a little extra research and tried a little harder to make improvements, which may have resulted in higher ratings. Instead they just let it die along with awful shows like "Daddio" and "Tucker."

In all forms of entertainment, individualism is clearly the most important aspect for creating a truly unique character. Of course it would be impossible and boring to write a character who does nothing out of the ordinary, but why does every fictional journalist have to be like Lois Lane?

The irony in "Deadline's" train of thought is that the most memorable instance in film about journalism is not one where a crazy journalist fights crime or brings down the system.

Citizen Kane was based on actual events. Orson Wells' character, Charles Foster Kane was newspaper mogul William Randolph Hearst brought to the big screen. Hearst didn't look for criminals or break the rules like a loose cannon. Still, more people will tag the film about his life better than any other representation of the newspaper business.

A television world without "Deadline" is probably a better place. However, it would be great if there were some quality shows and films created about the newspaper business.

The revolution betrays itself

ADAM MARTIGNETTI

And so dies another Internet born and bred idea – an idea that, like many of the Internet age, was heralded for its ability to fundamentally shift how society functions. Or, if it is not yet dead, it is quite obviously on its final fledgling legs, ready to be transformed into an entity completely unfaithful to its original purpose.

On Tuesday, the German media conglomerate Bertelsmann inked a deal with the popular online music-swapping service Napster that essentially ends the long feud between Napster and major record labels. The alliance creates a subscription service on Napster which would allow users, who pay a fee, to download all of the Bertelsmann music catalog, including artists like Dave Matthews Band, Christina Aguilera and Santana.

For all of the hype about Napster – the talk of banning on college campuses, the battle over intellectual property rights, the commercialization of art by rich media conglomerates, the unfair contracts forced upon unsuspecting bands, the opportunity for unknown bands to be heard, and on and on – Napster was, no, is still about one thing: free music.

The arguments used to defend Napster by its proponents were inconsequential to their true intent. Sure, "Napster" wasn't doing anything wrong because they weren't the people who were actually exchanging copyrighted music illegally. And sure, maybe some people honestly believe that information should be freely exchanged, especially in a digital age. But the real reason that most people flocked to Napster, the reason that the average college student with a T1 connection eagerly filled his or her hard drive with MP3s, was the possibility of never having to buy a CD ever again.

After all, why buy a CD when you can download the entire thing on Napster (in a matter of 71 minutes), and likely have it before it even hits CD stores? Better yet, why buy an entire CD when you can download the single, the latest pop monstrosity that the radio has decided to embrace?

With thoughts like these dancing in their imaginations, people swarmed to Napster to devour their favorite music. Some bands embraced it; others damned it. In the end, it didn't matter one iota. Record companies could only stand back, yell a little, threaten a lawsuit or two and watch as their most valuable commodity, their means of subsistence, was eagerly passed from person to person without consequence.

Metallica threatened a major lawsuit against Napster. They got hundreds of thousands of "known felons" kicked off the service for illegally exchanging their songs. Still, it did not matter one iota.

Even the legal system has not yet been able to shut down the pesky service started, appropriately enough, by a college student.

Napster embodies all that is great, and all that could be great, about Internet technology. Now, unfortunately, it also embodies all that can go horrifically wrong.

Napster has only been around for one year. It was started in 1999 by Sean Fanning, a then 18-year-old Boston College student. Yet, in that one year, it has pushed the technological and economic boundaries further than anyone could ever have anticipated. People honestly believed that this little program, distributed for free through an Internet site, would revolutionize the music industry. People felt that major media organizations like Time-Warner (now ironically partnered with AOL) and BMG would have to adapt to a new digital age or perish. People honestly believed that unlimited downloading would continue forever, that the sheer and unlikely resilience of this company and its users would hold up even in the face of the most ruthless lawyers.

However, even a brief history of revolutionary Internet technologies should have shown them otherwise.

Does anyone remember a little website known as ircravetv.com? Oh, it's still there. You can still go to the website and see the shadow of a great idea that remains at the URL. But, the idea, the spirit, they are gone and forever lost. This Canadian based website defied all US network TV stations by taking their signals and rebroadcasting them over the Internet. And, for a brief moment in time, there was nothing that the TV networks could do, but watch in despair. There were no rules prohibiting this type of transmission over the Internet, so ircravetv merrily went about its way – a gem to those who knew about it. That is, until major lawsuits were threatened both in Canada and here in the US. In the face of huge legal costs, the site caved and shut down with only a promise that they might one day broadcast "specialty stations" like the Discovery Channel or CNN. This promise has yet to be fulfilled.

How about recordtv.com? Did you ever get a chance to use it? Well, if not, then you missed a truly visionary experience. The idea was simple. Take an ordinary, everyday VCR and put it on the Internet. Anybody could sign up free for this service. Then, by selecting from a wide range of listings, including various cable channels and all the major networks, that person could record whatever programs they wanted. The information was stored on the recordtv website and people could return to view it at any later date. Awesome, right? Well, at the bottom of the page, that same "we're resolving legal issues" can be seen.

Now, the granddaddy of all Internet technologies, Napster, has succumbed to corporate desires. The lawsuit with the rest of the record labels still looms for the company, but if this Bertelsmann thing works, then you can expect similar subscription deals to follow soon.

The sad part is that the technology, which was once seen as the means to reforming an oligopolistic music system, will now only be a means to further enhancing its lock on the industry.

By signing this deal, Napster, like the technologies that preceded it, has lost its ability to push the boundaries of what is acceptable, what is viable in an Internet age. The overarching hand of corporate power has intervened again, and the little guy has lost. Napster will claim this is a victory, that this will benefit its users, but don't believe them. This is no longer the resilient underground operation, which recklessly, but courageously, challenged the very foundations of an empire.

Adam Martignetti is a Collegian Columnist.

Is your name one of the following: Elle, Elliot, Elaine, Elenanor, Elizabeth, Ellen, Elana, Elvina, Elouise? Then maybe you should write for Ed/Op!

Cheap rich kids

SAM WILKINSON

"I hate Amherst College for so many different reasons. Their out and out arrogance is a good place to start from. What makes them think they're so good that they don't have to participate in proletariats' tradition of leaving a tip?"

This is obviously old news by now, but a newspaper that I'm not exactly fond of, The Amherst Student, ran a breaking story on Wednesday, October 18.

The Daily Collegian missed the story, and before I go any further, allow me to apologize for not getting the coverage to you, the consumer. You deserved to know the following and that you didn't is unreasonable. I'm sorry.

But on with the breaking story: two students from Amherst College, or as it is colloquially known, The Richest Place on Earth, filed a complaint with the Amherst Police Department after being verbally abused at a local Indian restaurant. Because I happen to love the New India Restaurant, I will say that it absolutely didn't happen at that restaurant. It happened at the other one. But I won't say where because I'm not in the business of unnecessary slander (and I write that with a wink and nudge to anyone I ever criticized).

Two students walked into the restaurant, I can guess, and sat down, unfolding their napkins and placing them squarely in their laps. They ate their pakoras with the fork on the left and their dinner with the fork on the right and if they didn't, they were outraged because the owner didn't provide the proper utensils to eat with. But then, the truly outrageous occurred.

The verbal altercation occurred between the patrons and the owner and waiter who attempted to explain why, in extremely coarse language, they should have left a tip.

Now, while I will not deny that no patron should be shouted at in extremely coarse and possibly racist language because they didn't leave a tip; the proper etiquette is to, I believe, remember the name of the customer, spit in their food the next time they are there and ... oh yeah, cut the brakes of rich bastards' cars.

There is nothing more inappropriate than for the rich people (especially those who attend classes at the most stuck up and snobby institution in the Five College area) not to leave tips. At the bare minimum, they should be required to leave tips that are at least... 50 percent of the total bill. And why? Because they can leave tips like that and it won't take a significant chunk out of their rich deep pockets.

There's nothing that bothers me more than rich people who are entirely too stingy with their money. And there's no greater example of that sort of behavior than tip giving.

Maybe it's just me. Tips are part of the meal. They are a requirement at the end of a good meal. They aren't optional, they aren't earned; they're part of the whole experience. Waiters and waitresses are so woefully underpaid it's unbelievable. Part of their job description is living off the tips that they get from customers who should be grateful that they can sit on their butts and have food delivered to them. The tip is then just a mere formality for most people who attempt to show their appreciation by leaving a few bucks for the waitperson.

But not these two; they decided that, because they'd been asked to give some spices that were on their table to nearby customers, they weren't going to tip the waiter. After all, they are Amherst College students, why should they have to be generous with their spices?

Their spices are theirs, dammit, not the ruffians' (read: lower class) sitting at the nearby table. How dare anybody ask them, a couple of students no doubt accepted to Amherst College because their parents generously donated copious amounts of money to the school, to give up their spices? Such a request is absolutely out of the question, especially when requested of these two.

...

I hate Amherst College for so many different reasons. Their out and out arrogance is a good place to start from. What makes them think they're so good that they don't have to participate in proletariats' tradition of leaving a tip?

Hell, I just can't believe that this was the top story in their once a week little newsletter to students. Apparently, students are supposed to be truly disturbed because a waiter cursed out patrons rude enough to leave without being nice enough to tip him. The news was put on the front page because it was supposedly going to be of interest to students; the story was written in such a way as to promote indignation amongst the student body. The other rich students are supposed to be mad because a person who wasn't tipped when he should have been treated fellow rich people poorly. Rich people are, according to the newspaper, the victims of this situation.

Those two students had it coming for acting like such a couple of little snots. They have the audacity to leave a restaurant when not leaving a tip and then get their indignant on because somebody, who probably relies on those tips to do things like, you know, pay the bills, was ticked off that after working, he wasn't going to get a tip.

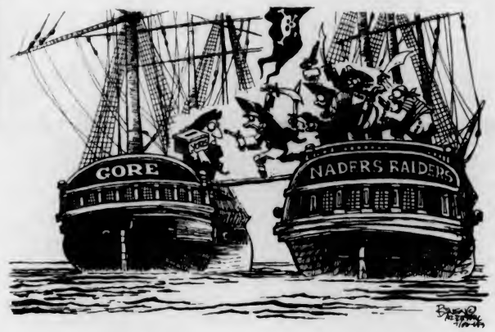
These two students aren't the victims; they're the aggressors. They didn't tip a waiter when they should have and then complain about it when the waiter gets mad. They just don't understand that waiters, unlike them, don't always receive huge checks from their rich parents each week as an allowance.

Further, they don't understand what it's like to actually work, hence they don't know what it's like to be incredibly underpaid. They've never had to work, simply smile at Mom or Dad to get an upgrade on their Visa card from Gold to Platinum because, dammit, they need a new outfit and they already maxed out their limits.

The Amherst Student should be embarrassed that they considered the complaint filed by these two selfish little children to be actual news; of course, that little slipup is nowhere near as embarrassing as the two selfish little children themselves. Their ignorance is just embarrassing to all well-meaning (which might just mean, not insanely wealthy like these two geniuses) humans.

True to Amherst College form, they might like to think that their etiquette is better than that of the common person, but until they learn that they have to tip, they don't know a thing. And until they learn why they have to tip, they're nothing more than a couple of dumb rich kids.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.



Halloween Lessons

ROB SCHULZE

What I learned this Halloween...

My friends should never, ever play flipcup with Thor's Hammer vodka.

Girls in Southwest enjoy dressing up as sluts, hos, whores, and other such things a little too much for it to be entirely coincidental.

The best costumes are the ones that you don't buy in stores. My friend Sam as an Amherst College student, for instance (he even referred to Milwaukee's Best Light as, quote, 'fine cognac'), and my other friend Leighanne as Rock 'n Roll Barbie were both absolutely priceless.

Never go to the party too early. It sucks while you're there, and then the minute you leave it gets good, and then you kick yourself the next day when you hear how good it got right after you left.

I still love candy corn as much as I did when I was seven, and I still get sick when I eat too many like when I was seven.

Sixteen-year-old girls are funny when they're drunk.

It feels good to be the safe driver. (I shudder at the term 'designated' – it gives me overtones of The Scarlet Letter, somehow.) I chauffeured all weekend, and while there are some things that I missed out on doing, there are more important things that I got accomplished, such as making sure that my friends didn't die.

The undisputed worst Halloween candy of all time remains Good 'n Plenty. Back in the day Good 'N Plenty was totally useless – you couldn't trade it to your friends, you certainly couldn't eat it – so I usually just ended up throwing it at my sister until she cried. Nowadays, my sister is several counties away, and my weak, skinny, lethargic-little-girl arms aren't capable of launching even such light candy that far, so I just had to take the one box I got and toss it in the woods. Hopefully a squirrel will choke on it.

Even at mandatory you-must-have-fun-or-else parties it is possible to have a great time, despite the fact that you do nearly have both arms dislocated by attempting to ballroom dance with someone a lot larger and better coordinated than you.

The prospect of writing someone up while wearing a little kid's M&M costume is quite daunting.

It doesn't matter that technically Halloween was on Tuesday – as far as myself and most other people are concerned, it was definitely last Saturday and a damn good portion of Sunday morning. The mere fact that I had class on Tuesday automatically made it not Halloween, in thought if not in actuality.

Vandalism is funny.

A funny story: My friend Mike pissed on his wig, and then explained it as saying he took his wig off, pissed, noticed that his wig had magically become wet, and threw it in the woods. The first words out of his mouth the next time I saw him that night: "I f%#&*in' pissed on my wig, Rob! It's in the woods now because it was wet!" This is easily the high point of the human race, at least in terms of humor content.

Andrea looks damn good dressed as Satan.

When you see a man wearing black boots, pants, medieval-style shirt, cloak, white face make-up, black eye-liner, blue lipstick, and a Jansport backpack walking around campus on Halloween, you kind of get the feeling that the guy probably doesn't even realize it's Halloween. Or else he'd have worn an Abercrombie shirt and one of those stupid goddamn vests.

Heavy metal bands always think its funny, ironic, and original to release new albums on Halloween, despite the fact that someone does it every single year.

If you're a skinny white guy who hates rap, and you tell people you're going to be an M&M for Halloween, they always take that to mean that you're going to be Eminem. This says something about our society that I have neither the desire nor the stomach to go into.

You never should have taken that last shot. Dumbass.

Never, ever walk home. If you're not in a safe state to drive, by all means do not, but just sleep on the couch/floor/kitchen table of whatever place you happen to be in. I almost got killed a hundred times walking home last year in my all-black ninja costume, and I heard innumerable horror stories from the foot-oriented this year. It just isn't worth it, plus you fall down a lot.

I heard that someone dressed as a used tampon. That's just gross.

In the end, Halloween was never about candy. It wasn't about mindless, semi-legal destruction. It wasn't even about getting wasted and possibly having drunken sex with someone dressed like a Mighty Morphin Power Ranger. It's always, from the time that you first went trick-or-treating while holding your mommy's hand to now, been about having good honest fun with friends. The methods of having that fun may have changed, but that doesn't change the fact that the basis is the same.

Of course, you're the one who suffered through the head-splitting, heard-rending, sun-exploding hangover. You tell me – was it really worth it?

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

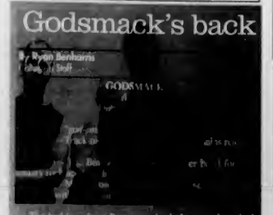
Arts and Living

Volume CVII Issue 41 The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Thursday, November 2, 2000

Godsmack's back



By Bryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

The bad boys from Boston are back. No, not those bad boys, the loud boys that rock stations around the country actually care about.

These bad boys won't be making any videos with Alicia Silverstone. They won't be doing any love ballads, and they certainly will not be featured on a soundtrack for a romance film starring Ben Affleck and Liv Tyler. These bad boys are Godsmack, and they're making an immediate impact.

Godsmack formed in 1995, and spent most of their early time together some front Alice in Chains, one of the most influential bands from the late 80's and early 90's. In fact, their name comes from an Alice in Chains song title.

After a bit of early struggling, Godsmack released their self-titled CD on Republic Records. The four-man band, fronted by lead vocalist Sully Erna, has become flooded with expectations. Sully's name has become an article of conversation. These 1996 self-titled album quickly became one of the hottest selling commodities in rock. Fueled by the success of the band's first single, "Whatever," which is currently getting heavy rotation by the fiery repetitive chorus, "I'm so sick of everything in my life," Godsmack has become a household name.

Godsmack's latest is one of the most anticipated releases of the year. After reaching their first album go triple platinum, Godsmack created an extremely big pair of shoes to fill with their follow-up.

Releasing the album on Halloween was perfect for both marketing reasons and to add to the abundantly over-powering aura floating that it projects. The tone of the album is dark and grim. The band's Wiccan roots are visible, and the theme of other forms of today's music is clearly present.

"Bad Of Like," the first track on the album, is a perfect encapsulation of what not to do if you want to be different from mainstream music. "Sick of my life," Sully sings. "I'm tired of everything in my life. I never wanted to be tired of everything in my life." Do these words sound familiar? Maybe you've heard, "I can't go on living this way," or "I'm a loser and sooner or later you know I'll be dead." All music from the same thing now. "I hate myself and I want to die."

The issue is that this phrase is trademarked and on a release next to Kurt Cobain's picture, and currently resides on every teenager's wall in North America. Apparently it is Godsmack's turn to kill themselves metaphorically. What's funny is that the song seems to be answer to "Whatever." Also, "I'm living the best I ever did," Godsmack now says. "I'm tired of everything in my life." The correlation is staggering.

Forget an even more intentional, "Forgive Me" has an obvious suicidal overtone. The song has lyrics like "Inside our insanity she laughing" and "Do you think you can save me from being this way? I don't know how to breathe with out her, I can't live this way." Sully even goes as far to ask, "Will you forgive me?" which may be a cry for mercy after the suicidal act is carried out. The song gives a strong sense about that he wants to kill himself, and this is a last request for sympathy.

Though it has a rough start, the album gets better quickly. "Awake," the first single, and radio's first chance to downplay the new album until everyone is wholeheartedly sick of it, has remarkable lyrics and some terrific guitar work. Obviously a lot of effort went into the song writing of this tune. It has some of the absolute best material that Godsmack has to offer.

The album has some remarkable strong points. "Greed" has a very Metallica-esque feel. With an extremely heavy guitar opening, and really engaging drums, it proves to be a top-floor on the album. The lyrics are a bit bland, but it reminds very much like Metallica's "One." Sully's "Please, someone help me," is a mirror image of Metallica's "Oh God help me."

"Trippin'" is another great part of Awake. Each verse starts into a preaching narrator at the beginning of a horror film. The great guitar solo, like those of the hair-bands of 1987, really makes the song the most diverse track on the entire album.

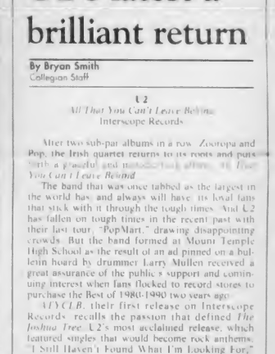
The album has some weak points as well. "Bad Magick" and "Mistakes" have their flaws. Who knows why they chose to spell Magick like that, but it helps to alert one to the stupid lyrics contained within. "If it feels so bad/ bad magic playing off me/ no I don't want to be your friend," "Bad Magick" says. It appears to have an anti-drug message. "Mistakes" is a boring rip off of Creed's "Torn," slowed down and mixed with weird messages and voices in the background.

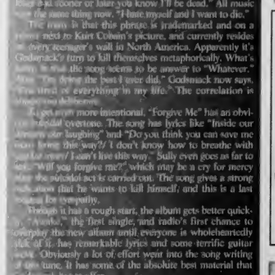
One element that stands out much more than on the debut release is the balancy of Godsmack's Wiccan beliefs. "Mistakes" may not be very good, but the gothic ingredient is certainly evident. You can hear growling in the background, and Sully mentions, "the corruption in the human heart." There is a track called "Vampires." There are no lyrics, but there are guitars and drums that play over people talking about the history of vampires.

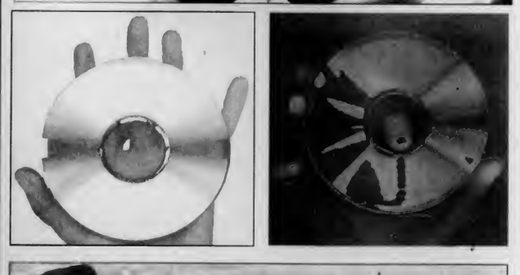
The last track is the most obvious indication of religion in the album. It is a song called, "Spiral." Though it is probably the worst song on the entire record, you can just tell that it will be the next radio single. The five-minute tune is intermingled with additional chanting and produces a very radio friendly sound that has become all too familiar.

All together, Awake is a very solid effort by Godsmack. Though they seem to have changed quite a bit, that change is certainly beneficial. All too often we see bands taken out of their garage and into the studio only to transform into something they simply should not be. With their second studio album, Godsmack did not do that.

Watch out for the bad boys from Boston. They're becoming most popular talented and powerful with everything they release. Awake may just be the beginning of a new legacy in Massachusetts' rock.







U2's latest a brilliant return

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

U2
All That You Can't Leave Behind
Interscope Records

After two sub-par albums in a row, Zooropa and Pop, the Irish quartet returns to its roots and puts forth a powerful and melodious album. All That You Can't Leave Behind

The band that was once tabbed as the largest in the world has and always will have its loyal fans that stick with it through the tough times. And U2 has fallen on tough times in the recent past with their last tour, "PopMart," drawing disappointing crowds. But the band formed at Mount Temple High School as the result of an ad pinned on a bulletin board by drummer Larry Mullen received a great assurance of the public's support and continuing interest when fans flocked to record stores to purchase the Best of 1980-1990 two years ago.

ATYCLB, their first release on Interscope Records, recalls the passion that defined The Joshua Tree. U2's most acclaimed release, which featured singles that would become rock anthems: "I Still Haven't Found What I'm Looking For," "Where the Streets Have No Name" and "With or Without You."

All That You Can't Leave Behind offers tracks that will inspire listeners just as the aforementioned did. After the slough of recent tepidness, at times it takes an effort like this to let fans know that U2, although they have been on the music scene for 22 years, is not fading away.

If you are looking to hear edgy guitar riffs then this is not the album you want, but if you are looking for musical genius then you'll love it. Each song is crafted with the sort of attention to detail and restraint you only find in veteran musicians. The tracks shrug off Pop's penchant for cluttered production and occasional harshness, dwelling instead on inviting and melodious tones. Keyboards are in abundance, and Bono's vocals, while missing the bombast of his years, has developed a grace and maturity that more than compensates for his loss in volume.

The album, unlike their earlier albums, does not have as strong a political flavor. It will be safe to assume that here will be no videos being made on top of buildings in New York City ("Where the Streets Have No Name"), but just as in Achtung Baby, there are messages of love and devotion. The theme of longing and personal journey prevalent in Achtung and Zooropa is also visible here, as in "Beautiful Day," when Bono croons: "You're on the road but you've got no destination/ You're in the mud, in the maze of her imagination/ You love this town even if it doesn't ring true/ You've been all over and it's been all over you."

The album's best track may be "Elevation," which in addition to its undeniable danceability, features one of Bono's best lyrical efforts: "I've lift me out of these blues/ Won't you tell me something true/ I believe in you." These few lines will withstand the test of time just as U2 has. They are simple yet deeply affecting – right to the point, yet leaving room for interpretation. It is amazing how one can mesmerize listeners through masters of the English language.

The album's first single, "Beautiful Day," gave listeners a taste of what U2 would be giving audiences: a mellow, intelligently produced and mastered album. It is a song that tells even when the worst times occurs, "the sky falls," there is still good that can be taken from it.

There are also numerous references to religion. In "Peace on Earth" Bono sings, "Jesus could you take the time/ considering that three of the four members are born-again Christians.

All That You Can't Leave Behind leaves fans wanting more – more U2 for the first time in a long time. The album that has been anticipated for some time does not disappoint. The political influences have given way to a more melody-based musicianship

LOOK LEFT

Layout and Design: Sarah Wingardner
Hand Model: Kara Stokes

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Every Thursday!

This Week's Highlights:

On Saturday the Music Department will host a day-long event, It All Started Here, II. The event will bring back several Music alumni to host workshops for current students and community members. The event is free and open to the public. More information is available through the Department of Music and Dance at 545-2277.

ART

Two Brazilian Photographers: Miguel Rio Branco and Mario Cravo Neto
Now-4 through Dec. 15
Opening Reception: Nov. 3, 3-5 p.m.
University Gallery

Earthbound: thru Nov. 6
Hampden Gallery

People I've Never Seen: thru Nov. 9
Central Gallery

Memory: Personal and Social Testimonies: thru Nov. 21
Augusta Savage Gallery

Paintings by Peter J. Coe
Nov. 3 through Nov. 21
Opening reception: Nov. 4, 2-4 p.m.
Burnett Gallery, Amherst

MUSIC

26th Annual Multiband Pops
Nov. 3, 8 p.m.
Concert Hall

It All Started Here, II
Nov. 4, 9 a.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

Turntablemathematics
Nov. 4, 9 p.m.
Skybox

Almost Speechless
Nov. 4, 7 p.m.
Branford Hall, Mt. Holyoke

Avanti Woodwind Quintet
Nov. 5, 8 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

THEATRE/DANCE

Pericles
Nov. 2-4, 8 p.m.
Experimental Theater Amherst College

Festival of Lights 2000
Nov. 4, 8 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium

FILM

AMC Mountain Farms 4
Call for listings: (413) 584-9153
Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters
Call for listings: (413) 586-0935
Northampton

Academy of Music
Call for listings: (413) 584-8435
Northampton

Tower Theaters
Call for listings (413) 533-3456
South Hadley

OTHER

Comedian Paul Nardizzi
Nov. 3, 8 p.m.
Bluewall

Mission Improvable
Nov. 4, 8 p.m.
Campus Center Rm. 163

The Audition Seminar With actor Markus Flanagan
Nov. 7, 4 p.m.
Fine Arts Center Rm. 204

ATTENTION:

The Source wants YOUR events. Got a performance or a club meeting you want advertised for FREE? Bring it down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement or email us at sourcesubmissions@hotmail.com.

Diverse blend rock, rap and beat-boxes engulfs Significant Others

MANTRA
Mantra
Self released

Mantra is a Massachusetts-based melodic metal outfit that sounds like Dream Theater meets Cro-Mags at its best, and confused progressive metal at its worst. The collective consists of lead vocalist/guitarist Ben Goodman, bassist/programmer Brian Goodman, drummer Jon Acorn, vocalist/guitarist Joe Molinari, vocalist Matty Ray and vocalist/keyboardist/pianist Ben Schulkin. The excessive band roster and task list inevitably often leads to bloated song lengths and simply too much going on at once. Mantra does have a firm grasp on the melodic tendencies of visionaries like Fear Factory and Samael, but too frequently during the seven-song EP disparate forces like the keyboards, backup vocalist, and guitar solos sound like they are traveling in different directions rather than creating a cohesive sound. Only at the end of the album, on the three part "Orchestrated Revolution," does the sound finally start to get into an effort that shows some discipline in their prog leanings.

When Mantra does stand up and shout, however, the results are much better. "No Exit" and "American Dream," the two most straightforward metal tracks on the album, highlight the band's strengths, namely an amazingly mature melodic sense and strong chorus writing. "American Dream" has a social agenda similar to MA boys Trse, and the aggressiveness to warrant comparison. "No Exit" is Mantra's finest moment.

expertly juggling sweeping keyboard sounds and a menacing guitar riff to give proof that the band doesn't have far to go before mastering their sound.

The CD, available through the band at www.mantra.net, also includes some interesting extras, such as a very cool danceable version of "No Exit" and a trance bonus track. There is much potential here, and when Mantra pulls everything together and tightens up length-wise, their future will, in the words of J.S. Clayden of Pitchshifter, be so bright that "I'd look ahead but it burns my retinas." (Michael Delano)

significant others

SHADOWS FALL
Of One Blood
Century Media Records

Oh my f#*%ing god.

This is easily the best CD I've heard in years. Not since In Flames' Whoracle or Fear Factory's Demanufacture have I heard an album that so totally readjusted my expectations for the future of music. Where should I start?

Well, for one thing, Shadows Fall is (gasp) local. That's right, they hail from right here in the great state of Massacusetts, and they don't even sound like Aerosmith. The fact that I'd never even really heard of the band until I got the CD is just a shocking reminder of how totally ignored the local scene is in this area.

But anyways, despite my total ignorance of them, Shadows Fall managed to break out of the New England ghetto, sign a deal with national semi-major label Century Media, and record Of One Blood. And I thank them for doing so.

Combining elements of Fear Factory and In Flames as well as something unique and flawless: Shadows Fall have crafted a brutally heavy, instrumentally involved, lyrically profound, and overall beautiful product that should become an instant classic. Vocalist Brian Fair has both a beautiful, clean, high singing voice and a deadly, razor-sharp death attack that he can deploy at will, and with the layering of extra vocals by both guitarists Matthew Bachand and Jonathan Donais, the texture and depth of the vocals is unparalleled today. Bachand and Donais also combine for some of the fastest, most involved guitar work that probably any American band has ever achieved.

This is the kind of thing that Swedish metal bands excel at, and even they would be hard pressed to approach the depth of achievement that these two New England boys have acquired.

As for the songs themselves, "The First Noble Truth" is by far my favorite. With lyrics such as "As reality washes away the faded memories of daylight/ this is my escape/ realization of my mind's own deceit/ perception slips away/ someone free me from heaven torn asunder/ full of empty promises to be there if I wonder," how could it not be? The outright thrash of "Crushing Belial" balances the delicate melodic work of "To Ashes," while the title track "Of One Blood" has a perfect balance between the two poles.

I really could go on forever drooling over the exploits of Shadows Fall and their album, but I'd rather just say this: you need this album. I don't care who you are, what you listen to: go buy Of One Blood right now, and have your expectations of music revolutionized as well. (Rob Schulze)

Turn to OTHERS page 9

CORROSION OF CONFORMITY
America's Volume Dealer
Sanctuary

Mainstream rock has been out of touch with its Southern soul for a while now, to the point where many think that Kid Rock (from Detroit) is a credible link to good ol' American rawk. Yeah, Pantera gives a hint of their southern style on Reinventing the Steel, but not nearly as much as they did five years ago on the excellent The Great Southern Trendkill. It's been about as long since we've seen Corrosion of Conformity, whose most recent two albums, 1994's Deliverance and 1998's Wiseblood, were the result of their controversial transformation from metal-tinged punkers to geetar solo lovin' metal-tinged classic rock

UMASS YOGA & MEDITATION CLUB
The Art of Living - Healing Breath Workshop

- 6 sessions for deep relaxation, greater energy, increased awareness and fun
- Brings the mind to the present moment and allows you to give your 100% !
- Held in about 100 countries - recognized by the United Nations & W.H.O.
- No experience needed. Everyone welcome!

When: Nov 10(starts @7pm) - Nov 15, 3 hour sessions. Where: UMass, LGRT 1634,
For more information: ☎ Durgesh 665-8635 ☎ Rebecca 549-0396
Email: durgesh@nova.astro.umass.edu Web http://www.artofliving.org/colleges/
Free introductory sessions (optional) ! UMass Campus Center 7-8 pm
Wed Nov 1 Rm. 811 Tue Nov 7 Rm. 803 Thu Nov 9 Rm. 905

KEGGS and EGGS!
at McMURPHY'S Irish Tavern
NOVEMBER 4th Homecoming 2000
Doors open at 10 am
NO COVER CHARGE!
POSITIVE ID REQUIRED

Four Seasons WINE & LIQUOR
CONVENIENTLY LOCATED NEXT TO DUNKIN DONUTS

M.G.D. Case 24 btls $10.99+ dep	KEYSTONE LT 30 pack cans $11.99+ dep	MILLWAUKEE'S BEST 30 pack cans $11.49+ dep	SUPER SALE THURSDAYS
BECKS 12 pack btls $10.99+ dep	LOWENBRAU 12 pack btls $9.99+ dep	DOS XX 12 pack btls $9.99+ dep	OUR WEEKLY SALES OVERLAP EVERY THURSDAY. GIVING YOU THE BEST OF BOTH SALES!
MIKE'S 12 pack btls $9.99+ dep	RED STRIPE 6 pack btls $5.69+ dep	B.B.C. 64 oz btls $4.49+ dep	Sale ends 11/9/00

333 Russell St. (RTE.9) Hadley, MA 584-8174 Hours Mon - Sat 9am - 11pm.
American Express, ATM, Debit, Discover, Master Card, and Visa accepted.
Not Responsible for typographical errors. ID's checked by Legal Age Software.

UMass Alumni Association
"Leaders in the Making" Scholarships

Applicants must be full-time junior undergraduate students to be eligible. Applications may be picked up Monday through Friday at the Alumni Relations Office in Memorial Hall from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. They must be completed and returned to Jason Germain in the Alumni Office no later than December 1, 2000. Winners will receive up to $2,000.00 and will be recognized at a ceremony in April.

For more information, please contact Jason Germain at 545-2317 or jag@admin.umass.edu

UMASS Alumni Association®
University of Massachusetts Amherst

BRUISED BODY?
Don't let the tow truck drag your wounded vehicle to their pet place. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

ARTIST PROFILE

Name: Dayle Gruet
Major: Undeclared
Age: 19
Year: Sophomore

Dayle Gruet, an undeclared sophomore, got her taste of fame at an early age. In 1996, She attended a taping of the "Rosie O'Donnell Show" with her mother when, to her surprise, she was selected to introduce Rosie from the audience. This led to a prestigious summer theatre tour with the Williamstown Theatre festival, an appearance on "Party of Five," and various roles in local independent and student-produced films throughout the past few years. She spoke with the Collegian about her experiences and aspirations.

COLLEGIAN: How did you get interested in acting?
DAYLE GRUET: Ever since I was little I had wanted to act. But the big thing was the Rosie O'Donnell Show. That was her first season, in September of 1996. We were just standing in line, and I had wanted to do the opening announcement; so I told one of the people, and they selected me to try out. You had to rehearse in front of the camera and I seemed to get it right, the guy liked my smile.

COLLEGIAN: Did you get to meet Rosie O'Donnell?
GRUET: Yeah, briefly. She had to take care of her son so there wasn't much time. But we got to shake hands.

COLLEGIAN: What's your favorite role that you've done?
GRUET: I've done all different things, so I don't really have a favorite. I guess it would be The Energy Specialist, [an independent film] shot in Northampton. This guy made it who went to one of the five colleges and this film was kind of like a "Back to his old life" thing. I played a waitress.

COLLEGIAN: How was your experience on "Party of Five"?
GRUET: Very cool, we were visiting the set of "Party of Five" and the assistant director was looking for extras. This was the summer of 1996. I got to sit on a bus with Scott Wolf, and I had already met him before at the Williamstown Theatre Festival, which is big prestigious summer tour that had Gwenyth Paltrow one year and Scott Wolf.

COLLEGIAN: What did you think of Scott Wolf?
GRUET: He's a pretty nice guy; he remembered who I was [on the "Party of Five" set], so that was really cool.

COLLEGIAN: Did you meet Lacey Chabert? Is her voice that annoying in person?
GRUET: Yeah, I got to meet her. We chatted as the bus was going by in the scene. And Matt Fox was there.

COLLEGIAN: Have you done other student work?
GRUET: Yeah, I worked on this student film just recently. I don't know if they ever finished it though. I did a voice-over as a 911 operator.

COLLEGIAN: Do you prefer theatre or film?
GRUET: I definitely prefer film. I like theatre, I like that it's live. But I like doing something over and over in film. And it's better to be a movie star. There's more gratification.

COLLEGIAN: Do you want to do acting for your career, do you think?
GRUET: Yes and no. I don't know what I want to do; I like different things. I do want a real job as well. I do really enjoy it so if I could do it I'd love to.

COLLEGIAN: What music is currently in your CD player?
GRUET: Usually it's B.B. Mac. But right now, N'Sync.

COLLEGIAN: I don't think we can print that. But anyway, what's your favorite movie?
GRUET: Oh wow. I have so many favorites. Rainman – cause I do a good Rainman impression. And Dirty Dancing.

COLLEGIAN: Big Y or Stop & Shop?
GRUET: Big Y – the guy who started it lives in my town.

COLLEGIAN: D.P. Dough or Pinnochio's?
GRUET: I had a bad experience with Pinnochio's; I've never had D.P. Dough, but my friend is a driver now so I might try it.

Outkast release out of this world

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

OUTKAST
Stankonia
Arista Records

The Wisdom of OutKast, Part One: "We are the coolest mother funkers on the planet" –"So Fresh So Clean"

Stankonia isn't an album in which Atlanta's OutKast pines for the spot of hip-hop's freshest, most innovative group. It's a championship defense after winning the title on 1998's Aquemini, simply one of the coolest albums ever to be heard. The two albums that brought them there were 1994's Southernplayalisticadillacmuzick and 1996's ATLiens, both marvels of intelligent song structures, witty choruses, and the playa vs. thinka dynamic of Big Boi (Antwan Patton) and Dre (Andre Benjamin). With Aquemini they explored more musically and lyrically, addressing social issues without ever preaching and always keeping an ear to the street critical and commercial success followed. With Stankonia they continue the experimental progression, adding more funk to the mix this time around, and if it doesn't quite hit the same peak as its predecessor it will still most likely be the best hip-hop album of the year.

The Wisdom of OutKast, Part Two: "I met a crisk/ I made her shit her draws/ She thought hip-hop was only guns and alcohol/ I said, oh hell naw!/ But set it's that, too/ You can't discriminate cause you done read a book or two" –"Humble Mumble"

OutKast has always maintained a philosophy similar to Confucius: one can practice self-improvement, but it is the point where one can't be comfortable among society, it is worthless. Dre and Big Boi have consistently honed their sound, making each consistent album a more impressive showcase of rhyme skills, as well as tighter musically. In addition to their improvement is diversity: keeping their sound "so fresh and so clean" so as to keep the listener challenged and interested. Musically they have done this in innumerable ways, mixing rock, jazz, and samples, among others into their Dirty South style. Rhymewise, they have also experimented with different deliveries, like the more aggressive approach on Aquemini tracks such as "Da Art of Storytellin' (Part 2)" and "Chonkyfire."

That style continues on the first single from Stankonia, "B.O.B." A frenetic beat and chaotic drums struggle to keep up with the rapid delivery from Dre before giving way to the expectedly memorable chorus. Big Boi follows the same pattern, but it's only halfway there after he spits, since before the track ends there is an impressive display of turntable acrobatics, an extended bridge with chanting, and a gospel chorus to send it home. "B.O.B." essentially captures in one song the diversity and class that many hip-hop artists hope to spread over an entire album.

But in hip-hop all the artistic merit in the world amounts to nothing if you don't have the respect of the people and blocks jumpin'. OutKast has never had this problem, their intelligent sounds cutting through a stagnant scene of Ja Rules and Ludacris's like a knife. "B.O.B." the unlikeliest of songs, has been welcomed by MTV and radio to responsive audiences, although I surely witnessed a sign of the apocalypse when Lil' Bow Wow bout out OutKast on the request line of Direct Effect.

Dre and Big Boi keep it real with everyday issues as well as far reaching philosophies. "Ms. Jackson" is a beautiful apology to baby's mommas; the lyrics, both emotional and funny, swirl around a recurring piano sample and maybe the most affecting chorus OutKast has written to date. "Gangsta Shit" lashes out at the culture of gangsta rap, while "Red Velvet" details the consequences for flossin' MCs. The duo also broaden their scope to tackle American social ills on "Gasoline Dreams," and "B.O.B." is supposedly about the unfortunate eagerness of the United States to fire on foreign civilian areas.

The experimentation on Stankonia may be a little excessive for some, but just about every attempt hits the mark. "Stankilove" is extremely slow and stretched out, but never boring, and comes wisely at the end of the album. In true George Clinton fashion, Outkast pulls out some eloquent spoken word at the end of "Slum Beautiful," and "Humble Mumble" has an irresistible South American vibe and a gorgeous appearance by Erykah Badu.

The Wisdom of OutKast, Part 3: "We'll pull your whole deck/ fuck pullin' your card/ and still take my guitar and take a walk in the park/ and play the sweetest melody the street ever heard" –"Gangsta Shit"

Best hip-hop album of the year? Sure, why not. My personal count has only Ghostface and Dead Prez in OutKast's league, although the recent Deltron 3030 is turning some heads around the office. Another first-class effort from Atlanta's finest, a trail-blazing effort that will leave most cats scrambling to catch up before Dre and Big Boi drop another one in a couple of years

Attention!

There will be a mandatory meeting for all current and interested Arts writers TONIGHT at 8:00p.m. in the Collegian office. We need writers to review music and film. More importantly, we need articles about fine arts. In short, we are very needy. If you cannot make this meeting or need further information, contact Ryan at 545-1361.

Homecoming Festival 2000

HEY! MARK YOUR CALENDARS SO YOU DON'T MISS OUT!

Kick off the weekend with the BIG LUNCH!
Friday, November 3
11:30 a.m. Campus Center Lawn
Use your meal card, or spend just $4

Enjoy FREE ICE CREAM compliments of the UMass Alumni Association!

On Saturday, November 4 visit Homecoming Park from 10a.m. – Noon
Visit the tents and race your friends in the obstacle course or spin your heart out on the Gyro Scope!

Don't miss the GAME!
12 Noon
Help us cheer when we take on the Villanova Wildcats!

For more information, or a full list of the programs, please call the Alumni Relations Office at 545-2317.

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
studentuniverse.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

Castaway Lounge
I-91 to exit 24, south on Rte. 5
Open to all students over 21 years old
We are now hiring girls 18 and over who need to make big money in the entertainment business
We are now open for Monday Night Football @ 4pm
• 6 Dancers • Food • Prizes
VIP room always open for private parties

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00
The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324
M Wed 10-6, Th Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324
M Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 7, Sun 12-5
800-729-8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com

He'll be singin! When he's winnin!

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

ROBBIE WILLIAMS
Sing When You're Winning
Capitol Records

He's a brash pop-star, prone to getting in pissing contests with other huge British musicians and a former member of Take That – oh, and he's considered one the most talented "pop" musicians on the global market.

Robbie Williams latest album doesn't prove that he is and doesn't prove that he isn't – it's a solid thumbs in the middle album that both highlights his tremendous musical commercial ability and yet isn't creative enough to stabilize his stability.

Pop music is so sensitive to musicians. Some songs go straight to the top of the charts and the band's never heard from again, others go straight to the top of the charts and are creative enough to sustain themselves. Tag Del Rio went all the way to number one with "Macarena" and nobody has heard from them since. Meanwhile Madonna is a perfect example of a musical chameleon who has redefined herself again and again, thus making her perhaps the world's most popular musician.

For Robbie Williams to succeed in the world market, he can't continually release the same songs. "Millennium" and "Angel" were big hits but, unfortunately, covered both his available basic pop styles: upbeat and downbeat. So where can Robbie go now?

Certainly not to "Better Man," an "Angel"-s, rip-off that is so bland and boring that it can only be hoped his label doesn't release it as a single. Soft acoustic guitars, a drum-beat and Williams' whiny voice do not a good song make. It also can't be "Rock DJ" a peppy upbeat song on which Williams pseudo-raps like Jay Kay from Jamiriquai before jumping into a standard pop chorus.

It's going to take more than that for Williams to be anymore than the current British flavor of the moment. The inexplicable love affair with Oasis may continue around the world but at least they provide unbelievable tension in the press. Williams can try to butt in on the Gallagher's fighting, but let's face it, it just isn't as impressive.

He can't continually release songs that sound like his previous songs, but Sing When You're Winning is littered with songs that can be legitimately called pop gems, including "Supreme" a song that sounds like a British "I Will Survive." "Knutsford City Limits" is similarly excellent, a song that trashes on big cities in exchange for wherever the hell Knutsford is. Perhaps that's a clever, hard-to-understand British joke, but the song is produced well and sounds like the kind of song that gets hidden on his probable greatest hits album.

Robbie Williams has a boatload of talent and possibility; that talent, like his career, will be squandered if he continually tries to recreate "Millennium" and "Angel." If he's willing to take some risks and make songs that have, not a, but his poppiness, Williams might just live up to the hype that follows him about.

Robbie Williams is one of the few success stories of survival after living the life of a teenage sex symbol

Chattering Magpies craft valiant first effort

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

CHATTERING MAGPIES
Waiting for you
Chattering Magpies

Surely a group that could appear on Public Radio's Mountain Stage, South Hadley's Chattering Magpies' first album, Waiting for you is a folky blend of harmonized life lyrics and traditional guitar riffs.

With a decidedly bare sound, Waiting for you is definitely a first album: there are the hits and there are the misses. Some of the lyrics are too metaphorical and overdone, some of the sounds are too folk for their own good. But when the band gets it right, it truly gets it right.

"Shed My Skin" is an autumn song. There's just something about it that feels like fall, and while the lyrics are somewhat overdone, the song's chorus makes it beautiful. Karen Cardozo-Kane's soft guitar works perfectly when they sing "shed my skin/ let out the girl who's been trapped within/ shed my skin/ revealing colors like wet paint..."

Likewise, "Never Enough" is an upbeat song, threatening to go almost pop-folk, a song that decries, in an ironic sort of way, how life just isn't as easy as it should be. Both songs are excellently mixed and arranged, and that's definitely the best part of Waiting for you. Rather than relying on folk staples (read: just guitars) the Magpies add cellos, percussion, accordions and pianos. It creates a rich sound that was cleverly blended together to create songs like the previously mentioned, and perhaps the albums most diverse track "Waiting For You."

With both guitar, bass, electric guitar, pennys-whistle and an accordion, the song's peppy lyrical styling mix perfectly with the music, a rarity for a first album when, all too frequently, bands haven't been able to find that mix.

The Chattering Magpies have and they've produced a fairly good album on its own and an excellent debut album. The only thing that falls somewhat short are the lyrics themselves. They're very introspective and written almost as if they're meant for a specific person that we don't know. Sometimes that can be good; there have been plenty of lyricists who've written to specific people but in such a way as to allow others a connection with the album. This album's lyrics, unfortunately, don't allow for that sort of connection. The listener's left to wonder about the situation itself instead of being able to reflect.

But even with that drawback, Waiting for you is a wonderful debut with a mature and developed sound. Some of the lyrics are hard to connect with, but overall, the album's sound and the playfulness of some the songs make it a can't miss for folk fans.

Least horrible songs are actually quite excellent

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

Type O Negative
The Least Worst of Type O Negative
Roadrunner Records

The name should tell you all you need to know. The Least Worst of Type O Negative is a solid retrospective of one of the most loved and hated bands in metal today – and possibly the only one that refuses to take itself seriously.

One only needs look at the back to know that the tracklisting is flawless. The band chose the songs that they felt were the least horrible of their repertoire themselves, and they obviously know what their fans love the most. After getting things started in typical Type O fashion with "The Misinterpretation of Silence and its Disastrous Consequences," a full 39 seconds of absolutely nothing, the band kicks immediately into "Everyone I Love Is Dead," and it is on.

All the classics are here, from the ode to goth girls "Black No. 1" to the ode to two goth girls at once, "My Girlfriend's Girlfriend." ("They keep me warm on cold nights, it much be quite a sight, in our meat triangle all tangled") All the albums except the fake-live Origin of the Feces are represented, and there are some completely new songs and some new visions of old songs.

So are there any problems at all?

Unfortunately, yes. For one thing, the totally new songs are all leftovers from the recording of Type O's last album, World Coming Down, and you can tell why some of them were left on the floor, "12 Black Rainbows" especially. A few totally new songs would have been nice, but the point on a greatest hits album is, of course, the already released songs. Sadly enough, there are problems with that too.

The thing is, Type O's songs have a tendency to be long – as in, ten minutes minimum long, especially their most beloved songs. The key to Type O songs is the contents – if you'd never heard the originals, you'd probably think they were fantastic, and they are, just not as fantastic as the originals.

Should Type O have opted for fewer songs at full-length or shaved them to make room for more material? Perhaps, but The Least Worst of Type O Negative still succeeds totally in driving home the fact that their least horrible songs are actually quite excellent.

Among the songs edited are "Black No. 1," "Everyone I Love Is Dead," "Love You to Death," "Everything Dies," and more. Not all of the songs are as mauled as "Christian Woman," but none of them are improved. Also, "Cinnamon Girl" and 'My Girlfriend's Girlfriend" are remixed, but these are rather cool versions as long as you aren't expecting the originals. It speaks volumes that the song that stands out most on the album, that really catches your attention and makes you listen, is "Unsuccessfully Coping with the Natural Beauty of Infidelity" (also known as "I Know You're Fucking Someone Else"). That song, from Type O's debut Slow, Deep, and Hard, is presented in its full twelve and a half minute format, and what with being the most straightforward metallic song on the album (and the most emotional, especially when lead singer/bassist Peter Steele screams "You make me hate myself!") and the one kept in its pristine state it probably shines as the best selection off of the greatest hits. That isn't to say that some songs on this compilation aren't better – it their original states I prefer "Christian Woman," "Black No. 1," or "Cinnamon Girl" any day, but off of this album "Unsuccessfully Coping" is the one that stands out above the rest.

These defects to not take away from the album as a whole, though. New songs such as "It's Never Enough" and (especially) "Stay Out of My Dreams" are good, solid Type O material. The remixes are cool, and, if you can take the edits for what they are, the songs they come from are fantastic. In other words – if you'd never heard the originals, you'd probably think they were fantastic, and they are, just not as fantastic as the originals.

This is the most stunning example of this is "Christian Woman." A classic, beautiful nine-minute masterpiece in its original format on the Bloody Kisses album, it is here reduced to four minutes and twenty-five seconds. It isn't bad, really, the song isn't ruined, it just isn't the same. It is inferior to the original, and that is wrong on a greatest hits album.

It's a shame.

Low Student Airfares

Eurailpasses

More Than 100 Departure Cities

Study Abroad

studentuniverse.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT

studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

Rome Venice Florence Vienna Budapest Prague Bangkok Moscow Lisbon Madrid Barcelona Tel Aviv Johannesburg Delhi Hong Kong Buenos Aires Lima Tokyo Santiago London Dublin Paris Nice Copenhagen Stockholm Oslo Amsterdam Berlin Munich Zurich Istanbul

We Sell
BEER & WINE on SUNDAYS
12 NOON - 9 PM -SuperBowl Sunday Only
12 NOON - 7 PM -regular hours
MONTAGUE MINI MART
We accept Visa & Mastercard
367-9551
60 Main St. Montague Center
10 Mins. from Campus

It's Sweater Time.
ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

haircuts★ colors ★ highlights
REGENCY HAIRSTYLISTS
189 N. Pleasant St.
253-9526
perms★ tanning★facial waxing

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SILVER SEASON
TICKETS ONLY $5 $10 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS

A Treasure from Down Under
The Sydney Dance Company
Graeme Murphy, Artistic Director
Air and other Invisible Forces
Air is a mosaic of innovative movement, stunning stage design, diaphanous costumes, and haunting music performed by one of the most technically brilliant dance companies in the world. It has riveted audiences, winning standing ovations and great critical acclaim at every performance.
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 14 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL

Heavenly Voices
ACCENTUS
Laurence Equilbey, artistic director
The rich repertoire of French a cappella is brought to life by Accentus, a professional choir of 32 singers. Under the direction of Swedish choirmaster Eric Ericson, the program will include choral works by Wolf, Poulenc, and Schoenberg, among others.
FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 17 AT 8PM, CONCERT HALL

American Ambassador of Song
MICHAEL FEINSTEIN
No contemporary artist captures the essence of popular music like Grammy-nominated Michael Feinstein. A pop vocalist, composer and arranger, Feinstein has released 17 albums and sold out shows worldwide. Feinstein will be joined by a septet performing arrangements from his current Concord release Big City Rhythms. Don't miss Michael Feinstein in his only area appearance.
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 21 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL
Special Event Student Tickets $10

Fairytale on Ice
St. Petersburg Ice Ballet in Cinderella
A world premiere tour
A company of 35 champion ice dancers trained in the tradition of the world renowned Kirov Ballet, this production features over 100 magnificent costumes and full opera house sets in the grand Russian style. Fun for the entire family. Join us at 6:30pm for a pre-show party with the staff of FamilyFun Magazine and make your own finger puppets. Free milk and cookies while they last.
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 28 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL
SPONSORED BY FAMILYFUN MAGAZINE

Some Like it Hot!
EDDIE PALMIERI AND HIS BAND
with special guest David Sanchez
Warm up to the incendiary Latin jazz sounds of five-time Grammy Award winner Eddie Palmieri and his band. Pianist Eddie Palmieri is widely regarded as a living legend within the Latin & Afro-Cuban jazz standard and plays the piano like Muhammed Ali boxed. He will be joined by saxophonist David Sanchez, one of the most gifted and resourceful musicians on the international jazz scene. "Palmieri...can make a piano roar!" – The New York Times
SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2 AT 8PM, CONCERT HALL
SPONSORED BY WFCR 88.5FM AND SAVITT, SCHWARTZ & PERRY, P.C.

www.fineartscenter.com
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for tickets
THE FINE ARTS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

■ others

continued from page 6

ers. Spearheading the evolution was guitarist/vocalist Pepper Keenan, who directed the group towards critical success and a high-profile tour opening for Metallica. Then, as is the case with so many good bands, they faded into obscurity, with everyone scratching their heads as to how all of the pieces didn't fit together to paint a brighter future for the band. Label issues and nearly half a decade later, "Congratulations Song" blasts through the car speakers, somehow sneaking its way onto mainstream rock radio.

Corrosion didn't need to and hasn't changed, since although their sound is instantly familiar to fans, it's still completely different from any of the crap currently on the radio. An unobtrusive yet very deep and heavy riff complemented by Keenan's unmistakable vocals makes one happy not just to have Corrosion back and amazingly on the radio, but with a good song to boot. A song that I will happily watch die the usual radio death. It's hard to understand completely on the first listen and reeks of old school metal, and is simply too smart and good to be placed in between "Rollin'" and "Broken Home."

The album as a whole generally lives up to the quality of the lead off single, tainted only by less consistency than the last two albums and the enormous mounting expectations that the wait created. "Share Too Long," a down-tempo track that could easily be a country song minus the electric, is aided by Warren Haynes on the slide guitar and is one of the highlights. The eerie lyrics and mood of "Sleeping Martyr" and the chugging "Take What You Want" are others. Unfortunately, many of the songs don't have the characteristic depth musically and lyrically that fans have come to expect. Silly fun like Keenan urging the listener to "make so bods rockah" on "Zippo" is fine, but the forgettable sound and overall throwaway content bleeds into other songs like "Who's Got the Fire?" and "Gittin' It On." Other disturbing developments are the absence of the cool moniker Corrosion of Conformists (everywhere the band is blandly referred to simply as COC, possibly their new name), and some lazy cover art that pales in comparison to the colorful psychedelic artwork of previous efforts. America's Volume Dealer is an uneven album, but the majority of good songs make it essential for fans. I regretfully predict that the current heavy music climate indicates Corrosion's chance for the big time has passed them by, although this latest album is by no means a disappointing entry into their strong legacy. (Michael Delano)

RAILGEL
Make The Music 2000
Independent Record

Having recently been introduced to this CD, skeptically I might add, I was surprised by it. It is some amazing music. I just have two words for you: Human Beatbox. It doesn't get any cooler than that. A man who can do his own beats is a man worthy of respect, and truly deserving of all the ladies I can sure he gets. If you put that much time into, there had better be some payoff, if you know what I am saying.

Truthfully, if it were just the Human Beatbox, I wouldn't be that impressed – it has been done, after all. Sure it's old school, I respect that, and I would definitely listen to it. One thing, however, makes this man worth of praise and worship. He can rap while doing his own beats. Do you understand this? The guy can spit out a beat and still rap on top of it; I didn't think it was possible. It defies common understanding of the human body. On several tracks, he slowly and deliberately proves to us how remarkable this is. I still live in shocked amazement. That isn't to say that the album is good all around. It's good music, but would you expect anything less from a man in The Roots? The sampling is great and fairly light – you have to like a guy who takes samples from Street Fighter, Mortal Kombat and Beavis and Butthead...and throws them into one track!

That's not it. It's the little parts of this CD that make it really great. The extra track is fantastic. Some of the people featured, including DJ's Scribble and Slimky are extremely skilled. The "Interlude" has portions from live shows, in which he interacts with the crowd. It all adds up to a fun CD to listen to. This is one album that should be high up there on your lists going into this holiday season. I know I am seriously considering making a rare CD purchase on this one, and maybe you should be too. Overall the CD is unusual, not the popular tripe that one is usually exposed to, so take some initiative and have a listen. (Scott Newport)

SLOW JETS
Worm Into Phoenix
Morpheus Records

Slow Jets and their punk-pop songs walk the line between charmingly lovable and bad, too often plunging head first into the bad side. Worm Into Phoenix begins with "Lick the Salty," a catchy pop number with an almost radio-ready guitar hook and almost good British vocal. Likewise, the rest of the album is almost tolerable, and some of the songs almost didn't make me want to turn it off. Sometimes the songs are almost distinguishable from one another.

This is garage music at its most mediocre; the band's lack of gloss never works in their favor, and the songs are poorly written and totally forgettable. These guys are decades behind the times, and only a few steps removed from high school talent. Don't waste your time. (David Troupes)

TALIB KWELI & HI-TEK: REFLECTION ETERNAL
Train of Thought
Rawkus

When a hip-hop artist includes lyrics in the CD booklet chances are they have something to say, and the ink is on the page, just like the flow over the beat, as a statement of purpose. Brooklyn's Talib Kweli has impressed the underground for some time with singles and his collaboration with Mos Def in Black Star, and like his partner, is poised to earn some mainstream and critical acclaim with his debut with DJ Hi-Tek in Reflection Eternal with their debut Train of Thought. Kweli's outlook reminisces on hip-hop's past, laments its present, and provides a warning and a blueprint for its future.

Kweli has a chorus that asks, "Where were you the day hip-hop died?" and with a statement like that one better have the rhymes and the beats to back it up. Luckily, he has them both in abundance on "Too Late," the most scathing of his attacks on hip-hop 2000. A Middle Eastern groove with a spirited woodwind and a chugging aquatic sounding bass instrument creates a somber yet hopeful atmosphere for Kweli's unflinching contempt for unspecified (but known) rap acts. "See thru the overspecialized, underpressurized, no live texturized emcees/ Who got the masses mesmerized with empty rhetoric, they better quit."

DJ Hi-Tek knows when to let Kweli shine with some subtle beats and when to step forward and impress on the excellent "African Dream" or the soothing "Memories Live," although his short display of mic skills is unlikely to blow anyone away. The songs are tight and intelligent throughout, and only sometimes lose focus through the 70 minutes, but the diversity helps justify the length. Whether bouncing with Rah Digga and Xzibit on "Down for the Count" or showing luv for the ladies on "Love Language" with Les Nubians, Train of Thought is never boring. Smooth, jazzy interludes take the place of worthless skitz, like the beautiful "Love Speakeasy" and the positive "On My Way." Not many hip-hop albums in the mainstream can with sincerity be called brain food, but then again how many rappers quote James Joyce and invite you to "tap into your chi?"

Reflection Eternal is another great group that shows hip-hop can be fun and intelligent at the same time, and Train of Thought fits nicely into a year that has been a memorable one for hip-hop. With a brilliant new Outkast, Deltron 3030, and Reflection Eternal all released in the same month, it's enough to make a backpacker's head explode. (Michael Delano)

NFL returns to nice normal self

After Week Nine of the NFL season, the top tier of teams in the league is starting to take shape. The Rams returned to their winning ways against a 49er defense that should be replaced by the defense of the French during World War II.

In Trent Green's first start as a Ram, he overcame a shaky start to throw for over 300 yards and two touchdowns. Both of his touchdown passes and the two rushing touchdowns came from one man wrecking crew Marshall Faulk.

He has 14 touchdowns in eight games and is the first half NFL MVP. He is doing all of this with the knowledge that he is going to need off-season knee surgery to remove scar tissue. Even with all his impressive statistics, he is not even the MVP on the Rams. That dubious distinction belongs to... you guessed it, the 49er defense. 75 points given up in the two meetings, and on average for the season, the defense gives up 32 points... PER GAME! Actually, the 49er defense is the MVP on every other NFL team too.

St. Louis is now tied for the NFL's best record at 7-1 with Minnesota, who saw their undefeated string come to an end at seven with a humiliating loss at Tampa Bay. The Vikings were never in this one as Tampa quarterback Shaun King threw four TD passes – although that certainly is evidence that not everything was back to normal this week end.

The Bucs defense did the job against Daunte Culpepper and the vaunted Vikings attack. They so successfully covered Randy Moss that his only important touch was one on an official that got him thrown out of the game. That ejection might lead to up to a $65,000 fine for the wideout, money that could certainly go to the "David Ruse Needs to Pay Off His College Loans Fund."

However, I think that the Vikes will rebound. They have needed a game like this, not for the fact that they got blown out, but for knowledge that they still have a lot of work to do to become a Super Bowl team.

Primarily, they need help on the defensive side of the ball. They gave up 41 points to Tampa and have given up 178 points in eight games. It's not a bad number, but it certainly isn't the caliber needed to be a championship team.

The other teams at 7-1 come from the AFC. One of them is the surprising Oakland Raiders. Head Coach Jon Gruden has done a fantastic job of guiding his team this season. His team's best work has been its ability to win the close games. Of Oakland's seven wins this season, five of them, including Sunday's 15-13 win over San Diego, have come by seven points or less.

Sebastian Janikowski kicked five field goals this past week to lead the Raiders to victory over a Charger that can't buy a break and are 0-8. The Raiders are in first place in the AFC West by two games going into this week's showdown against second place Kansas City. The only thing the Raiders have to guard against is the November swoon that has haunted them the last couple of seasons. Guess what Oakland, it's November.

The other team at 7-1 is the Tennessee Titans. This year's Super Bowl Runners Up are winners of seven straight after recording a huge win at Washington against the Redskins on Monday night. The Titans start is more frightening when you consider the following: QB Steve McNair has not had a stellar season to this point throwing for just 1158 yards and eight touchdowns in eight games.

Eddie George has 868 yards rushing, but those have been quiet yards and he's only scored five touchdowns. The signing of Carl Pickens has led to one thing, or maybe that the same thing: Frank Wycheck leading the team in receptions. For his part, Pickens has been injured, missing eight games throughout the season.

The reason why they are 7-1 is defense and special teams. The defense has allowed an average of just 15 points per game. Jevon Kearse and the rest of the defense have done a fantastic job of creating advantages for the offense, and then, including Samari Rolle's Maryland intercepti[illegible] final play of the first [illegible] Monday night.

The special teams [illegible] led by Derrick Mason [illegible] returned a punt 69 yards for a score on Monday night, is averaging under 14 yards a punt return [illegible] Mason is also second in the NFL in kickoff [illegible] at 29.9 yards a return.

The Raiders, Titans, Rams and Vikings are the class of the crop during the first half of the season. Theoretically, we don't play only eight games in the NFL season, so that might all change.

Now, to a couple of picks for this week. [illegible] the sad-lookin'-suckin' Pittsburgh Steelers at the Titans. The Steelers have been five games in a row after a 3-1 start. Correction, after this game they will be [illegible] The Steelers will five games in a row before they meet Cleveland at Tennessee. Give me Tennessee.

The other big AFC match up involves the Raiders and the Chiefs. The Raiders got a late field goal to [illegible] Chiefs at Arrowhead Stadium the first time they met. The Raiders will defeat them the second time around. However I do not think that it will take a last [illegible] time.

On a side note, the NFL went from [illegible] Week Eight to much calmer waters in Week Nine. Games that are suppose to win like St. Louis, Tennessee, Indianapolis won. Teams that are suppose to lose, like Cleveland, Arizona and San Diego lost. Then on top of the week as an NFL player, got in trouble off the field this weekend as Broncos QB Brian Griese was arrested on Saturday on charges of driving under the influence.

Ah, isn't it nice to have the real NFL back?

David Ruse is a Collegian columnist.

Changing of the guard pointless for B's

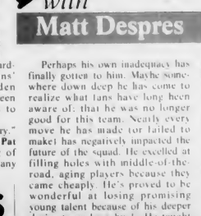
When Harry Sinden finally stepped down as general manager of the Boston Bruins yesterday, he took with him 28 years of Hall of Fame memories. He carried away a reputation as one of the toughest negotiators in the league, and a career record dotted largely with success.

Unfortunately for Bruins fans, the one thing he left behind was an exact replica of himself.

Mike O'Connell became the Bruins' new general manager yesterday morning, the sixth in team history. O'Connell, 44, has been working closely with Sinden the past few years, carrying out most of the general managers duties while a proud Papa Harry looked on. Sinden worked with him so closely, in fact, that the changing of positions will hardly yield a bump in the Bruins' descent to hockey hell. Sinden decided to remove his Halloween mask yesterday morning, only to reveal himself.

We shall call him..."Mini-Harry."

Much like the firing of coach Pat Burns last week, the timing of Sinden's decision has raised many eyebrows. Why now, just weeks into the new season? Has he let time run its course naturally, or has he tired of living in the crosshairs of a ruthless Boston fan base?



Perhaps his own inadequacy has finally gotten to him. Maybe somewhere deep he has come to realize what fans have long been aware of: that he was no longer good for this team. Nearly every move he has made (or failed to make) has negatively impacted the future of the squad. He excelled at filling holes with middle-of-the-road, aging players because they came cheaply. He's proved to be wonderful at losing promising young talent because of his deeper desire to make a buck. He taught O'Connell everything he knew ensuring mediocre hockey for the next generation of Bruins fans.

Sinden once was at the helm of a potential NHL dynasty. In 1969-70 he coached the Bruins to their first Stanley Cup in 29 years. After a short stint in private business, he returned to Boston in 1972 as the team's fifth general manager.

He's also been responsible for some the greatest trades in team history, bringing the likes of Phil Esposito, Bobby Orr, Cam Neely and Ray Bourque to town. Even some of his recent trades have paid dividends, moves that include bringing Jason Allison, Joe Thornton and Anson Carter aboard. However, for every Carter and Allison, there has been a Dave Ellett or Paul Coffey laughable moves that suggested Harry had fallen asleep behind the wheel.

Sinden will stay on with the team as President and rest assured that his opinion will still be sought out in matters of hockey operation. No matter how many times they tell you O'Connell has full control, Sinden will have a hand in this team until he hangs it up for good.

Matt Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

SOUPer BOWL
Lobster Bisque Special
THIS WEEKEND
Clam Chowder Special every Friday
• 10-12 Different soups daily Including chilis and stews
• Bread bowls
• Fresh bread
• All made fresh daily
• also a limited selection of salads
96 N. Pleasant St. (Next to CVS) 253-1855

Shear Bliss
Holistic Salon
413-253-2322
• Excellent Cuts & Colors
• Facials • Aveda/Alterna
• Body Sugaring & more
Bring in coupon
Get $5 off Hairsolar or Perm

University Liquors
HOME COMING SPECIAL

Kendell Jackson Chardonnay 750	$10.99
Sutterhome Chardonnay 750	$ 4.99
Jim Beam 750	$ 9.99
Canadian Club 1 liter	$16.99
Tanqueray 750	$13.99
Saranac 12 pack	$ 8.99 +dep
Honey Brown 12pack	$ 7.99 +dep
Canada Dry Ginger Ale, Tonic, Club 1liter	80c +dep

9 University Drive 549-5758

Thai Corner
Best Thai Food Around
Serving Lunch & Dinner
Order your party food through us!
31 Boltwood Walk
Amherst, MA 413-253-1639
Mon-Sat 11:30-3 &5-9 Fri&Sat till 10• Sun 5-9

Boot Camp.
Zappos.com
Amherst
Northampton
Williamstown

We're giving away 5,000,000 shares of our start-up stock!
(What the hell. It's only money.)
Visit our website for the scoop.
SonicSave.com

■ freshman

continued from page 10

were some other people who didn't think much of her, but I don't think that those people looked too carefully."

Needless to say, Luttati's role is one of the more challenging tasks on the field. She wields plenty of responsibility for a first-year player, yet has performed so well that she is in the hunt for the A-10 Rookie of the Year Award.

"I love doing that [going against the other team's top player]," she said. "It gives me a goal and a focus for the game. I know that it's a big role, but I enjoy it."

Added Rudy: "She reminds me of Mexi-Rudd last year, someone who was just thrown to the wolves by having to mark the other team's best player. She has accepted the challenge and stepped up. I think that her whole upside is just great."

Overall, the Bay State native has made a smooth transition to the college ranks, and any fears that she may have had prior to the start of the year have been alleviated by this point.

"I was almost nervous [about playing on] the team," Luttati said. "I wanted to be able to bring something to the team, but I feel that I've only been getting better."

"This year has been everything that I thought it would be," she added. "And because the team is so young – we're only graduating two seniors – we should gel even better down the road."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Michelle Luttati

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Janelle Khouri

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Erin Lilly

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Kelly Nigh

A two-way threat

Mink has made her presence felt in a variety of different roles for the Minutewomen this season. Not only has she contributed in an offensive mode as one of the team's primary jumpers, but she has also enjoyed a solid campaign defensively.

For the season, the West Chester, OH native leads the freshman class in scoring with 13 points [five goals, three assists], including the game-winner against San Diego State on Sept. 22. Mink also recorded two tallies in a win over Temple on Oct. 8.

"Offensively, Amy gives us a presence in the midfield, and defensively, she is great in the air," Rudy said. "She likes to get forward and attack. She is a very solid player."

Mink has been a starter in almost two-thirds of the contests for the Minutewomen this season. And, when she isn't starting, she is often one of the first players off of the bench.

Therefore, it's safe to say that the former Lakota West standout has accomplished one of her primary goals for the season.

"Individually, I basically just wanted to come in here and start," Mink said. "I was trying to do whatever I could to get a starting position wherever [I could] on the field."

"I don't mind where coach puts me," she added. "I'll play wherever. If he wants to move me back and put me at keeper, I'll play there too."

Learning on the job

Nigh decided to make the move more than 3,000 miles east to become a Minutewomen, and it has paid off thus far. The Seattle native has a sparkling 4-0-1 record in eight games this year with a goals-against average of under 0.50. She has also amassed two shutouts on the season.

Together with junior Julie Podhrasky, the duo has arguably been the best in the Atlantic 10. So, it's easy to see why the rookie credits her partner in crime for helping her adjust to the college game.

"She's been really great for me," said Nigh of Podhrasky. "She has two more years of experience than I do, so there are times when I'll ask her what I should be doing. She's always there to give me tips. We always like to push each other. It's very positive between us."

Added Rudy: "They have a very great relationship. They always cheer each other on and train very hard. One has a little more experience, but Kelly is pretty good too."

The fact of the matter, though, is that the team has been successful with both keepers in net. That success has only helped prove Rudy's theory that for his team's purposes, two keepers are better than one.

"It's the type of thing where you define who the No. 1 keeper is during the season, and that person is going to get the majority of the time," he said. "But with our system here, we're going to get quality time for the No. 2 keeper as well. The idea is to stimulate that person to be the No. 1, so that if the No. 1 falters, the No. 2 steps up and you don't change gears."

Nigh also seems to be pleased with her efforts during the course of the season, as well as her decision to attend UMass – even if it is on the opposite coast as her hometown.

"I've been getting playing time as a freshman, and even playing in big games like San Diego State and Xavier," she said. "Coming so far away from home, the team is like a family – and that makes things a lot easier."

Fortunately for the Minutewomen, Nigh will still be around for three more seasons following this one. And, according to Rudy, that should spell good news for his club and bad tidings for the rest of the A-10.

"She's done a great job so far, and she's going to be a fantastic goalkeeper," he said. "Eventually, I think that she can be another one of our All-Americans."

The road ahead

Although this promising crop of youngsters has done an admirable job in their first season, the task that is set before them to continue to move forward, and not regress backwards.

Will the Class of 2004 turn out to be one of the best groups ever to don the Maroon and White? Or will they turn out to be nothing more than one-hit wonders, so to speak? The answer to those questions will play out over the next three years.

"These players can be great as freshmen, but they need to be willing to listen and receive information," Rudy said. "There will be limitations [on their current skills] and they can really flash out."

"Everyone in this league trades scouting reports, so the key is what they do their sophomore year," added Rudy. "There are some great coaches in this league, and they are going to figure these players out. They may not impact next year unless they are willing to learn. If they stay the way that they are now, then they will only fade with time."

However, there is no question that this unit is comprised of exactly the type of people that Rudy looks to bring into his program. Hopefully, some mirror images will also follow the path to Amherst down the road.

"This is a very nice group ability wise, but they're very nice people as well," he said. "They've got manners and say 'Please' and 'Thank You' and are just a bunch of genuinely decent people. I just wish that all of the coaches here at UMass could have a freshman class like I have."

Score board

NBA		NHL
Washington 95 Charlotte 77	Detroit 83 Boston 103	Detroit 4 Montreal 2	Tampa Bay 1 NY Ranger 6
Sacramento 100 Cleveland 102 (2OT)	Toronto 98 Philadelphia 104	Dallas 4 Columbus 0	NY Islanders 3 Florida 0
Orlando 79 Miami 105		Philadelphia 1 New Jersey 1

PRIUS HYBRID GAS/ELECTRIC
52 MPG CITY
www.toyota.com/prius
MEET THE VEHICLE FOR THE NEW MILLENNIUM
Over 100 PREOWNED CERTIFIED SELECT USED CARS AS LOW AS $4,995
We are a MASS STATE INSPECTION STATION #d799
OIL AND FILTER CHANGE
Service includes:
• Up to 5 quarts of premium oil
• GENUINE TOYOTA oil filter
• Check all fluid levels
PLUS
Includes 21-Point Check
$23.95
For Toyotas only
Tax and environmental fee extra.
Exp 12/1/00
GENUINE TOYOTA MUFFLERS
-NON-STAINLESS-$169.95*
TOYOTA LIFETIME GUARANTEE
Mufflers • Exhaust Pipes
Catalytic Converters • Shocks • Struts
Plus tax
Excludes hangers and hardware
*Price includes installation with Lifetime Guarantee. Offer good at participating dealers only. Special offer good through 12/1/00. for Camry, Corolla, Tercel, Truck and 4Runner
NORTHAMPTON TOYOTA
280 King St. (Rte. 5), Northampton, MA 800 966 5866 413 586 8922
Call us on Great Rental Car Prices

Collegian Sports...

...we're not Collegian Arts.

GET SOME ACTION
drew barrymore bill murray cameron diaz lucy liu
CHARLIE'S ANGELS
COLUMBIA PICTURES presents get-some-action.com
NOVEMBER

Campus Parking Notice

Due to the end of Daylight savings time, effective Monday, Oct 30, 2000 any vehicle with a valid UMass parking permit may park in any unrestricted, non-reserved space starting at 4:00pm on weekdays instead of 5:00pm. Parking is still prohibited in tow zones, handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and reserved vehicle spaces. Also excluded are lots which require 24-hour permits - 21, 29, 47, 49, 50, 54, 67, North Village Apartments and Lincoln Apartments. This parking policy will remain in effect through March 30, 2001. Parking Meters will continue to be enforced for payment 9:00am to 5:00pm.

SPORTS SPOTLIGHT

Jeff Deren

Class: Sophomore
Major: Sports Management
DOB: 7-22-81
Age: 19
Zodiac Sign: Cancer
Hometown: Chicopee, MA
Favorite Food: Altimari's subs
Favorite Junk Food: Ice cream
Favorite TV Show: "Friends"
Favorite Movie: Dumb and Dumber
Favorite Vacation Spot: Cancun, Mexico
Favorite Class: Psychology of Sport
Favorite Professor: Dr. Todd Crosset
Favorite Type of Music: Hip Hop
What would you save in a fire: My soccer equipment
Are you a righty or lefty: Righty
Describe a funny experience at UMass: Watching this year's freshman soccer players sing on a table during lunch at the DC.
Career Ambition: I'm not really sure, but I'm thinking along the lines of event management.
Sports Rituals: I don't have any.
Athletic Honors: A-10 Player of the Week

When he began his college search, Jeff Deren, who had been playing soccer since he was a little boy, knew he wanted to come to the University of Massachusetts and play soccer.

"I talked to the coach here and pretty much arranged to come here," he said. "Plus, it was close to home."

Now that he's here, Deren majors in sport management and is trying to figure out what he wants to do with his degree.

"My whole life, nothing has really been interesting to me, except sports. So I figure when I get out of college, why not try doing something that interests me," said Deren. "Last year, I became more interested in events. You know, being close to the action, being involved somehow even after I'm done playing soccer."

When asked what types of events he'd like to manage Deren responded:

"I'd love to organize the World Cup tournament if I could, but if not, I'd like to go to a big event, like the World Series or some championship games of some sort." (For the record, he's a Red Sox fan.)

Because of all the time he devotes to soccer and his schoolwork, Deren rarely has anytime to do anything "exciting." When he does have free time, he likes to eat and hang out with his friends, but most importantly he likes to sleep.

"I never get enough sleep, so when I get the chance I like to take a nap here and there," he laughed.

During the summer, Deren works at a soccer camp teaching younger athletes how to play the sport he loves.

For the moment, he is focusing on helping the UMass Minuteman soccer team, which is seeded second, win the A-10 Conference Championship this weekend in Rhode Island.

-Julie Robenhymer

Jeff Deren

Bowling cruelty revealed, women's wrestling thrives

This is our fourth installment of "dritte und vierzig acht über den Zuständen" (better known to English speakers as "Third and Forty-Eight Across the Nation"). And contrary to popular belief, the quotes are real.

Bowling

We wanted to write about the 2000 bowling dynasty of Indiana University in this section of the column, but the team practices far too often and we couldn't get in touch with any member of that Hoosier powerhouse (the Red and White won last week's Sycamore Classic, narrowly defeating Michigan State University with a score of 10661 to 10599).

We were, however, fortunate enough to snag an interview with sophomore Peter Shulman, former member of the Bryant College Bowling Team. Our intentions were, simply, to question him about the sport itself in hopes of informing everyone on the rigors of this collegiate sport. But in a dramatic turn of events, the discussion with the former Bulldog lane guru turned upsetting with his mention of the cruelty that was placed upon him during every practice.

"They told me to bowl uncomfortably," Shulman said. "But I didn't want to break my wrist. They told me to change my steps and I fell down."

Not only did it bring tension to his body, but Shulman also said that the mandatory $20 dues were a waste of money, since he still had to pay for shoes and lanes every practice.

"The highlight of the year was when one kid bowled the ball into another lane," Shulman said.

Coached by the owner of Jack's Pro Shop located in East Providence, the team is known to practice once or twice a week. The majority of the members own their own balls, gloves and bags, but as Shulman said, "they have no respect for beginners."

"All they care about is bowling," he continued. "They'd rather bowl than go out on a date. I'm so glad I quit. No even one knows they exist. I couldn't be associated with them."

Bryant placed a measly 24th in the Keystone Quaker Classic that took place on October 9 at the Rose Bowl in Allentown, PA. Said Bryant sophomore Actuarial Math major Randy Feinstein: "The only way I can do well is if I sing 'ashes ashes they all fall down' when I am bowling. But I'm still better than anyone on that team."

Women's Wrestling

In the tradition of Chyna and Miss Elizabeth, the University of Minnesota at Morris has begun a search for respect. When they say respect, they mean taking another person onto a mat and beating them senseless.

Recently, we were able to discuss women's wrestling with the university's official web page for their newest sport.

"Wrestling is a natural sport," head coach Doug Reese explains. "As young children, both sexes in every culture enjoy wrestling with each other for fun." Reese neglected to comment on the fun that people of both sexes have wrestling with each other when they grow up.

"You should have one move you do well enough at high speeds that you can do once on anyone," Reese said. After an American account of research, the discovered that the same rules apply to the one used by Undertaker in the Royal Rumble – that The Undertaker can Yokozuna himself into a coma.

Reese also states that, while beating the crap out of someone may it is very important to get props to the opponent. "Bottle God" is calling you, so that skills and abilities both academically and athletically to give Hungkers.

For those interested, the team offers a Women's Wrestling Summer camp. Lodging linens, blankets, pillows and meals are provided, but campers have to bring their own gear, a notebook and pen.

Eric Soderstrom and Ryan Bernhart are Collegian Columnists.

THE 31st ANNUAL
GREAT UMASS SKI SALE
THURSDAY - SATURDAY
NOVEMBER 9-11
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
SNO FORCE PRO SNOWBOARD TEAM
THURS- 12 to 9PM
FRI - 12 to 9PM
SAT- 11 to 6PM
Winter Xperience espn2
* OVER $3 MILLION IN EQUIPMENT AND APPAREL!
* SAVE MAD CASH ON WICKED DEALS! (50 TO 75% OFF)
* FREE GIVEAWAYS AND MOUNTAIN PROMOS!
* SPECIAL GUEST APPEARANCES!
* EVERYONE WELCOME!
UMASS SKI 'N' BOARD CLUB
http:\\www.umass.edu/rso/skiclub 413-545-3437 434 Student Union

Kinetics ADULT FITNESS
at W.B. SPORTS FAMILY FUN & FITNESS
Come and see for yourself why we were voted "Best Fitness Center" by UMASS Daily Collegian
Readers!
Dynamite Aerobics Program!
Over 25 cardiovascular Machines
Certified Personal Training Available
Large Free Weight and Circuit Weight Areas
Full-size Sport Court for Basketball & Volleyball
Certified Fitness Instruction (2 hrs.Included in Membership)
Great Student & UMASS Staff Rates!
Bring this ad in for a free one day pass.
(One per person expires 12/31/00)
586-0633
317 Russell St. (Rt. 9), Hadley
www.KineticsAF.com
317

UMass' trench warfare weapon

Lauback keeps offense churning

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Going up against the many weapons of the UMass football team's offensive line is tough enough. Fighting through Tyler Lauback to get there makes it virtually impossible.

At 6-foot-4 and 300 pounds, senior right guard Lauback could serve as the textbook definition of an immovable object. The Weston native combines brute size and strength with surprising quickness. Finding off would be pass rushers and opening up monster holes for tailback Mass backs to blaze through.

That's my job – trying to get the defense moving," Lauback said. "As long as we're winning football games and putting points on the board I'm happy."

The Maroon and White's o-line anchor started off on a markedly different position path in high school. A three-year starter at defensive tackle for Weston High, Lauback carved out a name under Coach Al O'Hara with hard hits (155 career tackles) and deft pass rushing (13 sacks in his senior year). His outstanding play led to his being named to both the Boston Globe All-Scholastic Team and the Middlesex News All-Star Team as a senior and he strapped on his pads for the Shriner's All-Star game as an exclamation point to his secondary school career.

During his redshirt first season at UMass, however, Lauback was asked to make a substantial switch to the other side of the football. While defense was all he had ever known, Lauback was now being asked to protect the very players he had spent years pulverizing.

"Of course the switch was tough at first," Lauback said. "I was only 18 years old and I had to learn a whole new job. But looking back on it now, I think it was the best move for me."

Senior right guard Tyler Lauback has been a steading force in the trenches for the UMass football team throughout his career.

FILE/DAN RYE PHOTO

Having brought his brawn over to right guard, Lauback dug in and showed tremendous promise over five '97 games for UMass. He started three times (against James Madison, Rhode Island and Connecticut) and led the way for Marcel Shipp to rush for 289 yards in those three contests.

But the one force that could stop Lauback got him in Week Four: he suffered a severely sprained ankle that forced him to the sideline for six games. He came back and finished strong at the tail end of the campaign and when training camp for the '98 season opened, Lauback was a frontrunner for the o-line quintet. He attributed much of his early success to his knowledge of the game of defense.

"When you have the mindset of a defensive player, you know what the other team is thinking," Lauback said. "You know how they'll react, and what they'll try to do in different situations."

When the '98 campaign kicked off, Lauback was firmly cemented in the Maroon and White trenches. He started every game of the season under new coach Mark Whipple, and the UMass offense exploded behind him to set numerous team records. The '98 squad carved out new season marks for points scored (524), touchdowns (73), total yards (7,074), average yards per play (5.9), passing yards (4,050), completions (308) and first downs (334).

Along with those cumulative kudos came some unbelievable individual performances as well for Lauback and the line. The front paved the way for a dozen triple-digit rushing performances from Shipp, including four games with 200-plus yards on the ground. Over the course of the year, the Maroon and White averaged 201.6 rushing yards and 471.6 total yards per game.

As strong as the Minutemen were in the regular season, they undoubtedly saved their best for last. In the national championship game against Georgia Southern, Lauback and company pushed the Eagles around while Shipp carried the ball 35 times for a jaw-dropping 244 yards. When the dust cleared on UMass' 55-43 victory, Lauback was left with the greatest memory imaginable for a football player.

BRIAN MCDERMOTT/COLLEGIAN

Opposing defensive lineman deal with a tough task when having to battle Tyler Lauback face to face on the gridiron.

"That was a once-in-a-lifetime experience," Lauback said. "As a team, we came together and wouldn't let anything stop us. It was great not just for the players, but for the program as well. It was something that none of us will ever forget."

The high of the '98 title run carried over into the next season, when Lauback once again took his place at right guard and UMass once again opened fire on its opponents. The team averaged 436.4 yards of total offense per game on its way to the Atlantic 10 crown and eight regular-season wins, including shellackings of Northeastern (77-0) and archrival UConn (62-20).

The stage was then set for a first round playoff war with Furman University in Greenville, SC in which Lauback and his mates would turn Paladin Stadium into their own showcase of domination. UMass piled up 489 yards of total offense (202 rushing) and held Furman without a sack over the course of the 30-23 OT thriller.

"That was a great environment, a great team and a great win," Lauback said. "Furman had one of the top middle linebackers in the league, but we really clicked that day, especially at the end. All-around, that was one of our best games."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Tyler Lauback

The entire offensive line earned WHMP / UMass Athlete of the Week honors for its stellar play at Furman.

This season, Lauback has once again stepped to the forefront of a potent UMass offense. The team has averaged over 411 yards of total offense per game, spearheaded by the two-headed rushing attack of Shipp and junior Kevin Quinlan. Ripping open d-lines for those two to cruise through has been a tremendous source of fuel for Lauback's competitive fire.

"The whole offensive line prides itself on getting Kevin and Marcel yards," Lauback said. "No matter how the team is playing, those two are always on top of their games. If they put up big numbers, it means we're getting it done up front."

So what is next for this Bay State behemoth? His immediate goals are, of course guiding UMass into the postseason and recapturing national glory. After that, Lauback holds hopes of protecting pro quarterbacks and paving the way for the NFL's elite rushers.

"I'm going to try and pursue a pro career," said Lauback, who is a Patriot fan at heart but would take a job anywhere in the NFL. "I won't if I don't get drafted. I hope to get invited to a camp and continue playing football."

GET YOUR RESUME INTO THE RIGHT HANDS!

View hundreds of employment opportunities online @:

www.ccn.acad.umass.edu

Apply for campus interviews and send your resume to employers who are not visiting campus!!!

It's easy to get started!!
It's easy to get started!!
It's easy to get started!!

1. Access our web page
2. Click on "Register for Resume Referral and Employer Interviews "On-Campus"
3. Click on "Students"
4. Follow the login instructions
5. Create/update your profile & add/edit your resume
6. Email ccnhelp@acad.umass.edu or call 577-0423 if you need help

You'll receive a confirmation email within two hours - once you have it you can go ahead and apply for opportunities listed on-line!

Questions?? Call (413) 545-2224

The Campus Career Network is here for YOU

November '00

ARTS ON CAMPUS...

A monthly calendar brought to you by the UMass Arts Council.

Events

Friday, November 3
♣MUSIC: Multiband Pops Chapel Jazz Ensemble, Minuteman Marching Band, Percussion Ensemble, Symphonic Band, University Dancers, Jazz Ensemble I, Wind Ensemble, Vocal Jazz Ensemble and Jazz Ensemble II featured in the program. 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2227
Saturday, November 4
✖♣DANCE: Festival of Lights Angkor Dance Troupe and Natraj Dancers present's a unique concert of classical Indian and Cambodian dance styles. 8p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511
✖MUSIC: It All Started Here A celebration of musicians teaching in schools and conducting choirs. Workshops and a program of Operetta. 9a.m.-5p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511
THEATER MISSION IMPROVable presents a high energy, improvisational comedy performance. 8p.m. in Campus Center Room 163. 546-2631
Sunday, November 5
MUSIC: The Avanti Wind Quintet Christopher Krueger, Fredric Cohen, Michael Sussman, Laura Klock & Stephen Walt. 8p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511
Tuesday, November 7
✖SEMINAR: Audition Seminar Actor Markus Flanagan offers a workshop to help actors prepare for the audition process. 4p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Room 204. 545-3490
Thursday, November 9
THEATER: "Dr. Faustus" Christopher Marlowe's play presents the ultimate battle between good and evil. Shows in the Rand Theater through 11/11 and 11/16-11/18. $ 545-2511
✖♣CAFE: Quintessential Queer Cafe A showcase typically filled with poetry, music and jams of all genres. 7p.m. in the Graduate Student Lounge. 545-4624
♣MUSIC: Light Jazz Residency Undergrad Greater Amherst area members of the Department's vocal and instrumental jazz program. Jeffrey Holmes, coordinator. 8p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511
Saturday, November 11
THEATER: MISSION IMPROVable presents a high energy, improvisational comedy performance. 8p.m. in Campus Center Room 163. 546-2631
Sunday, November 12
MUSIC: Faculty Recital Jan Humphrey, Laura Klock, Nadine Shaw and Dorothy Cornell with James Oliver Buswell, guest violinist. 3p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511
MUSIC: Faculty Recital Stephen Walt with Marlene Walt, Fredric Cohen, Michael Sussman, and Laura Klock. 8p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511
Tuesday, November 14
♣DANCE: Sydney Dance Company Featuring "Air and Invisible Forces," a new work by Artistic Director Graeme Murphy, that showcases his choreographic invention and vivid theatricality. 7:30 p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2511
Wednesday, November 15
✖LECTURE: An Evening with Sonia Sanchez Poet & activist presents her new collection. 8p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge. 545-5827
✖LECTURE: Electronic Visions: Lectures in Art & Technology Visiting artists give their perspective on technology and interactivity to explore the current state of art. 11:30a.m. in the Fine Arts Center Room 444. 545-2511
MUSIC: Trombone Choir David Sporny, director. 8:15 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511
Thursday, November 16
✖THEATER: Sweat Charity UMass Theatre Guild present a heartwarming and heartbreaking story combining great music and dancing. 8p.m. in Bowker Auditorium through 11/18. $ 545-3600
Friday, November 17
♣MUSIC: Accentus A rich repertoire of French a capella choral music by this professional choir of 32 singers. 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2511
Saturday, November 18
✖MUSIC/DANCE: Cape Verdean Cultural Night Evening including music, dancing and dance. 6p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. $ 545-3600
✖DANCE: Hasa Casa A night of Haitian and Dominican food and dance. 6p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. $ 545-3600
MUSIC: Piano Series Concert #2 Ann Schein, visiting artist. 8p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511
Sunday, November 19
✖MUSIC: Rhythm & Melody An evening of Indian classical music. 6p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. $ 545-3683
MUSIC: Concert of Winds Wind Ensemble and Symphony Band. Malcolm W. Rowell Jr. director. 3p.m. in Concert Hall. $ 545-2511
MUSIC: Four Corners Tuba Concert From Around the World John Manning, tuba and Nikki Stoddard, piano. 4p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511
Tuesday, November 21
MUSIC: Michael Feinstein No contemporary artist captures the essence of popular music like Grammy nominated Michael Feinstein. 7:30 p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2511
MUSIC: Singing Percussion Chamber Choir and Percussion Ensemble perform together. 8p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511
Tuesday, November 28
DANCE: St Petersburg Ice Ballet in Cinderella A company of 35 ice dancers bring this classic to the Fine Arts Center stage. 7:30 p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2511
MUSIC: Women's Choir in Concert Lawrence Fisher, director. 8p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511
Thursday, November 30
MUSIC: University Dancers Will Perform with special guest choreography by jazzwork's director Carol Marion Cerrii. 8p.m. in Auditorium. $ 545-2511

♦Five College students are offered a discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events.
✖Sponsored in part, by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

11/00

Exhibits

✖AUGUSTUS SAVAGE GALLERY
101 New Africa House 545-5177
Mon-Fri 9 a.m.-5 p.m.
Memory, Personal and Social Testimonies
A Celebration of the gallery's 30th anniversary
through Nov. 21

✖CENTRAL GALLERY
Central Residential Area
Infirmary Way-Wheeler House
545-0680
M-TH 3-6 p.m. SU 2-5 p.m.
Blue
by Jim Allen
Nov. 12-Dec. 12
Reception Nov. 12 2-5p.m.

✖HAMPDEN GALLERY & SCULPTURE GARDEN
Southwest Residential Area 545-0680
M-TH 12-4, SU 2-5 p.m.
Art of the Mezzotint: Two Contemporary Masters
by Arts Stockpanel & Malgorzata Turakowska
Nov. 16-Dec. 12
Reception Nov. 16 4-6p.m.

✖HERTER ART GALLERY
224 Herter Hall 545-0976
M-F 11-4 p.m. SA-SU 1-4 p.m.
Faculty Sabbatical Exhibition
by Susan Jahoda & Nancy Lipomate
through Nov. 8
Harvey Dawes & Paul Berube
Nov. 16-Dec. 15
Reception Nov. 16

✖STUDENT UNION GALLERY
Student Union Building 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 p.m. F 10-3 p.m. SA-SU 1-4 p.m.
Part of the World...The Course of a Particular by James Burgess & Richard Wengenroth
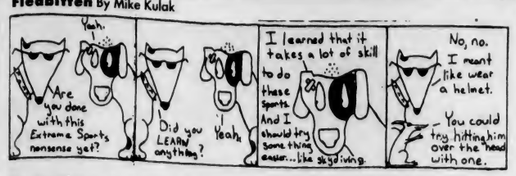
through Nov. 12
BFA and MFA Thesis Show
by Leilea Montanez & Moya Castelion
Nov. 27-Dec. 1
Reception Nov. 27 4-6p.m.

✖UNIVERSITY GALLERY
Fine Arts Center 545-3670
M-F 11-4:30 p.m. SA-SU 2-5 p.m.
Rolf Julius: Black (Red)
through Dec. 15
Miguel Rio Branco and Mario Cravo Neto: Photographs Brazil
Nov. 4-Dec. 15
Reception Nov. 3 6-7p.m.

UMass Arts Council 101 Hasbrouck Lab 545-0202

Fleabitten By Mike Kulak



Yeah.
Are you done with this Extreme Sports nonsense yet?
Did you LEARN anything?
Yeah.
I learned that it takes a lot of skill to do these sports. And I should try some thing easier...like skydiving.
No, no. I meant like wear a helmet.
You could try hitting him over the head with one.

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

HAVE I GOT THIS STRAIGHT? BUSH WON'T DENY COKE USE, BUT IT'S THE ONE WITH THE LIPSTICK PROBLEM?
LET ME TELL YOU SOMETHING HONEY, WHEN I WAS A KID I COULDN'T AFFORD COCAINE. WELL, I COULDN'T AFFORD PAINT THINNER.
I GREW UP IN A RATTY TRAILER PARK WITH NOTHING BUT A HAND-ME-DOWN TOOTHBRUSH AND A CRUSH ON MY COUSIN!
IT'S A COMPELLING STORY. SURE.
THEN, GET IT OUT, UMM?

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

MIKE, BRYAN & SPUNK GET READY FOR A HALLOWEEN PARTY
I'M WANNA BABY AGAIN!
SPUNK BABY WOULD
I DID ONCE
BURNIN' BURNIN' DISCO INFERNO
MAYBE WE SHOULD HAVE ALL DRESSED UP AS THE REAL SLIM SHADY
HAPPY HALLOWEEN EVERYONE!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

SO YOU'RE SAYIN' THAT YOU'RE STYLISH ENOUGH TO BE ABLE TO WEAR THAT COSTUME YEAR-ROUND, HUH?
I WAS BORN WITH STYLE, MAN AND THIS OUTFIT HAPPENS TO SUIT MY SIGNATURE RUGGEDNESS PERFECTLY.
I GET IT. YOU'RE EITHER BORN WITH STYLE OR YOU'RE NOT.
THAT'S RIGHT AND FORTUNATELY FOR ME I'M COMPLETELY INBRED WITH IT.

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

MOM, IS IT OK IF PETER GOES OVER TO STEVE'S HOUSE TO PLAY GUITAR?
IS HIS ROOM CLEAN?
UM, NO.
YOU TELL HIM HE'LL BE IN BIG TROUBLE IF HE TRIES GOING ANYWHERE BEFORE THAT ROOM GETS PICKED UP.
I CAN'T.
WHY NOT?
BECAUSE HE'S OVER AT STEVE'S

Dilbert By Scott Adams

TODAY IS MY LAST DAY I'M SAYING MY FAREWELLS
WE'VE NEVER TALKED, BUT I WAS WORKING MY WAY DOWN THE ROW AND HERE YOU ARE.
SO... LET'S STAY IN TOUCH.
DON'T BE A STRANGER
www.dilbert.com

Robotman and Monty By Jim Meddick

KILL HERE WE ARE
YEP HERE WE ARE
YOU'D THINK AFTER ALL THIS TIME, THE BAD BLOOD BETWEEN US THE RESENTMENT, THE ANGER WOULD'VE FADED A BIT
YEAH, BUT INSTEAD IT JUST FESTERED AND BALLOONED LIKE AN UNBALANCED SPOT TO BE CONTINUED?

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

IT STARTS OUT WITH AN APPLE, AND MAYBE A PEAR, AND PRETTY SOON YOU'VE GOT ORANGES DRIVING OUT ALL THE...
HEY!!...
A COOKIE! CREME-FILLED! AND IT'S A WHOPPER!
LOW SUGAR FAT FREE LOOKS LIKE A KEEPER, BUT...
CRAFTY DEVILS.

MONKEY-BOX BY PABLO

"WELL, AT LEAST THEY'RE HONEST..."

www.monkey-box.net © 2000

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) –Don't become resentful when someone close to you begins checking up on you in any way. He or she is merely expressing honest concern.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – This is a good day to accept others into your home – for a brief visit or a long-term stay. Your hospitability will be appreciated and rewarded.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Though you may be on a mission of sorts, you must be willing to make time for those who associate with you only on a social level.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Your worries may revolve around the need to break free. It's a good day to restate your commitment to that special someone, however.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – It's difficult to remember why the voices in your head speak in Dutch sometimes, but hang in there! Eliminating red meat from your diet will drastically improve your heart's health later in life.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – A close competitor may score a point in a renewed contest today, but don't panic! You have what it takes to surge again when the time is right.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – A special friend might need you more than usual today. Make it easier for him or her. Extend that helping hand before assistance is solicited.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – It's a good day to unleash your potential and take a few risks that will pay off handsomely where your career is concerned. Don't be bashful!
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Some surprises lie in store for you today, and you must be willing to shift gears whenever necessary in order to better negotiate the terrain.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – This is a good day to face a certain reality, and to realize that despite what others say, you can remain in control of your own destiny.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – What begins as a casual interest early in the day may quickly become a lasting concern. Take care you don't lose perspective, however.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You may find yourself engaged in a renewed competition with a rival today – over nothing in particular. Be sure things remain light-hearted.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – An imaginative flare will result in one or two decisions today that can alter your financial picture dramatically for the better.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 53	HIGH: 61	HIGH: 56
LOW: 39	LOW: 37	LOW: 35

Quote of the Day

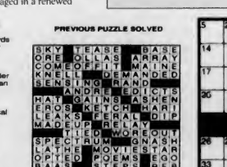
"Do I look like someone who would vote?"

–Jessica May

Photo Staff: There is a MANDATORY All-Staff Meeting Sunday, November 5 at 3pm.

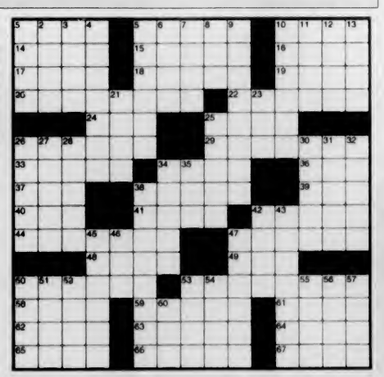
ACROSS
1 — Hart
5 Flightless birds
10 Beggar's cry
14 Gemstone
15 — acid
16 Admirer
17 Pastrami seller
18 Like Moroccan tea
19 Beep
20 Work on an archaeological site
22 Prejudiced
24 Droop
25 Equipment
26 Calm
29 Purse
33 Lock of hair
34 Shortly
36 Tavern beverage
37 Scrap
38 Yoga position
39 Over there
40 UN member
41 Kind of serpt.
42 Rock
44 Thieving
47 "I don't know" gestures
48 Weeds
49 Can. province
50 Boater's haven
53 Type of wax
58 Chinese dollar
59 Orchard
61 Patty of "Tank Girl"
62 Astronaut Armstrong
63 Unearthly
64 Commentator Severeid
65 Calista's role
66 Pods' contents
67 Office need

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



11-16-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DOWN
1 Style
2 Summit
3 Grey-green mineral
4 Assumed names
5 Harm
6 Leave out
7 Eat out
8 Sudbury's prov
9 Forage crop
10 "Ali"
11 Tolstoy and Buscaglia
12 Labyrinth
13 Took to court
21 Delivery trucks
23 Singer Janis
25 Horror-movie figure
26 Play a guitar
27 Obliterate
28 Kingly
30 Marshy inlet
31 "— Came Jones"
32 Aulty and Kelly
34 Ballads, e.g.
35 Baseball's Mel
38 Family trees
42 Mets' stadium
43 Toyed (with)
45 Sparsely
46 Charged particle
47 Buying frenzies
50 Talking bird
51 "The Clan of the Cave Bear" author
52 Barrister
53 Skin opening
54 Keen
55 Golfer's cry
56 Eye part
57 Chip
60 Female ruff



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Rigatoni Sausage casserole

Quesadillas

Southern 6-Bean Stew

Curried Vegetable Couscous

Dinner

VISITING CHEF:

La Veracruzana at Hampshire

Bub's BBQ at Berkshire

Eastside Grill at Franklin

Great Wall at Worcester

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Jaret Barr
Copy Editor	David Troupes
Production Supervisor	Alan Bosque
Production Staff	Sarah Wingardner, Jasmine Trabalsi

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Indoor Soccer League Teams and individuals welcomed. Begins Nov 6th. Call Jesse at Breakaway Sports 549-3638 between 1pm-6pm email golus@hotmail.com

OFFcampus Antics Find the Internet stars wearing mud masks on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

U-MASS WOMEN'S CREW WANTS YOU! Come see why we want little people. 549-4038 ask for Sara

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Colonial Village Apt Open in Jan. 2 Bdrm, hot water incld: $600/month. Call 256-1232 For more info.

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1991 Honda Civic Si 2door, great condition. $5000 call Erica 253-6504

1995 Saturn SL2 AC, power, sunroof, ABS, traction. $5000 537-0517

94Cavalier 131K ABS, AC PS PW PD Work Car $1650 Call Steve 256-3256

EMPLOYMENT

Work From Home - $1200 to $5000 pt/ft 1-800-716-3528

FREELANCE SPORTS WRITERS! All sports, health and fitness issues, and events for the physically challenged. Target audience ages 14-24. To be published on the internet. Digital photos preferred, not required. $15 for articles of 200-300 words if accepted. Reference # umass required on all submissions to: articles@islandoaks.com

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Attention! Work form home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

EMPLOYMENT

NURSING STUDENTS: Pick up some home care experience and earn some extra cash. Work as an Aide for our patients in the Amherst/Northampton area. Various days and hours available. Call today. Interim HealthCare, 586-7365

Last Chance Legal Assistants November 9, 2000 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office for the Spring, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact Student Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Hippodrome auditioning dancers to perform coreographed routines on a weekly basis at brandnew entertainment company in Springfield. 413-246-2275 www.hdrome.com

Survive Spring Break 2001! Hottest destinations/hotels! Campus sales representatives and student organizations wanted! Visit inter-campus.com or call 1-800-327-6013

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPIERENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

Be your own boss this summer. Learn now to run a small business. Make more money than your peers Call Steve 290-7161. Leave Message

FOR SALE

Beerpong Tables Make Great Gifts. Get that special someone a special table. 549-5950 ask for chad. You're curious, so call us. We're the beerpong table guys

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Need Spring Housing? Studious female seeks the same to fill 2nd bedroom in Colonial Vge. Apt. Call 256-1232 for more info

ROOMMATE WANTED

3 girls need roommate for Spring in Brandywine $228/mo. Call Nadiah 549-4907

Looking for 1-2 females to share 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Massage in you own home! $15 per hour message student Michael 585-8577

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

TRAVEL

Spend Winter Break in Mont Tremblant, Canada! 5 days ski/ride, 5 nites, roundtrip coach. Club party nites! 1/7-1/12 #1 resort in east! From $309! Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club @ 5-3437 or visit Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

Ski, Ride, and Party in Quebec City! 12/1-12/3 2 nites, 2 days lift tix! Roundtrip couch! From $159 $109 non-ski. Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club 5-3437 or stop by Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY... GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring-break.com

Montreal College Party Weekends Nov. 24 + Dec. 30. From $119. Includes round trip motorcoach. 3 days 2 nights Hotel Downtown full Breakfast + Dinner. Departs Boston, Springfield, + Hartford. Call 1-617-567-0062 Global Tours

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

What are you waiting for??

The semester is running out!

Advertise to Thousands!

Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CNN/fn Business
4	CBS 4 Boston
5	ABC 40 Springfield
6	FOX 25 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	UPN 20 Hartford
9	HSCN New Movie Channel
10	NBC 30 New Britain
11	Fox 61 Hartford
12	FOX 61 Hartford
13	NBC 30 Springfield
14	International Channel
15	UMASS/TV (Academic Channel)
16	WB 59 New Haven
17	ESPN
18	ESPN2
19	UMASS/TV (Student Channel)
20	Weather Channel
21	Government
22	C-Span
23	CNN
24	CNN Headline News
25	Lifetime
26	USA
27	TBS
28	TNT
29	E!
30	Sci-Fi
31	Discovery
32	Nesn
33	Cartoon Network
34	Nick at Nite
35	TV Land
36	Comedy Central
37	BET
38	Univision
39	Boston Financial Network
40	Cable TV Network
41	MTV
42	MTV2
43	VH1
44	The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 2, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	16 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Scenic Rail Journeys		Mystery: Natty Wantbrogg		Being Served	Keeping Up	Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	3 News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	48 Hours "Trial by Fire" (N)		City of Angels (N) (In Stereo)		Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours "Trial by Fire" (N)		City of Angels (N) (In Stereo)		Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Nanny		Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Charmed "Sight Unseen" (N)		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Cursed (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Benton Backwards" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	7th Heaven "It Takes a Village"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)		News		Arrest & Trial		Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	15	News	NBC News	Extra (N)		Hollywood	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Benton Backwards" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	11 Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Surprise Wedding (N) (In Stereo)		News				Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	22 News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Cursed (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Benton Backwards" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Dra. on Call	Mystery: Natty Wantbrogg		Grattan (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	29 News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Frasier	Med Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★½ "The Quick and the Dead" (1995, Western) Sharon Stone, Gene Hackman,				★★½ "Supernatural" (1947, Fantasy) Michael Jo. White,
A&E	33	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Indifference"		Biography "Jaclyn Smith"		Murder One "Chapter Eight"		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Sweeps"
CNN	20	23 Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	36 Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★½ "Robin Hood: Men in Tights" (1993, Comedy) Cary Elwes,				N.Y. Inte • Jerry Stiller		Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	21	Wild Discovery: Crawling		Wild Discovery: Serpent		On the Inside: Alcatraz		Hospital "Under Construction"		Science Mysteries		Justice Files
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		2-Minute Drill	Coll. Football	College Football: Brigham Young at Colorado State. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	27	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Por		Uncolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"She Fought Alone" (1995, Drama) Tiffani-Amber Thiessen,				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	43	Direct Effect	Truth	Journey of Dr. Dre (In Stereo)		Up in Smoke	Limp Bizkit's Playboy Bash (In Stereo)			Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Truth (N)	Choose
NICK	53	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	45	Sliders "Slither" (In Stereo)		Babylon 5 "A Distant Star"		Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	52	28 Body Bugs: Up Close		Paramedics		Paramedics "A Sinister Turn"		Secrets of Forensic		Secrets of Forensic Science		Paramedics "A Sinister Turn"
TNT	25	ER "Carter's Choice" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Bloodlines"		NBA Basketball: Minnesota Timberwolves at San Antonio Spurs. (In Stereo Live)						NBA	★½ "Jaws III" (1983)
USA	42	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "The Adversaries"		Nash Bridges "Warplay"		★★★ "Dragon: The Bruce Lee Story" (1993, Biography) Jason Scott Lee.				Strip Poker
HBO	29	★★★ "Stand and Deliver" (1987) Edward James Olmos. "PG"				Inside the NFL (In Stereo)		★★½ "Predator" (1987) Arnold Schwarzenegger. (In Stereo) "R"				G-String Divas	Inside the NFL
MAX	44	★★½ "Cocktail" (1988, Drama) Tom Cruise. (In Stereo) "R"				★★★ "All the Right Moves" (1983) Tom Cruise. "R"		Maid of Honor		Beyond Redemption" (1999) Andrew McCarthy.		"The Stogs" "R"
SHOW	30	★★½ "Any Which Way You Can" (1980) Clint Eastwood. "PG"				★★ "Disturbing Behavior" (1998) James Marsden.		Extras-Story		Rude Awaken.	★★★ "Bat 21" (1988, Drama) Gene Hackman. "R"

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, November 2, 2000 16

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Freshmen have big impact for UMass

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Heading into the 2000 season, it was a foregone conclusion that the Massachusetts women's soccer team needed a solid contribution from its incoming freshman class in order to enjoy a successful year.

After graduating eight seniors from last year's squad, there were some holes to fill in the UMass lineup. However, the Minutewomen reloaded their arsenal with a talented rookie class that has had a positive impact this season.

In fact, UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy doesn't even feel like his five first-year players – Janelle Khouri, Jen Lilly, Michelle Luttati, Amy Mink and Kelly Nigh – can be considered freshmen anymore.

"We don't have any freshmen on this team," he said. "The only difference between them and the other players on this team is that they carry the balls, ice and water – and that's something that I didn't start. On the field, there is no difference between them and the rest of the team."

The Minutewomen have received contributions from their rookie class at all four positions. The quintet has provided a welcomed complement to the veteran players, and it has been that mix of old and new faces that has allowed UMass to return to the Atlantic 10 tournament this weekend.

"From my point of view, the team is a sum of its parts," Rudy said. "When you lose eight players, someone has to step up. If it's the freshmen that step up, then that's great. We need people who can come in right away because that's the status of Division I women's soccer. When these kids come in, they have to be able to at least push for a starting position."

All in all, the Class of 2004 has combined for 10 goals and six assists this season, while Nigh has posted a sparkling 4-0-1 mark between the pipes. Thanks to those numbers, the Minutewomen have rebounded from a sluggish start and now find themselves only two wins away from the NCAA tournament.

DAN SKINTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

One of five talented rookies on the UMass women's soccer team, midfielder Amy Mink leads the freshman class in scoring with 13 points this season.

Slow start, strong finish

Khouri did not see much game action in the early part of the season, but has since become an integral member of the midfield unit. A starter in six contests this year, the Canadian has tallied two assists on the year.

"At times, Ian has been the best player on the team out there," Rudy said. "She started a little bit slow, with some jet lag and getting used to Division I soccer with training six days a week. It was a little different for her. But she has great skill and has some serious potential for down the line."

The Calgary, Alberta product came to UMass after starring on the Canadian U-18 and U-20 National teams. While it seems that she has only scratched the surface as to what she can accomplish on the pitch, Khouri has enjoyed her first year in Amherst – even after a bit of a slow start.

"Getting use to the team was a big thing," she said. "With a new team, you have to learn to play their style. You have to get confidence and that comes with getting to know the players."

"The team has done very well this year," Khouri added. "All of the girls are really good and everyone cares about each other."

Bitten by the injury bug

After a stellar high school career at Shenendehowa High School in upstate New York, the same institution that produced teammates Brooke Bartlett and Katelyn Jones, it was expected that Lilly would step in immediately and try to provide scoring punch up front.

However, the crafty forward has been bothered by injuries at several different points during the season. Nevertheless, she has managed to record five goals on the season, including a hat trick against Albany back on Sept. 2.

"She came in injured, then had another setback around midseason, but the last two days, Jenn has had a high work rate at practice," Rudy said. "That makes me feel pretty good about this weekend."

"I think that she's ready to play and that she wants to play," he added. "She's not waiting around for the upperclassmen to do it anymore. Over the next four years, she's going to be a great player here."

Despite the earlier physical woes, Lilly proclaimed herself back at full strength for this weekend's contests.

"I'm healthy," she said. "I feel like I'm 100 percent right now."

That could turn out to be bad news for the rest of the teams in the A-10 tournament, who will finally face a healthy No. 3 and one of the hottest clubs in the league come Friday.

"Right now, we're on top of our game," Lilly said. "This is the time that we need to be there. We've finally pulled it all together."

Overall, Lilly has also been pleased with her decision to attend UMass, who won the recruiting battle for her over a host of other solid Division I programs.

"I love it here," she said. "It's the best decision that I've made."

The stopper

Don't be surprised to find Luttati marking the opposition's top scorer on a game-by-game basis. That is a role that she has handled quite well since arriving at UMass, starting all 18 games this year in the back.

All of the top scorers in the conference have gone up against the freshman this season, and she has done her job every time out. Not bad for a player who came in as a midfielder and is now a defensive stalwart.

"I came in thinking that I was going to play halfback, but I stepped into a defensive role," Luttati said. "I enjoy it though because I've played defense in the past, but there's still a lot that I need to work on."

Said Rudy: "Michelle has been great this year. She's everything that I imagined she would be after watching her at our camp for four years. There

Turn to FRESHMAN, page 10

OFFcampus ONline
www.masslive.com/offcampus

Deanna, Ruth and Laura:
"Our lives are not classified! Check us out day or night and listen in on our secrets."

3 students
1 Web cam
24/7!

Get a clue...check the classifieds!

Desperately seeking clues! Check out the Collegian Classifieds and enter daily to win a MassLive prize pack!

mass live
www.masslive.com
Get On It!

www.masslive.com/offcampus

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 42 www.dailycollegian.com Friday, November 3, 2000

This Friday in Arts Deltron 3030 takes us on a rap journey. Midget Handjob and Noam Chomsky team up, and Virgin Larry goes looking for some action.
ARTS p. 5

The fate of womens field hockey rests in this weekends game. Read all about it in Sports today.
SPORTS p. 12

Question Six: MA tolls and MV excise tax

By Tom Ouellette
Collegian Correspondent

A "yes" vote on Question Six would allow a state personal income tax or a corporate excise tax deduction for Massachusetts tolls and motor vehicle excise taxes. A "no" vote would make no change in the state laws.

Question Six seems simple enough. Residents would get to claim their paid tolls and vehicle excise taxes on their state income tax. But according to some experts, Question Six will create problems.

"We acknowledge the question has flaws, but how else do we get authorities to honor the agreement (of eliminating tolls)," Debi Henry, of Free The Pike Coalition, said about Question Six's main proponent.

Henry is referring to the coalition's initial attempt to force Massachusetts to honor a 1952 law that created the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority. The law states that tolls would be removed when the bonds used to finance the roads construction of the turnpike were retired. Those bonds have been paid for six times over, a fact acknowledged by the MTA, but yet tolls continued.

This prompted the Free The Pike Coalition in 1996 to attempt to get on the ballot the removal of tolls, abolishment of the MTA and the conversion of the turnpike to the Massachusetts Highway Department. The Massachusetts Supreme Court disallowed the coalition's petition. The court ruled the MTA would not be able to honor its contracts with bondholders of newly created bonds if tolls were eliminated. The coalition, eager to make Massachusetts honor the 1952 law, circumvented the Supreme Court's ruling by getting Question Six on this year's ballot. The Coalition added the vehicle excise tax to entice voters to favor Question Six.

"People argued that not everyone uses the pike and would not benefit. We added the excise tax so everyone can benefit," Henry said.

However, Massachusetts' residents who earn at or below the poverty line do not file income taxes. People not filing an income tax do not get a rebate based on the excise tax. The same applies to tolls. According to experts, the wealthiest taxpayers get the largest tax breaks. The higher the excise tax, the higher the rebate. Question Six to some people means having the lowest income earners get nothing while the wealthiest get the biggest benefit.

Some argue that lines at the tollbooths will be longer since motorists will begin requesting receipts for tax purposes.

"We recognize that low-income people do not benefit and it is a lengthy, cumbersome process. It will back up the pike," Henry stated.

Question Six's main opponent, Campaign For Massachusetts Future (CFMF), cited more flaws.

"There is the possibility other states could sue us," Jack McCarty of CFMF said. "New Yorkers for example use the pike yet pay no income taxes to Massachusetts. We get rebates, out-of-staters don't. This could be a legal problem."

CFMF believes if Question Six passes, communities will suffer because the state will lose revenue due to the income tax reductions.

"Neither side can prove the impact of the deductions," McCarthy said. "But historically aid to communities is always significantly cut every time the state losses revenue."

CFMF projects that $150 million would be removed out of the budget in the current fiscal year, according to their website.

When asked if it was wrong for the state to break its promise made in the 1952 law that would have eliminated tolls, McCarthy said things got a little messed up.

"So they did, does that give a group the right to screw things up?" McCarthy asked. "That was a long time ago, things change. Slavery was legal once, should they have kept it legal?"

"The state broke its promise," Henry said. "They have no intention of eliminating tolls. The turnpike authority will keep finding reasons to create bonds and keep tolls. The MTA is a wasteful bureaucracy. It had a revenue last year of $70 mil-

Turn to BALLOT, page 2

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Juggler's delight
The Campus Center was taken over by jugglers yesterday afternoon.

ASA brings culture to UMass Sat.

By Rachael Delvaney
Collegian Staff

Harvest Night is coming to the University of Massachusetts tomorrow, filling the Student Union Ballroom with aspects of African culture including music and dance. The event, hosted by the African Student Association (ASA), is the group's first kind of the semester.

According to Hazel Yeboah, public relations officer of the African Student Association, Harvest Night is organized to coordinate with the current season change in Africa, where there is an abundance of rain, which stimulates large quantities of food.

The ASA is made up of international students from Africa, as well as students from the United States, who have made it their mission to bring different African cultures together to learn about each other. Different cultural events, such as Harvest Night, their annual Cultural Night in the Spring and various activities including talks like "Bridging the Gap" in the Malcolm X Center promote awareness of the rich African culture and people that comprise its heritage.

Activities on Saturday night will include dance performance by ASA members and the Mt. Holyoke Caribbean and African Student Association, drummers, a speaker, poetry and a skit performed and directed by ASA members.

There will be a diverse menu of African food served, including lollof rice, kabba sticks, plantains and sanghusa from East Africa. According to Yeboah, plates will never be empty.

"The food is always good, and we fill as many plates as possible," Yeboah said.

All the proceeds from Harvest Night will be donated to a program that the School of Management is organizing. Undergraduate Dean Dennis Hanno of the Isenberg School of Management will be on hand to explain the class being offered this winter session called "Business Development and Global Citizenship." As part of this class, 12 students in the Economics major will be traveling to Ghana, West Africa to provide computers and technological information to indians.

"These 15 students will be holding a 15 day seminar on ASA will be supporting them to make their stay there easy," Yeboah said.

Yeboah said that throughout the whole program this audience will become involved.

"Within the skit alone there will be an African message and the skits in the past have been great," said Yeboah. "This is the time to celebrate and recognize how similar we are and we are coming together because it is important for us to unite as one as African people."

Prof. discusses Middle East

By Karen Madsen
Collegian Correspondent

According to Dr. Mednicoff, Legal Studies professor at the University of Massachusetts, the peace process that has been going on between the Israelis and the Palestinians since 1993 has essentially broken down and the result is a cycle of violence that hasn't been seen since the 1980's.

However, according to him, talks are the only way this conflict can be settled and in the long run there will be a reversion to talks between these Middle East countries.

Dr. Mednicoff is working on his second Ph.D. from Harvard and is also a member of both the Judaic and Near Eastern and the Middle Eastern Studies departments. He credits his strong Jewish background and his time spent in Israel for his interest in the area.

"The reason they broke down was because conditions were being forced on the Palestinians which they weren't yet able or willing to accept," he stated. "Really what happened was an erosion of confidence over a long period of time."

With regards to the leaders, Dr. Mednicoff challenges assumptions made on both sides, but especially in regards to the Palestinians and the people acting on their leader's orders.

"On both sides, the leaders have lost majority support," Mednicoff said. "Arafat has limited control and its impossible to know if he had a part or how great his influence was in orchestrating this violence or how much he was trying to stop it."

He considers the outpouring of sentiment genuine in its popularity and it indicates to some extent that Arafat can no longer control what Palestinians are doing, if he ever could. Also, he points out that this crisis of leadership on both sides makes it harder for each side to negotiate as they must struggle to keep the loyalty of their own people.

Dr. Mednicoff considers the media, both regionally and globally, a major factor in this conflict.

"For the first time, among the Arabs, there really is media established that transcends geographic boundaries," he said. "A lot of people have argued that this struggle, for the Arabs, is similar to the Vietnam War in the United States in that it is the first international conflict that you can really see daily images on your TV screen wherever you live. From Morocco in the West to the gulf countries in the East the same images were broadcast of children being shot. This added a significant dimension to the conflict."

According to Mednicoff, the methods the U.S. media have used to handle the conflict will also have serious repercussions. Dr. Mednicoff is concerned that the media has led a rush to blame one side or the other, mostly the Palestinian side. He thinks that it would be more responsible for media and public figures in the United States, in attempting to appear to be a neutral peace advocate, to actually step back from blaming either side.

"The fact that a twelve year-old kid was gunned down: it was accidental, but it happened," Mednicoff said on the use of violent images in the media. "It creates an image that lots of different people can focus on in lots of different ways. It may or may not be misleading, but the image itself takes on a new reality that may not have anything to do with Palestinian-Israeli peace making."

The American stance in regards to this problem, he feels, is similar to what the American stance has historically tended to be. As an American Jew, Mednicoff says he understands how important America's commitment to Israel is, but he feels that the United States must address the level of concern people in many countries have with the United States' seeming to ignore hostile feelings about its own peacekeeping role.

"Even when Clinton was trying to broker the Camp David accords in July, I think that he was concerned with the stability of the Israeli government and what was going to happen to Barak," Mednicoff said. "[Clinton] didn't seem to appreciate or be informed fully of how much Palestinians were feeling like they were being pushed up against a wall."

He thinks that this issue is important to UMass students for a variety of reasons. If there's a settlement, U.S. tax dollars will be involved in implementing the settlement. If there isn't a settlement, anyone who is contemplating military careers will have to think about serving in a more violent Middle East. In effect, the conflict is affecting how comfortable many Americans are feeling when traveling.

"I've had a lot of students come to me and directly ask, 'I'm thinking of going abroad to Israel in January, what do you think?,'" Mednicoff said. "So it matters to us in very self-oriented ways."

Also, Dr. Mednicoff recognizes that many Americans are deeply involved either because they are Muslim, Arab, Jewish, Israeli, or just because they are concerned about the violent situation. For them, he said, just getting though the day without feeling really depressed about these events is difficult.

Finally Dr. Mednicoff recommended that Americans avoid doing anything to make the problem worse.

"I think that it's also important to understand that because we are far removed from this, for those of us who it doesn't affect directly, who have secure lives, we also have a responsibility for not overreacting or personalizing," Mednicoff said. "I think it's important to be concerned but I also think it's important not to personalize in a way that's ultimately could lead to more American policies or public statements that only make the situation worse."

Required laptops in the future of UMass?

By Katy LoConte
Collegian Correspondent

What would you say if someone informed you that you would have to purchase and use a laptop computer as a requirement for a Massachusetts state school? While it may appear distant in the future, many students may be finding themselves having to get used to the idea in a couple of years.

The proposal for laptops to be a requirement for all Massachusetts state school students is one in six that was introduced to the Board of Higher Education (BHE) recently.

According to Aaron Spencer, a member of the BHE, "This is where education is heading, as well as everything humanity is doing right now, into a computer-oriented existence."

Spencer, the laptops plan's chief architect, also said that the proposal is based on the concern that graduate students from state schools go out into the world with insufficient technological skills to fill tens of thousands of business and high-tech job openings in Massachusetts.

According to Dean Goldstein of Engineering, a member on the committee that proposed the idea, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is not behind technologically. "UMass is not in that class," he stated. But according to Randall Laperre, a sophomore electrical engineering major, most students are already ahead of future planning.

"A law requiring students to have laptops would be redundant," Laperre said. "Most people I know already own their own computer."

John Dubach, the associate chancellor for the Office of Information Technologies, also claims that about 80 to 90 percent of all students at UMass already own computers.

So what does this mean for the campus if this bill does pass in three years? Dubach roughly estimated that this arrangement would cost UMass Amherst $2 million a year in costs to maintain.

"[One issue is] setting up an appropriate network and you'd also want some sort of wireless connectivity so students can sit anywhere and work," Dubach said. "The other issue is how do we keep the faculty and staff up with what the students are doing? You can't get something for the faculty one year, then in a couple of years, the students are coming in with newer computers and (the faculty) are out of date."

The plan intends that $27 million would be used to train more faculty to teach classes with this new technology. Also, $42 million would be used to pay for facilities, equipment, and academic programs. The remaining $34 million would go to discounting the prices of laptops for students and also to provide full and partial vouchers for those students in need of aid.

According to Dean Goldstein, only those students who are receiving financial aid would be granted vouchers for the laptops. All other students will pay for the laptop themselves at an estimated discount price of about $1,200 dollars.

As stated before, this computer access proposal is only one of six components designed in hopes of an advancement in learning. Dean Goldstein went on to say that this plan will "impact curriculum improve the way we reach students," and that with this plan more money will be given in the hiring of new faculty. In fact, in his opinion, it is conceivable to "do all that without the computers," he said.

James Kurose, head of Computer Science Department, also has views on the computer access proposal. Kurose feels it is an "important effort to help bridge the digital divide. It is "not just socio-economic but also by discipline."

Kurose also stressed that the computer access program is not the most important component of this six-part plan. The other parts of the plan include a component for Information Technology infrastructure, which is upgrading computing and communications; a faculty recruitment and contention component; an instructional technology component; a section to increase information technology outside of computer science and computer engineering; and lastly, an assessment of outcome and industry connections.

According to Kurose, "There are a number of schools across the country, both public and private, trying to do something similar." But Kurose said whether or not these plans may actually work at UMass is something that time will only tell.

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Mic check
A UMass student blasts the local airwaves.

UMass reps attend conference on college alcohol abuse

By Suzanne Furst
Collegian Staff

Recently representatives from the University of Massachusetts attended "The American Campus and Alcohol." The national conference on alcohol abuse in college campuses was held on Oct. 25-28 in Washington, D.C.

The major focus of the conference was to develop plans to combat alcohol abuse on college and university campuses and in their communities. It brought together leaders of the campus-community and alcohol industries.

UMass representatives included Chancellor David K. Scott, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Janet Lyalles, Dean of Students and Associate Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs JoAnne Vanni, Student Trustee Seth Avakian, Pamela Gomez, Dawn Thompson and Sally Linowski.

Pamela Gomez is the director of Health Education and Outreach in University Health Services. Also in the University Health Services, Sally Linowski is the community health educator. Dawn Thompson is the associate director of Housing Services for Residence Life.

Chancellor Scott stated, "This conference provided a forum for us to share our campus strategies for low-risk use of alcohol with other college and university teams and industry representatives, and for us to learn from them." He added, "By participating in this conference, we were able to build important partnerships with other university, government, and alcohol industry leaders, who are all working toward the same goal."

One strategy discussed at the conference is known as the social norms approach. Pamela Gomez explained, "An example of a social norm would be students' perceptions of what is expected from them in the way of alcohol consumption."

Gomez also expressed information about surveys of college students that reveal that most students overestimate the prevalence of high risk drinking that occurs on their campus. According to Gomez, this leads to increased drinking because students see high-risk drinking as a social expectation. A possible solution to the problem would be to inform students of actual drinking norms.

The former chancellor of UMass Dartmouth, Peter H. Cressy, was present in Washington D.C. among others. He is currently the president/CEO of the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States, which is one of the organizations convening the conference.

Cressy said, "As a university chancellor, I saw how alcohol abuse can affect a campus and its community. The key to effectively addressing alcohol abuse is an integrated partnership between the campus, the community, the alcohol industry, parents, and students. Working together is the best solution. We all have a stake in ensuring that our campuses and surrounding communities are safe."

UMass Amherst was accompanied in Washington D.C. by George Washington University, UMass Dartmouth, Eastern Connecticut State University, the University of Louisville and the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States.

The gathering allowed numerous speakers from the universities as well as government and alcohol-related organizations to present information on various approaches and practices being used successfully on campuses to reduce alcohol abuse among college students.

The conference allowed for the opportunity of teams working independently to develop specific, action-oriented plans to take back and implement in their communities; these were called team-planning sessions.

In October of 1997, a similar plan of teamwork was devised by the Chancellor when he appointed a campus wide task force to "review our alcohol beverage policy and the wide range of issues related to the use of alcohol by members of our community."

Several suggestions were proposed by the task force, such as expansion of enforcement efforts, enhancements of the many programs of education, counseling and treatment, and to increase the number of alcohol-free social activities available.

The efforts and suggestions of the task force seem more realistic when applied to statistics from 1997 and 1998. The percentages of relocations, suspensions, housing removals and university probation involving alcohol decreased for 1998 in comparison to 1997.

Since a survey of UMass students shows that 83.6% of students that are under 21 consumed alcohol in the past 30 days, this conference to combat alcohol abuse was not in vain.

Soc. Security leader to speak

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

The Commissioner of the United States Social Security Administration will speak at the University of Massachusetts today on the future of Social Security, a pivotal issue in the current presidential campaign.

Kenneth S. Apfel, who earned a bachelor's degree in Sociology from UMass, will discuss the federal Social Security entitlement program and the challenges it faces in the 21st century at 9:30 a.m. today in room 163 of the Campus Center.

"Apfel will explain how Social Security is structured now, what the available resources are and how we can take advantage of that," according to Ellen Leuchs, director of development for the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

The Social Security entitlement, which has become a sticking point in this year's presidential election, has guaranteed retired workers age 65 or older a continuing income after retirement since its creation in 1935.

Republican presidential hopeful George W. Bush has proposed Social Security reform, including allowing workers to invest a portion of social security returns in the Stock Market. Democratic candidate Al Gore supports maintaining the program as it is, and even promised to put the program in a "lock box" to keep it from being tampered with during the first presidential debate.

UMass will bestow the Chancellor's Medal on Apfel later in the day for contributions to society in general and to the University of Massachusetts in particular. The medal is the highest honor bestowed on an individual by the University.

"The reason for the honor is that [Apfel] is the kind of person that reflects the best of what UMass has to offer," Leuchs said. "He's an excellent role model for UMass students, demonstrating that you can make an impact."

President Clinton appointed Apfel the first Commissioner of the Social Security Administration in 1997 and elevated the position to cabinet level. Apfel is the first Commissioner of the newly Independent Agency which, prior to 1995, was a branch of the Department of Health and Human services.

Apfel has a history of involvement with social policy in the United States. Between 1982 and 1989, Apfel served as Senator Bill Bradley's chief staff member for Federal Social Policy and was instrumental in Bradley's effort to pass the 1983 Social Security reform legislation. Apfel has also served as Assistant Secretary for Management and Budget in the Department of Health and Human Services and as the Associate Director of Human Resources for the Office of Management and Budget.

The Center for Public Policy and Administration is sponsoring Apfel's speech. The center is an interdisciplinary group at UMass who work to evaluate public policy through teaching and research and also prepare students for careers in public policy.

Napster agreement draws student criticism, praise at Columbia U.

By Laura Cometa
Columbia Daily Spectator (Columbia U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK – In a landmark decision this Tuesday, Napster agreed to begin charging its users a fee in order to pay royalties to copyright-holding record companies. The Internet start-up, which operates a file-sharing Web site allowing users free access to music stored on each other's computers, has become the focus of ongoing controversy concerning the enforcement of copyright laws over the Internet.

Since its founding in 1999 by Shawn Fanning, then an 18-year-old college student at Northeastern University, more than 38 million users have benefited from Napster's file-sharing services, though the company itself has earned no profit. Record labels have vehemently attacked the enterprise, demanding that they receive just compensation for the exchange of music for which they hold copyrights.

With college students comprising a significant portion of Napster's users, debate ran high on the Columbia University campus the day following the announcement. Several students sided with the record companies, or more specifically, with the artists.

Luke Greciux, CC '01, an occasional Napster user, said, "It sucks that Napster will have to start charging, but it's something that has to be done. Artists have to pay the bills too."

Colin Parsons and Marilee Scott, both English students in the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, agreed that they were "all in favor of the artists' rights."

"After all," Parsons added, "I'm sure that many [of us] are going to produce work that we will want to be compensated for someday."

Scott elaborated, "In a country where we have no welfare system for artists, we've got to give them something to live on. There should be software out there for artists to circulate their stuff for free, but it's got to [be] voluntary — otherwise we're heading straight for anarchy."

On the other hand, Chris Connolly, CC '04, who said he has downloaded about 500 songs from Napster in the past month-and-a-half, felt that Napster was actually benefiting artists rather than hurting them.

"I know a lot of people ... have learned about new artists from using Napster. It gives you a chance to test out the record, sort of like when you go to Virgin Records and get to listen to a CD before you buy it," Connolly said.

Connolly's own mp3 collection, however, does not often lead him to purchase new CDs.

"I mostly download novelty songs, like something by DJ Assault, that I'd never actually pay money for. A lot of the other things I download are live recordings or tracks you can't purchase, so it's not really taking money away from the artists since they aren't making any money off of it anyway," he said.

For now, plans on how Napster will be transformed into a viable profit-yielding business remain unclear. No official statements have been issued concerning how much the company would charge users, when the fee would go into effect, and what benefits members would receive.

■ ballot

continued from page 1

lion. The Massachusetts Highway Department had a revenue last year of $72 million. The MTA has 1500 employees and is much smaller in size. The MHD has 2500 employees. We think the MHD can do a better job of running the pike."

"If the question read: The Massachusetts Turnpike Authority cannot create new bonds and will eliminate tolls as soon as current bonds are paid, even I might consider it," McCarthy said. "That's the question the Free The Pike Coalition should have asked. They didn't. The way Question Six is worded is insane and would be disastrous. It should not pass."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulte Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Bart Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

WIRELESS HOOK-UPS
PAGERS CELL PHONES PHONE CARDS
VOICESTREAM AUTHORIZED DEALER
GET HOOKED UP!

FREE MOTOROLA M3682
$49.00 NOKIA 5190
$69.00 NOKIA 6190
$159.00 ERICSSON I888 WORLD
$179.00 MOTOROLA TIMEPORT
ANY OF THE ABOVE WITH:
N. East Neighborhood
INCLUDES: 600 anytime minutes
1000 Nation Wide weekend minutes
No roaming No long distance
(Use your anytime minutes to call anywhere in MA/ CT/ RI/ NH/ ME/ NY/ NJ/ PA/ DE/ MD/ D.C/ North Virginia)
1st Incoming minute Free
Voice mail w/message alert
Built in paging Caller ID /Call Waiting/ Call Hold Conference Calling/ 1st 2 months free info.
Stream/ enotes
NATIONWIDE FAMILY PLANS ALSO AVAILABLE
CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS MAY APPLY SEE STORE FOR DETAILS
18N. PLEASANT ST. AMHERST
253-0225
ACROSS THE STREET FROM ANTONIO'S

The Edwin M. Rossman Alumni Career Forums
presents

DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY
CAREER NIGHT

DATE: MONDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2000
TIME: 4:30
LOCATION: CAMPUS CENTER, ROOM 1001

AFTER THE B.A.: WHAT TO DO?

ALUMNI PANELISTS:

MICHELLE CHANDLER CROWE	LT. CMDR., US NAVAL RESERVE
LAURA FALARDEAU	NEW ENGLAND CABLE NEWS
JOE GABRIEL	GRADUATE STUDENT AT RUTGERS UNIV.
PETER LAMOTHE	NEW HAVEN HISTORICAL SOCIETY
JON LYNES	CHARLEMONT ACADEMY
TED TREANOR	DATAVIZ INC.
SUSAN HAMMOND	HUMANITIES & FINE ARTS CAREER NETWORK, DIRECTOR, CAREER EDUCATION
JOYE BOWMAN	MODERATOR, DIRECTOR OF UNDERGRADUATE STUDIES

SPONSORED BY: CAMPUS CAREER NETWORK
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY

For more information, please contact: Humanities & Fine Arts Career Network at 545-6288.
Refreshments Served – ALL STUDENTS ARE WELCOME!

It's time to take a stand.

Japan's recent decision to expand its whaling program to include two additional species of protected whales has brought a wave of condemnation worldwide.

The International Whaling Commission banned commercial whaling in 1986. Despite that ban and in the face of growing international protest, Japan has killed over 5,000 whales under the guise of "scientific research." The meat is sold in Japanese markets.

This year Japan expanded this cruel and unsustainable hunt to include endangered Bryde's whales and sperm whales, in addition to the minke whales it has hunted for years.

This blatant disregard for an international treaty has triggered outrage around the world.

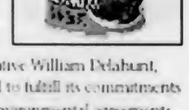
The world stands against Japanese whaling. Fifteen nations, led by Ireland, have formally issued a diplomatic protest to the government of Japan seeking an end to scientific whaling, and stating their particular concern "at the decision to target two new species."

Austria, Brazil, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Mexico, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Sweden, Switzerland, the US, and the UK joined Ireland in protesting the Japanese action.

The President stands against Japanese whaling. President Clinton has directed that Japan be denied access to allotments for fishing US waters in response to Japan's decision to expand its hunt to include two whale species protected under US law. He has further directed his cabinet to examine, over a 60 day period, other options including trade sanctions and other economic measures.

The Secretaries of State and Commerce stand against Japanese whaling. US Secretary of State Madeleine K. Albright last month personally conveyed "strong disappointment" to Japan's Foreign Minister, and warned of possible sanctions. US Commerce Secretary Norman Y. Mineta on September 13th certified (under the Pelly Amendment to the Fishermen's Protection Act of 1967) that Japan is undermining international efforts to protect whales, triggering a process for the president to consider trade sanctions against Japan.

The US Congress stands against Japanese whaling. A resolution now being circulated in the United States Congress urges withholding of US support for a UN Security Council seat for Japan until Japan ends its abuse of the scientific whaling exemption under International Whaling Commission rules. The resolution, sponsored by US Representative William Delahunt, questions whether Japan can be trusted to fulfill its commitments to the letter and spirit of multilateral environmental agreements.



Japanese environmentalists stand against Japanese whaling. IRUKA & KUJIRA (Dolphin & Whale) Action Network in Tokyo has written to Secretary of State Madeleine K. Albright stating that Japan should be denied a permanent seat on the UN Security Council because of its expanding whaling operations. This group and 73 other Japanese organizations have united to oppose Japanese whaling practices. Public opinion polls in Japan show little support for whaling, particularly if it damages Japan's image and economy overseas.

Take a stand now, before it's too late.

1. Urge the President to impose sanctions on Japan. Call 202/456-1414 or send an email to president@whitehouse.gov
2. Tell your Member of Congress to support the Delahunt Resolution. (Contacts available in the "Find your official" section of www.voter.com or check your local phone book.)
3. Visit www.StopWhalingNow.com for campaign updates and more ways to help.

Stop the slaughter. Stop whaling now.

IFAW
Presented by the International Fund for Animal Welfare
To stand with us, visit www.ifaw.org or call 1-800-932-4329

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

RSO's make UMass seem not so big after all

"Well, at first I intended to join all these clubs on campus, but that didn't happen, so now I just sleep a lot."

A UMass freshman said this at a recent meeting for one of the RSO's on campus, when asked why he had come to the meeting. Now, finally, he had woken up, and heard about this meeting for this particular RSO, and decided to attend.

Maybe this is an exaggeration, but that decision might have saved his college experience.

You've all heard this before – at a school as gargantuan as UMass (just the name alone is daunting), it's easy to get lost in the crowd. It's easy to stay in your room and do nothing all day, waiting for the weekend. It's easy to be in your senior year and find that all your friends have either graduated, dropped out, or more likely – were never really your friends to begin with. You just drank with them a lot on weekends to pass the time. How sad and depressing is that? That's not to say that college isn't the time and place to lounge around and do nothing – it's exactly that place. But not all the time.

The fact is, a lot of people on this campus are unhappy, and who cares?

This school it was too big to find any support from faculty. And don't be surprised when your drinking friends from a year ago tell you, "Sorry, I don't have time to listen."

We don't want this to sound like another pitch to "join clubs." You've heard that stomach-turning speech from your parents and teachers. The fact remains, if you think this school is too big, too boring, too idiotic – then you're right. But you're also not really trying.

UMass, in fact, is the perfect microcosm. You may hear about how great other schools are, and wish you went to Vassar, Emory, Sarah Lawrence, or any other of your top choices. But visit any of these schools, and you'll find they don't really represent the world that well. UMass offers the better picture – you will live and work with many different people, of varying degrees of maturity and intelligence. And you will get screwed over many times by many incompetent people. By attending UMass you've already got that education.

Like we said before, this isn't the typical "join clubs" speech. This should also be about our job. It is the duty of student organizations to provide you with a great social environment and a chance to be of use. It's their duty not to be cliquey, arrogant, too opinionated or unfriendly. It's their duty to welcome new people who may not have the confidence to walk in and immediately make friends. Often times, that doesn't happen. People are too used to running things their way and being in charge of everything. Student leaders sometimes aren't good enough leaders. There is a great quote from the movie Go, which says, "How do you people get to the top? By being so incompetent, that the guy ahead of you can't do his job, so he falls on his ass and congratulations, you are now on top. And now the top is down here, it used to be up here... and you don't even know the difference."

And all RSO's should change that kind of workmanship, and that kind of aforementioned behavior. They need to get you to stop sleeping.

U.S., remember the Maine

"Too often, the United States makes its decisions based on what would be most advantageous to herself, with very little regard for those ideals that seem to hold true here, but nowhere else."

It's already started. The generals and politicos in Washington have begun to use the recent attack on the USS Cole to justify an American presence at the entrance to the Red Sea. Just days ago it was reported, "The United States intends to...build a military base at Bab Al-Mandeb." The base will include a listening post, as well as troops, planes, and ships. Monday morning, US special forces entered Afghanistan to get Osama Bin Laden, whom we blame for the deplorable act. What has happened to President Clinton's DNC promise that, "We're more secure...because of our leadership...bringing the Middle East closer than ever to a comprehensive peace." Clinton gets some of the blame for rushing forward with the peace process in the effort to leave the legacy of peacemaker. The three leaders should have treaded much more lightly at Camp David when discussing the complex questions of peace.

I am dismayed to learn that both presidential candidates unconditionally support Israel. This puts the United States in a dilemma; for we are (supposedly) committed to human rights and self-determination (remember the fourteen points?). Support for Israel comes from our old Cold War viewpoint that she is an indispensable ally that must be backed at all costs, for we see her in the same light as England in 1917, and the prospect of a Crusader State in the Holy Land appeals to us. Considering what is going on there now, our backing of Israel would throw our holier-than-thou ideals into the trash, and replace them with empty rhetoric. If the United States would reduce aid to Israel, even the hard liners like Ariel Sharon would be forced to make peace.

Too often, the United States makes its decisions based on what would be most advantageous to herself, with very little regard for those ideals that seem to hold true here, but nowhere else. Gore Vidal asks why "we wonder [that] everywhere we are denounced as hypocrites?"

The creation of an independent state in Israel for the Palestinians should be the goal of both sides, at any cost (including the sharing of Jerusalem). It seems that Israel will be forced to cede to the Palestinian demands as the only way to appease her increasingly seething Arab neighbors and housemates. Recently, ten of the Arab countries (including Saudi Arabia) came together in condemning Israel and offering a $1 billion aid package to Palestine. United as never before, the modern Arab world presents the West with a shaky monolith that must be respected, not underestimated.

SIMON PONGRATZ

On Sunday, with the death toll up to 140 people, Ehud Barak continued his quest to form an emergency government with Arial Sharon. If this happens, the prospects for peace will be all but dead. Sharon opposes any land-for-peace deal that might help end the strife, and this would be a step backward for peace. Regardless of opinion, I think it is a general agreement that concessions on both sides are needed. For the Israeli's, this includes land. Something else might be good enough for Yasser Arafat, but the Palestinian people have spoken as loudly as the Chechens in saying that they regard Israel as an occupational government. The septuagenarian leader cannot be expected to control three generations of bottled up rage.

The similarities in the attack on the USS Cole and the destruction of the USS Maine in 1898 are curious. Both involved US ships that were damaged or sunk by explosions, and as a result of the (supposed) terrorist actions by another country. I say "supposed" because in the case of the Maine, the culprit was never found and we never did have any proof that Spain had sponsored it. The "splendid little war" gave us a good excuse to snatch some colonial possessions and join the pantheon of the European empires. A few days ago, a report from the AP wire stated that: "The Pentagon's top intelligence expert on Terrorist threats...quit in protest of what he believed was an unjustified lack of attention to terrorist threat warnings he had provided before the Oct. 12 attack on the warship [The Cole]." If this is true, I have one insight: typical.

There is one more similarity that may yet become apparent: After the war in 1898, the US controlled the Philippines, Guam, Puerto Rico, and had de facto control of Cuba. Last week's bombing of the Cole could lead to the same thing in the Middle East, especially in the event of a regional war involving Israel and the cries for revenge following the bombing. It seems like every time we fight someone, they attack us first. "Remember the Alamo, or the Maine, or Pearl Harbor." Perhaps "remember the Cole" will be added to the encyclopedia of American calls to arms.

Now that I've made my veiled reference to politics, I should make something clear. For months, Republicans have been contemplating the fact that, given the opportunity, President Clinton might try to wag the dog one last time and attack a random country with the slightest provocation, to give his would be successor a nice spike in the polls. It would have to be somewhat earlier than Nov. 7th in order to help Gore, but also close enough to prevent any response from the recipient that might damage him. For those of us who would decry such a cowardly act, I have good news: We seem to have depleted our stock of Tomahawk missiles (the natural weapons for such action) in the eight times Clinton has used them since their debut in 1991 (the only other time they were used was in the Gulf War). My favorites were when he used them on three separate occasions during the Monica Lewinsky scandal. Hmm. Remember the Sudanese pharmaceutical factory? On Saturday, Pakistan, anticipating US reaction to the bombing of the Cole, stated: "It would not allow the United States to cross its airspace to attack Afghanistan-based Osama bin Laden, the Saudi militant accused of attacking US targets." Good. Pakistan knows Clinton's game, but that doesn't mean that he won't do the same somewhere else. Just pay careful attention to the news in the next few days.

Final note: Hands off the Middle East! The next president should keep in mind that major changes need to take place when making a first impression on the Arab world. I hope Clinton can get his act together and achieve peace before he leaves office, because once this happens we can begin to cultivate better relations with both Arab and Israeli. Remember that with the bombing of the Maine, the United States entered into that space on the world stage previously occupied by Britain. Now, the world doesn't seem such a fun place, and the baggage of empire has become burdensome. Americans don't (and never really did) want that kind of country anymore. And finally, to Mr. Clinton: Don't use the attack on the Cole to justify an American response that is unwarranted. Remember what it is that you want: a legacy of peace.

Information from Worldtribune.com, Time.com, United States Essays, and Chronicle of Twentieth Century Conflict were used in this article.

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian Columnist. His columns usually run on Wednesdays.

LIFE IN HELL ©2000 BY MATT GROENING

Get out of my country

"Think of it: How would it feel if all your life you were thought of as a "dirty foreigner" even if you don't know a word of your "native tongue" and you have been in the States all your life?"

Yesterday started out like any other Thursday night. There we were, waiting in line at the Pub to get into the overrated party. My friends were getting anxious, but nonetheless we waited despite the fact we had but an hour left before the party closed.

What happened next I will never forget even though it was over in a matter of minutes. It only took a sentence – a word. A man tried to get into the club despite the bouncer being there. While he did push the bouncer to get in, he really wasn't violent. The bouncer proceeded to twist his arm, kick him and said, "Get out of this club before I kick you out of this fing country."

If you think there is nothing wrong with this statement, let me add one small detail: The man who was kicked out was Hispanic. The fact that the bouncer could be so ignorant to assume that he was "fresh off the boat" amazes me. But it was the hate in the voice which haunted me. It made me wonder about those diners in the fifties where they kicked people out because of their skin color...how is that different today? Maybe because now they have to find an excuse.

The fact that most people didn't even blink when this happened shocked me even more. The fact that there was more than a few Hispanics in line who did not do anything appalled me.

The other bouncer wasn't much better, calmly grabbing him and telling him to leave. "People like you aren't wanted here" was etched on his face. People like you... The fact of the matter is this country was founded on people like "you," their blood and sweat and tears. Bloodshed was spilled on the ground so that people can call America their home.

MARYAM DIMAURO

You might say that the bouncer did this in anger. You might say he didn't mean it. But what we say in anger and on impulse usually harbors unconscious prejudice, yet we hide behind half concealed nervous smiles, with eyes filled with fear. We don't want to deal with the issues inside our hearts.

Think of it: How would it feel if all your life you were thought of as a "dirty foreigner" even if you don't know a word of your "native tongue" and you have been in the States all your life. How would it feel when people said to get out of "their country?" To feel unwanted and isolated. As if we owned America in the first place.

People see me – white skin, brown hair, and they think they can say ignorant things around me. But the truth is I won't tolerate it. This country is built on many culture, many places. When I say, "I live in El Salvador," they have the most ignorant things to say to me. Mostly what I get is, "Why would you live there?"

I live there because it is my home. We are judged by how we look and are encased in stereotypes. We see each other only by what we know. This saddens me because we are encased in our limited universes where white is white and black is black. We never try to see anyone for who they are as a person, but rather who they are as a stereotype.

People come here with a pocketful of dreams and wishes and they find people looking at them wearily. They come here and work 24 hours for minimum wage. Some come from places where there is no running water or light, but they come because America was supposed to be built for a second chance for others. They come and wipe other people's sweat, and become exploited because they want a better life. But still they get the same reaction, "Go home." Only, this is their home. And they wish for their children to have a better life, for them to be educated. Their children, who know nothing about the United States, are treated like they are "fresh off the boat."

No one asks someone like me where I am from. And when I say, "El Salvador," they look at me with a mix of shock and disbelief and DEMAND explanations. But I'm lucky because I can choose to be silent. Most people have the Scarlet Letter etched, scarred and burned in their skin.

The funniest kind of hostility is the one directed toward Puerto Ricans, or the fact that people think, "they are all the same." Because technically Puerto Ricans are Americans by force, of course, and have no rights, but "American" is what it says on their passport.

I thought about my brother last night. About how in that exact situation he would have been treated the same (or maybe worse). This thought scared me. Because my brother's dark skin and "hispano" appearance, he would be judged as a consequence, while I would have been able to go in scot-free. When I saw that boy being told to "get out of his country," I saw my brother. I see it in every act of racism, and not just those of Hispanics. I see it because I have to, because I have to know what my brother might go through, or my best friend, or my ex-boyfriend, etc. If only this had happened to everyone's brother or sister, so people would stop saying, "It's not my problem."

I wonder who made up the rules. I also wonder when people are going to have the courage to start seeing how twisted they really are, and finding the ways to fight them.

Maryam DiMauro is a UMass student

Question 3: It matters to you

I am reaching out to every one who reads this article and declaring that this is your calling – that this is where you can make a huge impact in such an easy way simply by voting "yes" on question 3. Voting "yes" on question 3 will prohibit dog racing in the state of Massachusetts. Yet in more personal terms, voting "yes" will end the needless suffering and torture of greyhounds that has gone on for too long in the dog racing industry. One may ask, "Why should I vote yes on question 3? Why should it concern me?" I just don't know enough, and I just don't care." I assure you that with these facts, you will know enough, and you will care.

ALLISON KORMER

Imagine looking out from behind bars in a cage you can hardly even turn around in. Imagine being beaten because you are not a "winner," and watching others around you being killed for the same reason. This is a reality, folks. This is what goes on in the lives of the majority of greyhounds, the ones not lucky enough to be rescued yet. These loving, gentle animals suffer through a devastating life cycle. Thousands of them are bred to find the few "winners" — dogs that are fast, dogs that people will pay to see race. When dogs fail to be winners, they must endure the consequences. They are of no use now in this money making scheme. Instead of being considered man's best friend, instead of chasing tennis balls and going for walks, these dogs live very short and empty lives with none of the above. For a greyhound, losing a race means losing your life, or what you have of a life.

After speaking with Joanne Mills, a volunteer at the Hopkinton Greyhound Friends adoption center, I felt only more horror at the sad truth to greyhound racing. Joanne spoke of hundreds of greyhounds that are rescued by the adoption center in literally critical condition. These dogs are malnourished and dehydrated, with broken bones and other serious injuries. They are full of neurological problems and a great fear after having spent the majority of their lives in crates. Mills goes on to say that the rescue league has to spend hundreds of dollars rehabilitating each dog because of the horrible condition they are in when they arrive from the dog track. Not to mention all the vaccinations that go neglected at the track, from rabies to heartworm. The majority of greyhounds need to be spayed and neutered as well.

In addition, a veterinarian, who is also the treasurer of "Grey-2-K," tells of her own nightmares with rescued greyhounds. She remembers a specific instance where a greyhound had come in with a severely broken bone that someone at the dog track had tried to set with a toilet paper roll. The dog track cares nothing about these living creatures, as long as their "machines" bring in the money.

"Imagine looking out from behind bars in a cage you can hardly even turn around in. Imagine being beaten because you are not a "winner," and watching others around you being killed for the same reason. This is a reality, folks."

A good 99% of the greyhounds saved from these tracks are saved through volunteer efforts only. The tracks play no role in saving the dogs. It has been a constant battle for the MSPCA to convince representatives of the greyhound tracks to at least practice more humane methods. No laws could be passed to even support a humane euphemism for these animals when they are suffering. Because the MSPCA has become so frustrated with the dog track representatives, they have tried to turn to the public for support. The result of this is that the killings and abuse have now become "underground" and hidden, so no one has to wipe the blood from their hands in the eye of the public. The reason thousands of dogs are sent to other states is so that they can be killed there instead of Massachusetts. This way, the dog tracks can maintain a deceiving "good-rep," and keep the public's interest and support.

The bottom line is that we, as a society, should not allow this kind of treatment to continue. As long as greyhound racing is allowed, it will. Whether you see footage of the abuse and finally discover what it all means, or whether you like it all covered up nice and pretty so you don't have to look the truth in the face, I am sure you deserve to know the reality. You now have a responsibility if you have any sensitivity as a human being. Even though these creatures have four feet instead of two and cannot speak for themselves, you can speak for them. Greyhounds are incredibly loving and sensitive animals, as well as lifelong companions. I speak from experience, as my aunt's greyhound follows her around everywhere, and at the sound of my aunt's name, her ears perk up with familiarity and remembrance. She didn't always trust us though. It took her a while to forget the nightmare she had endured before she came to live with us. It is such a waste for such sweet animals to live such miserable lives. Now that you know the truth, you cannot ignore it. Have you ever seen a greyhound smile? Well, they really do. Please make them smile. Vote "yes" on #3!!

Allison Kromer is a UMass student

Letters to the Editor

As I walk up and down North Pleasant Street, I receive invites from fraternity brothers partying up and down the block. These invites come after brief inspections of my group of friends. After saying a fee of five dollars, we are allowed to enter the party and are welcome to warm beer and uninhibited fornication. The rooms are crowded, and the music is blaring. An occasional frat boy will find the time to come and do you a favor by peering you about why their fraternity eats out the one next door. In reality, the following day you will not be able to distinguish one fraternity from the next. After a night at a fraternity house you leave with beer stain on your clothes and the smell of vomit on your skin.

The fraternity brothers who host the mind-numbing get-togethers are all part of the one organization – an assembly of pigs who pay yearly fees to have a size group of deluded friends. The problem is that these men aren't friends by choice, but rather associates. They are required to get along with all of the other fraternity brothers that are too antisocial to go out and take their own friends. Many college students believe that a fraternity is an alternative method of finding high quality friends.

It is very easy to just the pledging alone that Greek life is dismal. After four months of cleaning, drinking, heaving, and verbal abuse, you are admitted into a fraternity. Once you are in you realize that this group of people will be your "best friends" throughout college. While seemingly pleasant, college is really about meeting new people and not being secluded to a certain clique.

"No one could tell me where my soul might be

I searched for G-d, but he eluded me

I sought my brother out and found all three"

-Crosby

This is a quote from the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity at the University of Massachusetts. Although it sounds convincing, I'm willing to bet that the majority of the promises that are made are unsupported. Fraternities breed emotional and legal problems that aren't publicized like the brotherhood they guarantee. During the pledging process, several misdemeanors have occurred. On September 27, 1997, Scott Kruger, a member of the Phi Alpha Gamma fraternity at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology drank himself to death. In 1998 there was a similar situation at a fraternity in Grand Rapids, Michigan.

"Police say 19 year old Stephen Petz literally suffocated to death March 15, 1998, after drinking as many as 27 mixed drinks at a party sponsored by the Knights of College Leadership (KCL)."

Whether it be from statistics alone or morals, fraternities seriously hurt Universities across the country. The culture that a fraternity nurtures is one full of drinking, degradation, and promiscuous behavior. I am strongly suggesting that college students here at the University of Massachusetts evaluate the consequences of joining Greek life. Next time you are walking down frat row, consider the people you are dealing with. I am challenging you to find an alternative method of having fun because fraternities are futile. College is a chance to leave high school and cliques in the past, and open up to the diverse people that you have the opportunity to relate with.

"When a fraternity turns someone down it brands that person as being socially unacceptable. Fraternities across the country are creating factions among students." -Dartmouth Newspaper

Hope Zelinger is a UMass student

Letters to the Editor

To all UMass students,

I was recently astounded when I found out that only 17 percent of students vote. I saw this when I came across the YouthVote2000.org website. At first I was ashamed that our generation was so apathetic, but continued to read and found that now, more than ever, students are volunteering their time to help communities. We want to make a difference.

Politicians are not hearing from college students. Our voices and concerns are not being heard. We are young. We have ideals. We have not submitted to the status quo. An important part of the political spectrum is missing when we do not vote.

I recently helped MassPIRG to register over 1200 students. The effort was part of the YouthVote 2000 campaign. The goal of YouthVote 2000 is to engage students in the political process. Our ideals should be considered before our representatives make any decisions.

For the next couple of weeks leading up to the election MassPIRG, SCERA, and others will put all their efforts into getting students out to vote on Nov. 7. If you would like to help the cause please contact MassPIRG at 545-0199 or drop by the Student Union room 423A.

As young students, we will be the leaders of tomorrow, but we can begin to shape the future today. Hold your representatives accountable to you and your beliefs. On Nov. 7, go out and vote.

Matt Bollas is a UMass student

Letters to the Editor

To the editor:

We are writing in response to Russ Burach's comic "Adam and Eric" which was published in Thursday, October 26's edition. We would like to address some of the issues evident in this comic. This episode of Burach's comic misrepresents a Women's Studies classroom by depicting a teacher showing a home video about lesbianism where the students' responses are humiliating and pornographic. While we would not dispute your paper's right to freedom of the press, nor do we attribute Mr. Burach's views to the Collegian staff we insist that our views also be heard.

The depiction of lesbians in Mr. Burach's cartoon is harmful and degrading because it sensationalizes lesbian sexuality. Lesbian sexuality is not for men's entertainment. Most lesbians are not exhibitionists, unlike those in the home video your comic portrays. It is wrong to make sex the only focus of an identity. Lesbians are not only their sexuality; it is one part of their identity like all people in our communities.

This comic strip also promotes the idea that all women's sexuality is for men's consumption; that's a common theme in the mainstream media. This image reduces women to exploited sexual objects and promotes the myth that women's sexual goal is to please men, rather than themselves. Isn't it ironic that a Women's Studies classroom, which promotes the critical examination of women's issues is reduced to a male's sexual fantasy?

Burach's cartoon suggests that the Women's Studies department is actually a Lesbian Studies department, that our classes have no academic content and that the relationship between our students and teachers is at once sexual and even comical. To assume that all we study relates to lesbian issues or that all Women's Studies students are lesbians is more than presumptuous. It must be assumed that Mr. Burach has never taken a Women's Studies course or he would know the rigor of our curriculum. We guarantee that the majority of Women's studies students have read more books, debated more issues, and have written more papers that Mr. Burach has in his entire college career.

In the Women's Studies department we expect that individuals know one another and we are not afraid to know ourselves, but we do not promote the graphic, sexualized, out of the classroom as Mr. Burach would have us believe. We are straight, lesbian, gay, bisexual, female and male, liberal and conservative. We are mothers, fathers, sisters, brothers, daughters and sons. We are from diverse racial, ethnic, social backgrounds. We are students. We are workers. We are citizens, and we are organizing. We are conscious of the impact that our actions have on our community. We will not be silenced any longer by the kind of ignorance portrayed by Russ Burach's cartoon.

18 Women's Studies Students

www.dailycollegian.comwww.dai

Voice your opinion; write for Ed/Op.

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday morning Celebration - 11am in the Jones Library Conference Room (43 Amity St-downtown
MERCYhouse It's a Church! 374-7532 www.knowmercy.org

UMASS YOGA & MEDITATION CLUB
The Art of Living - Healing Breath Workshop
• 6 sessions for deep relaxation, greater energy, increased awareness and fun ☺
• Brings the mind to the present moment and allows you to give your 100% !
• Held in about 100 countries - recognized by the United Nations & W.H.O.
• No experience needed. Everyone welcome!
When: Nov 10(starts @7pm) – Nov 15, 3 hour sessions. Where: UMass, LGRT 1634,
For more information: ☎ Durgesh 665-8635 ☎ Rebecca 549-0396
Email: drgesh@nova.astro.umass.edu Web http://www.artofliving.org/colleges/
Free introductory sessions (optional) ! UMass Campus Center 7-8 pm
Wed Nov 1 Rm. 811 Tue Nov 7 Rm. 803 Thu Nov 9 Rm. 905

KEGGS and EGGS!
at McMURPHY'S Irish Tavern
NOVEMBER 4th Homecoming 2000
Doors open at 10 am
NO COVER CHARGE!
POSITIVE ID REQUIRED

Another valuable lesson learned from Hollywood: 14 of 74

Everyone speaks English. Especially Russians.

Introducing Nibblebox.com. Tomorrow's entertainment today.
Log on for original episodic shows, interactive entertainment, and the best of college radio created by college students with help from people like John Leguizamo (actor, Summer of Sam), Doug Liman (director, Swingers and Go), and Amy Heckerling (director, Clueless). Because while it's fun making cynical comments about entertainment clichés, it's more fun to see what students are actually doing about it.

nibbl@box.com
digital entertainment in short, tasty bytes.

COURTESY OF TIMOTHY AND THOMAS LEUPP

Virgin Larry finds its main character looking for love in all the wrong places.

Virgin Larry a short film with heart

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Can I suggest to get any? Neither can Larry.

Larry O'Donnell, that is, of the award-winning short film Virgin Larry — his debut piece from writers/directors/producers Tim and Tom Leupp which will be presented this weekend at the Northampton Film festival.

The 20-minute film chronicles Larry's efforts to lose his virginity before his rapidly approaching 30th birthday, focusing on "the absurdities of the interplay between the sexes," says Tim. He continues: "And a recent survey found that 12 percent of men in their 30's are virgins. 12 percent! Even subtracting a few percents for monks and the like, that's a lot of guys who haven't figured out how to crack the code."

Larry is played by Mark Lacy as an appropriately insecure loser, but one who manages also to give Larry enough wallflower charm that we want him to score at times, however, his performance swings too far into the comical.

That criticism holds true for much of the movie, as Larry moves from one ridiculous situation to the next, everything becoming so silly and insincere that it becomes difficult to salvage any sort of theme, anything beyond the simple desire for laughs. There's nothing wrong with comedy, of course, but when a piece is totally unwilling to treat its material with seriousness it will inevitably lose out on opportunities for observation and commentary. Add to that the inconsistency of Virgin Larry's humor, and it's hard to say what, exactly, the film accomplishes.

Also of questionable taste is the film's depiction of gay men, a depiction that plays up to every stereotype society has to offer: the flamboyant, Village People-esque, endlessly effeminate homosexual is the only variety presented (and there are many), and they are always used for comical purposes. This can be explained as harmless self-aware funpoking, but the affirmation and/or exploitation of damaging stereotypes is not something to be handled lightly.

Ultimately, "lightly" describes how the Leupp brothers approached everything about this project — it is less a comic story and more of a farce, exaggerated in all aspects for the sake of hit-or-miss jokes. We must keep the medium in mind, of course, for a short film doesn't offer the sort of time for character development that would have allowed the narrative to carry more weight, and so exaggeration can be seen as a viable strategy of communication. In this way, Virgin Larry does a good job of painting a picture of romantic desperation, which people can commiserate with and use as a simplistic reference point for self-examination.

Virgin Larry will screen on Nov. 4 at 5:30 p.m., at Wright Hall on the Smith College Campus. For ticket information, call (413) 586-3471 or visit www.nohofilm.org.

Aguilera knows what Santa wants

MY KIND OF CHRISTMAS
Christina Aguilera
RCA Records

By Kurt Polesky
Collegian Staff

When you think of Christmas you might think of such images as Santa Claus, reindeer, mistletoe, egg-nog (with a little something extra), and spending time with family and loved ones. When I think of Christmas I think of two words: Christina Aguilera. As my usual Christmas goes, the day mostly entails opening up a bunch of crappy presents highlighted by ten pairs of new socks and some shirt that looks like a dishrag from Grandma. But thanks to Christina Aguilera's new album My Kind of Christmas by those fine folks at RCA records, this Christmas will truly be the merriest Christmas of all time. Joy to the world.

My Kind of Christmas includes new versions of several holiday classics, as well as some newly composed work. Songs such as "Oh Holy Night" and "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas" are redone by Aguilera with her own twist. The album also includes a reinterpretation of Mel Torme's classic "The Christmas Song" as an up-tempo dance track. But the fun doesn't stop there. There are also several brand new never-before-heard holiday songs as well!

The original material on the album includes "Christmastime" written by modern day Mozart, Ron Fair, the man responsible for Christina's current smash single "Come On Over." "This Year" is another original track that is actually co-written by Ms. Aguilera herself! Hold on a minute, wait...yes, hell has just officially frozen over. Although the newly composed trek sounds decent enough, I highly doubt that tracks like "Xtinas Xmas" will be replacing "Santa Claus is Coming to Town" as a Christmas classic anytime soon. In all seriousness Aguilera is a vocally talented singer, who possesses excellent range and clearly excels in studio controlled setting. Whether it's a new version of Christmas favorite or a new song entirely, Aguilera does a fine job adding her own R&B flava and stylee to the compositions.

COURTESY OF NORMAN JEAN ROY

Christina Aguilera contributes a new album of holiday songs for the fireplace.

On "My Kind of Christmas" Aguilera shows the world what I have already known for the last fifty years — that she personifies what Christmas is all about. Quite simply I recommend throwing out your Nat King Cole record. You won't be needing that cra anymore. So whether you're a person will enjoy My Kit of Christmas, yuuuk. Well, I'll try to break it down for you. If you like Christina Aguilera and you like Christmas, I recommend you buy this album. If you like Christina Aguilera but don't like Christmas, still buy this album. If you don't like Christina Aguilera but do like Christmas you should buy this album. If you don't like Christina Aguilera and you don't like Christmas, don't buy this album.

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995

BUNAC
CAMPUS VISIT
WORKING ADVENTURES WORLDWIDE
BRITAIN.....AUSTRALIA.....NEW ZEALAND
Thursday, November 9, 2000
INFORMATION TABLE: 9 am - 1 pm
Campus Center Concourse
Work, travel and have fun. Internationalize your resume, make new friends and broaden your horizons!
For more info or a brochure please contact
1-800-462-8622
www.bunac.org
Email: info@bunacusa.org

SOUPer BOWL
Lobster Bisque Specal
THIS WEEKEND
Clam Chowder Special every Friday
• 10-12 Different soups daily Including chilis and stews
• Bread bowls
• Fresh bread
• All made fresh daily
• also a limited selection of salads
96 N. Pleasant St. (Next to CVS) 253-1855

We test our system: you get free therapy.
"Participate in a completely free pilot test of online therapy."
Free, secure, confidential web-based therapy from Massachusetts Licensed Psychotherapists.
If you are a Massacusetts resident over 18 years old, whether or not you have tried traditional therapy before, you are welcome.
visit www.webtherapy.com to sign up.
webtherapy.com

We're giving away 5,000,000 shares of our start-up stock!
(What the hell. It's only money.)
Visit our website for the scoop.
SonicSave.com

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 n pleasant st amherst 256-0733
145 main st northampton 586-0155

Boot Camp.
Zinn
Amherst
Northampton
Williamstown

An uncommonly funky night at Pearl Street

Common
November 1
Pearl Street, Northampton

By Catherine Turner and Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Emerging from the backstage came this figure, this unpolluted psyche of the hip-hop culture. And with little warning, it made its way into the light, stopped and stood silent in front of an anticipating microphone. It was then, that Common spoke.

"It's the C to the O (double M-O-N) and I'm back again/Take this back and then, tell a friend/Spaces and places you been/Time travelin', time travelin'..."

Clutching the mike, his eyes fixed on the audience, he asked the Pearl Street crowd: "Y'all want to get live?"

And surely enough, they did.

"There are times, when you need someone, I will be by your side...There is a light that shines, special for you and me..."

The bass bumped, the crowd heaved, voices raised in unison as a hip-hop miracle caressed the mike with his chocolaty voice last night at Pearl Street. The fun beats and chorusses of new funk and fresh hip-hop resonated the venue.

Only one man could pull off a show like this: Common. Backed by a live band and of course, DJ Dummy, this controller of words lifted the audience to an extraordinary level.

Compared to previous shows, last night was surely one of his best. Earlier this year, Common toured with De La Soul, Talib Kwali, Bir Markie, Hi Tek and Pharaoh Monch in the Spitkicker Tour. During that amazing show, he was only allotted a limited amount of time to present his musical prowess. But the show at Pearl Street gave him the chance to express himself in a thorough manner – from freestylin' to funkadelic riffs.

The Wednesday night set lasted almost an hour and a half, and for most, it could be noted entirely as "off the hook." The audience became so captivated by his performance that its duration of time became imperceptible. It was like a wave: ebbing and flowing, lyrics crashing against the shore of the people lined up front, eroding any doubts that one might have of this versatile emcee – known to his mother as Lonnie Rashid Lynn.

He brought the crowd to a climax, and then set them down gently with a smooth bass rhythm, full of soul – an evidently balanced approach to this night of hip-hop.

One of the more impressive moments of the night was when Common jumped off the stage and began to breakdance in the crowd. Faces sparkled as he spun around on his head and then immediately hopped back on stage to spit out another rhyme. Throughout the entire show he was dancing, smiling at the crowd and feeding off of its energy.

His voice was like hot chocolate: warm, sweet and relaxing. When he spoke, every word floated above the sea of people and crashed in their ears.

His lyrics were clever and true, and even his freestyle was intelligent – releasing "Massachusetts" and "Northampton" into the verbal mixing.

He played almost every song on his current album, Like Water for Chocolate, but it wasn't tedious or over-rehearsed. The live keyboards, trumpet, bass, drums and guitar made every song transfuse right into the listener's veins.

And Common looked great. Two summers ago he played a Mid-western tour and he was sick and slow for its extent. Last night he mentioned having a sore throat but sipped on tea whenever he completed a cut. He may have felt under the weather, but he acted almost supernatural – totally pumped up and jazzed. He left every note his band played and let out crazy dance spasms as the musicians funked out to some modified Parliament.

Common has been on a whirlwind tour across the Northeast and played in Boston the night before last. But hearing him Wednesday night, one would never know that this is his full-time job. He was relaxed and happy. His attitude reflected upon the audience. Even during his wildest moments, the vibe was chill. Common was smooth.

He has three other discs out besides Like Water for Chocolate. He played samples of tracks from both Resurrection and One Day It'll All Make Sense.

He started the show off with his primary track off Like Water for Chocolate, "Time Travelin'" and drifted right into "Doomin'." Once the show got off the ground, he mesmerized the venue with "Nag Champa," "Funky for You," "Geto Heaven," "Cold Blooded" and finished the night off with his single, "The Light." In the middle of it all he freestyled against the back beat of "A Film Called Pimp."

With every song the band, A Black Girl Named Becky, got even more live and dug deeper into the jam. Common left its vibe and gave it right back to them and to the crowd. He even had time to toss in a little flavor from his connections with The Roots Crew, performing his verse from the song "Act Too." The Love of My Life" off of the Root's Things Fall Apart and Come Alive albums. Hip-hop fans, any hip-hop fan that missed this concert is definitely out of the loop. Common was at his peak and projected a stellar aura upon the crowd. He is incredibly talented and destined for legend hood.

Before Common appeared in front of the Pearl Street crowd on Wednesday night, the opening act, The Spooks, presented their dosage of hip-hop for the warm-up.

The Spooks are four sincere deep and are complimented by the extraordinary Erykah Badu like vocals of Ming Xia who is definitely the glue of this hip-hop collage.

COURTESY OF ARTISTDIRECT.COM

Common brought the light to Pearl Street this past Wednesday.

Del, Automator, Koala lost in space

DELTRON 3030
75 Ark

By Casey Hayman
Collegian Correspondent

At the very mention of concept albums, many music listeners cringe. Though the idea of an album being both conceptually and musically engaging is a novel one, efforts of this sort tend to fall short of their goal. The hip-hop world has been exceptionally devoid of such albums (unless of course you count rappers' sexual and financial conquests as veritable album concepts), save for albums such as Prince Paul's 1999 "rap musical" Prince Among Thieves. Some might say the fewer concept albums the better; however, with the rap game is sorely lacking innovation and individualism, perhaps some new concepts are what the genre needs most.

Here to save hip-hop in this first year of the new millennium comes producer Dan "The Automator" Nakamura, Prince Paul's collaborator on 1999's bizarre yet brilliant Handsome Boy Modeling School album (which could itself be loosely considered a concept album). Nakamura teams up with rapper Del tha Funkee Homosapien and DJ Kid Koala for a trip to the 31st century to form Deltron 3030. The three travel throughout the galaxy in their spaceship representing hip-hop, intergalactic-style.

The production throughout is outstanding, with Nakamura securing his place as one of hip-hop's elite producers. The beats are far from formulaic. Though all of the tracks maintain a futuristic mood, their styles are varied and consistently excellent. Del's lyrics and innovative flow provide a perfect counterpoint to Nakamura's space-age sonic textiles. The first time I listened to the album, the concept seemed more than a bit forced to me; however, upon my second listen, I found my reservations softening. The album's vision of the future is dark, yet not unrealistic. In fact, the future envisioned in Deltron 3030 is not so different from today, with natural resources dwindling, the gap between rich and poor widening, and the government taking increasing control over people's lives.

Fortunately for them, the Deltron crew finds release from their oppressive society through their music. On "3030," a seven-and-a-half minute masterwork, Del rhymes, "They can't fight the forcer/Victory is ours once we strike the source/Enterprising wisemen look to the horizon/Thinking more capitalism is the wisdom and imprison/All citizens empowered with rhythm/We keep the funk alive by talking with Idioms." Admittedly, such broad social commentaries can at times be a bit much to digest, but the album's grand scope is skillfully tempered with lighthearted songs such as "Mastermind," "Positive Contact," and "Lovesong" which give the album a much-needed levity. Also saving Deltron 3030 from being weighed down by its ideas is the same overriding, bizarre sense of humor that served Handsome Boy Modeling School so well (check MC Paul Barman's hilarious cameos on "Meet Cleofis Randolph the Patriarch"). These artists clearly have something to say, but they refuse to take themselves too seriously while saying it. Refreshing, isn't it?

The only real complaint I could make about the album would be that Kid Koala's turntablism is not showcased nearly enough. The album too often goes the traditional route of using the DJ as an aside to fill in choruses and the endings of songs. Though Koala's skills are evident throughout it would seem that such an ambitious project might dare to use the DJ in a more innovative fashion.

As far as aesthetic value is concerned, Deltron 3030 is head and shoulders above the vast majority of hip-hop albums released in recent years. In fact, it is head and shoulders above most any album released in recent years in that respect, based on the quality of production and its fearless innovation. However, due to its conceptual ambition, the album's songs will probably never succeed as singles. Deltron 3030 must be listened to in its entirety to be appreciated, and probably requires several listenings to be truly understood.

This is yet another commercial pitfall of the concept album, and one that Deltron, for all its ingenuity, cannot avoid. I can assure open-minded hip-hop fans, and open-minded music fans in general, however, that this album is well worth the effort it requires of the listener. At its best, Deltron 3030 provides a thought-provoking hip-hop journey with three of the genre's most talented artists. But even if you can't enjoy the concept of the album, it is at the very least a sign that creativity and innovation in hip-hop are far from dead. If hip-hop as an art form is to survive until the year 3030, let alone 2030, more albums and artists as daring as these will be needed to lead the way.

COURTESY OF METROACTIVE.COM

Del tha Funkee Homosapien teams up with Dan the Automator and Kid Koala in Deltron 3030.

Poodles and foreign policy

MIDGET HANDJOB
Midnight Snack Break at the Poodle Factory
Epitaph

NOAM CHOMSKY
Case Studies in Hypocrisy: U.S Human Rights Policy
Alternative Tentacles

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

Spoken word. A genre many, often correctly, feel should not be committed to compact disc, but rather left for books or a live setting. However, some spoken word artists have a charisma that just wouldn't be done justice on the page, and not everyone has the luxury of attending a big ol' University where cool people come and speak all of the time. For those unlucky souls, we can thank the kind folks at Epitaph and Alternative Tentacles for distributing some fine spoken word on disc. One may wonder why a respected foreign policy scholar and linguistic genius such as Noam Chomsky is being reviewed in the same space as a release that showcases the collected ramblings of a man who talks about drunk cats and used to be in a band called The Circle Jerks. To that singular person whom actually reads my writing and is inspired to think from it, I say, why not?

Midget Handjob is a collective consisting of former Black Flag/The Circle Jerks singer Keith Morris providing vocals and lyrics, backed by a hefty fist of musical talent like Jon Wahl and Chris Bagarozzi of Clawhammer, Brandon Ida and Kevin Fitzgerald, Jean LeBear Habermann, Tony Malone, Petra Haden, and Tom Grimley. The name of the game here is essentially Morris spewing frenetic statements about social issues heavily or not so heavily disguised in humorous metaphors and similes while the band does their wacky jazz in the background. The more one listens to their debut Midnight Snack Break at the Poodle Factory, the more one finds that the seemingly (and often) unrelated music does at times gel with or explain Morris' rant, although putting too much brainpower into comprehending Midget Handjob is time better spent appreciating the obvious focal point of their humor. Morris is simply a very engaging spoken word artist, and the unflinching sincerity in which he delivers the most ridiculous of lines is quite endearing. On "Black Christmas Tree" the listener has the distinct pleasure of hearing the line "now I've got a dead animal attached to a bucket for my constitution polyester midgets throw empty adult beverage containers against my skull" recited as though no clearer or more truthful statement has ever been made. Which may be the case. I just hope I can comprehend it in my lifetime.

Epitaph has done a good service by releasing Midget Handjob, adding some diversity to an already strong punk canon, like Alternative Tentacles has been doing for years. This is about as leftfield as it gets, maybe even too off the wall for those who pride themselves as connoisseurs of the weird, but there is merit and a laugh to be found in this release.

Case Studies in Hypocrisy: U.S. Human Rights Policy, the ultimate party record, is a spoken word two disc set, the first dealing with U.S. foreign policy in theory and in practice, and the second a look into United States policy in Iraq. Make no mistakes from a musical standpoint: this release is informational and educational with no attempt to produce anything other than a crisp recording of two live lectures. Nor is any addition needed since, unlike Chomsky's writings, in a live setting or recording one gets the true experience of his genius, his straightforward and understandable report of vastly complicated issues. There are no long pauses or searching for specific data; Chomsky really does seem to know every last detail. Similar to his writings, one feels ten times smarter after listening to him and is eager to make an individual difference, and the recordings help illustrate his honesty and subtle humor.

Disc one, entitled "U.S. Human Rights Policy: Rhetoric and Practice," is a look back at the past fifty years following the signing of the largely unknown and poorly reported Bretton Woods treaty. More specifically, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights section of that treaty, and the scant media coverage of the Declaration comes as no surprise in light of the fact that the United States has continually violated numerous facets of that treaty. U.S. prison conditions, unsanctioned aggression towards other countries, and controversy surrounding the "right of return" are among the many U.S. violations of the Universal Declaration, and if you've ever wondered why some foreign countries don't fall head over heels in love with America, this should help to clear things up. Media suppression of such issues is discussed, and as always, Chomsky presents a glimmer of hope as he details "the great beast," namely popular opinion and social activism, and the various victories people have won for democracy when they get together and do something.

COURTESY OF EPITAPH RECORDS

Midget Handjob features former Circle Jerk Keith Morris and his treatise on drunken cats.

Disc two "U.S. Iraq policy: Motives and Consequences?" takes a hard look at the amazing hypocrisy of the United States towards Iraq in the early 90's during the Gulf War. Again the media is often no help at all in reporting the U.S. manipulation of the issues, which include ignoring a journalistic find only to use it as evidence later, condemning an invasion that was almost a mirror image of a recent U.S. one, and the ridiculousness of the reasons given for Middle Eastern aggression. Perhaps the two most striking moments on this disc are the media's (at time of recording) lack of coverage of a war crime trial being brought against Clinton and Secretary of State Madeline Albright's cold statement that the death of 500,000 Iraqi children "was worth it" for political leverage to be used against Saddam Hussein.

As you listen to these releases, bask in your social deviance and reflect upon the relevancy of works such as these around election time. Neither of the two candidates has surrounded themselves with people that would welcome the unrestricted exchange of a CD with a poodle penis on the cover or one that calmly recites U.S. foreign policy atrocities. Lieberman, McCain, Cheney, TIPPER. You won't catch these hepcats at a Midget Handjob tour date, nor do they love to talk about a man who airs their dirty laundry. Be sure to keep these ideas in mind when making an informed decision on Nov. 7.

Noho's Calvin hosts magnificent Incident with String Cheese

TRING CHEESE INCIDENT
Calvin Theatre
October 29, 2000

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

The cliché "a band on the rise" is used too frequently and in most cases incorrectly within the music industry. With that being said, I will go out on a limb and say that the String Cheese Incident (SCI) is without a doubt a band on the rise. There is a mammoth void in the jam band community and String Cheese is the band to fill it. Their growing popularity was quite evident Sunday night at the Calvin Theater in the heart of Northampton.

Upon arrival at the Calvin, I was shocked by the mob of people outside asking for extra tickets. Never have I been to a concert in Northampton when a ticket was in such high demand. The huge crowd both inside and outside the venue made me think of where this growing band can possibly play next time they come to the area. The highly anticipated show, one of many sell-outs of this tour, started at 8:30 p.m. to the delight of the packed house. The opening song "Got What He Wanted" got the crowd moving to the upbeat music.

The SCI have an extremely unique sound within the jam band scene. Due to the exclusion of an electric guitar they have a very toned down, non-distorted sound. They have a very full, robust sound that is complimented by their bluegrass, jazzy feel. String Cheese continued their first set with an old favorite "Out on the Road" before segueing into "Work" eventually hitting an instrumental of "Galactic."

COURTESY OF MELISSA SCHWARTZ

The String Cheese Incident played to a receptive Northampton crowd earlier this week.

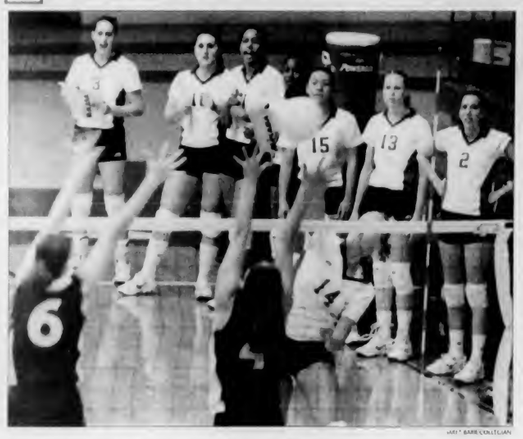
They ended the set with "Blackberry Blossom" which showed off their excellent tempo changing abilities.

The second set began with the Latin beat driven "Blue Bossa." The String Cheese Incident are so exciting to watch and listen to because they know each other so well that they can practically change tempos and styles effortlessly.

They are a complete soloing machine with violinist/mandolin player Michael Kang mesmerizing the crowd with his fast finger work and Bill Nershi jamming on the acoustic guitar. Keith Moseley on bass, Michael Travis holding the beat on the drums, and Kyle Hollingsworth on the keyboards. The second set continued seamlessly, highlighted by a breathtaking jam in "High on the Mountaintop."

The band returned to the stage for the encore and asked the crowd if they were ready for a square dance. They then began "Davs!" with its great country riffs and beat. The band thanked the crowd immensely and left the stage. Even to the surprise of the lighting director, the band was not ready to retire for the night. As the houselights came on the band returned to the stage and played a solid "Hey Pocky Way" before finally calling it a night.

I look back at this show and am simply amazed at the skill and showmanship of the String Cheese Incident. They put on one great show which I hoped would never end. They are most certainly soaring to great places with their ever-growing fan base including their fan club "The Friends of the Cheese."



The Massachusetts volleyball team watches Lauren Vander Veen (No. 14) make the play.

Season nears end; UMass in destiny's hands

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

This isn't a bad place to be for the Massachusetts women's volleyball team. This isn't the greatest place to be, either. UMass (11-12, 7-6 A-10) is standing outside the fire, looking in. The fire to speak of is the coveted Atlantic 10 tournament, a tournament that only invites the conference's top four teams of the regular season. To date, the Minutewomen stand as the fifth team, waiting for a break. This first weekend of November poses some monumental match-ups that may spin the A-10 standings in a number of directions.

UMass will have to bring its "A" game wherever the road takes them, from this weekend forward. The Maroon and White departed yesterday for Pittsburgh, PA, to take on Duquesne (14-12, 4-8 A-10), the team one spot below them in the standings. UMass defeated the Dukes almost a month ago in the Curry Hicks Cage, 3-1, but DU plays host this time with the hopes of putting a dagger in the post-season dreams of the Minutewomen. UMass will have to repeat the same dominant play it exhibited the last time it took the court with Duquesne to stay at the heels of Dayton, who holds the last tournament spot.

Senior Rebecca Hasson was the leading scorer for the home team, tallying 23 kills, while showcasing her strong defensive abilities with seven digs. Sophomore Clare Baster and junior Lymarie Llovet also posed defensive problems for the Dukes, combing for 27 kills.

Dayton (16-9, 8-5) is coming off a tough loss to the No. 1 team in the A-10, Xavier. The Musketeers swept the Flyers last weekend, and the schedule for Dayton poses another tough match-up on Saturday. The Flyers head to the Nation's Capital to battle the No. 2 team in the conference, George Washington. The Colonials swept UMass last weekend, and are coming into the Dayton game off of a heartbreaking five set loss to Xavier.

Luckily for the Minutewomen, the Flyers lost to GW in four games a month ago. But the Colonials didn't dominate any of the games, and the Flyers come into the match knowing that a loss combined with a UMass win would put both teams in a tie for the last tourney spot. The Colonials, barring any catastrophes, are guaranteed a spot in the post-season, and won't be taking the court with the same killer attitude that Dayton will be bringing.

The Minutewomen will be praying for GW, the team that swept them last weekend, to put the Flyers down. The twisted A-10 schedule has made things interesting, to say the least, in this last month of competition.

Last Friday, Fordham visited the Pioneer Valley to take on the Maroon and White in the Curry Hicks Cage, but the Minutewomen must have had better things to do. UMass booted the Rams out of the Valley as quickly as it could, dismissing the visitors in three straight matches. Captains Hasson and Llovet combined for 23 kills while sophomore star Ien Davis threw down nine kills of her own.

Saturday night brought a reversal of fortune for the Maroon and White. GW made the hike up to Western Mass to show the local volleyball fans why it is the No. 1 team in the conference, and the result was the same as the first UM/GW match-up, a 3-0 Colonial sweep. Hasson was held to only nine kills, and although junior Janeen Demartie was able to snag 12 digs to lead the defense, the offensive couldn't produce enough points.

Sometimes, as the old cliche goes, it's better to be lucky than good. UMass will need to be both this weekend to move up in the standings, but it will have to take care of its own business before it worries about anything else. With a little help from GW and a strong win on Friday night, it may find itself inside the post-season fire by Sunday morning.

Two to fight region

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

After completing its regular season, the Massachusetts men's tennis team travels to Blacksburg, Va., the site of this year's I-A regional tennis championships.

The Minutemen finished the regular season with a 6-1 record. The bid for an undefeated fall campaign was spoiled by a 5-2 loss at the hands of UConn.

The four-day regional event represents the last action the Minutemen will see until February.

UMass sends two players into the tournament. Brent Davis and Steve Prisco, who will fill two singles spots as well the only Maroon and White doubles team.

Davis, a freshman, was defeated on Thursday in a tight match against UMBC's Eric Sudo. Sudo took the match in straight sets, winning 6-4, 7-5.

He was nervous, the moment got "to [him]," said Coach Judy Dixon of the match. Dixon also added that, "He's such a freshman," so the experience gained may prove valuable in the upcoming years.

Prisco fared better than his doubles partner as the junior advanced to the second round with a straight set victory. The Dedham, MA native defeated Penn State's Matt Frakes 6-3, 6-4 in first round singles action.

Prisco now moves on to the next round where he will face the No. 1 seed in the 128-man field. The junior will take on Cornell University's Mike Halperin today, as he attempts to be the first blemish on Halperin's record this fall. Prisco himself came into the tournament with two straight losses and a 5-2 record. He seems to have recovered from his recent slide with the win on Thursday, but facing the top seed is another task entirely.

Davis and Prisco teamed together last night as UMass' only doubles team. The results were in too late to report as the Maroon and White teamed faced Navy's Zafar Elsher and Chris McGrath. If Davis and Prisco emerge victorious than they will face the doubles team from St. Johns. The Red Storm has paired together No. 16 seed Erik Scharf and Jake Maxwell. UMass should be very familiar with one half of the SJU team.

In the Minuteman win over St. John's earlier in the season, Prisco and Davis defeated Erik and his brother Brian Scharf. This time however, Jake Maxwell steps into the spot vacated by Brian.

Coach Dixon believes that, "If we beat St. Johns we'll get a sectional ranking." A sectional ranking would be a tremendous victory for the UMass netters as the program continues to take steps towards regional and national success.

UMass wants to dance

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

A mere two wins separate the Massachusetts women's soccer team from a 16th NCAA tournament appearance.

All that the Minutewomen need to do to reach that goal is win the Atlantic 10 tournament this weekend in Cincinnati. UMass faces host Xavier tonight at 8 p.m. at Corcoran Field in the semifinals. The winner of that game will then go on to face the winner of the Dayton/Rhode Island game on Sunday at noon for the right to advance to the NCAA's.

The Minutewomen, who earned the number three seat in the affair, enter the weekend with a record of 11-6-1. They have gone 8-2-1 in their last 11 games.

UMass will make the trip to Ohio for the second time this season today. Two weeks ago, a depleted squad managed an overtime loss and a tie against Dayton and Xavier, respectively. However, with a healthier club this time around, the Minutewomen have their sights set on the conference title.

"We've had two great training sessions this week," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "Over the past two weeks, the players have really responded to the training sessions and what I have presented. You've got to feel good about our chances."

Senior captain Annette Gruber, who tallied 25 points during the regular season, leads Xavier. However, she was held in check by UMass defender Michelle Tuttati in the first game between the two teams.

However, one thing that UMass will have to deal with is the Musketeers throw-in dominated offensive attack. The Minutewomen will need to keep the ball between the lines in order to limit any scoring chances for the home team.

"How we deal with the throw-ins is a big thing," Rudy said. "And offensively, last time we got the ball and went one pass and out. We need to get in around their box with regularity. We don't have a lot of room for error."

In the first game between the two teams this season, the poor field conditions at Corcoran Field affected the play of the game. However, Xavier officials noted that the field would be in quality playing shape for this weekend's tournament.

Overall, the fact that the Minutewomen are returning to Ohio for a second time this season should also prove to be beneficial. And, just in case UMass needs any extra motivation, it only needs to remember that the Musketeers eliminated it from the A-10 tournament a season ago when it was held here in Amherst.

"We've already been there once, so we know the routine," Rudy said. "I like to think that it's going to help. When I made up the itinerary, I did not put together a Saturday and Sunday schedule for fusing."

Top players for the Minutewomen include junior forward Brooke Bartlett, who leads the team with 21 points. Seniors Kara Green and Kara Ciocca are also offensive threats. The goal-keeping tandem of junior Julie Podhrasky and freshman Kelly Nigh have also played well when called upon between the pipes.

But all in all, UMass seems ready to go in its quest for the A-10 championship and a NCAA berth.

"Right now, we're on top of our game," freshman forward Erin Lilly said. "This is the time that we need to be there. We've finally pulled it all together."

D.P. Dough
Delivers Calzones
256-1616
4 for $17.00
Save $3.00 on 4 Zones
3 for $13.00
Save $2.00 on 3 Zones
2 FREE Cokes
w/purchase of 2 Calzones
One Coupon / 4 Zones
With this coupon • Exp 5/23/01
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616

PLAYSTATION 2'S FOR SALE
Available Now! $600 each
Sealed in Box with Receipt and additional 2 year warranty
Contact me @
Playstation24U@yahoo.com

It's Sweater Time.
ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

Collegian Sports: We don't punt.

Thai Corner
Best Thai Food Around
Serving Lunch & Dinner
Order your party food through us!
31 Boltwood Walk
Amherst, MA 413-253-1639
Mon-Sat 11:30-3 &5-9 Fri&Sat till 10• Sun 5-9

LISTEN TO UMASS FOOTBALL ON WMUA.
SATURDAY @ 11:30.
Matt Brady - Play
Matt DeNoble - Color

radical christian worship
real teaching, real praise for real life
Agape Community Church
47 East Street, Hadley
10-noon ~ Sundays
413-253-7073 • www.arcchurch.org/agape

Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?
Consider a career in Clinical Social Work . . .
Join us for an information session and the Smith College Summer Program in Social Work
INFORMATION DAY
Thursday, November 9, 2000
4:30 p.m. - 6:30 p.m.
See Jr. Hall - Room 106
Smith College
For more information call (413) 585-7960

Mabands
26th Annual MUSICAL EXTRAVAGANZA in the Fine Arts Center
Presented by: Department of DANCE Music & UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST 545-2227
Jazz, Percussion, Wind Music & Modern Dance
FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 3RD
8 PM · FINE ARTS CENTER CONCERT HALL
Featuring:
Jazz, Wind & Percussion Ensembles, Dancers, & Minuteman Marching Band
Tickets:
• $18 General Public • $13 UMass & Other College Students, elders & children under 18
Order tickets early. Last year's performance was sold out!
Tickets available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office
(413) 545-2511
Multiband Pepsi is Co-sponsored by:
Advocate Alumni Association WFCR 88.5 WHMP 1400 22 WWLP

NFL Week 10 (Note: Picks are for entertainment purposes only)	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkonson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
Last Week	(Overall)	9-5-0 (56-53-4)	8-6-0 (58-51-4)	7-7-0 (59-50-4)	10-4-0(56-53-4)	7-7-0 (53-56-4)
Buffalo @ New England	New England by 2	New England	Buffalo	New England	Buffalo	Buffalo
Tampa Bay @ Atlanta	Tampa Bay by 7	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay
Baltimore @ Cincinnati	Baltimore by 6	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore
Dallas @ Philadelphia	Philadelphia by 3	Philadelphia	Dallas	Dallas	Philadelphia	Philadelphia
Indianapolis @ Chicago	Indianapolis by 7	Indianapolis	Chicago	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Indianapolis
NY Giants @ Cleveland	NY Giants by 10	Cleveland	NY Giants	NY Giants	NY Giants	Cleveland
Pittsburgh @ Tennessee	Tennessee by 7 1/2	Tennessee	Pittsburgh	Tennessee	Pittsburgh	Tennessee
San Francisco @ New Orleans	New Orleans by 5 1/2	New Orleans	New Orleans	San Francisco	New Orleans	San Francisco
Miami @ Detroit	Detroit by 2	Detroit	Miami	Miami	Detroit	Miami
Washington @ Arizona	Washington by 9 1/2	Arizona	Washington	Washington	Washington	Washington
Kansas City @ Oakland	Oakland by 3 1/2	Kansas City	Oakland	Kansas City	Kansas City	Oakland
Denver @ NY Jets	NY Jets by 3	NY Jets	Denver	Denver	NY Jets	NY Jets
San Diego @ Seattle	Seattle by 5	Seattle	San Diego	San Diego	Seattle	Seattle
Carolina @ St. Louis	St. Louis by 14	Carolina	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis
Minnesota @ Green Bay	Minnesota by 3 1/2	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota	Green Bay

TRASH TALK

If only Oakland had covered. If only. I would have tied the best week in Collegian football picks history. As it is though, my blazing 10-4 record easily won the week, which means for the second time in three weeks I'm talking the trash.

So, here's to all you false prophets who lost to someone who has yet to watch a complete NFL game this season.

Here's to Sam Wilkinson, the man who threw more interceptions in one game of touch football than Frank Reich threw in his entire career. The man whose interception total actually exceeded George W. Bush's IQ. And you know what? Bush is still going to win the election come next Tuesday. Sam Wilkinson, the man who has picked Cincinnati to win every single week, until they played Cleveland last week. A choice that proved to be not so good. Sam Wilkinson, the man who is single-handedly keeping the Hadley Chill's open by his undying and completely ludicrous devotion to their half-price appetizers. I hate to tell you this dude, but much like K-Mart, "Half-price apps. suck."

Here's to Bryan Smith, the man who, thanks to an honestly dumb mistake by this fine institution, might actually have to come back next semester. The man who, thanks to personal indifference, let somebody in graphics make his picks last week. Dude, you're a night editor. You know how graphics works. What were you thinking? The man who single handedly keeps Maxim in business thanks to his undying...well you get the point. How can you not have the one with the "Women of the WB" inside? Two words: Katie Holmes.

Here's to David Rose, the man who apparently has some sort of DirecTV hook-up and NFL Ticket programming, which he likely pays out the ass for, yet still finds himself in dead last place. The man who has the absolute easiest job down here, because he just sits down and rants for about 100 lines on whatever he feels like. Then after spreading his wealth of knowledge and general rightness about the wide world of sports, still finds himself in dead last place.

Here's to Adam White, the man whose very name makes my life a living hell down here. The man whose existence and whose refusal to be known simply as "White" make me constantly repeat monotonous phrases like "Adam Adam or Adam Me" and "Sports Adam or News Adam." Adam White, the man who should really be covering former UMass alumni, Kenneth Appell's social security talk tomorrow because it's going to affect him first.

So, here's to you, boys. Another losing effort on your parts and I couldn't be happier about it.

This week's locks of the week: Buffalo getting two from the pathetic Patsies, Philadelphia giving three and Baltimore giving six to the Bengals.

-Adam Martignetti

UMass sends two youngsters to Virginia for regionals

By Glen Straub
Collegian Correspondent

Youth is usually inextricably linked with inexperience. However, for the Massachusetts women's tennis team it is quite the opposite.

This weekend the Minutewomen will send freshmen Francesca Mancini (Milan, Italy) and Iafra Depontes (Kaliua-Kona, Hawaii) to Williamsburg, VA to compete in the NCAA regional championships at the College of William & Mary.

Mancini is going as the top singles player and Depontes will be her doubles teammate.

The tandem will play representatives from schools of Virginia Tech, Virginia Commonwealth, Virginia, all of the Ivy-league schools and number one ranked William & Mary.

Although the two are both first-year collegiate players, Coach Judy Dixon feels that they give UMass the best chance to be victorious.

"Normally, I would not send two freshmen to an event like this, but I just love how these two have played together," she said. "The young players have carried the older players all season long so they deserve a chance to compete."

Mancini, who has been a dominating force all year long, finished off the fall season with an 11-0 singles record – an amazing feat for a freshman.

According to Dixon, with a good showing this weekend, she can get regionally ranked a first for a UMass women's player.

"I am so excited," Mancini said. "I do not know my opponents and they do not know me, so we are all at the same level.

"All I know is William & Mary is going to be tough," she added.

The 19-year-old Mancini not only is undefeated in singles play, but when she is teamed up with her roommate, Depontes, they are unbeaten as well.

"They are so compatible," Dixon said of her dynamic duo. "Iafra is a great ball-striker and Francesca is our best player so they complement each other tremendously."

"Maybe because we are around each other all the time we are able to play well on the court as a team," Mancini said.

Depontes was the number one ranked player in Hawaii and Mancini competed many a times in the Italian junior championships, so coach Dixon is not worried about sending two young players to the tournament.

"The girls showed all season that they can contend with the top players in the nation," she said. " I expect them to do real well."

With a good showing in Virginia, the women's tennis team will put a cap on the fall season, which saw them go 6-1 in dual-match play.

Do or Die

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

Hot on the heels of an impressive third-place performance last weekend at the ECAC Championships at Princeton, the Massachusetts men's water polo team returns to post season play this weekend at the CWPA North Division Playoffs. The Minutemen finished the regular season third in the CWPA North with an 8-2 record, earning one of the three top seeds.

No. 13 UMass starts things off on Friday night in Cambridge against the United States Merchant Marine Academy. This will be the second meeting between the two teams this season, with the Minutemen coming out on top 15-11 back on Oct. 7. Junior Adam Moore, the team's second leading scorer, notched four goals and added four assists on the day, while freshman goalie Rodrigo Gonzalez, making a rare start in the UMass net, had 10 saves.

The Merchant Marines finished the regular season with a 1-9 record in the conference with their only win coming back on that same October night. Despite their poor showing in the league, the Mariners set a school record for wins this season with eight. If the Mariners are looking to add to that win total then they will need big games from sophomores Cori Gustafson and Paul Kim.

The Minutemen head back to the pool on Saturday afternoon to take on either the Fordham Rams or tournament hosts Harvard depending on the result of their earlier game. The Maroon and White met the Crimson three times this season with the Minutemen coming out victorious on all three occasions. UMass outscored No. 20 Harvard 37-19 in its three previous meetings with junior co-captain and goalie I.R. Vanderwall leading the way with 31 saves and a 6.33 goals against average. At the other end of the pool Moore once again led the way with seven goals while junior Mike Foley turned in his best performance of the season by scoring six goals back on Sept. 23.

"That is going to be a good game," sophomore Justin Houck said. "They've played us close a couple times and with their home crowd behind them anything can happen. As long as we play our game though I think we'll come out on top."

If the Minutemen don't get Harvard on Saturday than they will take on Fordham. These two met just two weeks ago at Amherst College with the Minutemen cruising to a 24-10 win. Three of the season-high 24 goals came from junior Carlos Ramos. Ramos led the Minutemen this season in goals and points with 51 and 81, respectively.

On Sunday the Minutemen face the possibility of meeting the only two teams to defeat them in league play this season, St. Francis and Queens College, both of whom won here in Amherst late last month.

"Of course we want to beat them," said Houck. "They beat us before and now it's our turn for a little revenge. We know how to play them and hopefully this time we can come out on top."

History beckons Minutemen

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

The upcoming weekend means parties to most, laundry for some and homework for others. For the Massachusetts men's soccer team, it is the opportunity to enter school history.

The Minutemen will compete in the Atlantic 10 tournament, beginning tomorrow evening at 7:30 p.m. in Kingston, R.I. Championship play is not an unfamiliar situation for UMass as it is its second appearance in the tournament in as many seasons.

However, since the soccer program was established at the University, the Maroon and White have never captured the A-10 title, and will have its work cut out for them with this year's field of competition.

Joining the Minutemen in post-season play are the University of Rhode Island, Dayton University, and George Washington University.

Dayton and UMass enter the tournament as regular season co-champions drawing tournament positions one and two, respectively. Dayton finished its season with a record of 14-3-1, 8-1-1 in A-10 while the Minutemen concluded theirs with a 12-5-2, 8-1-1 showing. URI, 13-5-1, 8-2-0 comes in the third position as the Colonials, 9-5-3, 6-3-1, round out the group as the fourth seed.

Amongst the teams competing in this year's tournament, the Minutemen defeated both URI and the Colonials during the regular season, but dropped their game with Dayton 3 to 1.

"It is a nice accomplishment for the season," said coach Sam Koch when asked about making the Atlantic 10 tournament. "It shows what they have done, but again it is unfortunate that you have to say what they have done, which does not mean anything today because now it is the Atlantic 10 tournament."

UMass will face off against the Rams on Friday in a semi-final game to determine who will line up across from the winner of the Flyers-GW match in the championship. The Minutemen have an extensive history with URI and it is almost apropos that the two see each other in tournament play.

"It's crunch time and great challenge to see what we are made of," said Koch. "We are not going to surprise Rohde Island and they certainly have in the back of their minds that we beat them at their place the last time we played them."

In its last two trips to the post season, the Maroon and White have been eliminated from the Atlantic 10 tournament both times by URI. It was only earlier this season that the Minutemen, in a 1-0 overtime victory, won their first game against the Rams since 1997. In the game senior Seth Lilburn scored the game ending goal five minutes into overtime snapping an 18 game home winning streak for URI.

"They are certainly the best team on our schedule," said Koch. "We are not going to surprise Rohde Island and they definitely have in the back of their minds that we beat them at their place the last time we played them. They are definitely going to come out focused and will be ready to kick the daylights out of us."

Leading the charge for the Rams on Friday are their offensive weapons Nicholas McCreath and Steven Demoura. McCreath has scored 15 goals and delivered six assists this season while Demoura has netted six goals with four assists. The duo has been the deciding factors in many games, scoring eight game winning goals between them.

"They have great individual talent," said Koch. "I think as a team we can nullify that and as a team we can beat them. They are not untouchable like they were the year before."

Hoping to prove this statement true the Minutemen, who have won seven out of their last 10 games, will enter their match Friday with a team that has posted very impressive numbers this season.

Turning away the shots of the URI offense will be junior goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn. O'Quinn has been a dominant force in net for UMass playing every minute of every game for the Minutemen. Recording seven shutouts this season, O'Quinn led the A-10 with a .66 goals against average for the conference and was second with a .86 goals against average for the season.

On the other end of the field for the Minutemen, sophomores Jeff Deren and Yuri Morales have given UMass much of its offense this season. Deren has scored eight goals, five of which resulted in Maroon and White victories while Morales has found the back of the net only twice, but has five assists to his credit. Not to be out done, junior Fred Kinateder and freshman Obie Gravely have also come through for the Massachusetts offense. Kinateder has netted four goals with an assist, as Gravely has also delivered four goals and was awarded Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week last Monday.

Whether the Minutemen will be able surpass Rhode Island and play for their first Atlantic 10 championship remains to be seen, but what is certain is that the Maroon and White will be a dangerous threat to any team in the tournament.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

John Lytton and the Massachusetts men's soccer team have the NCAA tournament in their sights.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Indoor Soccer League Teams and individuals welcomed. Begins Nov 6th. Call Jesse at Breakaway Sports 549-3638 between 1pm-6pm email golus@hotmail.com

OFFcampus Antics Find Ruth balancing a book on her head on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

U-MASS WOMEN'S CREW WANTS YOU! Come see why we want little people. 549-4038 ask for Sara

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Colonial Vlg Apt open in Jan. 2Brd, hot water incld: $600/month. Call 256-1232 for more info

AUTO FOR SALE

94 Cavalier 131k ABS, AC, PS, PW, PD, work car. $1650 Call Steve 256-3256

1995 Saturn SL2 AC, power, sunroof, ABS, traction. $5000 537-0517

EMPLOYMENT

Voice Talent Needed Internet/Radio start-up seeks fun + energetic person to be our VOICE!!! Radio/acting experience + interesting accent "particularly Jamican, W Indian" a plus. Call 617-598-1030 ext. 1230 for more information.

Be your own boss this summer. Learn how to run a small business. Make more money than your peers. Call Steve 290-7161 leave message.

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

Work From Home - $1200 to $5000 pt/ft 1-800-716-3528

Hippodrome auditioning dancers to perform coreographed routines on a weekly basis at brandnew entertainment company in Springfield. 413-246-2275 www.hdrome.com

EMPLOYMENT

NURSING STUDENTS: Pick up some home care experience and earn some extra cash. Work as an Aide for our patients in the Amherst/Northampton area. Various days and hours available. Call today. Interim HealthCare, 586-7365

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 9, 2000 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office for the Spring, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact Student Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Attention! Work form home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FOR SALE

Beerpong Tables Make Great Gifts. Get that special someone a special table. 549-5950 ask for chad. You're curious, so call us. We're the beerpong table guys

LOST & FOUND

REWARD-Lost watch. Lost watch and sweatshirt on Mullins Center tennis courts last Thurs. 10/26 Please call if found. 413-527-2625 craig@student.umass.edu

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

3 girls need roommate for Spring in Brandywine $228/mo. Call Nadiah 549-4907

Looking for 1-2 females to share 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Massage in you own home! $15 per hour message student Michael 585-8577

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Montreal College Party Weekends Nov. 24 + Dec. 30. From $119. Includes round trip motorcoach. 3 days 2 nights Hotel Downtown full Breakfast + Dinner. Departs Boston, Springfield, + Hartford. Call 1-617-567-0062 Global Tours

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

TRAVEL

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

What are you waiting for??

The RIGHT time is NOW!!

Call 545-3500

Advertise!

Your AD could be right here!!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 3, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Gale 30th-Wall Street Week		Nova "Holocaust on Trial" ⓒ
WFSB	3	News ⓒ	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Fugitive (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		CSI: Crime Scene Investigtn.		Nash Bridges "Manhunt" (N) ⓒ	News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WBZ	4	News ⓒ	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Fugitive (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		CSI: Crime Scene Investigtn.		Nash Bridges "Manhunt" (N) ⓒ	News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WCVB	5	News ⓒ	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⓒ	Two Guys-Girl Trouble With		Norm (N) ⓒ	Medigan Men	20/20 (N) ⓒ	News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WLVI	56		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Nanny ⓒ		Sabrina-Witch	Grosse Pointe	Popular (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 2)	News ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ		Providence "The Good Doctor"		Dateline (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ	Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	18 Heaven (In Stereo) ⓒ			Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial		Freedom "The Chase" (N) ⓒ		Level 9 "DefCon" (In Stereo) ⓒ	News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	30		18 News	NBC News	Extra (N) ⓒ	Hollywood		Providence "The Good Doctor"		Dateline (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ	Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61		11 Simpsons ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Friends ⓒ		Police Videos (In Stereo) (PA).		Freaklylinks (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ	News	Friends ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ
WWLP	22		22 News ⓒ	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ		Providence "The Good Doctor"		Dateline (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ	Law & Order: Special Victims	News ⓒ	Tonight Show
WGBY	57		6 BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ			Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	Manor Born	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⓒ
WGGB	40		26 News ⓒ	ABC News		Frasier ⓒ		Two Guys-Girl Trouble With		Norm (N) ⓒ	Medigan Men	20/20 (N) ⓒ	News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WSBK	38		Judge Judy ⓒ	Judge Judy ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ		Freedom "The Chase" (N) ⓒ		Level 9 "DefCon" (In Stereo) ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Mad Abt. You	Spin City ⓒ	Spin City ⓒ
WTBS	72		Roseanne ⓒ	Roseanne ⓒ	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince		★★★ "The American President" (1995, Comedy-Drama) Michael Douglas, Annette Bening.						★★½ "Basic Instinct" (1992)
A&E	41		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Guardian" ⓒ			Biography "John Forsythe" ⓒ		Poirot "The Veiled Lady" ⓒ	Investigative Reports ⓒ		Law & Order	Blood Is Thicker
CNN	42	23	Worldview ⓒ	Moneyline Newshour (N) ⓒ		Crossfire ⓒ		World Today ⓒ		Larry King Live ⓒ	Newsstand ⓒ		Sports	Moneyline ⓒ
COM	43	39	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Daily Show ⓒ	Stein's Money		Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Toothbrush	Whose Line?	Behind	N.Y. Friars-Rob Reiner	Friars Club
DISC	49		Wild Discovery "Swarms"		Wild Discovery: Frogs			On the Inside: Salvage		News	Explore Our	Storm Warning!		Justice Files
ESPN	51		Sportscenter ⓒ		Sportscentury: Greatest Coaches of the Century					MLB Players Choice Awards (Live)				Sportscenter ⓒ
LIFE	52		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Por			Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Silent Cradle" (1997) Lorraine Bracco, Margot Kidder. ⓒ				Once and Again (In Stereo) ⓒ
MTV	53		Real World ⓒ	Real World ⓒ	Real World ⓒ	Cribs		Choose or Lose: Votefest (N) (In Stereo)			MTV Video Music Awards (In Stereo)
NICK	55		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! ⓒ	Rugrats ⓒ		U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	45		Sliders "Dinosicle" (In Stereo)		Babylon 5 "The Long Dark"			Invisible Man "Impetus" ⓒ		★★½ "The Shadow" (1994, Adventure) Alec Baldwin. ⓒ			Invisible Man	"Impetus" ⓒ
TLC	79	28	Survivor Science "Snow"		Paramedics "The Night Shift"			Secret World of Las Vegas		Quest for Gold: Egypt (N)		Quest for Gold: California (N)	Secret World of Las Vegas
TNT	46		ER "Family Practice" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Crazy" (In Stereo)			★★★ "Primary Colors" (1998, Drama) John Travolta, Emma Thompson.					★★★ "Primary Colors" (1998)
USA	47		Walker, Texas Ranger ⓒ		JAG "Second Sight" (In Stereo)			Nash Bridges "Firestorm" ⓒ		★★ "Nemesis' Unauthorized" (1999, Biography) Randall Batinkoff. ⓒ		Strip Poker	Martin ⓒ
HBO	63		(4:30) ★½ "Pipeline" (1982) ⓒ		Inside the NFL (In Stereo) ⓒ			★½ "Blue Streak" (1999) Martin Lawrence. ⓒ		Legend		"The Substitute 4: Failure Is Not an Option" (2000)		Tmnt Williams
MAX	65		(5:00) ★½ "I'll Think Was You"		★ "Simon Sez" (1999) Dennis Rodman. PG-13 ⓒ			★½ "Universal Soldier: The Return" (1999) (R) ⓒ		★½ "Timecop" (1994, Science Fiction) (R) ⓒ				Bedtime
SHOW	65		★★½ "For Keeps" (1988, Drama) Molly Ringwald. PG-13 ⓒ					★★★ "Dick" (1999) Kirsten Dunst. PG-13 ⓒ		Exorcism		Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits "Decompression"	Beggars

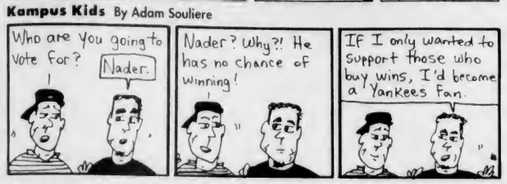
Dilbert By Scott Adams

I'VE ALWAYS BEEN AN INCURABLE ROMANTIC
DO YOU MIND IF I TAKE OFF MY SHOE? I'VE GOT SOME SORT OF FUNGUS THAT NEEDS AIR.
I'M CURED!
I LIKE TO SCRATCH IT ON THE TABLE LEG
OOPS IS THAT YOU?

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

KEN
I DON'T HAVE THOSE AD-VANTAGES. I DON'T HAVE NICKNAMES AFTER MY LAST NAME. HELL, I DON'T EVEN HAVE A LAST NAME. MUCH LESS A FANCY BRONZED ONE-LIKE GORE OR BUSH!
THAT WASN'T MY WORLD, JACK! I MEAN, I WOULD HAVE GIVEN ANYTHING TO HAVE ONE FAMILY MEAN-ING-JUST ONE-WHO WASN'T IN THE KLAN!
GOOD LORD! WHY HASN'T THIS STORY BEEN TOLD?
HE ONLY JUST MADE IT UP!

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere



Who are you going to vote For?
Nader.
Nader? Why?! He has no chance of winning!
IF I only wanted to support those who buy wins, I'd become a YanKees Fan.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

HEYYY. THERE'S THE LITTLE COWBOY. NO, WAIT. YOU'RE OUR LITTLE COWCAT! OR ARE YOU A DANGEROUS OUTCAST, YOU KNOW, A DESPERAWEIRDO!
NO, NO. HE'S A TUNA WRANGLER! AN ALBACOREBOY!
OH, HAR DEE HAR HAR. YOU BOYS ARE SO FUNNY I CAN'T STAND IT. OH NO, WOULD. IT'S YOU GUYS I CAN'T STAND.

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) [illegible] people around today like a tornado, messing their hair, banging doors in their vicinity and making people hate you. Oh, sorry, misread the horoscope for the bikers and lumberjacks.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) [illegible] want to go out on Friday? Uh, you're crazy, you've got endorphins to the brain clarified. Think about Saturday? Oh, you're dead, or you're home working? I'm sorry. Oh, what about Sunday? If you don't like me, I'm annoying? Ok.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) [illegible] that something that is long-lasting, yet unpredictable may, in fact, suddenly be upsetting today. Put your worries elsewhere? Worry about that itchy feeling in your crotch instead.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) [illegible] you to say to settle issues and feel more [illegible] that others give you the respect and [illegible] rewards you so richly deserve. You deserve so far, she sat on cushion and skittle popped out?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Some of the days this week were crap, this day will be even more crappy, and you'll realize that life, in fact, is pretty crap. Please, visit the BBC.com and get abroad. Discover how un-crappy other schools are.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You will want to [illegible] you live in Thatcher

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) The sign of Lion Restorin' You will be facing a number of problems that will demand the most from your rational side. It is essential that you remain calm and understanding. (i.e. Don't go on a murderous rampage and kill furry little animals, unless you live in Thatcher.)

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 60 LOW: 42	HIGH: 56 LOW: 34	HIGH: 51 LOW: 31

Robotman By Jim Meddick

SO DOES THIS CHANGE THINGS BETWEEN US?
NOT REALLY. I STILL PRETTY MUCH DESPISE YOU.
ISN'T THIS KINDA DYSFUNCTIONAL THEN? I MEAN, US, BEING TOGETHER LIKE THIS, BUT NOT REALLY CLOSE?
WELL, I GUESS WHEN YOU PUT IT THAT WAY
OH MAYBE I DON'T EXACTLY DESPISE YOU ANYMORE NOW. I JUST LOATHE YOU.
WELL, IN THAT CASE, D'YOU WANNA DO MAKE OUT SOME MORE?

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

I JUST DON'T UNDERSTAND THOSE NUM-BERS, HONEY. HOW COULD I BE AT 0% ?
CHAR-ACTER FLAWS? SIR
CHAR-ACTER FLAWS? WHAT DO YOU MEAN ?
WELL, THERE SEEM TO BE CONCERNS ABOUT YOUR LIFE STYLE
MY LIFESTYLE? WHAT ABOUT EVERYBODY HERE GETTING A MASSIVE DOSE OF ALCOHOL ABUSE AND COCAINE ?
WELL, SO DO YOU, SIR AND THEN SOME YEAH BUT AT LEAST I DON'T SCRUB LOUDLY!
GOOD POINT. THAT'S MORE PRES-IDENTIAL

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

UGGHH! FINALLY!
IT TOOK COOPING MYSELF HERE IN MY ROOM ALL NIGHT, BUT I FINISHED IT!
THE BOOK?
THE FIRST SENTENCE
I THINK SHAKESPEARE MAY BE MY NEW FAVORITE SUBJECT
OH, PHOOEY THAT'S A COMMA, NOT A PERIOD

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

Quote of the Day

"It's not like one vote makes a difference anyway."

-Jessica May reacting to her quote of the day yesterday

"Be the change you want to see in the world."
-Gandhi

ACROSS
1 Montana city
6 High
10 Bamboozle
13 From Japan
14 Yves' girlfriend
15 Extinct bird
16 Sugar cubes
17 Suspend
18 Caesar's fatal date
19 Three in Munich
20 Like some old clothing
22 Benefit
24 Reduce 28 Slot-machine site
31 Granular
32 Two pints
34 Spud st.
36 Winter Olympics event
37 Mooch
38 Lash darkener
41 Morse code signal
42 Earring's place
44 Litigate
45 "Tom Sawyer" author
47 Articles
49 Like better
51 Package
53 Auburn
56 Never-ending
59 Son of Aphrodite
61 Positive
64 Competes
65 Singer Bryant
66 Name in elevators
67 Ms. Brickell
68 Marathons and derbies
69 Surfer's spot
70 Morays
71 Shellfish

DOWN
1 Hartless
2 Seize the throne
3 Cook's aid
4 Kind of pudding
5 Nav. rank
6 South Pacific island
7 "___ Called Horse"
8 Dryer trap stuff
9 Aboveboard
10 Cape ___ cottage
11 Pindar product
12 Denials
15 Heavy duty engine
20 Views
21 Precious stone
23 Till the land
25 Riyadh resident
26 Basketball star Baylor
27 No, for Yeltsin
29 More agreeable
30 Harem room
32 Proportional share
33 Brown pigment
35 Like Dickens' dodger
37 Object on radar
39 Fife
40 Title with reverence
43 Trefoil and Trebek
46 McMillons store
48 Part of a tennis match
50 Rubs out
52 Quay
54 Novelist Jong
55 ___-pole
57 Use the bus
58 Astronaut Armstrong
60 Mouth off
61 Plant crops
62 Rocky Mountain tribe member
63 Leaf vein
65 Curve

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

O	L	G	A		M	E	T	E	R		D	A	B	S
W	I	L	T		E	V	A	D	E		E	V	I	L
E	M	I	T		W	E	D	G	E		C	O	K	E
D	E	B	A	T	E	S		E	L	B	O	W	E	D
			C	U	D			S	A	D
R	I	G	H	T		W	A	N		L	E	A	S	H
A	L	O	E		D	A	V	I	T	S		C	P	O
B	I	R	D	S	O	F	A	F	E	A	T	H	E	R
B	A	G		P	E	T	I	T	E		F	E	E	L
I	D	E	A	L		S	L	E		E	A	G	L	E
			N	I	B					A	A	H
N	O	N	S	T	O	P		C	A	B	O	O	S	E
A	B	O	W		R	O	T	O	R		U	L	N	A
R	I	M	E		A	L	A	M	O		S	E	A	R
D	E	E	R		X	E	N	O	S		E	G	G	S

11-20-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Shepherd's Pie

Fish Munchies (B,F,H)

Falafel Burgers (vegan)

Tofu Pot Pie (vegan) (B,W)

Dinner

Fried Scallops

Broccoli Stuffed Chicken

Cajun Lentil Stew (vegan)

Italian Tortellini Stir Fry (B)

California Chili (vegan) (W)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Kristi Ceccarossi
Photo Technician — Jarett Barr
Copy Editor — Bryan McAllister
Production Supervisor — Roberto Delgado
Production Staff — Elana Premack, Shimauli Dave

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Friday, November 3, 2000 | 12

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

One more step

Automatic bid goes to A-10 tourney champ

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team is right where they want to be. It finished the regular season with only three blemishes on its schedule and captured the Atlantic 10 regular season crown — a title that gives the Minutewomen the No. 1 seed going into the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Now here's where the Maroon and White don't want to be: smack down in front of a telephone waiting for that one fateful call that could either be the shocking conclusion to a victorious season or the pump of life to a wounded but worthy contender.

It's pretty simple. If UMass wins this weekend's A-10 tourney, its automatically skipping down the NCAA's yellow brick road. If not, the jubilee will be delayed. And Head Coach Patty Shea is quite aware of this.

"It's really critical. We want to take the easiest way into [the NCAA Tournament] and that's winning the Atlantic 10 tournament. If we don't do that then it's in the hands of a selection committee, and it's out of our hands.

"I've seen it happen before (to UMass teams)," she continued. "You just don't get in and it's based on so many different factors. You just can't leave that objective decision out there."

The hosting Minutewomen will face fourth seeded West Chester University in the semi-final round on Saturday at 1 p.m. UMass beat the Rams at home last Friday, 2-0 thanks to goals by back Anke Bruemmer and forward Lindsay Abbot. Both scores were tallied on Joelle Maguire, the conference's second-best goaltender. The A-10's best net minder, Zowie Tucker, delivered a familiar shutout performance in that game, halting Kim Rochon, one of the best goal scorers in the conference.

"Kim is a great senior leader and goal scorer," Shea said. "We have to watch out for her."

The Maroon and White (5-0 A-10, 16-3 overall) won its final regular season game last Sunday, 4-0 over the Explorers of LaSalle (2-3, 9-10). The four-goal game in the midst of blizzard-like conditions was a certain confidence booster for the surging squad.

"The best time to peak is tournament time," Abbot said. "And we're focused."

Said forward Kristen Schmidt: "We have a lot of team unity. We're all working toward the same goal. We want to go to the Final Four and win the National Championship."

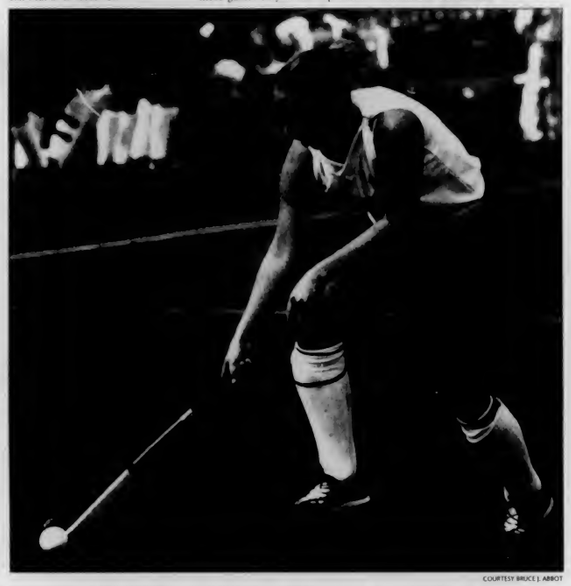
Coach Shea understands that her team's confidence level is at a peak right now, but she remains focused and her message to the team is pretty straightforward: "I tell them that the only team within our conference that can beat us is ourselves.

"We still have a lot of work cut out for us," she said. "And [the LaSalle game] was the only one within our conference that was a four-goal game. Most of the games were one-goal games and a lot of our games went into overtime. It's a lot closer than it has been before."

Twelve of UMass' battles this season were decided by one goal. In those games they wound up victorious ten times. The Minutewomen have won all six of their overtime games during the 2000 campaign.

In the other semi-final match on Saturday, No. 2 Temple (4-1, 9-10) will face No. 3 Rhode Island (3-2, 8-11) at 3 p.m.

Saturday's winners will play for an NCAA tourney bid on Sunday at 1 p.m. All games will be played at Richard F. Garber field.



COURTESY BRUCE J. ABBOT

The Massachusetts field hockey team is two wins away from the NCAA tournament. The Minutewomen face West Chester tomorrow at 1 p.m. at Garber field.

JUST BRING IT

UMass basketball

Minus Mack, Minutemen will take on Golden boys

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

With marquee scorer Monty Mack on the pine, there's a chance for one of his teammates to steal the show in tonight's exhibition hoop opener at home against the California Midwest All-Stars.

The Massachusetts basketball team will look to tri-captain Jonathan DePina to fill Mack's spot in the backcourt, bumping usual pointman Shannon Crooks to the 2-spot. Kit Rhymer, Winston Smith and newcomer Jackie Rogers round out the Maroon and White's probable starting five.

The All-Stars will counter with a handful of former college standouts, featuring Purdue grads Greg McQuay and Chad Austin. Willie Coleman (DePaul '99), Marc Mitchell (Wisconsin '93) and former Minnesota star Courtney James should also see playing time in tonight's matchup.

UMass coach Bruiser Flint will use tonight's action to size up a bumper crop of new faces on the Minutemen, and hopefully clear up some of the logjams that the team currently faces at certain positions.

"We addressed a lot of things with the guys we brought in this year," Flint said. "We needed some depth, and we have that now with all the new guys. I keep telling them that it's about winning; we've got a lot of guys, so some nights you're going to be out there, some nights you're not."

One spot where Flint appears to have an abundance of talent is the forward position. Despite the graduation of sparkplug Chris Kirkland, the team has brought in no less than four top-level prospects to fill the space around Rhymer in the pivot. Rogers appears to be the frontrunner for PT in the early goings, but Flint expects tremendous things out of his other young forwards as well.

"[Willie] Jenkins is the furthest along of all of them," said Flint, referring to the 6-foot-6 freshman from Tennessee. "The kid just flat-out works. Dana Dingle and Lou Roe were the hardest working guys we ever had here, and I group him in with them in terms of work ethic."

Flint has also had high praise for Eric Williams, a transfer from Syracuse who should give the UMass some much-needed help in the rebounding department.

The All-Stars will push the Minutemen for all they've got in the frontcourt, with the 6-foot-9 James providing their biggest paint presence. James enjoyed a brilliant (albeit abbreviated) career for the Golden Gophers before leaving to pursue a pro career. He led the team in rebounding both seasons he played, and put up eight double-doubles en route to honorable mention All-Big Ten honors in each campaign.

The Maroon and White backcourt should show some promise against the All-Stars, with Crooks' scoring ability becoming more dangerous from the shooting guard spot and the natural distributor DePina getting more chances to make plays. Tonight will also mark the first chance for much-touted tweener Jameel Pugh to showcase his acrobatics in a game situation.

The All-Stars will counter with backcourt ace Coleman, who put up solid averages of 11.3 points and 3.4 rebounds and a total of 52 steals in his senior season at DePaul. Swingman McQuay also has a history of turning heads on the hardwood, as he racked up solid averages (8.3 ppg, 5.5 rpg) and a team-high 41 blocked shots in his final year at Purdue.

Those formidable foes will give Flint a chance to see just how hard his troops will work on the defensive end of the court. According to the coach, that goes farther than anything in determining who runs and who sits.

"You know me; if you don't play D, you ain't getting on the floor," Flint said.

Tip-off is slated for 7 p.m.

Wildcats attempt to spoil homecoming party

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

The defense has been the strong suit all season for the Massachusetts football team. Coming off a disappointing performance in the wind at New Hampshire, the Minutemen will look to get back in the win column in their Homecoming game tomorrow at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

UMass (3-3, 3-2 Atlantic 10) had a three-game winning streak snapped at the hands of the Wildcats, but there is no rest for the weary as another batch of Wildcats invades Amherst.

Villanova (5-3, 3-2 A-10) has one of the most impressive offensive players in the country in tailback Brian Westbrook. The junior, who sat out the 1999 season with a torn anterior cruciate ligament, is having another stellar season.

Thus far, the Walter Payton Award candidate has posted 969 yards on 136 carries. He has scored 11 touchdowns on the ground. As if his A-10 leading rushing yards were not enough, he has also caught a team-high 36 passes for 385 yards.

In 1998 Westbrook became the only player in college football history to post at least 1,000 yards, both rushing and receiving.

"Westbrook is a tremendous football player," UMass Head Coach Mark Whipple said. "There is no question he is the best offensive player in the league. He can catch and run with the football, so we will have a lot of focus on him."

For his efforts this season, Westbrook has been named A-10 Player of the Week three times.

The Minutemen will also have to deal with redshirt freshman quarterback Scott Lukash. Lukash, who made his first collegiate start last week in Richmond, should get the nod over the still hobbled Brett Gordon. Gordon went down with a knee injury against UNH two weeks ago and in that same game Lukash led Villanova on a seven-play, 99-yard drive for the game-winning score.

"Lukash is a good quarterback and they have three solid receivers," Whipple said.

Last week the Maroon and White defense surrendered 436 yards on the ground to the A-10's worst rushing team. Junior tailback Stephan Lewis rushed the ball 35 times for 245 yards and two scores. Lewis also caught three passes for 28 yards and a touchdown.

The UMass defense will have to have a stronger effort than it did last week to stop a tough Villanova offense.

"If we played defense like we did last week than we will get blown out of town."

The Minutemen have yet to name a starter at quarterback for the Homecoming game. The past two weeks Richard Lucero has relieved Kelly Seibert in the second half to try and ignite the Maroon and White offense. The insertion of Lucero turned out to be beneficial against AIC as he led the UMass offense to three scoring drives in his two quarters of play and a win. The Phoenix, AZ native did not fare as well last week in his time at the helm, as he was unable to lead a Minuteman comeback.

UMass has had success in its Homecoming games going 7-1 over the last eight seasons with the lone loss coming last year against Hofstra. Villanova holds a slight 10-7 lead in the all-time series with the Minutemen. Last season the Maroon and White dropped a heartbreaker at Villanova. UMass had a chance to win the game on the final play, but a snap from center sailed over Todd Bankhead's head and the game was lost.

UMass last defeated the Wildcats in 1998 when the Minutemen earned a 36-26 victory. Villanova has won three of the last four meetings, but they have had their share of ineptitudes in Amherst with their last victory coming in 1978.

JARET BARRIE/COLLEGIAN

In tomorrow afternoon's match against Villanova, Marcel Shipp will hope to have a performance comparable to last week's 130 yard, one touchdown game versus New Hampshire.

UMass to face NE rivals

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

For the first time since the 1995-1996 season the Massachusetts Hockey team opened its Hockey East campaign with a win. The win came over Merrimack last Friday night at the Mullins Center.

But in a league as tough as Hockey East teams can ill-afford to bask in the glory of a single victory. The Minutemen realized just that as two nights later the Maroon and White were outplayed by No. 2 Boston College and fell on the losing end of a 9-5 defeat.

This weekend, UMass (1-4-1, 1-1 HE) will again be tested by a pair of Hockey East opponents. Tonight the Minutemen travel to Lowell to take on the cross-state rival River Hawks and have a home game tomorrow against No. 5 New Hampshire.

Last year the Maroon and White edged out Lowell (2-2, 0-2 HE) for the final playoff spot in the conference and the River Hawks will be looking to take advantage of home ice.

Lowell is led by defenseman Ron Hainsey. Hainsey, a first-round draft pick in the 2000 NHL Entry Draft, has posted four assists in the young season.

Kyle Kidney and Laurent Meunier pace the River Hawk offense. Both players have three goals and two assists.

Tomorrow an undefeated Wildcat squad will come into the Mullins Center. New Hampshire, after a tie in the season opener to then No. 1 North Dakota, has rattled off five consecutive wins. Of the wins one came against a Colgate squad that UMass tied in its home opener.

UNH (5-0-1, 1-0-0 HE) has also defeated Lowell in its most recent game. The win, a 4-3 decision, took place at the Whittimore Center, the home of the Wildcats.

UNH is paced by goaltender Ty Conklin. Conklin was named Hockey East Co-Player of the Year 1999-2000 and was also a finalist for the 2000 Hobey Baker Memorial Award. The senior was a first-team All-Hockey East selection. The captain ranked first in Hockey East in overall wins (22), minutes (2194:03), games played (37) and recorded 100 more saves (893) than the next Hockey East goaltender.

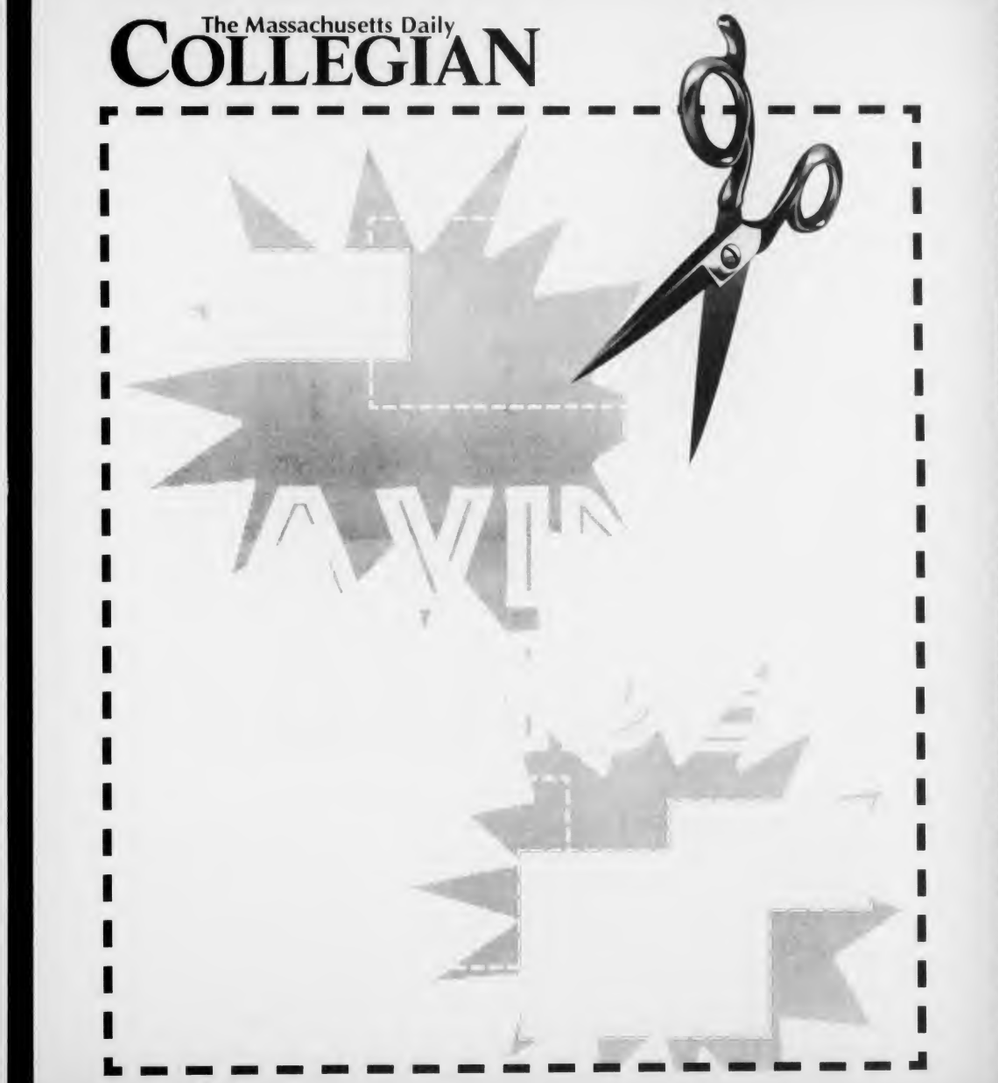
Aside from Conklin, UNH has one of the most potent scorers in Hockey East. Junior Darren Haydar was named Hockey East Player of the Month for October. In the month he posted five goals and six assists and ranks sixth in the conference in scoring. Haydar was also the 1998 Hockey East Rookie of the Year.

UMass has to take advantage of home ice within the conference, as every game is important to the final standings. Last year the Minutemen clinched a playoff birth with a 3-3 tie at the Whittimore Center.

Markus Helanen, who was removed from the BC game because of a hit that he took in the second period, stands to make at least one of the starts in this weekends games.

A bright spot for the Maroon and White has been the play of its fourth line. The line of Darcy King, Brad Nizwantowski and Kris Wallis scored four of UMass' five goals in the loss to the Eagles.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN



A VID

ANTHONY'S
#1 CLUB FOR ADULT ENTERTAINMENT
Bring a friend and you get in
(with this coupon)
A savings of up to $7!
(not valid for special events, expires 11/19/00)
500 New Ludlow Road South Hadley
CLUBline...413 538-3821
HOTline...423 538-6969
www.anthonys.net

BANANARAMA
Juice Bar
Healthy Smoothies & Fruit Drinks
• Amherst • 253-2774 • Northampton •
Open 7 Days
the smoothie of your choice
and
one free nutritional supplement
All smoothies are 24 oz. and include one supplement
Bananarama Juice Bar

PERSONAL TRAINING COUPON
- Achieve your fitness goals and
- We offer a fitness evaluation and five one-on-one personal training visits.
- Available to all students, faculty and staff (w/ current Body Shop memberships).

Coupon expires 11/30/00. Call 545-0324 for details

The Campus Body Shop
Totman, Rm. 8 MEGA COUPON 545-0324
- Good for One Free Trial ($4 value)
- Enter to win a free Spring Semester Membership when you stop in for free trial
- Buy a membership after visiting and take $10 off your membership

Coupon expires 12/1/00. Call for details. Limits apply.

CAMPUS COPY DOT
225 Campus Center • UMass • 545-0371
Normal Access Fee of $2.00 will be waived with this coupon. You pay only for your printed copies.
Coupon expires Dec. 31, 2000

on your next Fax at the

224 LINCOLN CAMPUS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
AMHERST, MA 01003

CAMPUS COPY DOT
225 Campus Center • UMass • 545-0371
Expires 12/31/00
Digital Copies in B/W or Color
Printing from disk; Scanning to disk; OCR
Volume & Plan Ahead Pricing Discounts

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN
Off your next Ad. Offer expires 5/16/2001
(cannot be combined with any other discount.)
www.dailycollegian.com
phone: 545-3500 113 Campus Center UMass Amherst, MA 01003 fax: 545-3699

Free Space Available
www.dailycollegian.com
On any half page or larger ad Offer expires 5/16/2001
(cannot be combined with any other discount.)
The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN
phone: 545-3500 113 Campus Center UMass Amherst, MA 01003 fax: 545-3699

15 Ales & Lagers On Tap
Brewery Tours Saturdays at 4:30
Nightly Brewers Bargain Menu
413-256-3276
138 Belchertown Road Amherst, MA
PATIO NOW OPEN

College Students!
Come to the historic Salem Cross Inn
The finest restaurant in Central New England!
Only 25 miles east of Amherst

Rte. 9 W. Brookfield
Call 508-867-2345 for reservations or visit www.salemcrossinn.com
Traditional New England Fare!
Bring this ad for a chance to win a Gift Certificate!

Win a Gift Certificate to the historic Salem Cross Inn!

Traditional New England fare.
Visit Salem Cross Inn and bring this ad with you to be entered into a drawing for a Gift Certificate! (You don't have to be present to win.)
COLLEGE STUDENTS, BRING YOUR PARENTS TO THIS UNIQUE AND BEAUTIFUL RESTAURANT!
Rte. 9 West Brookfield, MA email: salemxinn@aol.com
Call 508-867-2345 for information on any of our events or visit www.salemcrossinn.com
Fireplace Roasted Beef on Saturday Evenings! Don't miss it!

The Finest
silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY

starting under $20.00
Northampton
Amherst
888-729-8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com

SOUPerBOWL
• 10-12 Different soups daily Including chilis and stews
• Bread bowls
• Fresh bread
• All made fresh daily
• also a limited selection of salads.

$.50 off any Bread Bowl with coupon
Dine in Only
96 N. Pleasant St. (Next to CVS) 253-1855

IF THEY CAN SELL THEIR FOOD CHEAPER, WHY DON'T THEY DO IT ALL THE TIME?
WINGS
AWESOME FOOD AT AWESOME PRICES. EVERYDAY.

WHEN WAS THE LAST TIME YOU OPENED A PIZZA BOX AND SMILED?
WINGS

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN
www.dailycollegian.com

Yippee!!! Now I can enjoy the Collegian without getting ink all over my hands!

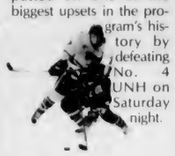
NOW UP AND RUNNING!

GET PSYCHED!
UMass
basketball
PREVIEW
Coming Soon...

Will Smith takes on the world of golf and Shauna Billings takes on the working world of fashion. Check it all out today in Arts.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

The UMass hockey team pulled off one of the biggest upsets in the program's history by defeating No. 4 UNH on Saturday night.



ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 43 www.dailycollegian.com Monday, November 6, 2000

10 Chancellor's medals given out at Friday lunch

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Ten Chancellor's Medals were awarded at a luncheon in the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts on Friday.

The medals, which are the highest honor that the campus bestows upon distinguished faculty, alumni and friends, and is given in a vast variety of areas for exemplary and extraordinary service to the University.

Honorees from the School of Management included both Charles S. Adams and Patricia H. Crosson.

Adams a retiree from 1999, joined the University first in the English Department in 1964, and then transferred to the School of Management in the early 1980s. He was responsible for such undergraduates programs as Project 10, an initiative designed to give students the atmosphere of a smaller school within a large University, the Inquiry Program, a plan designed to allow students added flexibility in deciding their academic path, and the Patterson Program which allows 200 incoming undeclared freshman to choose a major while living with other undeclared freshmen in the Southwest living area.

Also playing a key role at UMass is Crosson, former director of the School of Education's Center for Education Policy. She held a variety of positions at UMass. She has been department chair, deputy provost and interim provost.

Kenneth S. Apfel from the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences received a medal. He has done a wide variety of things before settling down in the UMass community, including holding the positions of assistant secretary for management and budget at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. He has served as commissioner of the Social Security Administration since 1997.

Miriam Usher Christman also received an award. She is a former professor at the University who retired in 1986 and has avidly supported the W.E.B. Dubois library since.

The primary contact between the School of Public Health and Health Sciences and Procter and Gamble Raphael P. Alonzo was awarded a Chancellor's Metal. He has secured over two million dollars worth of grants, contracts and gifts for the University.

Other medal awards also went to Gilbert and Carol Leville from the College of Food and Natural Resources. Gilbert Leville is the vice president of the nutritional division of McNeil Consumers Healthcare. He earned a Bachelor's degree from UMass in 1956 and served as a faculty member for a variety of different universities.

The Allegheny Power Company employed Carol Leville before she began to work at the National Institutes of Heath in the offices of the directors of the Office of Contracts and Grants, worked on the Nutrition Coordinating Committee and the Heart and Lung Institute.

Former alumni and novelist Bret Lott also received a medal from the University. His novel Jewel, was on Oprah's Book Club Selection and has more than two million copies in print. He has also taught at a variety of colleges.

An acclaimed international nurse and medical sociologist, Afaf Meleis, received an award for her achievements. She has authored more than 200 publications on a variety of medical issues, as well as served as a professor at the University of California-Los Angeles.

For his active involvement in the UMass community, James Sullivan a resident of Western Massachusetts received an award. He has been an active member of the School of Business's Advisory Council and has funded two University scholarships since 1983.

Ting-wei Tang and Orlando Taylor both received the final two awards. Tang, a professor at the University, for his contributions to the Minority Engineering Program and minority graduate student recruitment, as well as for serving as the chair of the Research Committee for a period of time.

Taylor served as a professor and administrator at a variety of different schools. He has worked at schools such as Stanford and Howard's School of Communications working mainly with graduate students.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

What can you say?

Former UMass standout Danille Henderson was given a plaque by Chancellor David K. Scott at the Homecoming football game on Saturday. The current assistant coach of the Minutewomen softball team also picked up a gold medal at the Sydney Olympics..

Time capsule put into place of rest

By Melissa Shattuck
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Millennium time capsule was interred into the Old Chapel crypt on Saturday afternoon.

The kick-off for this event took place on May 1, when the University hosted an event during which students could have their pictures taken with the capsule, and donate items for it. Approximately 75 items were eventually buried inside.

Among the items included were: the 1999 Athletic Department Annual Report, two booklets on diversity initiatives of the past 20 years, transit schedules, 100 random student e-mails and a packet of SGA materials with the constitution, by-laws and the names of current officers. Also, at the internment, 100 pictures were taken with a digital camera, and just before the capsule was sealed, the flash card was placed inside.

"The time capsule represents the year 2000, rather than everything until now, and tries to get a snapshot of campus life," Psychology Professor Susan Whitbourne said.

The idea to have a University time capsule has arisen before the millennium hit; with one was recently buried in 1991.

"Around the millennium people started talking, and the idea for a 2000 time capsule evolved naturally," Vice Chancellor for University Advancement Royster Hedgepeth explained.

He went on to explain that the millennium capsule was important for future generations of UMass students.

"The real purpose of a University is preserving history, knowledge, passing it on, and creating new knowledge," Hedgepeth said. "The time capsule is a great opportunity for the University to preserve knowledge and pass it on to future generations. It will richen and in-depth a students experience 100 years from now."

"Time capsules preserve a sense of history and traditions. The mystique of the time capsule is not so much what is in the capsule, but in the meaningfulness of what people chose," Chancellor David K. Scott said. "This says stuff about generations and what is going on here."

A variety of people were in attendance for the millennium time capsule ceremony. Linda Honan, man-

Turn to CAPSULE page 3

Ground breaking ceremony held for SOM renovations

By Karen Madsen
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Isenberg School of Management held its formal ground breaking ceremony last Friday, for the $14 million high technology building addition, to be known as the Harold Alfond Management Center.

The event, which was held in a tent set up on the Isenberg School's south lawn, attracted students, faculty and benefactors of the School of Management and featured brief talks by Dean Thomas O'Brien, President William Bulger, Chairman Peter Lewenberg, Chancellor David K. Scott and Mr. Eugene M. Isenberg.

Music and a light buffet, which included tiny chocolate shovels among its refreshments, preceded the event. Set up on the periphery of the event were plaques displaying plans for the building and a sketch depicting the finished product.

Of the new structure, Dean O'Brien said, "Scheduled to open for classes in September of 2002, the 50,000 sq. foot building addition represents a tremendous step forward for us. Its sophisticated information technology infrastructure will support electronic case rooms; a financial markets research center and distance learning facilities. Our students will also benefit from thoroughly modern facilities for placement, counseling and other services. A spacious student center will become the School's new social nexus."

President Bulger also spoke at the event, thanking private donors for their aid as well as the legislature, which increased funding to the University from $350 million to 1996 to a half a billion today.

"We are grateful for support provided by our benefactors," he said. "Here in Massachusetts, it's difficult for a public University to be competitive with the private ones, but that is changing."

University chairman, Peter Lewenberg felt that this structure would serve not just as a model business school, but also as a model business venture.

"[The structure] demonstrates the power of public and private partnership at its very best," he said.

UMass alumnus Eugene Isenberg '50, whose 1997 $6 million gift to UMass remains the largest in the University's history, described himself as a strong advocate of the kind of interdisciplinary education this building was designed to encourage. He hoped that the addition would serve as, "a model of what's do-able on the campus."

Freshman Business major, Aj Shah, will still be attending UMass in two years and will therefore directly benefit from the construction of the new building.

"It will have more rooms and be more comfortable," he said. "This is a pretty big event for the school. It shows an increase in UMass commitment to the School of Management."

Alumni and staff of the School of Management agreed that this was a successful and well-attended event. The overall sentiment was that it received greater attention because it fell on homecoming weekend, a time when thousands of former students could come back and attend the gathering.

The five speakers participated in the ceremonial ground breaking in front of the Isenberg School of Management and were met with loud applause from attendees.

Question No. 7, tax cuts

By Daniella Malin and Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

Question No. 7 on this year's state ballot would allow taxpayers that give to charity a state personal income tax a deduction for those charitable contributions. A taxpayer could take a deduction from any Part B income, including wages and salaries, of an amount equal to his or her charitable contributions for the year. The taxpayer could take the deduction whether or not he or she itemized deductions on a federal income tax return.

On the surface there seems to be little controversy over Question No. 7. People who give to charity don't have to pay state income tax on the money they donate. Question No. 7 was an initiative petition, meaning that a sufficient number of signatures had to be gathered to get it on the ballot.

Supporters of Question No. 7 believe that it will encourage charitable giving. Massachusetts is one of eight states that has not already approved this law. This state is also ranked 48 in the country's "Generosity Index." Supporters say this law could generate upwards of $220 million more per year towards charitable causes.

Opponents of the question point out that so-called "charitable donations" can and have been used by rich individuals and corporations as a smoke screen for squirreling away money while increasing their assets. These individuals "donate" to specially created donor-advised mutual fugls or set up their own non-profit foundations. This allows them to take a tax deduction without ever having the money going to any charity. The individual or corporation that manages the non-profit foundation's money is allowed to charge a fee for their management services. Thus an individual could draw a salary from a foundation after taking a charitable tax deduction.

In addition, opponents argue there is no way to ensure that any part of the $220 million in Massachusetts tax dollars lost annually will go to Massachusetts charities. Thus the state could end up subsidizing donations to benefit charitable organizations in other states.

Turn to BALLOT, page 2

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts field hockey team won the A-10 championship this past weekend, defeating Temple, 3-0, and West Chester, 4-0. Read the full story in Sports.

Robinson honored

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Donald A. Robinson, Ph.D., director of Environmental Health and Safety, EH&S, at the University of Massachusetts, was recently presented with the Distinguished Service to Safety Award from the National Safety Council (NSC) during its 88th Annual Congress & Exposition in Orlando, Fl.

According to the NSC homepage this annual award recognizes outstanding career service nationwide and is the highest honor given by the council.

Nominees are judged on their level of involvement in the program and their contributions to the Campus Safety Division, the NSC's congress and their own employers and communities.

This year, Susan Magur — Lamar University, Ron Angus — McMaster University, Mary Mellett — University of Georgia, Dr. Fay Thompson — University of Minnesota and Dr. Robinson were each nominated for the award.

Robinson, who serves as Vice President for the NSC Board of Directors, received his award at the 14th Annual Safety & Health Hall of Fame International Banquet, held on Monday, Oct. 16 in the Rosen Centre Hotel.

According to the NSC the Hall of Fame was formed to provide a living legacy for safety and health professionals, paying homage to those who have given unselfishly of themselves so that all people would one day have a life that is free of recognized hazards.

In an Oct. 24 news release, Robinson commented that the receiving the award was especially emotional for him because he lost his father, at age 48, due to a preventable fatal injury.

The Annual Congress & Expo also topped all previous attendance figures, drawing in 19,800 people, 11,000 of which were safety and health professionals.

"This was the biggest safety and health conference in U.S. history, with the most safety and health professionals ever gathered in one place for a meeting," said NSC Executive Vice President Alan C. McMillan.

Robinson concurred, commenting that the conference was indeed a success.

"This prestigious honor, although bestowed on an individual, actually reflects the commitment of the campus leadership to providing a healthy and safe environment for the University community," he said.

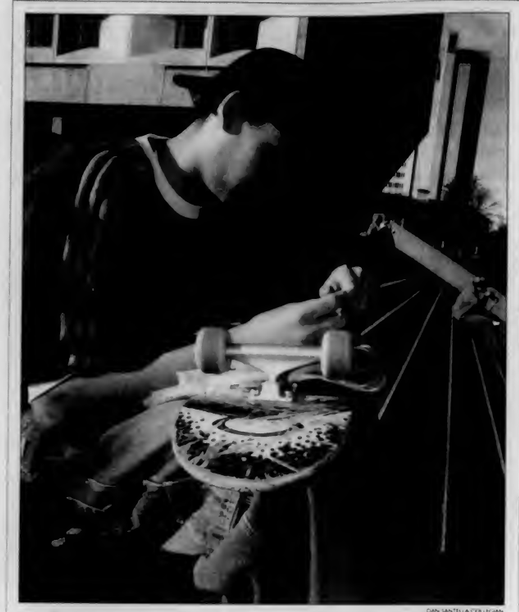
He explained that UMass was among the first to establish an EH&S department, which focuses on program areas such as biological, campus, laboratory and public health safety. It also provides education and training in environmental health, fire prevention, hazardous waste management, industrial hygiene and radiation protection.

Robinson directs a staff of 28 men and women and has been working with the program since 1975.

"Many colleges and universities are in the beginning stages of developing campus safety programs due to increased enforcement by the Environmental Protection Agency over the past few years. However, UMass has the longest standing campus program, which has been running since 1960. I'm the third director in my position since that time," Robinson noted.

He added, "Our program is good in many respects in that it serves as a model to other, newer campus safety programs, and we spend much time networking and sharing information on common issues with each other."

For further information about the EH&S program, call 545-2682 or visit N414 Morrill Science Center or www.umass.edu/safety/ on the web.



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Study time

UMass student John Rowley takes some time to do the Collegian crossword puzzle on Friday.

■ ballot

continued from page 1

Finally, opponents point out that the proposed law makes it difficult for the state to identify if the donations made were indeed made to charitable organizations established under the federal tax code. This is because the state deduction does not mirror the federal deduction.

The strongest financial supporter of this proposal is the nation's largest mutual fund company, Fidelity Investments. The other main contributors are Putnam Investments, Pricewaterhouse Coopers, and Goldman Sachs, according to records filed with the Office of Campaign and Political Finance. These supporters call themselves "The Committee to Encourage Charitable Giving" and claim this as their sole motive.

Opponents include Human Service Providers and the Massachusetts Teachers' Association. These state-funded agencies fear that with less money in the state coffers, funding for their programs will be the first to go.

Now, here's a twist. Question No. 7 was already passed. Legislators approved the amendment as part of the state budget in July. Some say that this makes it a moot point but a "yes" vote would change where this law is placed in the general laws while a "no" vote would ask the legislature to revisit the issue.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center ¥ University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
¥ (413) 545—3500 ¥
¥ Fax (413) 545—1192 ¥
¥ http://www.dailycollegian.com ¥

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benhams Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Kirchner Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

GREAT UMASS SKI SALE

THURSDAY - SATURDAY
NOVEMBER 9-11
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM

SNO FORCE PRO SNOWBOARD TEAM
THURS- 12 to 9PM
FRI - 12 to 9PM
SAT- 11 to 6PM

* OVER $3 MILLION IN EQUIPMENT AND APPAREL!
* SAVE MAD CASH ON WICKED DEALS! (50 TO 75% OFF)
* FREE GIVEAWAYS AND MOUNTAIN PROMOS!
* SPECIAL GUEST APPEARANCES!
* EVERYONE WELCOME!

UMASS SKI 'N' BOARD CLUB
http:\\www.umass.edu/rso/skiclub 413-545-3437 434 Student Union

The Edwin M. Rossman Alumni Career Forums
presents

DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY CAREER NIGHT

DATE: MONDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2000
TIME: 4:30
LOCATION: CAMPUS CENTER, ROOM 1001

AFTER THE B.A.: WHAT TO DO?

ALUMNI PANELISTS:

MICHELLE CHANDLER CROWE	LT. CMDR., US NAVAL RESERVE
LAURA FALARDEAU	NEW ENGLAND CABLE NEWS
JOE GABRIEL	GRADUATE STUDENT AT RUTGERS UNIV.
PETER LAMOTHE	NEW HAVEN HISTORICAL SOCIETY
JON LYNES	CHARLEMONT ACADEMY
TED TREANOR	DATAVIZ INC.
SUSAN HAMMOND	HUMANITIES & FINE ARTS CAREER NETWORK, DIRECTOR, CAREER EDUCATION
JOYE BOWMAN	MODERATOR, DIRECTOR OF UNDERGRADUATE STUDIES

SPONSORED BY: CAMPUS CAREER NETWORK
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY

For more information, please contact: Humanities & Fine Arts Career Network at 545-6255.
Refreshments Served - ALL STUDENTS ARE WELCOME!

House race to close to call: Democrats could take majority as result

By Hanna LoPatin
Michigan Daily (U. Michigan)

(U-WIRE) ANN ARBOR, MI — Every two years control of the U.S. House of Representatives comes up for grabs. In this tight election year, when almost every race on the ticket seems like it could go either way, both the Democrats and Republicans have their eye on the prize.

In the present Congress, the Republicans hold a six-seat majority. But the close political races could dictate a minuscule and ineffectual majority.

"No matter who wins control, it's going to be almost impossible to govern the House," Inside Michigan Politics Editor Bill Ballenger said.

As far as Ballenger is concerned, the winner is most likely going to be the Democratic Party.

"There are more open seats that tend to tilt Democratic than there are Republican," he said.

But there are several special circumstances that make this election year different than any other.

"The two parties are perhaps in more equal strength than in any time in the last quarter century," Ballenger said.

One of the tightest races in the country is taking place in the 8th District of Michigan, right next door to Ann Arbor.

The most recent EPIC/MRA poll showed Democrat Dianne Byrum favored over Republican Mike Rogers by one point with a five-point margin of error. Roger's Press Secretary Sylvia Warner said political pundits have predicted "as the eighth district goes, so goes Congress."

But representatives from both parties said they were confident that their candidate would win the election.

Marit Babin, spokeswoman for the National Republican Congressional Committee, said that the Ohio Democrat James Traficant vocalizing his support for Dennis Hastert (R-IL) for speaker of the House over Dick Gephardt (D-MS) will additionally hurt the Democrats.

"There's no way the Democrats are going to be able to make up the difference," Babin said.

Babin said the Republican Party is confident in at least three seats that they can take away from the Democrats in races in Virginia, Pennsylvania and New York.

Losing Traficant's vote, combined with the three seats the Republicans are confident in gaining, adds up to 10 seats that the Democrats need to win to get the majority, Babin said.

"There are not 10 seats that they are going to win," she said.

But spokesman for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee John Del Cecato said the Democrats are not necessarily worried about the effect Traficant might have.

Traficant comes from a Democratic district that wants a Democratic speaker, Del Cecato said.

"We hope he joins us in our effort to make Dick Gephardt the speaker of the House," Del Cecato said.

"We are more confident today than at any other point in this cycle," he said. "The political winds are blowing our way."

Del Cecato said he believes people are tired of the right-wing majority.

"That's why they're no longer talking about raising (their number of seats), they're talking about protecting their razor-thin majority," he said.

Ballenger said Congressman Bernie Sanders, an independent socialist from Vermont, could sway the balance, though, as he will vote with the Democrats on the issue.

If the House ends up split 217 and 217, "Bernie Sanders could be the tie-breaker," Ballenger said.

Congresswoman Lynn Rivers (D-Ann Arbor) is running for her fourth term in Congress and said that if the Democrats win they would give more options to Republicans than have been given to the Democrats over the past three terms.

"You can't get rid of partisan," Rivers said. "But I think it could be less partisan ... if we take control we will involve the minority."

The team that keeps UMass moving

UMass Transit mechanic Henry Moseley works on a bus over the weekend

■ capsule

continued from page 1

ager for the K-12 Academic Outreach of the Continuing Education Department was present because a packet of items from Continuing Education was donated to the capsule, and Dr. Andrew Effrat, chair of the Education Policy Research and Administration, attended the internment because an item belonging to his son was put into the capsule.

Past Chancellor Richard O'Brien attended Saturday's event because he was Chancellor at the internment of that last capsule in 1991.

The marching band was also present at the event and played several songs, which kept spectators singing and clapping.

In Chancellor Scott's speech, he said that this project has been in the works for over a year now and has been supported by a 55-person committee, which gathered items, ideas and suggestions. Scott also mentioned his personal contribution to the time capsule, a letter to his successor in the year 2100.

Scott's letter addressed his successor and stated, "May this University be standing and shining as it is now."

Don't make your girlfriend mad at you, go to www.dailycollegian.com
.....or suffer the wrath.

UMASS YOGA & MEDITATION CLUB
The Art of Living - Healing Breath Workshop

* 6 sessions for deep relaxation, greater energy, increased awareness and fun
* Brings the mind to the present moment and allows you to give your 100% !
* Held in about 100 countries - recognized by the United Nations & W.H.O.
* No experience needed. Everyone welcome!

When: Nov 10(starts @7pm) – Nov 15, 3 hour sessions. Where: UMass, LGRT 1634.
For more information: ☎ Durgesh 665-8635 ☎ Rebecca 549-0396
Email: durgesh@nova.astro.umass.edu Web http://www.artofliving.org/colleges/
Free introductory sessions (optional) ! UMass Campus Center 7-8 pm
Wed Nov 1 Rm. 811 Tue Nov 7 Rm. 803 Thu Nov 9 Rm. 905.

OKEMO STRATTON OKEMO STRATTON OKEMO

How about a couple of TALL FROSTY ONE

Two Great Mo ains.
One Great Pas
No Restrictions!

With the Stratton/Okemo Colle Pass you can ski and ride seven days a eek, all season long, for $299 if purchased by 12/10/2000.

COLLEGE PASS PURCHASE DEADLINES	PRICE
On or before 12/10/00	$299
After 12/10/00	$359

For the Stratton/Okemo College Pass, students must provide full-time student documentation from the Registrar's office. College ID's will not be accepted as proof. All purchase prices subject to 5% Vermont sales tax.

OKEMO MOUNTAIN RESORT
1-802-228-4041 okemo.com
STRATTON
1-800-STRATTON stratton.com

Attention: Science Majors

Explore a career in Alternative Healthcare

College of Chiropractic (Doctor of Chiropractic)
- ► First University-based Chiropractic College in the United States
- ► Accelerated Science Pre-requisite Program Available
- ► Only Chiropractic College located in New England and the greater New York metropolitan area

College of Naturopathic Medicine (Naturopathic Physician)
- ► Only College of Naturopathic Medicine that is part of a major University
- ► Clinical Experience and Integrative Care Setting
- ► Only college on East Coast and one of only four in the United States offering this degree

For more information and an application:

►College of Chiropractic
1-888-UB-CHIRO
e-mail: chiro@bridgeport.edu
www.bridgeport.edu/chiro

►College of Naturopathic Medicine
(203) 576-4108
e-mail: natmed@bridgeport.edu
www.bridgeport.edu/naturopathy

UNIVERSITY OF BRIDGEPORT
DIVISION OF HEALTH SCIENCES

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Now is the time
to exercise caution

Winter is coming, and in many senses has already arrived. After Daylight Savings has passed, the nights are coming sooner. It is now commonplace for darkness to have descended totally by five o'clock on most nights. The weather has become colder, as the temperature has dropped and the wind picked up. No longer can shorts or even simply long sleeves be worn on the way to class; being bundled up is the only sane option. It has already snowed once, and even before Halloween – the threat of more precipitation is constant.

It is a dangerous time to be a pedestrian on the UMass campus.

Everyone knows that the foot-bound on this campus are the most brazen and reckless in the world. They don't even spare the second to look up from their book, or even raise their eyes off the ground, before stepping out between the white lines. They simply assume that because they are both students and on foot, that they are invincible and that any car in the lane will magically sense their presence and stop its approach, or else simply bounce off them as they continue on their way to their blessedly warm dorm room.

This assumption could never be more false.

Pedestrians on this campus need to start taking greater care now, for their own sakes. With the sky darkening early and more people clad in subdued, dark-color winter clothing, the visibility of drivers on this campus is slashed. Should any inclement weather hit, such as snow or freezing rain or even hail, the roads will instantly become exponentially more hazardous. Any student, clothed entirely in black, darting out into a crosswalk in the middle of a snowstorm is taking his life into his hands – his or her status as a superhuman, totally immune UMass pedestrian non-withstanding.

UMass, heed the warning of the Daily Collegian – take a little more caution than normal as these winter months progress. The best driver in the world can do nothing when his brakes clench and he skids on snow. If he cannot stop you, he will not stop – period.

This school does not need another death to rock the campus. There are few deaths as needless, senseless and avoidable as those caused by crossing the road.

Take the time to actually do what you were taught in elementary school and look both ways before crossing the street. If you're dressed totally in black or other dark, hard to see colors and it is nighttime, take notice of the fact and compensate accordingly. Wait that extra minute to ensure that the other driver does, in fact, see you and is, in fact, stopping.

It takes as little to go that extra step towards safety. UMass. It's OK to acknowledge your mortality and take strides to maintain your lives at the risk of a slight inconvenience of a few seconds' duration.

The Daily Collegian advises you to be safe in the crosswalks this winter, UMass. It could save your life.

An Ode to Ralph Nader

He confronts the concerns that burden us all
And when TV assures us that the sky will not fall
He pushes the mountains and builds walls of rock
And carries the staff to guide a lost flock
That's composed to the rejects and political virgins
Who compensate by being societal surgeons.

And together the challenge the sequin-clad Brahmins
Restore faith in the wisdom of nature and shamans.
Fliter, purify, concentrate our ideals
To take care of our people and protect our meals
To get corporate dick from our congressmen's lips
So that maybe they'll let an honest word slip.

And we believe in his motives because he's earned our trust
For a nation used to deceit, we'll have to adjust
The passion is clear in the voice of the shepherd.
We'll take to the streets and be tear-gassed and peppered.
And after November, keep the message alive,
In hopes that our planet and race will survive.

He's baptized the young and re-instated the old
In a political process that's long since been cold
His talent may be less the problems he's solved
Than numbers of people newly involved

If you're disgusted, discouraged and can't stand anymore
Asinine Bush and Hypocritical Gore
Know that there's choice besides bad and worse
Who win votes and elections with the weight of their purse

If you shun Washington's charades and jargon
Consider what you might gain in our bargain:
clean water, clean air, and a clean conscience to boot
And a leader that renders this corrupt system moot.
If all other activism you refute and rebuke
On 11/7 vote Nader/Laduke.

Brianne Goodspeed is a UMass student.

Presidential alternatives

CHRIS COLLINS

My fellow University of Massachusetts Students!

I come before you today (well, actually, I guess I write to you today,) because I have a message for you about freedom.

No, I do not speak of the freedom of certain people in Mexico to run websites where Nader supporters in swing-states can vote for Gore provided that a Gore supporter in a Non-swing state will vote for Nader.

Instead I speak of the freedom to vote for anyone you want.

I think it would be wrong for me to try to take away your voting freedom by pointing out how stupid casting a ballot for George W. Bush would be, given his inability to use the English correctly and because of his shady past.

Instead, to aid in freeing your vote, I am going to present a couple of possible candidates that the mainstream media out there have overlooked. I just want to make sure that you know there are other options besides the big three (yes, Nader is an option, for all you Party Liners out there who don't realize that more that two options exist).

My Maintainer Kevin.

Kevin is the maintainer on my floor, and besides from just plain old being cool, he is definitely a man of the people. He certainly didn't get into Yale just because his Daddy did, nor would he be running on the fact that he was waiting in the wings for eight years while someone else was running the country.

His campaign platform would be a simple one: he can clean up. Think about it. If Nixon had been better at cleaning up, he would have never come close to becoming impeached. And if Clinton had been better at cleaning up, then the Starr report ta disgustingly long document based on relating every disgusting detail of that particularly disgusting affair) would never exist.

Lastly, Kevin is honest, hardworking and a nice person to be around, which means he would have trouble fitting into Washington. Electing him would mean something might actually get done and that we would all benefit from his presidency.

The President From The West Wing.

Ok, so its disturbing that I think Martin Sheen looks and acts more Presidential than the actual candidates in this election, but come on, watch the TV show, he's great! If only he could actually be president. It would be a relatively smooth transition, we just hire the show's writer to write his speeches, and we would be all set.

Chancellor Scott

Now, I realize that a couple of you out there are thinking "Chancellor Scott? Chris, he can barely run this place, why would you ever let him run the country?" My answer would be simple. If he is running the country we get a new chancellor.

And think about it, President Scott could privatize the National Parks, so that we could have the Walt Disney Corp. running Yellowstone. And with the federal budget in his hands, President Scott could finally find enough funding to get PeopleSoft off the ground and fully functional. Also, given that he would have to choose a running mate, we might even be able to get him to take Billy Bulger with him, in a sort of "kill the less than useful administrators with one-election" sort of thing.

The Guys From The WhazzzUp Commercials

Ok, essentially, I just want to hear stories of important head of state conversations sounding like this:

Secretary: "Mr. President, President Putin is on the phone."

President: "Patch him through...WhazzzUp Putin?"

Putin: "Just having a bud."

The Guy From The Snickers Commercial

Oh, come on. Like you haven't wanted to vote for this guy. He doesn't say a word, yet manages to show exactly how bad of a taste is going to be left in the mouths of the American people after this election is over.

A Hamster.

So, what do the American people really want in a candidate? Well, I think they want them to be cute, and to that end, I say let's vote a hamster into office. I mean, he's cute. Foreign leaders will think he is cute. The congress will think he's cute. We can rent out the oval office because all a first hamster needs is a wire cage and clean cedar chips. His vice president can be a gerbil for diversity's sake. It will work. Hamster 2000, get the vote out!

Any Pro Wrestler Who Has Written a Book.

Have you noticed that an awful lot of professional wrestlers have written books that make in onto the bestseller list? Now, this means that they have some sort of command of the English language (as opposed to a certain candidate out there who we all know and laugh at). And because they are professional wrestlers, they could beat up people they don't agree with. I mean, with any of the three front-runners, they have no recourse if they are losing an argument with a foreign diplomat. With one of these guys, Bam! So, my fellow Students, vote wisely this year.

Chris Collins is a Collegian Columnist.

What's wrong with America

GUILLERMO FUENTES

Here's what's right with America. A simple minded student like myself can type up a couple paragraphs of dribble and get it printed in his school newspaper. What's wrong with America is that I could fill books with an article titled, "What's wrong in America."

First off let me begin by stating I am from Massachusetts. I didn't choose to be a Red Sox fan, the Red Sox chose me. What disgusted me most about the New York Yankees and the "Subway Series" is that two states were involved in a World Series where both teams are from the New York. New Yorkers: stand up, cheer, get nutty and drunk. Both your representative metaphorically represented. New Jersey, sit down. You have no baseball team.

I hate the Yankees. I should hate the Mets because of 1986. But how could I hate the National League clone of the beloved BoSox? The Mets are a bunch of scrappers on a wildcard team. New York can go on and love the Yankees or Mets. Fine with me. It is when I see girls from Trenton, or the Jersey Shore, or whatever part of Jersey smells least like exhaust and nicotine, frothing like Yankee fans that makes me sick. Do you people even like baseball? Is Derek Jeter just a "hunty?" Apparently the New York Yankees were the best thing to come from Jersey since Springsteen.

Hey Jersey, I know hockey isn't really popular and mainstream. Not many people rap about it, and you can't wear a goalie mask backwards like you can with a Yanks cap. The Devils won the Stanley Cup last year. Again. It's the most beloved trophy in all of sports. To clear this up for those of you scratching your heads wondering what part of New York the Devils are from, they are actually from New Jersey.

Aside from Martin Brodeur, (look him upt and the possibility the New Jersey Nets (look them upi may make the playoffs, the only other thing you have to be proud of is Jon Bon Jovi. No, not the new Jon Bon Jovi, sadly you still have to revel in his Slippery When Wet album success.

And another thing America, my roommate is deathly ill. By deathly ill I meam he is bed ridden and emng a stench the room can only handle on the weekends. Why does he have to trek to Health Services in his condition? What happened to the Florence Nightengales of the world? But on the upside, Hampden Snack Bar now delivers. Thank God, because you know it's a long walk there from anywhere in Southwest. Saves me 45 seconds, at least.

This kid has to walk forever and a mile in his condition. I say house calls should be made. It would make life a little easier and it would put more jobs on the market. That is bound to help our economy, or something.

Back to baseball. As a Red Sox fan I am allowed to say what is about to be said. The only rivalry the Yankees have with Boston is with their fans. The Red Sox, on the other hand, have to deal with the actual Yankees. Understand? The Yankees, at this point, don't deal with the team itself. Why should they? They are a superior team spending at least twelve million more dollars than the Sox. We haven't kept them from anything in ages. We haven't taken one of their prime players, or any of their championships. Yankees win regardless of our hatred for them. On the other hand, the Sox driving force Is their hatred for the Yankees and the love for the Fenway Faithful. Where as the Yankees driving force is the following: cash, dollars bonuses, money, and keeping Jersey folk happy so they don't move into Manhattan. Congrats to you New York, New Jersey and all you other fair weather cities. You're bound to be happy with this year world champs.

The two biggest things wrong with America are the lack of 8-bit Nintendo being played and the lack of quality film in cinemas. I mention them together because at one point we had both. I refer you to the movie The Wizard, starring Fred Savage with supporting roles played by Christian Slater, Beau Bridges and a young Nikki Cox.

For some reason this film is regarded as ridiculous, and right now maybe you agree. But you are lying and will be struck by lightning if you tell me that you didn't wet yourself when you saw Super Mario Brothers 3 for the first time. That's when Nintendo was Nintendo. It wasn't some high-speed graphics filled game. It was a cartridge you had to blow in for some reason. Shook it, cursed it, and when you were done threw it into a dusty box. Hands down the greatest game ever made. The Legend Of Zelda, came in a gold cartridge and that is honestly as flashy the games got. I assure you right now that Zelda is more difficult and has better game play than 50 percent of the games on the market now. Don't believe me? Try beating Quest 2 of the original game. When you miss four days of class because you can't find out where the NEW level 5 is, don't blame me.

Also during this time The Karate Kid was in its prime. Twenty-six year old Ralph Macchio was playing everybody's favorite 18 year-old martial artist, Daniel LaRusso. Only other time we saw martial arts this good was in Ninja Gaiden. Where's Miyagi been? Another installment of the Karate kid is long overdue. And before you get any ideas, I have already started a script and am currently waiting Mass-lottery funding to begin production.

Back to Nintendo, who was the drug-pusher who came up with Super Mario 2? This game has more color, more twists and turns, and more characters than The Beatles Yellow Submarine. Seriously, who came up with that? Were they trying to scare us? Because it worked.

What else is right with America is the everlasting popularity of Tecmo Super Bowl for, yes, Nintendo. Anybody playing NFL 2k1 right now has graduated from the playbook of Tecmo Super Bowl, where Lawrence Taylor and Barry Sanders were your biggest fears, a blocked extra point was worth a year of mockery, and where you had players named "OB Eagles" or "OB Bills." If not for this game staying popular and in use in my room, I would consider moving my life to Canada.

Bottom line is, this country is falling apart and the only thing holding it together is Nintendo and the hope for a new Karate Kid movie. Mockery of mullet hairstyles is also bringing us all closer as a people, but sometimes its not enough. Not even a hockey-cut can overshadow a Yankee fan from Jersey. It's sad and I am crying. I hope that as a nation we can come together for the sake of Mario, Pat Morita, and Fenway Faithful, to put an end to our deteriorating society. There. It is written and I have spoken.

Guillermo Fuentes is a UMass student.

Creating a stylish resume

Style File
WITH SHAUNA BILLNGS

It's that time in every junior's life, when he or she suddenly realizes that they are in their third year of college, and have no marketable skills. "But I took all those classes on Linguistic Theory!" you keep telling yourself. Yeah, whatever comforts you... but if you haven't had any experience in the field that you are interested in, than all that those classes are preparing you for is another two years and thousands more dollars spent at grad school.

Okay, so you are applying for an internship to pad your resume, or perhaps you are just applying for a job to pay for the two years of grad school that you intend on going for right after college, because you don't really feel like gaining any marketable skills through a co-op or internship. Either way, your GPA, experience and charming personality (assuming that you have those things!) will only get you so far... You have to dress the part.

Last year I went to the SOM major fair with my friend Brett. When we walked onto the Mullins Center floor, armies of pinstriped students marched across the concrete, arms extended to the waiting hands of country club tanned executives. Their wing tips banged against the floor with heavy thumps, much like the beat of a cold and empty corporate heart. Brett looked down at his trendy cargo corduroys pants and black leather coat, and silently cursed his strictly Abercrombie wardrobe. This was war, and he wasn't camouflaged in the correct uniform of a blah-gray suit and dull, disinterested tie.

But HEY! As much as you need to wear the basics for the job you are applying for (i.e. blazer and dress pants for a marketing job), that doesn't mean that you need to stifle your personal style completely! Thanks to Regis Philbin (I had really hoped that I would live my life without uttering that phrase!), men's dress clothing has gotten a little kicky with that whole monochromatic look that Reg has going for himself. And GQ is filled with fun colors. Instead of boring old black and gray, try a subdued or deep color like slate or burgundy that shows you have personality to wear something other than navy, but the business sense to keep it on the down-low in a corporate setting.

Ladies... I have some major advice for you. You may have aspirations of climbing that corporate ladder quickly, but if you're wearing platform shoes, you'll get stuck on the second rung with a sprained ankle. Go for classic looks in shoes (meaning ditch the mega-heels), no jangly jewelry, subtle make-up (glitter is a definite no) and well-coiffed hair (No stringy, little tendrils in your eyes, or whatever that looks is). "Ally McBeal" may be wearing tight little mini-skirts, but that doesn't mean you necessarily should. Take advantage of the popular knee-length skirt, it looks much more professional.

And to both guys and girls, for God sakes, take it easy on the perfume and cologne! While you want to make a lasting impression on the interviewer with your dazzling wit and intelligence, you don't want them to be thinking about you when the smell your stale perfume in the office the next morning. We've all been guilty of applying too much scent in a state of nervousness, but think about it... every time you smell Drakkar, you think of your skeevy ex, right? So wouldn't the interviewer have the same memories? (Well, hopefully they wouldn't have ALSO gone out with your skeevy-ex, but one never knows, do they?)

There are two VERY important rules to dressing for an interview... First, just remember that it's your mom who is hiring you. Basically, the person hiring you is probably the same age as your mom, and therefore has the same thoughts. If she thinks that the big Notre Dame tattoo on your forearm looks a little "hooligan-like," than chances are your interviewer feels the same way. So roll down your sleeve. Secondly, always dress for the job you WANT, not the job that you are applying for. Sure, you are trying to get a job at the Wang Center Public Relations office making copies, but when you graduate, you want to actually do the PR work, so make a lasting impression now!

To those who are not looking in the corporate world for future employment, don't get all-pinstriped out if you want to be a Kindergarten teacher. You have to look professional, without looking like you are going to make the kids march down the hall with you keeping time on a snare drum. Wear some color and look approachable but polished. Artists have all the luck. Your clothes represent much of your personal tastes and style, so deck yourself in leopard and fur if that so suits you and your future profession.

So. Key points – be clean, with classic hair, shoes and makeup. Make sure nails are polished and smooth. Ditch the scent, or at least keep it at a one squirt maximum. You don't them to smell you before they see you. While you want to look professional, you also don't want to lose yourself behind your clothes. So make sure to incorporate you into the outfit, because that is who they are hiring. Once you have the job, keep up the good appearance. Don't revert back to your jeans!

"Hmmmm," you say. "But I'm just applying to the GAP for holiday help." Well, in that case, don't go for the suit. You'll frighten people. When you apply for a store job, make sure you wear an outfit that you could wear to work at that store. But a major warning, remember that many of those stores make you wear their clothes to work. So while it would be fun to work at Abercrombie and get some major discounts, realize that a huge chunk of your paycheck will be going to padding your wardrobe with work related gear.

That's why I always choose jobs that involve no wardrobe purchasing. Last winter I worked at Pottery Barn, where the colors are: black, white, charcoal gray, navy blue, khaki and chocolate brown. It was incredibly blah, but didn't really require me purchasing any new clothes. However I did almost have to purchase the $300 dollars worth of merchandise that I broke. (Note to all fellow klutzes – don't work in glassware!)

When you are applying for a job or internship, you always want to look your best. So invest in your future and get at least one interview worthy outfit that dresses you for success, but still reflects you. And for the love of God, don't wear your frat-shoes and simmer down with the perfume!

Shauna Billings is a Collegian staff member.

Screaming, singing, rapping, and simple barking: downset.'s glory

DOWNSET.
Check Your People
Epitaph Records

Downset. start off their newest album with "Fallen Off," proclaiming "Great perfection appears so defective, great fullness feels so very empty, great sincerity at times seems so insincere." Check Your People is definitely not defective, and sometimes the songs appear to be empty, but downset. never comes off as insincere – and that makes the album.

Full of tales of drug dealers, oppression, poverty, and violence, this album is not for the weak of heart. The riffs are heavy, but the themes and lyrics are of the most weight here. Singer Rey Oropeza alternates between screaming, singing, rapping, and what appears to be simple barking to get his point of anger and hopelessness across. And he does it so well.

The faults come when you simply cannot understand a word that Oropeza is saying, such as on the second song "Coming Back." Opening the lyrics sheet gives you such well-written lyrics as "this is my precious life, inescapable concerns intensify return alive combine with a fight in mind" – but you'd have no idea he was saying that if you hadn't been able to read it.

Even with these defects, though, Check Your People is rock-solid musically throughout. Heavy riffs, some slower jams, all dominated by the dynamic voice that above it all, keeps you listening and bobbing your head even when you miss the point by not realizing what's going on. When it does all come together, such as on "Fallen Off" and "Chemical Strangle," It works well indeed.

Downset. rock, rap and scream their way to a vision of urban despair that's been lacking since the last Biohazard album. Flawed but sincere and heartfelt, Check Your People stands as a solid entry into a crowded hard rock field.

- Rob Schulze

Redford's "Bagger Vance" brings imprecision to golfer's legend

The Legend of Bagger Vance
Directed by Robert Redford with Matt Damon, Will Smith and Charlize Theron
Playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Transcendentalism must appeal to artistic-minded directors and cinematographers alike. The chance to capture oneness with nature and an unspoken spirituality must stretch the imagination for artists. possibilities not readily accessible through more traditional, more linear Hollywood fare.

Robert Redford, one of our better American directors, takes the reigns for the transcendental golf movie, The Legend of Bagger Vance about a legendary golf match in the Deep South and a legendary caddy.

Terrence Malick tried this dialogue light, heavy imagistic approach in his 1998 film. The Thin Red Line, with mixed critical success. Rather than using the omniscient stream of consciousness technique that characterized Malick's attempt at transcendentalism, Redford employs the wise, mythical caddy Bagger Vance (Will Smith).

One day Bagger walks into the life of Captain Rannulph Junuh (Matt Damon) whose personal demons (of war and love) now occupy the mental recesses where his golf swing used to lay. Unfortunately for Junah, the pride of Savannah, Georgia, he has already accepted an invitation to play in a tournament against the two greatest golfers in the world – Bobby Jones and Walter Hagen.

And basically what follows Bagger and Junuh's meeting is a two-hour golf match, interspersed with some of the aforementioned omniscient philosophizing. Junuh fumbles around, "searching for his swing," and the crowd is disheartened. Then, he suddenly finds it, and Savannah is once again abuzz. The movie's emotional range is never much beyond these two poles.

Mark Twain once said, "Golf is a two-hour walk spoiled." The movie is longer. The Legend of Bagger Vance does an admirable job making golf seem mystical and hallowed and magical. The sweeping green vistas, golden Savannah sun and southern gothicly mesh for a feel that can only be described as... still, the movie is not as evocative as other sports films like Field of Dreams or even Remember the Titans.

The Legend of Bagger Vance is overwhelmingly beautiful, easy to look at, and visually, without much substance. Junuh's "redemption" is told in a series of minute watt flashback which open the movie and are interspersed throughout the movie. Director Robert Redford and screenwriter Adele Invergrefold Lovitt (Lovitt? Invergrefold? Really?) thes both "liked the way they sounded."

Likewise Bagger's mind games with Junuh, his cosmic ass-kicking and his ethereal presence are never explained and never necessary. Junuh's character arc is pretty standard after a while, glossing over the "real" problems in your authentic setting and focusing on the "real" problem's son's lack of a spiritual dimension.

The movie seems to be trying to be more than it is. The cinematography and the score are beautiful, but lacking behind a very standard plot and a very standard set of ideas.

The voice-over narration by Will Smith, playing Hardy Greenhut, the caddy who is the narrator of Junuh's story, is not only unnecessary, but also annoying. It is an otherwise beautiful movie, but I found myself looking for ways to escape the film. Golf fans were treated to three hours of golf, and were never treated to the emotional depth of the characters. Junuh just wasn't interesting enough to carry the movie through the monotony. The movie's attempts at profundity are heavy-handed.

The Legend of Bagger Vance is a movie for golf fans. The characters of Junuh, Bagger and Hardy are well cast, but the movie is not about them. It is a story and the characters are merely vehicles to tell the story. The film some cinematography and a beautiful score, but not enough to overcome the muddled presentation of its message or the lack of a really challenging story line. The movie is pretty, but not enough. Not even the childish fairy tale ending can save it.

Will Smith as the title character in the Robert Redford film, The Legend of Bagger Vance.

Acapulco
Cancun
Jamaica
Bahamas
Florida
Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
On-campus contact
STS TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849
www.ststravel.com
Josh @ 413-549-4514

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS
A great place to get contact lenses
Convenient hours and location
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions,call 577-5244
Special Offer: $25 off
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

A HIGHER DEGREE of success
Curt L. Hamakawa '84
Law graduate Curt Hamakawa, director of International Relations for the U.S. Olympic Committee in Colorado Springs, is among thousands of our alumni who have achieved a higher degree of success.
Practical lawyering skills taught from the first day of classes in a collaborative environment are the hallmarks of our legal education. Our alumni have built rewarding and meaningful careers in law, business, education, and government.
OPEN HOUSE
Saturday, Nov. 18
1-4:15 pm
For reservations, call: 413-782-1406 or 800-782-6665
S. Prestley Blake Law Center
1215 Wilbraham Road
Springfield, MA
www.wnec.law.edu
Western New England College
SCHOOL OF LAW

We test our system; you get free therapy.
"Participate in a completely free pilot test of online therapy."
Free, secure, confidential web-based therapy from Massachusetts Licensed Psychotherapists.
If you are a Massacusetts resident over 18 years old, whether or not you have tried traditional therapy before, you are welcome.
visit www.webtherapy.com to sign up.
webtherapy.com

Field hockey answers questions

What might have happened?

Two wins would give the Massachusetts field hockey team the Atlantic 10 championship and an automatic birth into the NCAA tournament, but a loss would put the fate of the Maroon and White into the hands of a committee. And anyone that watches collegiate athletics knows that this is not the safest place to be. Every year the bubble bursts for many deserving squads when the tournament brackets come out, and it looked like conditions were perfect for the Minutewomen to be snubbed.

JESSE GREENSPAN

Upsets were happening all over the country in the various conference tournaments. The No. 2 North Carolina Tar Heels and the No. 4 Wake Forest Demon Deacons fell in the ACC tournament in the same day. No. 7 Penn State failed to take home the Big 10 championship. Suddenly, the eight at large bids into the NCAA's did not seem like enough, despite the fact that the Minutewomen were ranked eighth in the nation and entered the A-10 tournament with a 16-3 record.

After defeating West Chester on Saturday in the semifinal game 4-0, UMass Head Coach Patty Shea still did not feel comfortable with her team's chances of qualifying for the big dance.

"Right now, tomorrow's game is really critical," said Shea. "If we don't win we will not go to the NCAA's, irregardless of our schedule, because of the upsets that have happened in other tournaments."

"It doesn't matter what you did from August 12 to last weekend," she added. "All of those games are a wash. It's a one-game season now."

Luckily for the Minutewomen, they continued their streak of good play in the finals against Temple, and won the game 3-0 behind a Kristen Schmidt hat trick. This meant that UMass would not be forced to wait until the committee unleashed the brackets to find out whether or not its season was over, but one is still left to ponder how a team that entered the Atlantic 10 championship game with an eight game winning streak and a 17-3 record could have been sitting at home come tourney time.

Scoring bursts

All year the Minutewomen struggled to score. Yet they still managed to pick up wins behind a defense that ranked No. 1 in the nation at the end of the regular season, and an uncanny ability to pull out close games.

However, the last regular season game against LaSalle, in which Massachusetts blasted four goals into the back of the cage during a showstorm, proved to be a good prologue to the postseason. Suddenly, the Maroon and White were scoring, and the offense was finally beginning to click.

Against West Chester, Stacey Blue started the scoring spurt by firing in a pass from Sarah Bohonowicz with 23:49 remaining in the first half. It was Blue's first goal of the season, and seemed to jump start an offense that was almost completely dependant on Schmidt, Lindsay Abbott and Anke Bruemmer for scoring during the regular season.

The goal was only the beginning of a great game for Blue, as she continued to use her great speed to charge into the West Chester zone and create offensive opportunities.

"Stacey [Blue] is the most dynamic player we have," said Shea. "She just has an explosive first step. In her first step, it takes three steps to try and catch up to her."

For the rest of the half, the big three (Schmidt, Abbott and Bruemmer) took over, and put the game away with a goal apiece. Schmidt was able to score on a pass from Blue when she did the field hockey equivalent of a diving header, while Abbott and Bruemmer were able to score in more conventional ways. On Sunday, Temple was subjugated to a similar spurt, as Schmidt's second half hat trick propelled her team to the win.

Jesse Greenspan is a Collegian Columnist

■ field hockey

continued from page 10

UMass ran through West Chester (9-11, 2-3), 4-0, in its semifinal game to advance to the finals. Temple was taken to three overtimes before it finally found victory, knocking off Rhode Island (8-12, 3-2) by a score of 4-3 to move ahead to the championship.

In UMass' win over the Golden Rams, the game was clearly over after the first half of play. With four goals in the first 24 minutes of play, the Minutewomen's place in the A-10 championship became a forgone conclusion.

"They put us on the defensive right away," Shea said. "But when we broke through and scored the first goal, you could see a difference in their demeanor on the field. And that's tough because when we score one goal, you have to score two to catch up to us."

Sophomore Stacey Blue put forth the noteworthy performance of the battle, scoring one goal and recording an assist on another. At 23:49 of the first half, Blue scored off of a pass from Bohonowicz to give UMass the 1-0 lead. Two minutes later, Blue poked the ball from the Rams' goaltender over to a diving Schmidt who, in the end, wound up in the cage along with first score of the tourney.

"It's about time," Blue said, chuckling. "That's how I'm supposed to play. I just wish it came sooner."

The last two goals came from Abbott (12:01) and Bruemmer (11:13). Abbott's tally resulted after she redirected a shot from Robinson off a penalty corner, Bruemmer's goal, also off a penalty corner, was the product of her typical direct power shot into the cage.

One can't overlook the Minutewomen defense, however. It hasn't let up a goal in four consecutive games. And many would rank the Maroon and White defense as tops in the country. Tucker, Bruemmer, Koch and juniors Jill Fantasia and Kerry Ann Jaggassar have held strong in the backfield all season. They have 11 shutouts to their credit.

The most goals any team has scored on UMass this season is two by the No. 3 ranked Maryland Terrapins.

"It's like clock-work," Koch said. "We just work very well together."

Shea, Minutewomen collect hardware at A-10 banquet

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Hail to the chief, again.

On Friday night at the Inn of Northampton, the Atlantic 10 year-ending awards were given to the worthy members of the conference. The Massachusetts field hockey team claimed five of them.

Head Coach Patty Shea was named Coach of the Year for the second-straight season after leading UMass to its third-straight A-10 regular season crown, its fifth straight A-10 Field Hockey Championship and its fourth straight NCAA Tournament appearance.

"In field hockey we all share so much information and I'm only up here because my coaches have made me better," Shea said. "And I think that's really important."

Shea thanked her assistant coaches and players, as well.

"A coach is only as good as its right hand man – and that's the assistant coaches," Shea said. "I couldn't survive in my program if it wasn't for my assistant coaches Hillary Rose and Xavi Comerma.

"The last thing is that a coach is only as good as its players," she continued. "I've got a great group of young women who really are more deserving of this than I ever would be. First of all, they've tolerated me and they've put up with me. They work hard for me every single day and they're what makes me coach better."

Shea is one of the most decorated players in school history. She was the starting goalie for UMass from 1980-83 and was named to the All-America first-team in her junior and senior years. She also led the Minutewomen to two Final Four appearances.

She was on the roster of World Hockey Magazine's All World Team in 1996 and wore the crown of USA Field Hockey Association Athlete of the Year twice.

Shea wore the Red, White and Blue for the United States in the Seoul and Atlanta Olympic Games.

The other Minutewomen who received awards were Kristen Schmidt, Patty Robinson, Zowie Tucker and Anke Bruemmer. All were named to the A-10 All-Conference Team.

Schmidt, who was named to the team for the first time, is second on the UMass squad in scoring with 11 goals. Schmidt scored four goals this weekend to lead the Minutewomen to A-10 Champion status.

Robinson received the honor for the second straight year. She leads the team in assists with 14, recording three of them this weekend.

Bruemmer, who leads the Minutewomen in scoring with 12 goals, was also recognized for the second consecutive season. Bruemmer scored once this weekend, that goal coming against West Chester.

Tucker who, before the tourney, led the country in goals against average (0.60) and save percentage (.855), lowered both of those numbers this weekend with two shutouts to increase her shutout total to 11 on the season. In 21 games, Tucker has allowed only 12 goals between the pipes.

"We have the best goalkeeper in the country and I think we have the best defender in the country in Anke Zowie's one of the best goalie's because Anke doesn't let anything get back to her. And that's critical."

Men's soccer bounced from A-10 tournament; still post great season

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, RI – As a distant clock signaled the beginning of a new day, as the heavy breath of warriors was clearly visible in the frigid air and

Rhode Island	2
UMass	1

as Rhode Island left its own familiar ground in victory one more time, few things were certain. The Rams certainly had a lads named "Luck" on their side in a slim overtime victory over the Massachusetts soccer team; and the Maroon and White will certainly be back for vengeance in the 2001 campaign.

Unlike the regular season meeting between these two rivals, a 1-0 UMass win in overtime, this Atlantic 10 tournament match was fiercely contested by both sides. Despite the outcome, the previous meeting was dominated by URI. Severely out shot and outplayed it took an amazing effort by Brian O'Quinn and a Seth Lilburn goal in the extra period to secure the win.

Friday night's semifinal match up was far different, however, as the only stat that wasn't tied up in the end was the score: a 2-1 OT Ram win.

The Minutemen knew what they were up against coming in, as Rhode Island is capable of fielding a multitude of singularly talented players as well as two of the previous year's All-Americans – striker Nicholas McCreath and midfielder Anthony Curtis.

Although URI boasted the potent offense it was the Minutemen who lired the first volles. Fueled by an embarrassing 7-0 loss to the Rams in last year's tourney, UMass opened up with a series of quality scoring chances.

Following a Minuteman flurry, striker Fred Kinateder displayed the type of play that makes him lethal to opposing defenses. The junior timed his run perfectly, staying onside until the ball was played that unleashed him one on one with the goaltender. Aggressive Ram goalie Mark Bryant came off his line, only to be embarrassed as Kinateder faked around him. The fallen Bryant could do nothing but look on, and probably pray, as the junior found himself too deep in the box to send the ball home.

Following the UMass chance URI turned the tide for over 24 minutes. URI led the visiting defense a steady diet of scoring opportunities.

Possibly the best chance for the Rams potent offense came with just under 30 minutes left to play in the first frame. After connecting on a series of passes the home team sent a 20-yard cross into the box. McCreath skied over the UMass defenders heading the ball towards the lower left corner. O'Quinn reacted diving across his line to make the save.

The Minutemen were able to stave off the Ram attack for the rest of the period as each team entered half time with a zero in the scoring column.

At the very outset of the second half UMass was on the prowl again. Yuri Morales started the play when he beat a defender just outside the box, before flicking the ball with an artists touch through the URI defense and into the path of an oncoming teammate. Kinateder made a beautiful diagonal run across the area and onto the pass. The striker one-touched the shot past the on-rushing keeper. The ball beat the keeper but not the post as another UMass scoring chance fell by the waist side.

Once again the Rams countered a Minuteman attack with a barrage of their own, this time the outcome was successful. With just over 40 minutes to play co-captain J.R. Pounces was caught up field, leaving the middle of the field devoid of UMass defenders. URI took advantage of his absence, as Gareth Elliot intercepted the captain's pass before springing Curtis on a long ball into the box. Curtis ran on to it and waited for O'Quinn to make the first move. The UMass keeper obliged but as quickly as O'Quinn left his line, the ball was in the back of the net, signaling an eruption in the crowd and a celebration of all who wear the blue clad jerseys.

The Minutemen fought tooth and nail for the equalizer but retribution was not obtained until the last possible moment.

Two corner kicks and three long throws led to a hit post and a brushed crossbar in the final seven minutes of play. In a last ditch effort the Maroon and White earned a corner kick with just under a minute left in regulation. The ball was sent into the heart of the penalty area where a scuffle for a clean strike ensued. Finally, UMass got an open look on it, but as the ball sailed towards its destination it struck the hand of a Rhode Island player, causing the referee to point to the penalty spot.

Tension was high as Lilburn, a senior, lined up behind the ball, with his laser sight locked intently on heating the Ram keeper. Lilburn, as cool as a veteran can be, stepped up and drilled the ball into the side netting.

The goal sent the match to OT but unfortunately for the Massachusetts faithful, their hopes for a trip to the Atlantic 10 finals were crushed in a matter of minutes. On a play that wasn't perfect or scripted, a URI centering pass deflected off of a UMass defender and onto the foot of Elliot who blasted the game winner from five yards away.

Although Massachusetts left the field in defeat, nine starters will return next year with the same goal in mind: a conference championship.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
The UMass men's soccer team suffered a heart-breaking defeat to Rhode Island in the Atlantic 10 tournament. The overtime loss ended the Minutemen's turn-around season.

Mancini moves on

She's unblemished, no she's flawless, no wait she's perfect, She's Francessa Mancini and she is 12-0 on the season. Mancini, who has played in the No. 1 singles spot all year for the Massachusetts women's tennis team, is now getting a chance to strut her stuff for the rest of the region to see.

The native Italian is a No. 17 seed at the ITA east regional championships. The tournament is set on the campus of William & Mary in picturesque Williamsburg, VA.

Mancini received a bye in the first round before defeating Hartford's Sabine Dyrchs 6-1, 7-5. She now moves on to the third round where she will face Alena Mitackova from Hampton. Mancini takes on Mitackova in the round of 32 as she tries to push her unbeaten record to 13-0.

The Milan native is also in the doubles tournament and success has been just as plentiful. Teamed with partner Iafra Depontes, the UMass doubles team scored a major upset of the No. 1 seeded squad.

Depontes and Mancini defeated Buis and Troch from the host school William & Mary. The match, an eight game pro set, was closely contested but the UMass netters pulled it out winning 8-6.

-Matthew F. Sacco

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Award winner!

Women's soccer goalie Julie Podhrasky was named A-10 Defensive Player of the Year.

Water polo earns right to play for NCAA berth

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The mission at the beginning of the weekend for the Massachusetts men's water polo team was simple, play good defense and qualify for the Eastern Championships. All they had to do to accomplish this was finish in the top four at the CWPA Northern Division Playoffs held this past weekend in Cambridge, Ma. However, this would not be an easy task with the Minutemen having to face off against three of the top 20 teams in the country including No. 11 St. Francis who had already gotten the better of the Minutemen this season on two occasions.

Mission Accomplished! The Minutemen (23-11, 11-3 CWPA) placed second in Cambridge by playing some of their best defense of the season and getting some clutch goals from juniors Carlos Ramos and Mike Foley as well as sophomore Justin Houck.

UMass opened play on Friday night with a convincing 15-2 triumph over the United States Merchant Marine Academy. Freshman goalie Rodrigo Gonzalez led the way on the defensive front for the Minutemen as he tallied nine saves. At the other end of the pool Ramos and Houck each notched a hat trick while sophomore Brady Hahn added a pair. Freshman Marcus Meyer, who had scored only six goals in 19 quarters all season, also added a couple for the Minutemen in the romp.

The Minutemen headed back into the pool on Saturday for a match up with tournament hosts, No. 19 Harvard. Harvard, who earlier defeated Fordham 18-8 to set up the encounter with UMass, was looking to defeat the Minutemen after failing in three prior attempts this season. Saturday was no different, as the Maroon and White walked all over the Crimson en route to a 12-2 victory, which clinched a spot in the Eastern Championships to be held in two weeks time in Providence. Junior Adam Moore led the way for the Minutemen with three goals while Ramos and junior Antonio Maldonado each added a pair.

These two wins set the stage for Sunday and a date with No. 15 Queens College, one of two teams to beat the Minutemen in league play this season. UMass had split their two previous meetings with the Knights so far this season and proceeded to take the rubber match by a score of 8-7 on Sunday morning.

The Minutemen trailed 2-0 at the end of the first quarter but refused to roll over and die and went into halftime tied at 3. The second half was just as tight as the first but the Minutemen were able to take a one-goal lead into the fourth and were able to hold on for an 8-7 triumph.

Ramos, Foley, and Houck were all huge upfront for UMass with two goals apiece while sophomore Chad Arnold and junior Greg Trayer each added a tally for the Minutemen. At the other end of the pool the entire defense did its job as Vanderwall was only forced into making five saves. The victory for the Minutemen, their fourth straight, qualified them for the Championship game on Sunday afternoon against No. 11 St. Francis.

However, this is where the fairy tale would end as the Terriers defeated the Minutemen 9-6. As was the case in the match with Queens the Minutemen overcame an early deficit to go into halftime tied at three. Fatigue then set and the Minutemen were unable to finish off the comeback despite a ten save performance from Vanderwall in the UMass net.

The Minutemen return to action in two weeks time at the Eastern Championships in Providence. Victory in the eight-team tournament will garner an automatic bid to the NCAA Championships in Malibu, CA.

Buzzer-beater downs UMass

Newcomers show promise in loss

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Friday night's exhibition game between the Massachusetts men's basketball team and the California Midwest All-Stars answered a lot of questions about the new faces in the Minuteman lineup.

The one big question, however, went unanswered: can the new look Maroon and White actually win?

All-Stars	83
UMass	82

Bruiser Flint's squad came within five seconds of a victory against the west coast barnstormers, until former Indiana Hoosier Charlie Miller canned an 18-foot fall-away from the left wing to lift the All-Stars to an 83-82 victory at the William D. Mullins Center.

The season-opener put several of Flint's young guns on center stage, in particular forwards Jackie Rogers and Willie Jenkins and guard Jameel Pugh. Rogers got the starting nod at power forward and scored 11 points in 19 minutes, while Jenkins and Pugh came off the bench to put up 12 and eight points, respectively.

"I'm really pleased with how the new guys played," Flint said. "Everybody had their moments, though Willie and Jameel really stepped up and surprised me."

The first 10 minutes of the game were a dogfight of back-and-forth scoring, with forward Winston Smith knocking down UMass' first points of the year via a left elbow three-pointer. Guard Shannon Crooks also provided further home-team heat early, taking a steal from All-Star Willie Coleman in for a layup and following shortly thereafter with a trifecta from the top of the key.

Flint's first substitution brought in four fresh faces for UMass, a trend that would continue throughout the evening.

"[Flint] was subbing in fours and fives because he wanted to see how guys would do," Crooks said. "I was more than satisfied with how we played together."

Two of those early subs, Jenkins and pivot Micah Brand, showed that uncanny cohesiveness right from their first series on the floor together. Brand took an entry pass from Jonathan DePina and backed into the brick wall of 6-foot-9 All-Star Courtney James, a former pro prospect out of Minnesota. Jenkins called out "Mic" while coming off a screen along the right baseline, then took a Brand bounce pass and drained a rainbow three to pull UMass back out front, 13-10.

"We ran some good high-lows," Flint said. "As you can see, Willie isn't bashful. For the first 15 minutes we played like someone was holding a gun to our head, except for Willie, he did some really good things for us off the bench."

The All-Stars weren't just holding a gun on the Minutemen, they were pulling the trigger behind timely shots from Miller (16 points), James (11) and former California-Berkeley standout Michael Gill (a game-high 26). Miller hit two big threes to key an early 26-10 run by the All-Stars, and Gill caused innumerable UMass substitutions with his tenacity in the paint.

"That's the problem with a team like this: they have four guys who can handle the ball and spread you out," Flint said. "Every time Gill got the ball, he either made a shot or got one for someone else."

The Minutemen went into the locker room at halftime down 43-37.

The early goings of the third quarter saw a spirited comeback from the home team, as Crooks sank back-to-back threes around a Gill jumper to pull UMass within two, 47-45. Cal-Midwest came charging back down the floor and All-Star Greg McQuay swooped in for a fast-break layup, but trailing Minuteman center Kitwana Rhymer swatted McQuay's floater into the stands with a roar.

A Rogers transition slam and an inside second-chance bucket from Jenkins kept UMass within one over the next three minutes, until Pugh's first college basket put the home team back on top, 58-57, with 10:31 to play. The freshman from California then stuck a pair of three-point daggers, the second from the top of the key at the 7:14 mark to lock the game at 66-all.

"The way Jameel played was a big surprise to me," Flint said. "He did a lot of things he hasn't been doing in practice."

The man who came up biggest down the stretch for UMass was Eric Williams, the transfer from Syracuse who sat out last season due to eligibility constraints. The 6-foot-8 Brooklyn native shook off some early rust (he was blocked by the rim on a dunk attempt and ended up flat on his back) by slamming home a Rhymer miss and then draining a pair of free throws to stake his team to an 80-79 edge with under a minute to play.

Williams came within one rebound of a double-double in his Mullins debut, racking up 10 points and nine caroms.

The two teams traded what looked like knockout punches in the game's closing seconds, as a McQuay tip-in gave the All-Stars back the lead until a Crooks layup put UMass back on top by one, 82-81. That was when Miller worked his final magic, faking a drive and pulling up to stick the game-winner.

DePina had one final shot at stealing the win, but his desperation heave at the buzzer bounced harmlessly off the glass. The point guard acknowledged that in a regular season situation, Flint would have probably called timeout and diagramed an offensive scheme.

"He was just playing it out," said DePina, who dished out a game-high five assists in the loss. "Through the bad times and the good times, we just kept playing."

Flint had plenty of bright spots to take away from the defeat. The team shot a solid 72 percent from the charity stripe, including perfect 2-for-2 nights from Rhymer, Williams, Jenkins and junior Ronell Blizzard. Crooks poured in a team-high 17 points and shot 3-of-4 from beyond the 3-point arch, looking more than comfortable filling in for suspended superstar Monti Mack.

Guys are picking the plays up pretty well, and we came out with great intensity in the second half," Crooks said. "I was satisfied with how we played; when we get Monti back we'll be even tighter."

The team returns to action this coming Friday, when roundball nemesis Stalmaster.com invades Mullins for a 7 p.m. showdown.

UMass forward Ronell Blizzard (3) riles a pass over the head of California Midwest All-Star Chad Austin. A fast second heave by Jonathan DePina (1) fell short, leaving the Minutemen with an 82-81 exhibition loss.

■ football

continued from page 10

Villanova Head Coach Andy Talley said, "We could not get a lot of things done."

The defense, after surrendering 414 yards to the A-10's worst rushing offense, had to deal with Brian Westbrook.

Whipple tabbed Westbrook as "the best player in the conference" at Wednesday's Sports Luncheon.

Westbrook, who came into the game as the league's leading rusher and the leader in receptions for Villanova, was stymied by the Minuteman defense. The All-America candidate was held to 52 yards on 13 carries.

"I was really proud of the way the defense responded," Whipple said. "After last week we challenged them with [Brian] Westbrook. After giving up that many yards last week, we were concerned that he would run all over us."

"Every time I go into a game I expect to have a big day," Westbrook said.

But UMass did not allow Westbrook to run rampant on it, just as Stephan Lewis had the week prior.

"I finally saw a group of guys come together this week," Whipple said of his team's effort on defense.

With a 28-point lead heading into the second half the Maroon and White did not let up. Whipple, just as he had done in the first half continued to go for it on fourth down. The success carried over as the Minutemen picked up another two conversion. These two, although they did not lead to the amount of points that they had in the previous half, allowed for UMass to keep control in time of possession.

The Maroon and White held the ball for 35:40 seconds.

"The best defense is offense, keeping the defense off the field," Lucero said.

Villanova would tack on two meaningless scores in the fourth quarter to make the game look more respectable, but the score was not indicative of the domination that took place on Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

"This was a crucial win because it gives us six wins, a winning record," Whipple said. "This showed a lot of character on the guys part.

"This is one of the best wins we have had," Whipple said. "There is no question, with the things we went through. It was our best win of the year."

"They are just a better team than us," Talley said.

Confidence proves to be differnce in success; Minutemen use it to get back on right track

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

It's the fire that burns in your veins after your worst defeat of the season. It's the energy to use to shut down the conference's most lethal offensive weapon. It's the rush that carries you to your best half of football and your biggest win of the year, and sets you up for the greatest challenge of all.

It's confidence. And it made all the difference to the Massachusetts football team in its home win Saturday over Villanova.

Confidence came largely from a brutal week of practice following last weekend's embarrassing defeat at New Hampshire. Head Coach Mark Whipple ran his troops furiously, barking about how Villanova and tailback sensation Brian Westbrook were "licking their chops" at facing the suddenly porous Minuteman D.

Confidence on gameday meant establishing faith in signal caller Richard Lucero and letting him throw something other than screens. The gifted man was finally let loose against the Wildcats, and he responded by lofting a 41-yarder to DeShon Hardy on the third play of the game. On the home team's next drive, it was a 37-yard strike to Adonis Kinsey that set up UMass' second-straight touchdown.

"I wanted to let Lucero know that I had a lot of confidence in him," Whipple said. "I think he was trying to convince everyone that he's a really good player, but there's a difference between confidence and cockiness. He's earning himself much better now; he has much better presence and much better poise than he had earlier."

Confidence through the air for UMass also meant making the plays without its three best receivers, all of whom went down with injuries over the first five weeks of the season. The remaining wideouts all played key roles in the win Saturday, as Lucero's three scoring strikes went to three different targets in Hardy (33 yards), Eric Bross (23) and fullback Pete Carielli (27).

"A lot of it has to do with confidence that our receivers make the plays," Whipple said. "Last week they dropped the ball a few times, but they're getting better and they'll have to continue to improve as we go."

Confidence meant digging in on defense, facing the Atlantic 10's most dangerous rushing threat after yielding an incredible 414 ground yards at UNH. The Minutemen stacked the front and forced Nova QB Scott Lukash to beat them with the pass; the redshirt freshman wilted under pressure to the tune of two sacks and three interceptions. Westbrook, meanwhile, spun his wheels for only 52 rushing yards and no touchdowns.

"I'm really proud of the way our defense responded after last week," Whipple said. "We did a great job stopping [Westbrook], which kept Lukash from setting up play action on us."

The charged up Minutemen got a career performance from Anton McKenzie (two forced fumbles, one recovery) and yet another stellar day from tri-captain Kole Ayi (a game-high 12 tackles, one interception) to reestablish their confidence on defense.

"We had to step it up big time today, especially against Westbrook," McKenzie said. "We had to bring the wood."

Confidence will now have to fuel another tough week of practice in preparation for UMass' winner-take-all showdown with Delaware this Saturday at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. The Blue Hens had a chance to cement their hold on the A-10's top spot at home against UNH this past Saturday, but lost in overtime to the Wildcats 45-44.

When asked how he will prepare his team for its shot at toppling Delaware, Whipple got right to the point in assessing what style works best with this year's Minutemen.

"With these guys, I've gotta be an asshole for another week," Whipple said. "But I just felt that if I could get this team to the Delaware game with a chance at a championship, everything's there. If you're playing in November, and you're still in the championship hunt, you're having a good season."

Turner and Turner fuel UMass in OT win

Minutemen hold off furious Lowell comeback

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

LOWELL – A win is a win.

For the Massachusetts hockey team, a victory was just about the only positive it could take away from Friday night's victory over fellow state school and rival UMass Lowell.

UMass	5
Lowell	4

In the 5-4 overtime triumph, the Minutemen looked just about as lackadaisical and disorganized as they possibly could be, seeing a four goal lead they amassed in the first period disappear by the third.

"I don't think we ever had the momentum," said Head Coach Don Cahoon. "We went into the locker room up 4-0 and I read them the riot act."

Nonetheless, with the teams tied at four and with just over 14 seconds left in overtime, senior captain Jeff Turner took a pass from Martin Miljko, which sprung a two-on-one break.

Turner brought the puck up the left side and faked a shot to get junior Chris Gustafson to drop to the ice. Turner waited until he was by Gustafson, then crossed a pass to his brother Tim, who promptly flipped the puck into the net just before it came off its moorings for his second tally of the night.

The win rained the Minutemen's overall record to 2-3-1 and to 2-1-0 in Hockey East conference play.

"We had a good game plan against Lowell," Jeff said. "We came out knowing pretty much what to expect from them."

Lowell tied the game at four when a floating shot by sophomore standout Ron Hainsey went to UMass netminder Mike Johnson's right, but bounced off the boards to Dan Fontas, who was standing directly in front of the right side of the net, at which point he stuffed it in the open cage.

They began the erase of the four-goal deficit with a trio of goals in the second period. The goals came in a span of 4:24, the final two coming just 27 seconds apart.

Lowell's third tally was indicative of the disorganization of the Maroon and White defense. With Brad Nizwantowski skating off the ice with an injured right knee, R.J. Tolan skated through the center of the ice and took three shots in a row, putting the third one behind Johnson.

Their first two goals came on the power play, with freshman Thomas Pock in the penalty box both times. The first goal was scored when Hainsey ripped a slapshot above Johnson's blocker and into the top corner of the net.

The second one, scored less than four minutes later, saw Hainsey keep a puck in the offensive zone at the right point and get it to Ed McGrane just outside the right circle, where he too beat Johnson on a shot up high.

"[Lowell] played harder than any team we've played against this year," Jeff added.

Tim Turner opened up the scoring in the first period when his brother spun around and sent a pass to the front of the net. The puck glanced off Martin Miljko's stick and right to Turner, who slid it under goaltender Cam McCormick's right pad.

The Minutemen got their second tally of the night when Pock passed the puck up the left side to Jimmy Callahan, who fought past a check by Jerramie Dominh to slide a crossing pass to Scott Horvath, who lifted the puck over McCormick's glove.

The Maroon and White made it three goals on three shots with Steve Shonina in the penalty box for the River Hawks. Pock passed the rubber to Toni Soderholm at the point, who fired a low shot to the right side of the net. Brad Nizwantowski got his stick on the puck and lofted it into the top left corner of the net.

UMass got its fourth tally of the first on the power play as well. With Frenchman Yorick Treille in the penalty box after running over Miljko, Jeff Turner fired a shot wide of the net that bounced off the end boards and onto the stick of Callahan.

The sophomore then pushed the puck into the open net. That was all for McCormick, who allowed four goals and failed to make a single save.

In the other cage, Johnson was incredibly impressive in his first start since the season opener at Wisconsin, making 35 saves out of the 39 he faced to record the win.

"I felt good coming in tonight," Johnson said. "I had the mindset where I wanted to have some fun tonight."

Lowell's tough luck was best exemplified when Treille hit two posts in the second and a deflection hit off the butt end of Johnson's stick while his back was turned.

Sometimes, as the saying goes, it's better to be lucky than it is to be good.

"We got a couple of lucky bounces early on, but as far as a full sixty minutes, we certainly didn't play that," Turner said.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Tim Turner scored the game-winner with 14 seconds remaining in overtime to beat Hockey east rival Lowell, 5-4.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

OFFcampus Antics Find Laura giving th Chia head a haircut on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

One room in 3 bedroom apt. available. $337/month all inclusive. Located at Cliffside apts. in Sunderland. Contact Jyll Evens @ 397-9887

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $830/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

Colonial Vlg Apt open in Jan. 2Brd, hot water incld: $600/month. Call 256-1232 for more info

AUTO FOR SALE

Used car for Sale 1991 Mercury Sable ST Wagon. 6cy 3L, automatic, 118T miles. Asking for $1700 Contact: Roland Weidisch phone: 413-659-2568 e-mail:roland_weidisch@yahoo.com

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

94 Cavalier 131k ABS, AC, PS, PW, PD, work car. $1650 Call Steve 256-3256

EMPLOYMENT

Reliable and Reasonable dog care person wanted in Sunderland. 665-2779

Paid Business Internship Soph, Jr, + Sr. Preffered. For info and application Go to http://www.jablon.com

HUMAN SERVICES - Want to make a difference in someone's life? Permanent and relief positions available to support individual in their home. Be a mentor, share your interests and support theirs. Call (413) 323-9174 to start the application process. AA/EOE

Work From Home - $1200 to $5000 pt/ft 1-800-716-3528

EMPLOYMENT

Be your own boss this summer. Learn how to run a small business. Make more money than your peers. Call Steve 290-7161 leave message.

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

NURSING STUDENTS: Pick up some home care experience and earn some extra cash. Work as an Aide for our patients in the Amherst/Northampt on area. Various days and hours available. Call today. Interim HealthCare, 586-7365

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

Attention! Work form home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

EMPLOYMENT

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 9, 2000 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office for the Spring, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact Student Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1-2 females for 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Massage in you own home! $15 per hour message student Michael 585-8577

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Montreal College Party Weekends Nov. 24 + Dec. 30. From $119. Includes round trip motorcoach. 3 days 2 nights Hotel Downtown full Breakfast + Dinner. Departs Boston, Springfield, + Hartford. Call 1-617-567-0062 Global Tours

TRAVEL

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

Your Ad Could Be Right HERE!!

Let THOUSANDS of people see what you have to offer!

Place your AD today!

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

8 • HSCN Bulletin Board
9 • CNN Headline News
10 • CBS 4 Boston
11 • ABC-40 Springfield
12 • PBS 57 Springfield
13 • HSCN Movie Channel
14 • UPN 20 Hartford
15 • HSCN Pay Movie Channel
16 • NBC 30 New Britain
17 • Fox 61 Hartford
18 • PBS 24 Hartford
19 • NBC 10 Springfield
20 • International Channel
21 • UMASS (Auditorium Channel)
22 • WB 56 New Haven
23 • ESPN
24 • ESPN2
25 • Weather Channel
26 • Sunrise Beach
27 • C-Span
28 • CNN
29 • CNN Headline News
30 • Lifetime
31 • USA
32 • TBS
33 • TNT
34 • E!
35 • VH1
36 • Discovery
37 • Nickelodeon
38 • Nick at Nite
39 • TV Land
40 • Comedy Central
41 • BET
42 • Univision
43 • Bloomberg Financial Network
44 • College TV Network
45 • MTV
46 • MTV2
47 • VH1
48 • The Learning Channel

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 6, 2000

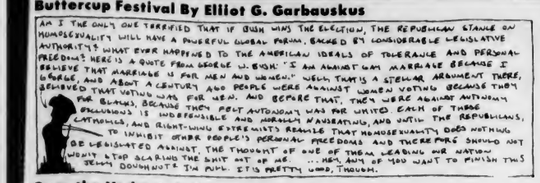
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Antiques Roadshow (N)		American Experience		Healthcare Crisis		Connecticut Journal
WFSB	3	News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Yes, Dear (N)	Raymond	Becker (N) (N)	Family Law "Telling Lies" (N) (N)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WBZ	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear (N)	Raymond	Becker (N) (N)	Family Law "Telling Lies" (N) (N)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WCVB	5	News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N)	20/20 Downtown (N)		NFL Football: Minnesota Vikings at Green Bay Packers. (In Stereo Live) (N)
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless (N)	Friends (N)	Nanny (N)	7th Heaven "Broke" (In Stereo)		Roswell "Harvest" (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)		Friends (N)	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Dateline (In Stereo) (N)		Deadline (In Stereo) (N)		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	7th Heaven (In Stereo) (N)		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Moesha (N) (N)	Parkers (N) (N)	Hughleys (N)	Girlfriends (N)	News		Arrest & Trial	Blind Date
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Dateline (In Stereo) (N)		Deadline (In Stereo) (N)		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons (N)	Frasier (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Friends (N)	Boston Public "Chapter Three"		Ally McBeal "Two's a Crowd" (N)		News		Friends (N)	Frasier (N)
WWLP	22	News (N)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Dateline (In Stereo) (N)		Deadline (In Stereo) (N)		Third Watch (N) (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Antiques Roadshow (N)		American Experience		Frontline "The Choice 2000" (In Stereo) (N)
WGGB	40	News (N)	ABC News	Sentinel (N)	Frasier (N)	20/20 Downtown (N)		NFL Football: Minnesota Vikings at Green Bay Packers. (In Stereo Live) (N)
WSBK	38	Judge Judy (N)	Judge Judy (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Frasier (N)	Moesha (N) (N)	Parkers (N) (N)	Hughleys (N)	Girlfriends (N)	Frasier (N)	Mad Abt. You	Spin City (N)	Spin City (N)
WTBS	72	Roseanne (N)	Roseanne (N)	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Movie: "Michael" (1996, Fantasy) John Travolta, Andie MacDowell				Extra "Greece"	Late Show	Dharma & Greg	Dharma & Greg
A&E	52	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Burned" (N)		Biography "Presidential Candidates: George W. Bush & Al Gore"				Biography Close-Up		Law & Order "Virtue" (N)
CNN	29	Worldview (N)	Moneyline Newshour (N) (N)		Crossfire (N)	Countdown to Election Day		Larry King Live (N)		Newsstand (N)		Sports	Moneyline (N)
COM	63	Saturday Night Live (N)		Daily Show (N)	Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Saturday Night Live		Canned Ham	Com.-Presents	Daily Show (N)	Stein's Money
DISC	42			Wild Discovery "Wild Asia" (N)		Attacks and Capture		Robots Among Us (N)		Prosecutors-Justice		Justice Files	"Unsolved Mysteries"
ESPN	31	Sportscenter (N)		2-Minute Drill	Monday Night Countdown (N)			Figure Skating: World Championships -- Pairs and Dance				Dog Show (N)	ESPNews
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Jaclyn Smith"		Hidden Victims: Children		The Truth About Lying" (1998, Suspense) John Ritter (N)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	Direct Effect	Jackass	Choose or Lose: Yoke'em (In Stereo)		Search-Cure		Cribs	Diary			Christina a MTV Moments
NICK	55	Sponge	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! (N)	Rugrats (N)	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	59	Sliders "Stoker" (In Stereo) (N)		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "Descent" (N)		Outer Limits "The Donor" (N)		Outer Limits "Essence of Life"		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	60	World of Amusement		Killer Viruses		Code Blue: Rush		Dangerous Police Videos		Incredible Hostage Rescues		Code Blue: Rush
TNT	35	ER "Exodus" (In Stereo) (N)		Pretender "Hope & Prey" (N)		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo) (N)				Bull (N)		Pretender "Prison Story" (N)
USA	33	Walker, Texas Ranger (N)		JAG "Wilderness of Mirrors" (N)		Nash Bridges "Hardball" (N)		★★ "Perfect Crime" (1997, Drama) Mitch Kapture. (In Stereo)				Martin (N)	Martin (N)
HBO	43	★★★ "Without Limits" (1998, Biography) Billy Crudup. PG-13 (N)				★★★ "Bulworth" (1998, Comedy-Drama) Warren Beatty. (N)				Legend		★★ "Goodbye Lover" (1998) Patricia Arquette. (N)
MAX	45	(4:30)	★★½ "Finnegan" (1994, Science Fiction) (N)			★★½ "Dumpier Old Men" (1995, Comedy) Jack Lemmon. PG-13		★★½ "Dryer Inventions" (1998, Drama) (N)				★★ "Fifth Warrior"
SHOW	65	★★½ "The Spitfire Grill" (1996, Drama) Alison Elliott. PG-13 (N)				"Possessed" (2000, Horror) Timothy Dalton. (In Stereo) (N)				Resurrection Blvd. "Chollas"		"Warm Texas Rain" (1998) (N)

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskus



AM I THE ONLY ONE TERRIFIED THAT IF BUSH WINS THE ELECTION, THE REPUBLICAN STANCE ON HOMOSEXUALITY WILL HAVE A POWERFUL LEGAL PREMISE, BACKED BY CONSIDERABLE LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY? WHAT EVER HAPPENED TO THE AMERICAN IDEALS OF TOLERANCE AND PERSONAL FREEDOM? HERE IS A QUOTE FROM GEORGE W. BUSH: "I AM AGAINST GAY MARRIAGE BECAUSE I BELIEVE THAT MARRIAGE IS FOR MEN AND WOMEN." WELL THAT IS A STELLAR ARGUMENT THERE, GEORGE, AND ABOUT A CENTURY AGO PEOPLE WERE AGAINST WOMEN VOTING BECAUSE THEY BELIEVED THAT VOTING WAS FOR MEN AND BEFORE THAT, THEY WERE AGAINST ANTI-SLAVERY. BECAUSE THEY FELT ANTI-SLAVERY WAS FOR WHITES EACH OF THESE CATEGORIES ARE INDEFENSIBLE AND HORRIBLY HUMILIATING, AND UNTIL THE REPUBLICANS, TO INHIBIT OTHER PEOPLE'S PERSONAL FREEDOMS AND THEREFORE SHOULD NOT BE LEGISLATED AGAINST. THE THOUGHT OF ONE OF THEM LEADING OUR NATION WOULD STOP ME DEAD IN THE SHIT MY PANTS. ...HEH, ANY OF YOU WANT TO PUNISH THIS DEMON DOWNNUTS? I'M PUNK. IT IS PRETTY WORD, THOUGH.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

CLARA...WE'LL SHOW YOUR MOM & DAD HOW MUCH THEY MEAN TO EACH OTHER...HOW THEY CAN'T LIVE WITHOUT EACH OTHER.
RIGHT?... HOW IMPORTANT COMMITMENTS...
...HOW MEANINGFUL SHARING YOUR ENTIRE LIFE WITH ONE PERSON CAN BE...HOW DAY AFTER DAY AFTER ENDLESS, SUFFOCATING DAYS OF NUMBING SAMENESS IS...IS...
...IS A GOOD THING.
THANK YOU, DR. LAURA.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

JOE IS COMING OVER TO HANG OUT TONIGHT. HE'S GONNA BE WORKING IN FRANCE NEXT WEEK. SO-HE'S GONNA WORK IN FRANCE?
"WORK"? HE HAS TO WORK THERE FOR-
I DIDN'T THINK ANYBODY "WORKED" IN FRANCE. I THOUGHT THAT WAS WHERE YOU WENT TO GO ON STRIKE. OR IS THAT GERMANY?
NO, NO GERMANY IS WHERE YOU GO TO GET PAID TO TAKE A VACATION

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

HONEY!? HAVE YOU SEEN MY...
I'M LOOKING.
I KNOW THIS CAMPAIGN WAS ORIGINALLY MY IDEA, BUT IT'S BECOME AN UNMITIGATED EMBARRASSMENT.
MR. DUKE IS NOW PROPOSING THAT WE TOTALLY OUT OF CONTROL TRUCK IF YOU KNOW WHAT'S GOOD FOR YOU, YOU'LL JUST GET OUT NOW!
GOOD NEWS! I'M RECORDING TO RUN AS A BLACK MAN.
I'LL BE OUT IN THE CAR.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

HACHOOO!
CURSE YOU.
COME IT OCCURS TO ME AGAIN? THAT RATHER THAN SAYING BLESS YOU TO PEOPLE WHO SPRAY THEIR SPIT AND GERMS IN MY FACE, I SHOULD BE DOING QUITE THE OPPOSITE
SO CURSE YOU, EILEEN. YOU INCONSIDERATE, EAR-SPLITTING, MICROBE-SPEWING FOUNTAIN.
CURSE YOU FOR THAT, TOO!

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You will meet a variety of personalities from materialistic to idealistic. Work on getting along with different people today. Your versatility could mean success.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Emphasize harmony, and domestic tranquility in your daily life. Today might demand the possible need for a change of either residence or with personal relationships. Don't get stuck in a rut.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Time is on your side, wait and listen. Focus on the unknown and maintain an emotional equilibrium. You will spend much of your day entertaining others with facades and illusions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Get down to business and let others know that you mean what you say. As long as you follow through with your original initiatives others will support you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You could be knocking on doors of fame and fortune today. Where you were previously denied recognition, you will be acknowledged both personally and professionally.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Make a fresh start in a new direction and ignore others who say it cannot be done. Focus on originality, creativity and a willingness to take a chance on romance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You will be called on to mediate a disagreement today. Try to personally avoid volatile conflict with others. Things might seem rough but a calm attitude can go a long way.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Take special care in personal safety today. Focus on eating well and taking good care of yourself to prevent recklessness from resulting in harm or illness.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Feeling that you have been overlooked will surface today. Speak your piece and face the music. You could be the victim of envy and lack of confidence. If you can survive, you win.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You will receive an important written notice today that you must act upon. If it results in consequences that are positive, celebration is in order.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Peculiar circumstances will slow you down. Look behind the scenes, and utilize your psychic powers. A secret will be revealed today that will work in your favor.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Your tendencies to march to a different drummer may get you into trouble with your family or a close friend today. Focus on your feelings to get over any misunderstandings; this conflict can easily be resolved with communication.

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 52	HIGH: 54	HIGH: 62
LOW: 34	LOW: 39	LOW: 36

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

I hate doing laundry on campus. My clothes never get clean, they just get hot and shrink!
Aw, come on. It can't be that bad.
This jacket used to be white.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

HI. I'M HERE TO SEE THE SHRINK. DR. NUTZ.
I AM NOT A "SHRINK." I AM A BOARD CERTIFIED PSYCHOTHERAPIST.
AND MY NAME IS NOT PRONOUNCED "NUTS." IT'S PRONOUNCED "NOOTS." NUT-? NOOTS? I AM NOT NUTS! I AM NOOTS!
WHAT'S WITH HIM?
HE'S A LITTLE BIT "NOOTY."
NO NO NO

Dilbert By Scott Adams

THE EVIL H.R. DIRECTOR
WHAT NEW EVIL DO YOU BRING ME, UNION STEWARD STUART?
EMPLOYEES SHOULD NOT BE ALLOWED TO MOVE COMPANY COMPUTERS. THAT'S UNION WORK
THAT'S OLD EVIL
IT'S NEW IF WE INCLUDE PDAS AND LAPTOPS.
I LIKE THE CUT OF YOUR GIBLETS.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

JUST IN CASE YOUR SICK, PERVERTED MIND THINKS THAT OUR CLOSE PROXIMITY IN THIS BUS WILL SOMEHOW REKINDLE SOME OLD CHEMISTRY WE ONCE HAD, FORGET IT."
QUITE THE OPPOSITE. I'M SICKENED BY THIS! I CAN'T WAIT TO GET OFF THIS BUS!
"YEAH?" WELL THE SAME GOES FOR ME! ONLY TEN TIMES MORE!
DO YOU WANT TO GET TOGETHER LATER AND HAVE A BEER?
HOW 'BOUT AROUND 8-ISH?

MONKEY-BOX
BY PABU
www.monkey-box.net
DOUG'S PARENTS KNEW THIS DAY WOULD COME. AFTER HIS CLASSMATES VOTED HIM "MOST LIKELY TO HAVE A STARING CONTEST WITH A STUFFED HERBIVORE"
© 2000

Quote of the Day

"Donuts! Is there anything they can't do?"

-Homer Simpson

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Meatball Grinder

Ravioli Alfredo (vegetarian)

Brazilian Black Beans (vegan) (Berkshire, Franklin, Hampshire)

Pizza (Franklin)

Dinner

Roast Turkey

Vegetable Lasagna (vegetarian) (Berkshire, Franklin, Hampshire)

Spicy Tofu with Vegetables (vegan)

Pineapple Ham Steak (Worcester)

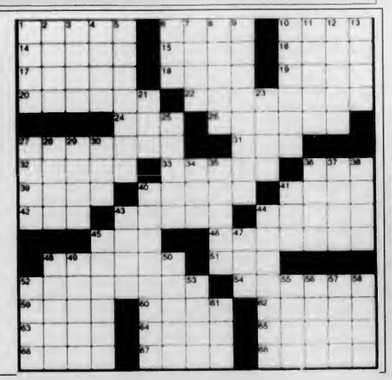
Collegian Night Graphics. If it wasn't for us you wouldn't be reading this rag.

ACROSS
1 Space shuttle's path
8 Mongolian desert
10 Shout
14 Itinerary
15 Senator Chambers
16 Threatening, as weather
17 Sing
19 Main-mashap
Pacific
20 Usual
22 National song
23 Soft-shell clams
24 Boring routine
26 Excel
27 Redcap's burden
31 Pooch
32 Mythical hunter
33 Free-for-all
35 Anybody
38 Norwegian city
40 Made a decision
41 Squeeze
42 Furious
43 Spotless
44 Tropical fruit
45 Crumpled mass
46 Stand-ins
48 Flashes
51 The woman
52 Surveyors' instruments
54 Turn into bone
59 Light bulb mass
60 Polite address
62 Made an oath
63 Yearn
64 Actress Sommer
65 Consumed
66 Clairvoyant
67 Bridle part
68 Tiffs

DOWN
1 "Free Willy" whale
2 Reddish-brown horse
3 Rifle end
4 Skin problem
5 Iran's capital
6 Prove
7 Bullfight cheers
8 African people
9 Held in mind
10 Apple-pie spice
11 Monsters
12 Disparaging remarks
13 Windows of the soul
21 Coffee cup
23 Lotion ingredient
25 City near Phoenix
27 Weaver's need
28 Be insolent
29 — the lily actor unnecessarily
30 Guns
34 BPO info
36 Does some banking
37 Overhang
38 Dec. holiday
39 Veteran
41 Knead
43 Soup containers
44 E stimates
45 Snowy period
47 "I get it!"
48 Jones or Kelly
49 Shaping machine
50 Not fresh
52 "Be the ball —"
53 Rice wine (var.)
55 Sprite
56 Pinch
57 Stew
58 Inclinations
61 Fellows

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-21-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Dan Santella
Copy Editor	Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Margie Smelkinson, Soren Nash

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Monday, November 6, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass crushes No. 4 UNH

Minutemen dominate Wildcats in victory

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

What a difference a night makes. Less than 24 hours after narrowly escaping Lowell with a 3-2 overtime victory, the Massachusetts hockey team turned in one of the biggest upsets in school history.

"It's almost unrecognizable when I look at last night's game and I watch it on tape," UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon said. "Clearly, I'd have to be very pleased with what I saw out there tonight."

Our team has two faces; we showed one last night, we showed a very different one tonight."

The Minutemen for the first time in school history beat New Hampshire via a shutout. More important than the shutout was the fact the Wildcats entered the game ranked No. 4 in the nation.

After a shaky start to the first period the Maroon and White came on strong and nowhere was this more evident than the power play goal that would prove to be the game winner.

UMass (5-5-1, 1-1-0 Hockey East) had killed off two early penalties to defenseman Randy Drohan, the first for roughing and the second for cross checking. Moments later UNH's Sean Austin got caught for a hooking penalty.

The Minutemen made the best of their man advantage when left Turner netted his second goal of the season on a slap shot from the blue line.

The senior captain won the faceoff to brother Tim who slid a pass to Samuli Jalkanen at the left point. Jalkanen held the puck and allowed the Secaucus, NJ native to skate to the right point. Turner then took a pass from the Finn and beat All-American candidate Ty Conklin through the five-hole for 1-0 lead.

The Maroon and White would make that lead hold up as All-Hockey East candidate Markus Helanen turned away 28 Wildcat shots en route to his second consecutive home shutout. The senior earned his fourth career shutout and his second in HE play with his performance.

"[Helanen] made all the saves he had to make," Cahoon said. "I've always told the goaltenders for years: stop the ones your supposed to stop, steal a couple along the way and everybody will refer to that as a great performance. I think that's pretty much how I would characterize [Helanen's] performance tonight."

The second period saw a great deal of up-and-down action with neither team being able to beat the others goaltender.

UNH (5-2-1, 1-1-0 HE) was unable to make the best of its chances on the power play in the second frame as the Minutemen did an excellent job of keeping the Wildcats on the perimeter and not allowing the vaunted attack to bang home any rebounds.

"I thought we did a real good job killing penalties," Cahoon said. "I thought we did a pretty good job of not giving up second chance opportunities."

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN
Scott Horvath and the UMass hockey team up-ended UNH, 3-0, to even their record at 3-3-1 on the year.

UMass had its best chance of the period on the power play but freshman Thomas Pöck hit the post on a blast from the slot and the opportunity to extend the lead was squandered.

The third period, which had not been friendly to the Maroon and White in its last two contests, proved to be what did UNH in.

UMass picked up two key goals 3:11 seconds apart, midway through the third period to seal the fate of the Wildcats.

The first of the two goals came off the stick of junior Martin Miljko. Miljko was the beneficiary of a brilliant play by Darcy King who let a crossice pass from Jay Shaw slide through his legs to the streaking Miljko. He made no mistake as he buried a wrist shot to push the lead to two goals.

"Darcy [King] made a clever play and let the puck slide through his legs. He said he knew I was there," Miljko said. "I just crossed the blue-line and just let 'er rip. I didn't even look up. It's just one of those lucky things, you just shoot and it goes in."

The Maroon and White attack would not stop there. Just over three minutes later Helanen made a long clearing pass onto the stick of Tim Turner. Turner made a spectacular move to split two UNH defenders and slipped the game's final goal through Conklin's legs.

"[The win] shows what coach Cahoon has implemented into our system," Jeff said. "I think tonight shows that guys are buying into what we are trying to do as far as offensively and defensively."

"We got outplayed tonight," UNH Head Coach Dick Umile said. "I thought UMass played very, very well. They're well coached, they came out and I think we played one period and they outplayed us in the second and third and just outright beat us, in all facets.

"I give credit to Donny [Cahoon] and his team, their playing well, this place is getting exciting, their filling it up and that's good."

A-10 Champs

UMass earns NCAA tourney bid

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

As if the cold, drizzly atmosphere wasn't bad enough – that overbearing institution known as tradition forced senior Patty Robinson of the Massachusetts field hockey team to flip over a Gatorade jug and unload its freezing, soggy contents on the crown of Head Coach Patty Shea.

"I'm never cooking you dinner again," exclaimed Shea immediately thereafter.

UMass	4
West C	0
UMass	3
Temple	0

And to think: It was all just a big 'thank you' for the Atlantic 10 Coach-of-the-Year, who had cooked her championship-hungry team a tasty lasagna dinner on Saturday night.

Well maybe that was not the reason.

But part of the rationale for Shea's dousing was that her team had just beaten the Temple Owls, 3-0, to capture its second consecutive A-10 championship. And with the win the Minutewomen earned a trip to the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

"Today was a 2-for-1 deal," Shea said. "We win it – we win the Atlantic 10 Championship and we also win a birth into the NCAA tournament with one singular performance. We achieved two of our goals today."

It was the easily the most important game of the year for UMass. Pick your cliché: Do or die, you snooze – you lose, a must win. Now, go ahead and store those truisms for the upcoming tournament. Because when it starts this week, it's "one and done." You lose and your season is over.

Sunday's A-10 final matched the No. 1 seed Minutewomen (17-3, 5-0 A-10) up against the No. 2 seeded Owls (11-11, 4-1) for that prized automatic tourney bid.

Neither team could find the net in the first half, but many a times Temple was there knocking on the UMass cage's door. Maroon and White goaltender Zowie Tucker just wouldn't let them in.

At 29:14 in that stanza Tucker made her first crucial save, falling to the ground for the denial. Ten minutes later, she made another great save, this time on a solid shot off an Owl penalty corner.

"She's a wall back there," Robinson said. "We know she's back there to pick up our mistakes."

Her most critical series of saves came with just under one minute remaining in the first half when she came out of the net and was forced to fall on the ball resulting in another Temple corner. But Tucker stopped the ensuing shot, and the Minutewomen defense was able to survive the scramble in front and knocked the ball out of the circle and watched the remaining first half seconds tick of the clock.

"If Zowie's not there to stop that ball – we're down 1-0 and we have to score two just to get ahead," Shea said. "And that's very, very difficult to do.

"We were lucky to get out of there 0-0 in the first half," she continued. "I think we were playing not to lose. And I told them at halftime that we must play to win this game. It has nothing to do with skill or anything. It has to do with what's in our hearts."

A sidebar to this game was that, for the seniors, It was the last time they would compete on the turf of Richard F. Garber field. Kristen Schmidt admittedly forgot about that.

"I actually forgot about that until someone told me at the end of the game," Schmidt said.

But yesterday, her mind did not lapse offensively. Schmidt scored three unanswered goals en route to her first hat trick of the season, and the Most Outstanding Player of the tournament award. She also tied the A-10 Championship weekend record for most goals with four.

Exactly two minutes (33:00) into the second half, Sarah Bohonowicz dribbled down into the left corner of the Temple end and crossed a pass that was knocked in by Schmidt past Owl goaltender Serene McGrath to give UMass the 1-0 lead.

Her second tally came just six minutes later (27:00) off a pass from junior Lindsay Abbot. It was a mere chip shot for the wide-open Schmidt who redirected it between the pipes, giving the Minutwomen the two-goal advantage.

Schmidt's final score came with 7:24 left in the contest. UMass set up for its usual penalty corner. But this time, when senior Lucy Koch made the delivery to Robinson from the end line, junior Anke Bruemmer faked her customary corner slap shot and instead Robinson made a pass to Schmidt who fired it past McGrath for the hat trick and the 3-0 lead. The ball was hit so hard that any fan could see the moisture spray off of it as it sailed toward its final destination.

"We scored three great goals and we didn't allow Temple to do anything in the second half," Shea said. "When they decided they were going to play to win this game Temple couldn't touch them."

Bruemmer, Tucker and Robinson were all named to the A-10 All-Tournament team.

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY, page 6

DAN SANTILLA/COLLEGIAN
Patty Robinson was named to the All-Conference team on Friday night and helped the Minutewomen win an A-10 title on Sunday.

UMass picks up pieces on Homecoming

Offense and defense combine to keep post-season hopes alive

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

It started with the coin toss. It ended with the biggest win of the season.

The Massachusetts football team with its back to the wall, pulled all the pieces together and had its most complete game of the season, a 38-17 win over Villanova on Homecoming Weekend.

UMass	38
Villanova	17

"We came out ready to play," UMass Head Coach Mark Whipple said. "It certainly seemed like a different team than I have coached the last three weeks."

UMass (6-3, 4-2 Atlantic 10), came into the game on the heels of a devastating loss to New Hampshire, but responded by electing to receive the opening kickoff. The decision paid dividends as the Minutemen scored on a six-play, 71-yard drive only 2:39 into the contest.

"We just said that was what we were going to do (take the ball) all week," Whipple said. "We have been differing and letting the defense [play first], and we just seem to get off slow on defense."

"I was excited about [getting the ball first]," UMass quarterback Richard Lucero said. "It has been a while since [the offense] opened up the game. Offense sets tempo, defense wins games."

Lucero, after opening the season as the primary signal caller, was making his first start since a loss to Hofstra on Sept. 30. The Phoenix, AZ native made the best of his second chance.

The junior, on the first drive of the game, took control of the offense and led it to paydirt. On the third play from scrimmage Lucero threw a perfect pass to DeShon Hardy, who hauled it in for a 41-yard reception. The toss put the Maroon and White in business and Marcel Shipp capped the drive on a nine-yard run up the middle.

The Shipp score started a Minuteman onslaught. By the end of the first half UMass had opened a commanding, 31-3 lead over the Wildcats.

In the half the Minutemen picked up a trio of fourth down conversions to keep drives alive. All three of the conversions led to Maroon and White scores.

Villanova (5-4, 3-3 A-10) could not muster any sort of offensive attack as interim starter Scott Lukash never seemed to get comfortable behind center. The freshman threw three interceptions in the contest and, when he needed to, was unable to make the play.

"We ran into a good defense,"

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 7

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN
Brian Smith (20) and the rest of the UMass defense held the A-10's best offensive player, Villanova's Brian Westbrook, in check in a, 38-17, win. The point total was the lowest of the season for the Wildcats.

Check out our Type O Negative review in Arts today.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Women's soccer lost to eventual A-10 chamion Xavier by a score of one to zero in over-time.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 44 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, November 7, 2000

Election 2000 today

Faculty predicts winners

By Ken Campbell and Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Today's election marks the end of a closely watched race – one that many people feel is too close to call. That doesn't stop folks from making their own predictions, and each has some reasoning behind it.

The Political Science department at the University of Massachusetts weighed in with their opinions on the Presidential race and other issues that will arise out of Election Tuesday.

Earlier in the race, Professor Michael Hannahan had believed Al Gore would be the next President, a prediction he has since rescinded.

"Bush has more solid states, especially in the Rocky Mountains area. Gore needs to win too many."

Hannahan sees Florida, Oregon, Washington, Arkansas, Tennessee, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Maine and New Hampshire as battleground states. These battleground states are crucial, carrying various electoral vote totals.

Looking at the congressional aspects of the race, Hannahan felt it was too close to tell.

"The Republicans will have a slight majority in the House of Representatives and [in] the Senate, one to two seats. If Gore wins [the Presidency], the Republicans will pick up a Connecticut Senate seat."

Eve Weinbaum, of the Labor Relations Research Center, shared a different opinion on the race for the presidency.

"I have been predicting Gore since before the elections even began. But right now I don't think it's based on much. I've been disappointed with both candidates. It's been an unimpressive election. Gore hasn't defined a difference between him and Bush, so overall the campaigns have not been that strong."

Turn to PREDICTIONS, page 2

Low voter turnout expected

By Ken Campbell and Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

As one of the closest Presidential races in recent history draws to a close, people between the ages of 18 and 24 are forecasted to show up in record low numbers at tomorrow's polls.

The amount of voters in this age group has declined significantly in recent years. In 1972, 50 percent of people 18-24 showed up to vote on Election Day, that number had declined to 32 percent by 1996. This year's election is being closely watched to see if this trend of political abstinence among youth will continue.

Young voters are often charged with being apathetic, a charge that many on campus feel is misplaced. Aaron Wilson, a founding member of the Cannabis Reform Coalition and a University of Massachusetts alumnus, explained, "There has been an ongoing effort to increase student political participation. There is always a percentage of the electorate that doesn't care."

The lack of young voters is also often attributed to the fact that the issues being presented by the candidates are targeted towards voters over the age of 34. Job training, gun control, tolerance and other youth-oriented issues have largely been ignored this year by both the Bush and Gore campaigns.

"Social Security and health care are being talked about in terms of how it will affect senior citizens, even though we're the ones paying for it," Wilson said.

In their efforts to break the mold of student apathy, the Cannabis Reform Coalition has been heavily involved in voter registration, registering some 1500 voters on campus in door-to-door sweeps.

"We encourage them to go and vote, sending out mailings and calling registered voters at home and reminding them to go vote," said Wilson.

Jessica Canterlo, voter registration coordinator for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), said "The apathy problem was a lot worse a couple of months ago. Now people are getting fired up."

"I think that when you're in college you get caught up in classes and local issues," she said, explaining why some students might be less inclined to vote.

"We've been running voter education projects, voter guides, phone banking and we'll be running a shuttle service to and from the polls."

Other political organizations have been also doing their part to get voter registration and awareness out.

"We successfully held a drive in conjunction with our membership drive. We set up a table in the Campus Center and had members there recruiting and trying to get people involved in getting their voice out," Chuck Johnson, membership director of the UMass Republican Club said.

The University Democrats also set up a table in the Campus Center in order to register voters and get their voices heard.

"Three times a week we had a table set up, and over the course of five weeks we registered 150 students to vote," Matt Pelnar, President of the University Democrat Club said.

In response to the apathy of young voters, Pelnar explained that student apathy is often the result of a lack of education. Sometimes, Pelnar said, people are not even aware of the fact that they have the access to register to vote.

Neil Nugent, of the UMass for Nader campaign, suggested that apathy can be attributed to the lack of interest in the two major political parties. He explained that the Republicans and the Democrats are not reaching out to young voters, the main age-base of Nader's support.

"Democrats and Republicans don't outreach to adults or youth. The [Ralph] Nader campaign is grassroots; that's outreach. We went door to door on campus, and signed up about 150 to 200 people," said Nugent.

"I don't know if there will be more youth voters. Young people are pessimistic about the electoral process and ignorant."

Michael Froimowitz, Libertarian candidate for state Senate and UMass student, agreed.

"It's really disappointing. The mentality among college students is that they only care about their own immediate surroundings, and think, mistakenly, that politics don't affect them. They could affect so many things locally."

In his bid for Senate, Froimowitz has also encouraged as well as registered individuals to vote.

Froimowitz explained, "In the spring, we went door to door, collecting signatures to get on the ballot and registering people to vote. We registered about 300, mostly as independents."

Despite such efforts though, youth ignorance and apathy remains high. A recent poll done by American Express found that one third of 16-21 year olds surveyed could not name each party's presidential candidate. In early October, MTV released a survey which found that 70 percent of youth could not name the vice presidential candidates.

With the recent drives put on by SCERA and other organizations to increase voter registration around campus, it comes down to the basic question: are students going to vote on Election Day?

"I think more support should be given to the independent parties. We've out grown the two party system. The candidates, particularly George Bush and Al Gore don't bring up the issues that are affecting the younger voters," Joslin Green, a senior communications major said.

Jason Lanier, an employee of the department of plant and soil, and now an alumnus, explained his views on the up and coming election as well.

"I don't like either of the two obvious candidates and to be honest I'm sick of hearing about them. I think the reason candidates like [Ralph] Nader get the attention of the younger voters is because he gears his campaign towards every generation."

MAUREEN MASSE/COLLEGIAN

Rebel Cheerleaders!
These girls livened up the Nader rally outside the Student Union yesterday

Students rally to show support for Nader

By Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

A debate last night between University of Massachusetts students representing the Democrat and Green Party presidential candidates highlighted a rift between liberal minded voters over the impact of Green Party candidate Ralph Nader on today's election.

The UMass for Nader club challenged the UMass Democrat and Republican clubs to a mock presidential debate in the Campus Center auditorium. The Republican Club declined to participate, but six representatives from the Green and Democrat clubs debated for over two hours in front of a small student audience.

A town hall format was used for the debate, with students questioning each party over policy issues. The debate allowed students to bring up issues they felt where not addressed during the campaign season, especially by the major party candidates and allowed the Green and Democrat representatives to make a final plea for votes today.

